FIFTEENTH EDITION, THOROUGHLY REVISED AND GREATLY ENLARGED.

VOL. I.

ADVERTISEMENT.

In the preparation of the present edition of the Law Dictionary, it has been the aim of the Editor, Francis Rawle, Esq., of the Philadelphia Bar, to vary in nothing from the general plan of Judge Bouvier, and to make only such modifications and additions in his work as the changing conditions of the law seemed to require. The period since the death of the able author has been so fruitful, however, both in legislative enactments and judicial decisions, that numerous alterations and additions have been rendered necessary, so that the present thoroughly revised and greatly enlarged edition contains three times the matter of the original edition. This new matter has been supplied by upwards of one hundred gentlemen of recognized eminence at the bar or on the bench, and peculiarly well acquainted with the special topics upon which they have treated. Their names will be found in the List of Authors appended to the work, and in the Preface of the Editor of this edition. Careful attention has been given to the citation of authorities, and they have been brought down to the date of the preparation of the respective articles. Neither time, labor, nor expense has been spared to make the book accurate and complete; and the present edition of Bouvier's Law Dictionary is submitted to the profession and to the general public, in the firm belief that it will sustain the high reputation it has achieved, and that it will be found even more valuable in the future than it has been in the past.

Philadelphia, January 1, 1883.

PREFACE.

In preparing this edition of Bouvier's Law Dictionary for publication, more than seven hundred new titles have been added to the work. Many of these have been treated at length; for instance, Commerce, Homestead, Judicature Acts, National Banks, Passenger, Police Power, Removal of Causes, Telegraph, Ticket, and War.

A large number of titles have, in view of their importance, been treated more fully than was done in the last edition, and, in many cases, have been substantially rewritten. Among these may be mentioned Courts of the United States, Due Process of Law, Election, Negligence, Partners, Partnership, Patent, Railroad, Sunday, Tax, and Trade-Mark. The Editor has endeavored, in all cases, to incorporate the development and growth of the law since 1867, the date of the last edition.

In the present edition, the Dictionary is enlarged by about two hundred and fifty pages. By adopting a much shorter system of abbreviations than the one formerly in use, much space has been saved, which has been utilized by the substitution of new matter. The citations in the former edition have been altered to conform to the system adopted. The list of abbreviations heretofore placed under the title Citations, is omitted; the full name of any authority cited can always be found either under the title Abbreviations or the title Reports, in both of which, a special effort has been made to secure completeness and accuracy. In the latter will also be found a list of all periodicals, known to the Editor, which contain reports of cases. The list of words and phrases formerly placed under the title Construction, but now placed under the title Words, has received large additions.

Numerous references have been made to valuable articles in the legal periodicals, and it is hoped that in this way much learning that is now difficult to find, can be brought within easy reach of the profession. To a certain extent this work will serve as an index to legal periodical literature.

The articles embodying the laws and constitutions of the various States have been corrected or rewritten so as to incorporate all important amendments and changes since the last edition, and articles on several States and Territories omitted in that edition have been added. Most of this work has been done by members of the bar in the various States; and the Editor avails himself of this opportunity to express his obligations to them. Among the number are Edward J. Phelps, of Vermont; Alexander R. Lawton, of Georgia; Simeon E. Baldwin, of Connecticut; Warren Olney, of California; Hon. Charles S. Bradley, of Rhode Island; Hon. M. P. Deady, of Oregon; and U. M. Rose, of Arkansas. He is much indebted to Dwight M. Lowrey, for his revision of the article on Partnership; to Charles H. Bannard, for his revision of the article on Partners, both of which titles were substantially rewritten; and to J. Douglass Brown, Jr., for his revision of Maxims, which title was enlarged, in part, by adding some maxims not in the last edition, but mainly by citations of additional cases in point. He is also under great obligations to Lawrence Lewis, Jr., and Sydney G. Fisher, for most valuable help, and especially is he indebted to Walter George Smith, and Alfred Lee, Jr., who have shared his labors throughout.

The Editor can hardly expect that in so extensive an undertaking there have not been mistakes of omission and commission; yet he hopes that, both so far as his own original work is concerned and also so far as he has revised the work of his predecessors, his selections of principles and cases have been judicious, and that the reader will find in these volumes all the fundamental doctrines of the law set forth with sufficient elaboration of detail to make the book valuable both to the lay and to the professional mind.

TO THE FIRST EDITION.

To the difficulties which the author experienced on his admission to the bar, the present publication is to be attributed. His endeavors to get forward in his profession were constantly obstructed, and his efforts for a long time frustrated, for want of that knowledge which his elder brethren of the bar seemed to possess. To find among the reports and the various treatises on the law the object of his inquiry, was a difficult task: he was in a labyrinth without a guide; and much of the time which was spent in finding his way out might, with the friendly assistance of one who was acquainted with the construction of the edifice, have been saved, and more profitably employed. He applied to law dictionaries and digests within his reach, in the hope of being directed to the source whence they derived their learning; but he was too often disappointed: they seldom pointed out the authorities where the object of his inquiry might be found. It is true such works contain a great mass of information, but, from the manner in which they have been compiled, they sometimes embarrassed him more than if he had not consulted them. They were written for another country, possessing laws different from our own, and it became a question how far they were or were not applicable here. Besides, most of the matter in the English law dictionaries will be found to have been written while the feudal law was in its full vigor, and not fitted to the present times, nor calculated for present use, even in England. And there is a great portion which, though useful to an English lawyer, is almost useless to the American student. What, for example, have we to do with those laws of Great Britain which relate to the person of their king, their nobility, their clergy, their navy, their army; with their game laws; their local statutes, such as regulate their banks, their canals, their exchequer, their marriages, their births, their burials, their beer and ale houses, and a variety of similar subjects?

The most modern law dictionaries are compilations from the more ancient, with some modifications and alterations; and, in many instances, they are servile copies, without the slightest alteration. In the mean time the law has undergone a great change. Formerly the principal object of the law seemed to be to regulate real property, in all its various artificial modifications, while little or no attention was bestowed upon the rules which govern personal property and rights. The mercantile law has since arisen, like a bright pyramid, amid the gloom of the feudal law, and is now far more important in practice than that which refers to real estate. The law of real property, too, has changed, particularly in this country.

The English law dictionaries would be very unsatisfactory guides, even in pointing out where the laws relating to the acquisition and transfer of real estate, or the laws of descent in the United States, are to be found. And the student who seeks to find in the Dictionaries of Cowel, Manly, Jacobs, Tomlins, Cunningham, Burn, Montefiore, Pott, Whishaw, Williams, the Termes de Ley, or any similar compilation, any satisfactory account in relation to international law, to trade and commerce, to maritime law, to medical jurisprudence, or to natural law, will probably not be fully gratified. He cannot, of course, expect to find in them any thing in relation to our government, our constitutions, or our political or civil institutions.

It occurred to the author that a law dictionary, written entirely anew, and calculated to remedy those defects, would be useful to the profession. Probably overrating his strength, he resolved to undertake the task; and, if he should not fully succeed, he will have the consolation to know that his effort may induce some more gifted individual, and better qualified by his learning, to undertake such a task, and to render the American bar an important service. Upon an examination of the constitution and laws of the United States, and of the several states of the American Union, he perceived many technical expressions and much valuable information which he would be able to incorporate in his work. Many of these laws, although local in their nature, will be found useful to every lawyer, particularly those engaged in mercantile practice. As instances of such laws the reader is referred to the articles Acknowledgment, Descent, Divorce, Letters of Administration, and Limitation. It is within the plan of this work to explain such technical expressions as relate to the legislative, executive, or judicial departments of the government; the political and the civil rights and duties of the citizens; the rights and duties of persons, particularly such as are peculiar to our institutions, as, the rights of descent and administration; of the mods of acquiring and transferring property; to the criminal law, and its administration. It has also been an object with the author to embody in his work such decisions of the courts as appeared to him to be important, either because they differed from former judgments, or because they related to some point which was before either obscure or unsettled. He does not profess to have examined or even referred to all the American cases: it is a part of the plan, however, to refer to authorities, generally, which will lead the student to nearly all the cases.

The author was induced to believe that an occasional comparison of the civil, canon, and other systems of foreign law, with our own, would be useful to the profession, and illustrate many articles which, without such aid, would not appear very clear; and also to introduce many terms from foreign laws, which may supply a deficiency in ours. The articles Condonation, Extradition, and Novation are of this sort. He was induced to adopt this course because the civil law has been considered, perhaps not without justice, the best system of written reason; and as all laws are, or ought to be, founded in reason, it seemed peculiarly proper to have recourse to this fountain of wisdom: but another motive influenced this decision; one of the states of the Union derives most of its civil regulations from the civil law; and there seemed a peculiar propriety, therefore, in introducing it into an American law dictionary. He also had the example of a Story, a Kent, Mr. Angell, and others, who have ornamented their works from the same source. And he here takes the opportunity to acknowledge the benefits which he has derived from the learned labors of these gentlemen, and of those of Judge Sergeant, Judge Swift, Judge Gould, Mr. Rawle, and other writers on American law and jurisprudence.

In the execution of his plan, the author has, in the first place, defined and explained the various words and phrases, by giving their most enlarged meaning, and then all the shades of signification of which they are susceptible; secondly, he has divided the subject in the manner which to him appeared the most natural, and laid down such principles and rules as belong to it; in these cases he has generally been careful to give an illustration, by citing a case whenever the subject seemed to require it, and referring to others supporting the same point; thirdly, whenever the article admitted of it, he has compared it with the laws of other countries within his reach, and pointed out their concord or disagreement; and, fourthly, he has referred to the authorities, the abridgments, digests, and the ancient and modern treatises, where the subject is to be found, in order to facilitate the researches of the student. He desires not to be understood as professing to cite cases always exactly in point; on the contrary, in many instances the authorities will probably be found to be but distantly connected with the subject under examination, but still connected with it, and they have been added in order to lead the student to matter of which he may possibly be in pursuit.

To those who are aware of the difficulties of the task, the author deems it unnecessary to make any apology for the imperfections which may be found in the work. His object has been to be useful: if that has been accomplished in any degree, he will be amply rewarded for his labor; and he relies upon the generous liberality of the members of the profession to overlook the errors which may have been committed in his endeavors to serve them.

BOUVIER'S

LAW DICTIONARY AND INSTITUTES:

BY S. AUSTIN ALLIBONE, LL.D.,

AUTHOR OF "THE DICTIONARY OF AUTHORS."

From the North American Review for July, 1861.

THE author of these volumes taught lawyers by his books, but he taught all men by his example, and we should therefore greatly err if we failed to hold up, for the imitation of all, his successful warfare against early obstacles, his unconquerable zeal for the acquisition of knowledge, and his unsparing efforts to distribute the knowledge thus acquired for the benefit of his professional brethren. Born in the village of Codognan, in the department Du Gard, in the south of France, in the year 1787, at the age of fifteen he accompanied his father and mother—the last a member of the distinguished family of Benezet—to Philadelphia, where he immediately applied himself to those exertions for his own support which the rapid diminution of his father's large property had rendered necessary. In 1812 he became a citizen of the United States, and about the same time removed to West Philadelphia, where he built a printing-office, which still exists as an honorable monument of his enterprise. Two years later we find him settled at Brownsville, in the western part of Pennsylvania, where, in 1814, he commenced the publication of a weekly newspaper, entitled "The American Telegraph." In 1818, on Mr. Bouvier's removal to Uniontown, he united with it "The Genius of Liberty," and thenceforth issued the two journals in one sheet, under the title of "The Genius of Liberty and American Telegraph." He retained his connection with this periodical until July 18, 1820.

It was while busily engaged as editor and publisher that Mr. Bouvier resolved to commence the study of the law. He attacked Coke and Blackstone with the determination and energy which he carried into every department of action or speculation, and in 1818 he was admitted to practice in the Court of Common Pleas of Fayette county, Pennsylvania. During the September term of 1822 he was admitted as an attorney of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and in the following year he removed to Philadelphia, where he resided until his death. In 1836 he was appointed by Governor Ritner Recorder of the City of Philadelphia, and in 1838 was commissioned by the same chief magistrate as an Associate Judge of the Court of Criminal Sessions. But the heavy draughts upon time and strength to which he was continually subjected had not been permitted to divert his mind from the cherished design of bestowing upon his profession a manual of which it had long stood in urgent need. While laboring as a student of law, and even after his admission to the bar, he had found his efforts for advancement constantly obstructed, and often frustrated, by the want of a conveniently-arranged digest of that legal information which every student should have, and which every practising lawyer must have, always ready for immediate use. The English Law Dictionaries—based upon the jurisprudence of another country, incorporating peculiarities of the feudal law, that are to a great extent obsolete even in England, only partially brought up to the revised code of Great Britain, and totally omitting the distinctive features of our own codes—were manifestly insufficient for the wants of the American lawyer. A Law Dictionary for the profession on this side of the Atlantic should present a faithful incorporation of the old with the new,—of the spirit and the principles of the earlier codes, and the "newness of the letter" of modern statutes. The Mercantile Law, with the large body of exposition by which it has been recently illustrated; the Law of Real-Property in the new shape which, especially in America, it has latterly assumed; the technical expressions scattered here and there throughout the Constitution of the United States, and the constitutions and laws of the several States of the American Union,—all these, and more than these, must be within the lawyer's easy reach if he would be spared embarrassment, mortification, and decadence.

A work which should come up to this standard would indeed be an invaluable aid to the profession; but what hope could be reasonably entertained that the requisites essential to its preparation—the learning, the zeal, the acumen to analyze, the judgment to synthesize, the necessary leisure, the persevering industry, and the bodily strength to carry to successful execution—would ever be combined in one man? Mr. Bouvier determined that it should not be his fault if such a work was not at least honestly attempted. Bravely he wrought, month in and out, year in and out, rewarded for his self-denying toil by each well-executed article, and rejoicing, at rare and prized intervals, over a completed letter of the alphabet.

In 1839 the author had the satisfaction of presenting in two octavo volumes the results of his anxious toils to his brethren and the world at large; and the approving verdict of the most eminent judges—Judge Story and Chancellor Kent, for example—assured him that he had "not labored in vain," nor "spent his strength for naught." This was well; but the author himself was the most rigid and unsparing of his critics. Contrary to the practice of many writers, considering the success of the first and second editions as a proper stimulus to additional accuracy, fulness, and completeness in every part, in 1843, when the third edition was called for, the second having been published in 1843, he was able to announce that he had not only "remodelled very many of the articles contained in the former editions," but also had "added upwards of twelve hundred new ones." He also presented the reader with "a very copious index to the whole, which, at the same time that it will assist the inquirer, will exhibit the great number of subjects treated of in these volumes."

He still made collections on all sides for the benefit of future issues, and it was found after the death of the author, in 1851, that he had accumulated a large mass of valuable materials. These, with much new matter, were, by competent editorial care, incorporated into the text of the third edition, and the whole was issued as the fourth edition in 1852. The work had been subjected to a thorough revision,—inaccuracies were eliminated, the various changes in the constitutions of several of the United States were noticed in their appropriate places, and under the head of "Maxims" alone thirteen hundred new articles were added.

That in the ensuing eight years six more editions were called for by the profession, is a tribute of so conclusive a character to the merits of the work that eulogy seems superfluous. Let us, then, briefly examine those features to which the great professional popularity of the Law Dictionary is to be attributed. Some of these, specified as desiderata, have been already referred to with sufficient particularity. But it has been the aim of the author to cover a wider field than the one thus designated. He has included in his plan technical expressions relating to the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the government; the political and the civil rights and duties of citizens; the rights and duties of persons, especially such as are peculiar to the institutions of the United States,—for instance, the rights of descent and administration, the mode of acquiring and transferring property, and the criminal law and its administration.

He was persuaded—and here as elsewhere he has correctly interpreted the wants of the profession—that an occasional comparison of the civil, canon, and other systems of foreign law with our own would be eminently useful by way of illustration, as well as for other purposes too obvious to require recital. We will barely suggest the advantage to the student of civil law or canon law of having at hand a guide of this character. And we would express our hope that the student of civil or of canon law is not hereafter to be that rara avis in the United States which, little to our credit, he has long been. He who would be thoroughly furnished for his high vocation will not be satisfied to slake his thirst for knowledge even at the streams (to which, alas! few aspire) of Bracton, Britton, or Fleta; he will ascend rather to the fountains from which these drew their fertilizing supplies.

To suppose that he who draws up many thousands of definitions, and cites whole libraries of authorities, shall never err in the accuracy of statement or the relevancy of quotation, is to suppose such a combination of the best qualities of a Littleton, a Fearne, a Butler, and a Hargrave, as the world is not likely to behold while law-books are made and lawyers are needed. If Chancellor Kent, after "running over almost every article in" the first edition (we quote his own language), was "deeply impressed with the evidence of the industry, skill, learning, and judgment with which the work was completed," and Judge Story expressed a like favorable verdict, the rest of us, legal and lay, may, without any unbecoming humiliation, accept their dicta as conclusive. We say legal and lay; for the lay reader will make a sad mistake if he supposes that a Law Dictionary, especially this Law Dictionary, is out of "his line and measure." On the contrary, the Law Dictionary should stand on the same shelf with Sismondi's Italian Republics, Robertson's Charles the Fifth, Russell's Modern Europe, Guizot's Lectures, Hallam's Histories, Prescott's Ferdinand and Isabella, and the records of every country in which the influences of the canon law, the civil law, and the feudal law, separately or jointly, moulded society, and made men, manners, and customs what they were, and, to no small extent, what they still are.

In common with the profession on both sides of the water, Judge Bouvier had doubtless often experienced inconvenience from the absence of an Index to Matthew Bacon's New Abridgment of the Law. Not only was this defect an objection to that valuable compendium, but since the publication of the last edition there had been an accumulation of new matter which it was most desirable should be at the command of the law student, the practising lawyer, and the bench. In 1841 Judge Bouvier was solicited to prepare a new edition, and undertook the arduous task. The revised work was presented to the public in ten royal octavo volumes, dating from 1842 to 1846. With the exception of one volume, edited by Judge Randall, and a part of another, edited by Mr. Robert E. Peterson, Judge Bouvier's son-in-law, the whole of the labor, including the copious Index, fell upon the broad shoulders of Judge Bouvier. This, the second American, was based upon the seventh English edition, prepared by Sir Henry Gwillim and Messrs. C. E. Dodd and William Blanshard, and published in eight royal octavos in 1832. In the first three volumes Bouvier confines his annotations to late American decisions; but in the remaining volumes he refers to recent English as well as to American Reports.

But this industrious scholar was to increase still further the obligations under which he had already laid the profession and the public. The preparation of a comprehensive yet systematic digest of American law had been for years a favorite object of contemplation to a mind which had long admired the analytical system of Pothier. Unwearied by the daily returning duties of his office and the bench, and by the unceasing vigilance necessary to the incorporation into the text of his Law Dictionary of the results of recent trials and annual legislation, he laid the foundations of his "Institutes of American Law," and perseveringly added block upon block, until, in the summer of 1851, he had the satisfaction of looking upon a completed edifice. Lawyers who had hailed with satisfaction the success of his earlier labors, and those who had grown into reputation since the results of those labors were first given to the world, united their verdict in favor of this last work.

It is hardly necessary to remark that it was only by a carefully adjusted apportionment of his hours that Judge Bouvier was enabled to accomplish so large an amount of intellectual labor, in addition to that "which came upon him daily,"—the still beginning, never ending, often vexatious duties connected with private legal practice and judicial deliberation. He rose every morning at from four to five o'clock, and worked in his library until seven or eight; then left his home for his office (where, in the intervals of business, he was employed on his "Law Dictionary" or "The Institutes") or his seat on the bench, and after the labor of the day wrought in his library from five o'clock until an hour before midnight.

A.

A. The first letter of the alphabet.

It is used to distinguish the first page of a folio, the second being marked "b," thus: Coke, Litt. 114 a, 114 b. It is also used as an abbreviation for many words of which it is the initial letter. See ABBREVIATIONS.

In Latin phrases it is a preposition, denoting from, by, in, on, of, at, and is of common use as a part of a title.

In French phrases it is also a preposition, denoting of, at, to, for, in, with.

Among the Romans this letter was used in criminal trials. The judges were furnished with small tables covered with wax, and each one inscribed on it the initial letter of his vote: A (absolvo) when he voted to acquit the accused; C (condemno) when he was for condemnation; and N L (non liquet), when the matter did not appear clearly, and he desired a new argument.

The letter A (i. e. antiquo, "for the old law") was inscribed upon Roman ballots under the Lex Tabellaria, to indicate a negative vote; Tayl. Civ. Law, 191, 192.

A CONSILIIS (Lat. consilium, advice). A counsellor. The term is used in the civil law by some writers instead of a responsis. Spelm. Gloss. Apocrisarius.

A LATERE (Lat. latus, side). Collateral. Used in this sense in speaking of the succession to property. Bract. 20 b, 62 b.

Without right. Bract. 42 b.

Apostolic; having full powers to represent the Pope as if he were present. Du Cange, Legati a latere; 4 Bla. Com. 306.

A ME (Lat. ego, I). A term denoting direct tenure of the superior lord. 2 Bell, H. L. Sc. 133.

Unjustly detaining from me. He is said to withhold a me (from me) who has obtained possession of my property unjustly. Calvinus, Lex.

To pay a me, is to pay from my money.

A MENSA ET THORO (Lat. from table and bed, but more commonly translated, from bed and board). A kind of divorce, which is rather a separation of the parties by law, than a dissolution of the marriage. This species of divorce is practically abolished in Massachusetts, by statute 1870, c. 404. See 2 Bish. M. & D. § 743 a; 1 id. §§ 29, 39, 705. See DIVORCE.

A PRENDRE (Fr. to take, to seize). Rightfully taken from the soil; 5 Ad. & E. 764; 1 N. & P. 172; 4 Pick. 145.

Used in the phrase profit à prendre, which differs from a right of way or other easement which confers no interest in the land itself; 5 B. & C. 221; 2 Washb. R. P. 25.

A QUO (Lat.). From which.

A court a quo is a court from which a cause has been removed. The judge a quo is the judge in such court; 6 Mart. La. 520. Its correlative is ad quem.

A RENDRE (Fr. to render, to yield). Which are to be paid or yielded. Profits à rendre comprehend rents and services; Hammond, Nisi P. 192.

A RETRO (Lat.). In arrear.

A RUBRO AD NIGRUM (Lat. from red to black). From the (red) title or rubric to the (black) body of the statute. It was anciently the custom to print statutes in this manner; Erskine, Inst. 1, 1, 49.

A VINCULO MATRIMONII (Lat. from the bond of matrimony). A kind of divorce which effects a complete destruction of the marriage contract. See DIVORCE.

AB ACTIS (Lat. actus, an act). A notary; one who takes down words as they are spoken. Du Cange, Acta; Spelm. Gloss. Cancellarius.

A reporter who took down the decisions or acta of the court as they were given.

AB ANTE (Lat. ante, before). In advance.

A legislature cannot agree ab ante to any modification or amendment to a law which a third person may make; 1 Sumn. 308.

AB ANTECEDENTE (Lat. antecedens). Beforehand. 5 M. & S. 110.

AB EXTRA (Lat. extra, beyond, without). From without. 14 Mass. 151.

AB INCONVENIENTI (Lat. inconveniens). From hardship; from what is inconvenient. An argument ab inconvenienti is an argument drawn from the hardship of the case.

AB INITIO (Lat. initium, beginning). From the beginning; entirely; as to all the acts done; in the inception.

An estate may be said to be good, an agreement to be void, an act to be unlawful, a trespass to have existed, ab initio; Plowd. 6 a; 11 East, 395; 10 Johns. 253, 369; 1 Bla. Com. 440. See Adams, Eq. 186. See TRESPASS; TRESPASSER.

Before. Contrasted in this sense with ex post facto, 2 Bla. Com. 308, or with postea, Calvinus, Lex., Initium.

AB INTESTAT. Intestate. 2 Low. Can. 219. Merlin, Repert.

AB INTESTATO (Lat. testatus, having made a will). From an intestate. Used both in the common and civil law to denote an inheritance derived from an ancestor who died without making a will; 2 Bla. Com. 490; Story, Confl. L. 480.

AB INVITO (Lat. invitum). Unwillingly. See INVITUM.

AB IRATO (Lat. iratus, an angry man). By one who is angry. A devise or gift made by a man adversely to the interest of his heirs, on account of anger or hatred against them, is said to be made ab irato. A suit to set aside such a will is called an action ab irato; Merlin, Repert. Ab irato.

ABACTOR (Lat. ab and agere, to lead away). One who stole cattle in numbers. Jacob, Law Dict. One who stole one horse, two mares, two oxen, two she-goats, or five rams. Abigeus was the term more commonly used to denote such an offender.

ABADENGO. Spanish Law. Lands, town, and villages belonging to an abbot and under his jurisdiction. All lands belonging to ecclesiastical corporations, and as such exempt from taxation; Escriche, Dicc. Raz.

Lands of this kind were usually held in mortmain, and hence a law was enacted declaring that no land liable to taxation could be given to ecclesiastical institutions ("ningun Realengo non pase a abadengo"), which is repeatedly insisted on.

ABALIENATIO (Lat. alienatio). The most complete method used among the Romans of transferring lands. It could take place only between Roman citizens. Calvinus, Lex., Abalienatio; Burr. Law Dic.

ABAMITA (Lat.). The sister of a great-great-grandfather; Calvinus, Lex.

ABANDONMENT. The relinquishment or surrender of rights or property by one person to another.

In Civil Law. The act by which a debtor surrenders his property for the benefit of his creditors; Merlin, Repert.

In Maritime Law. The act by which the owner of a ship surrenders the ship and freight to a creditor who has become such by contracts made by the master.

The effect of such abandonment is to release the owner from any further responsibility. The privilege in case of contracts is limited to those of a maritime nature; Pothier, Chart. Part. sec. 2, art. 2, § 51; Code de Commerce, lib. 2, tit. 2, art. 216. Similar provisions exist in England and the United States to some extent; 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 395–405; 5 Sto. 465; 16 Bost. Law Rep. 686; 5 Mich. 368. See ABANDONMENT FOR TORTS.

By Husband or Wife. The act of a husband or wife who leaves his or her consort wilfully, and with an intention of causing perpetual separation. See DESERTION.

In Insurance. The transfer by an assured to his underwriters of his interest in the insured subject, or the proceeds of it, or claims arising from it, so far as the subject is insured by the policy.

The term is used only in reference to risks in navigation; but the principle is applicable in fire insurance, where there are remnants, and sometimes also under stipulations in life policies in favor of creditors; 2 Phillips, Ins. §§ 1490, 1514, 1515; 3 Kent, 265; 16 Ohio St. 200.

The object of abandonment being to recover the whole value of the subject of the insurance, it can occur only where the subject itself, or remains of it, or claims on account of it, survive the peril which is the occasion of the loss. 2 Phillips, Ins. §§ 1507, 1516; 36 Eng. L. & Eq. 198; 3 Kent, 321; 3 Bing. N. C. 266. In such case the assured must elect, immediately on receiving intelligence of a loss, whether to abandon, and not delay for the purpose of speculating on the state of the markets; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1667. He may have a reasonable time to inspect the cargo, but for no other purpose; 3 Kent, 320. He must give notice promptly to the insurer of his intention; five days held too late; 5 M. & S. 47; see L. R. 5 C. P. 341. In America, it appears that the right of abandonment is to be judged by the facts of each particular case as they existed at the time of abandonment; 3 Mas. 27; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1536; 12 Pet. 378. In England, the abandonment may be affected by subsequent occurrences, and the facts at the time of action brought determine the right to recover; 4 M. & S. 394; 2 Burr. 1198. But this rule has been doubted in England; 2 Dow, 474; 3 Kent, 324.

By the doctrine of constructive total loss, a loss of over one-half of the property insured, or damage to the extent of over one-half its value, by a peril insured against, may be turned into a total loss by abandonment; 2 Pars. Mar. Ins. 126; 20 Wend. 287; 3 Johns. Cas. 182; 1 Gray, 154; 3 Mass. 27. This does not appear to be the English rule; 9 C. B. 94; 1 H. of L. 513. See 4 Am. L. Reg. 481; 1 Gray, 371.

The right is waived by commencing repairs; 2 Pars. Mar. Ins. 140; 3 Mas. 429; 3 Wend. 658; 5 Cow. 63; but not by temporary repairs; 2 Phillips, Ins. §§ 1540, 1541; but is not lost by reason of the enhancement of the loss through the mere negligence or mistakes of the master or crew. It is too late to abandon after the arrival in specie at the port of destination; 2 Parsons, Mar. Ins. 128; 4 H. of L. 24; 15 Wend. 453. See 3 S. & R. 25. An inexpedient or unnecessary sale of the subject by the master does not strengthen the right; 2 Phillips, Ins. §§ 1547, 1555, 1570, 1571. See SALVAGE; TOTAL LOSS.

Abandonment may be made upon information entitled to credit, but if made speculatively upon conjecture, it is null.

In the absence of any stipulation on the subject, no particular form of abandonment is required; it may be in writing or oral, in express terms or by obvious implication (but see 1 Campb. 541); but it must be absolute and unconditional, and the ground for it must be stated; 2 Phillips, Ins. §§ 1678, 1679 et seq.; 1 Curt. C. C. 148; 4 Dall. 272; 18 Pick. 83; see 9 Metc. 354; 9 Mo. 406. Acceptance may cure a defect in abandonment, but is not necessary to its validity; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1689. Nor is the underwriter obliged to accept or decline. He may, however, waive it; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1698. But it is not subject to be defeated by subsequent events; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1704; 3 Mas. 27, 61, 429; 4 Cranch, 29; 9 Johns. 21. See supra. And the subject must be transferred free of incumbrance except expense for salvage; 1 Gray, 154; 5 Cow. 63. See TOTAL LOSS.

Of Rights. The relinquishment of a right. It implies some act of relinquishment done by the owner without regard to any future possession by himself, or by any other person, but with an intention to abandon; 14 M. & W. 789; 9 Metc. 395. Mere non-user does not necessarily or usually constitute an abandonment; 10 Pick. 310; 23 id. 141; 3 Strobh. 224; 5 Rich. 405; 16 Barb. 150; 24 id. 44; see Tudor, Lead. Cas. 130; 2 Washb. R. P. 83–85.

Abandonment is properly confined to incorporeal hereditaments, as legal rights once vested must be divested according to law, though equitable rights may be abandoned; 2 Wash. C. C. 106; 25 Penn. St. 259; 32 id. 401; 15 N. H. 412; see 1 Hen. & M. 429; and an abandonment combined with sufficiently long possession by another party destroys the right of the original owner; 10 Watts, 192; 2 Metc. Mass. 32; 6 id. 337; 31 Me. 381; see also 8 Wend. 480; 16 id. 545; 3 Ohio, 107; 3 Penn. St. 141; 2 Washb. R. P. 453–458.

There may be an abandonment of an easement; 5 Gray, 409; 9 Metc. 395; 6 Conn. 289; 10 Humphr. 165; 16 Wend. 531; 16 Barb. 184; 3 B. & C. 332; of a mill site; 17 Mass. 297, 23 Pick. 216; 34 Me. 394; 4 M'Cord, 96; 7 Bingh. 682; an application for land; 2 S. & R. 378; 5 id. 215; of an improvement; 1 Yeates, 515; 2 id. 476; 3 S. & R. 319; of a trust fund; 3 Yerg. Tenn. 258; of an invention or discovery; 1 Stor. C. C. 280; 4 Mas. 111; property sunk in a steamboat and unclaimed; 12 La. An. 745; a mining claim; 6 Cal. 510; a right under a land warrant; 23 Penn. St. 271.

The effect of abandonment when acted upon by another party is to divest all the owner's rights; 6 Cal. 510; 11 Ill. 588. Consult 2 Washb. R. P. 56, 82–85, 253–258.

ABANDONMENT FOR TORTS. In Civil Law. The relinquishment of a slave or animal who had committed a trespass to the person injured, in discharge of the owner's liability for such trespass or injury. If this were done, the owner could not be held to any further responsibility. Just. Inst. 4, 8, 9.

A similar right exists in Louisiana; 11 La. An. 396.

ABARNARE (Lat.). To discover and disclose to a magistrate any secret crime. Leges Canuti, cap. 10.

ABATAMENTUM (Lat abatare). An entry by interposition. Coke, Litt. 277. An abatement. Yelv. 151.

ABATARE. To abate. Yelv. 151.

ABATE. See ABATEMENT.

ABATEMENT (Fr. abattre, L. Fr. abater), to throw down, to beat down, destroy, quash; 3 Bla. Com. 168.

In Chancery Practice. A suspension of all proceedings in a suit, from the want of proper parties capable of proceeding therein.

It differs from an abatement at law in this: that in the latter the action is entirely dead and cannot be revived; but in the former the right to proceed is merely suspended, and may be revived by a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of revivor; 3 Bla. Com. 301; 21 N. H. 246; Story, Eq. Pl. § 20 n. § 354; Adams, Eq. 403; Mitford, Eq. Pl., by Jeremy, 57; Edwards, Receiv. 19.

Generally speaking, if any property or right in litigation is transmitted to another, he is entitled to continue the suit, or at least have the benefit of it, if he be plaintiff; Edwards, Receiv. 19; 9 Paige, Ch. 410; or it may be continued against him, or at least perfected, if he be defendant; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 332, 442; 7 Paige, Ch. 290. See PARTIES.

Death of a trustee does not abate a suit, but it must be suspended till a new one is appointed; 5 Gray, 162.

There are some cases, however, in which a court of equity will entertain applications, notwithstanding the suit is suspended: thus, proceedings may be had to preserve property in dispute; 2 Paige, Ch. 368; to pay money out of court where the right is clear; 6 Ves. 250; or upon consent of parties; 2 Ves. 399; to punish a party for breach of an injunction; 4 Paige, Ch. 163; to enroll a decree; 2 Dick. 612; or to make an order for the delivery of deeds and writings; 1 Ves. 185.

Although abatement in chancery suspends proceedings, it does not put an end to them; a party therefore imprisoned for contempt is not discharged, but must move that the complaint be revived in a specified time or the bill be dismissed and himself discharged; 3 Daniel, Ch. Pr. 225. Nor will a receiver be discharged without special order of court; 1 Hogan, 291; 1 Barb. 329; Edwards, Receiv. 19.

All declinatory and dilatory pleas in equity are said to be pleas in abatement, or in the nature thereof; see Story, Eq. Pl. § 708; Beames, Eq. Pl. 55–57; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 236. And such pleas must be pleaded before a plea in bar, if at all; Story, Eq. Pl. § 708; see 7 Johns. Ch. 214; 20 Ga. 379. See PLEA.

In Contracts. A reduction made by the creditor, for the prompt payment of a debt due by the payer or debtor; Weskett, Ins. 7.

Of Freehold. The unlawful entry upon and keeping possession of an estate by a stranger, after the death of the ancestor and before the heir or devisee takes possession. It is a species of ouster by intervention between the ancestor or devisor and the heir or devisee, thus defeating the rightful possession of the latter; 3 Bla. Com. 167; Coke, Litt. 277 a; Finch, Law, 195; Cruise, Dig. B, 1, 60.

By the ancient laws of Normandy, this term was used to signify the act of one who, having an apparent right of possession to an estate, took possession of it immediately after the death of the actual possessor, before the heir entered; Howard, Anciennes Lois des Français, tome 1, p. 539.

Of Legacies. The reduction of a legacy, general or specific, on account of the insufficiency of the estate of the testator to pay his debts and legacies.

When the estate of a testator is insufficient to pay both debts and legacies, it is the rule that the general legacies must abate proportionally to an amount sufficient to pay the debts.

If the general legacies are exhausted before the debts are paid, then, and not till then, the specific legacies abate, and proportionally; 2 Bla. Com. 513 and note; Bacon, Abr. Leg. H; Roper, Leg. 253, 284; 2 Brown, Ch. 19; 2 P. Wms. 283.

In Revenue Law. The deduction from, or the refunding of, duties sometimes made at the custom house, on account of damages received by goods during importation or while in store. See Act of Congress, Mar. 2, 1799, § 52; 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 617; Andrews, Rev. Laws, §§ 113, 162.

Of Nuisances. The removal of a nuisance; 3 Bla. Com. 5. See NUISANCE.

In Pleading at Law. The overthrow of an action caused by the defendant pleading some matter of fact tending to impeach the correctness of the writ or declaration, which defeats the action for the present, but does not debar the plaintiff from recommencing it in a better way; Stephen, Pl. 47; 3 Bla. Com. 301; 1 Chitty, Pl. 6th Lond. ed. 446; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 65.

It has been applied rather inappropriately as a generic term to all pleas of a dilatory nature; whereas the word dilatory would seem to be the more proper generic term, and the word abatement applicable to a certain portion of dilatory pleas; Comyn, Dig. Abt. B; 1 Chitty, Pl. 440 (6th Lond. ed.); Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 65. In this general sense it has been used to include pleas to the jurisdiction of the court. See JURISDICTION.

AS TO THE PERSON OF THE PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT. It may be pleaded, as to the plaintiff, that there never was such a person in rerum natura; 1 Chitty, Pl. (6th Lond. ed.) 448; 6 Pick. 370; 5 Watts, 423; 19 Johns. 308; 14 Ark. 27; 5 Vt. 93 (except in ejectment; 19 Johns. 308); and by one of two or more defendants as to one or more of his co-defendants; Archbold, Civ. Pl. 312. That one of the plaintiffs is a fictitious person, to defeat the action as to all; Comyn, Dig. Abt. E, 16; 1 Chitty, Pl. 448; Archbold, Civ. Pl. 304. This would also be a good plea in bar; 1 B. & P. 44. That the nominal plaintiff in the action of ejectment is fictitious, is not pleadable in any manner; 4 M. & S. 301; 19 Johns. 169. A defendant cannot plead matter which affects his co-defendant alone; 40 Me. 336; 4 Zabr. 333; 14 N. H. 243; 21 Wend. 457.

Certain legal disabilities are pleadable in abatement, such as outlawry; Bacon, Abr. Abt. B; Coke, Litt. 128 a; attainder of treason or felony; 3 Bla. Com. 301; Comyn, Dig. Abt. E, 3; also præmunire and excommunication; 3 Bla. Com. 301; Comyn, Dig. Abt. E, 5. The law in reference to these disabilities can be of no practical importance in the United States; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 32.

Alienage. That the plaintiff is an alien friend is pleadable only in some cases, where, for instance, he sues for property which he is incapacitated from holding or acquiring; Coke, Litt. 129 b; Busb. 250. By the common law, although he could not inherit, yet he might acquire by purchase, and hold as against all but the sovereign. Accordingly he has been allowed in this country to sue upon a title by grant or devise; 1 Mass. 256; 7 Cranch, 603; but see 6 Cal. 250; 26 Mo. 426. The early English authority upon this point was otherwise; Bacon, Abr. Abt. B, 3, Aliens D; Coke, Litt. 129 b. He is in general able to maintain all actions relating to personal chattels or personal injuries; 3 Bla. Com. 384; Cowp. 161; Bacon, Abr. Aliens D; 2 Kent, 34; Coke, Litt. 129 b. But an alien enemy can maintain no action except by license or permission of the government; Bacon, Abr. Abt. B, 3, Aliens D; 1 Salk. 46; 1 Ld. Raym. 282; 2 Strange, 1082; 4 East, 502; 6 Term, 23, 49; 8 id. 166; 6 Binn. 241; 9 Mass. 363, 377; 11 id. 119; 12 id. 8; 3 M. & S. 533; 2 Johns. Ch. 508; 15 East, 260; 1 S. & R. 310; 1 Chitty, Pl. 434. This will be implied from the alien being suffered to remain, or to come to the country, after the commencement of hostilities without being ordered away by the executive; 10 Johns. 69. See 28 Eng. L. & Eq. 219. The better opinion seems to be that an alien enemy cannot sue as administrator; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 44.

Corporations. A plea in abatement is the proper manner of contesting the existence of an alleged corporation plaintiff; Wright, Ohio, 12; 6 Cush. 279; 3 Pick. 236; 1 Mass. 485; 1 Md. 502; 33 Penn. St. 356; 28 N. H. 93; 1 Pet. 450; 4 id. 501; 5 id. 231. To a suit brought in the name of the "Judges of the County Court," after such court has been abolished, the defendant may plead in abatement that there are no such judges; 2 Bay, So. C. 519.

Coverture of the plaintiff is pleadable in abatement; Comyn, Dig. Abt. E, 6; Bacon, Abr. Abt. G; Coke, Litt. 132; 3 Term, 631; 1 Chitty, Pl. 439; 7 Gray, 338; though occurring after suit brought; 3 Bla. Com. 316; Bacon, Abr. Abt. 9; 4 S. & R. 238; 17 Mass. 342; 7 Gray, 338; 6 Term, 265; 4 East, 502; and see 1 E. D. Smith, 273; but not after plea in bar, unless the marriage arose after the plea in bar; 15 Conn. 569; but in that case the defendant must not suffer a continuance to intervene between the happening of this new matter, or its coming to his knowledge, and his pleading it; 4 S. & R. 238; 1 Bailey, 369; 2 id. 349; 2 Wheat. 111; 14 Mass. 295; 1 Blackf. Ind. 288; 10 S. & R. 208; 7 Vt. 508; 4 id. 545; 1 Yeates, 185; 2 Dall. 184; 3 Bibb, 246. And it cannot be otherwise objected to if she sues for a cause of action that would survive to her on the death of her husband; 12 M. & W. 97; 3 C. B. 153; 10 S. & R. 208. Where she sues, not having any interest, the defence is one of substance, and may be pleaded in bar, by demurrer, or on the general issue; 4 Term, 361; 1 Salk. 114; 1 H. Bla. 108; Cro. Jac. 644, whether she sues jointly or alone. So also where coverture avoids the contract or instrument, it is matter in bar; 14 S. & R. 379.

Where a feme covert is sued without her husband for a cause of action that would survive against her, as upon a contract made before, or a tort committed after, marriage, the coverture is pleadable in abatement; 1 Sid. 109; 3 Term, 629; and not otherwise; 9 M. & W. 299; Comyn, Dig. Abt. F, 2. If the marriage takes place pending the action, it cannot be pleaded; 2 Ld. Raym. 1525; 5 Me. 445; 2 M'Cord, 469. It must be pleaded by the feme in person; 2 Saund. 209 b. Any thing which suspends the coverture suspends also the right to plead it; Comyn, Dig. Abt. F, 2, § 3; Coke, Litt. 132 b; 2 W. Bla. 1197; 1 B. & P. 358, n. (f); 4 Esp. 27, 28; 15 Mass. 31; 6 Pick. 29.

Death of the plaintiff before purchase of the writ may be pleaded in abatement; 1 Archbold, Civ. Pl. 304; Comyn, Dig. Abt. E, 17; 3 Ill. 507; 1 Watts & S. 438; 14 Miss. 205; 2 M'Mull. 49. So may the death of a sole plaintiff who dies pending his suit at common law; Bacon, Abr. Abt. F; Comyn, Dig. Abt. H, 32, 33; 4 Hen. & M. 410; 3 Mass. 296; 2 Root, 57; 9 Mass. 422; 2 Rand. Va. 454; 2 Me. 127. Otherwise now by statute, in most cases, in most if not all the States of the United States, and in England since 1852. The personal representatives are usually authorized to act in such cases. If the cause of action is such that the right dies with the person, the suit still abates. By statute 8 & 9 Wm. IV., ch. 2, sect. 7, which is understood to enact the common law rule, where the form of action is such that the death of one of several plaintiffs will not change the plea the action does not abate by the death of any of the plaintiffs pending the suit. The death of the lessor in ejectment never abates the suit; 8 Johns. 495; 23 Ala. N. S. 193; 13 Ired. 43, 489; 1 Blatchf. 393.

The death of sole defendant pending an action abates it; Bacon, Abr. Abt. F; Comyn, Dig. Abt. H, 32; Hayw. 500; 2 Binn. 1; Gilm. 145; 4 M'Cord, 160; 7 Wheat. 530; 1 Watts, 229; 4 Mass. 480; 8 Me. 128; 11 Ga. 151. But where one of several co-defendants dies pending the action, his death is in general no cause of abatement, even by common law; Hargrave, 113, 151; Croke, Car. 426; Bacon, Abr. Abt. F; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 93. If the cause of action is such as would survive against the survivor or survivors, the plaintiff may proceed by suggesting the death upon the record; 24 Miss. 192; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 93. The inconvenience of abatement by death of parties was remedied by 17 Car. II. ch. 8, and 8 & 9 Wm. III., ch. 2, ss. 6, 7. In the United States, on the death of a sole defendant, his personal representatives may be substituted if the action could have been originally prosecuted against them; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 95. The right of action against a tort-feasor dies with him; and such death should be pleaded in abatement; 3 Cal. 370. Many exceptions to this rule exist by statute.

Infancy is pleadable in abatement to the person of the plaintiff, unless the infant appear by guardian or prochein ami; Coke, Litt. 135 b; 2 Saund. 117; 3 Bla. Com. 301; Bacon, Abr. Infancy, K, 2; 7 Johns. 379; 2 Conn. 357; 3 E. D. Smith, 596; 1 Speers, 212; 7 Johns. 373; 8 Pick. 552. He cannot appear by attorney, since he cannot make a power of attorney; 1 Chitty, Pl. 436; Archbold, Civ. Pl. 301; 3 Saund. 212; 3 N. H. 345; 8 Pick. 552; 7 Mass. 241; 4 Halst. 381; 2 N. H. 487; 7 Johns. 373. Where an infant sues as co-executor with an adult, both may appear by attorney, for, the suit being brought in autre droit, the personal rights of the infant are not affected, and therefore the adult is permitted to appoint an attorney for both; 3 Saund. 212; 1 Rolle, Abr. 288; Cro. Eliz. 542; 2 Strange, 784. At common law, judgment obtained for or against an infant plaintiff who appears by attorney, no plea being interposed, may be reversed by writ of error; 1 Rolle, Abr. 287; 3 Saund. 212; Cro. Jac. 441.

By statute, however, such judgment is valid, if for the infant; 3 Saund. 212 (n. 5).

Imprisonment. A sentence to imprisonment in New York, either of plaintiff or defendant, abates the action by statute; 2 Johns. Cas. 408; 1 Duer, 664; 2 R. S. § 19, p. 701, but see 8 Bosw. 617.

Lunacy. A lunatic may appear by attorney, and the court will on motion appoint an attorney for him; 18 Johns. 135. But a suit brought by a lunatic under guardianship shall abate; Brayt. 18.

Misjoinder. The joinder of improper plaintiffs may be pleaded in abatement; Comyn, Dig. Abt. E, 15; Archbold, Civ. Pl. 304; 1 Chitty, Pl. 8. Advantage may also be taken, if the misjoinder appear on record, by demurrer in arrest of judgment, or by writ of error. If it does not appear in the pleadings, it would be ground of non-suit on the trial; 1 Chitty, Pl. 66. Misjoinder of defendants in a personal action is not subject of a plea in abatement; 18 Ga. 509; Archbold, Civ. Pl. 68, 310. When an action is thus brought against two upon a contract made by one, it is a good ground of defence under the general issue; Clayt. 114; 1 East, 48; 2 Day, 272; 11 Johns. 104; 1 Esp. 363; for in such case the proof disproves the declaration. If several are sued for a tort committed by one, such misjoinder is no ground of objection in any manner, as of co-defendants in actions ex delicto, some may be convicted and others acquitted; 1 Saund. 291. In a real action, if brought against several persons, they may plead several tenancy; that is, that they hold in severalty, not jointly, Comyn, Dig. Abt. F, 12; or one of them may take the entire tenancy on himself, and pray judgment of the writ; Comyn, Dig. Abt. F, 13.

Misnomer of plaintiff, where the misnomer appears in the declaration, must be pleaded in abatement; 1 Chitty, Pl. 451; 1 Mass. 76; 5 id. 97; 15 id. 469; 10 S. & R. 257; 10 Humphr. 512; 9 Barb. 202; 32 N. H. 470. It is a good plea in abatement that the party sues by his surname only; Harp. 49; 1 Tayl. No. C. 148; Coxe, 138. A mistake in the Christian name is ground for abatement; 13 Ill. 570. In England the effect of pleas in abatement of misnomer has been diminished by statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV., ch. 42, s. 11, which allows an amendment at the cost of the plaintiff. The rule embodied in the English statute prevails in this country.

If the defendant is sued or declared against by a wrong name, he may plead the mistake in abatement; 3 Bla. Com. 302; 1 Salk. 7; 3 East, 167; Bacon, Abr. D; and in abatement only, 5 Mo. 118; 3 Ill. 290; 14 Ala. 256; 8 Mo. 291; 1 Metc. Mass. 151; 3 id. 235; but one defendant cannot plead the misnomer of another, Comyn, Dig. Abt. F, 18; 1 Chitty, Pl. 440; Archbold, Civ. Pl. 312; 1 Nev. & P. 26.

The omission of the initial letter between the Christian and surname of the party is not a misnomer or variance; 5 Johns. 84. As to idem sonans, see 18 East, 83; 16 id. 110; 2 Taunt. 400. Since oyer of the writ has been prohibited, the misnomer must appear in the declaration; 1 Cowen, 37. Misnomer of defendant was never pleadable in any other manner than in abatement; 5 Mo. 118; 3 Ill. 290; 14 Ala. 256; 8 Mo. 291; 1 Metc. Mass. 151; 3 id. 235. In England this plea has been abolished; 3 & 4 Wm. IV., ch. 42, s. 11. And in the States, generally, the plaintiff is allowed to amend a misnomer.

In criminal practice the usual pleas in abatement are for misnomer. If the indictment assigns to the defendant no Christian name, or a wrong one, no surname, or a wrong one, he can only object to this matter by a plea in abatement; 2 Gabbett, Crim. Law, 327. As to the evidence necessary in such case, see 1 M. & S. 453; 1 Salk. 6; 1 Campb. 479; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 221.

Non-joinder. If one of several joint tenants sue, Coke, Litt. 180 b; Bacon, Abr. Joint Tenants, K; 1 B. & P. 73; one of several joint contractors, in an action ex contractu, Archbold, Civ. Pl. 48–51, 53; one of several partners, 16 Ill. 340; 19 Penn. St. 273; 20 id. 228; Gow. Partn. 150; Collier, Partn. § 649; one of several joint executors who have proved the will, or even if they have not proved the will, 10 Ark. 169; 1 Chitty, Pl. 12, 13; one of several joint administrators, id. 13; the defendant may plead the non-joinder in abatement; Comyn, Dig. Abt. E; 1 Chitty, Pl. 12. The omission of one or more of the owners of the property in an action ex delicto is pleaded in abatement; 22 Vt. 388; 10 Ired. 169; 2 Cush. 130; 13 Penn. St. 497; 11 Ill. 22. Dormant partners may be omitted in suits on contracts to which they are not privy; 4 Wend. 628; 8 S. & R. 55; 6 Pick. 352; 3 Cow. 85. A non-joinder may also be taken advantage of in actions ex contractu, at the trial, under the general issue, by demurrer, or in arrest of judgment, if it appears on the face of the pleadings; 4 Wend. 496.

Non-joinder of a person as defendant who is jointly interested in the contract upon which the action is brought can only be taken advantage of by plea in abatement, 5 Term, 651; 1 East, 20; 4 Term, 725; 3 Campb. 50; 2 Jur. 48; 2 Johns. Cas. 382; 3 Caines, 99; 18 Johns. 459; 2 Iowa, 161; 24 Conn. 531; 26 Penn. St. 458; 24 N. H. 128; 8 Gill, Md. 59; 19 Ala. N. S. 340; 2 Zabr. 372; 9 B. Monr. 30; 23 Ga. 600; Archbold, Civ. Pl. 309; unless the mistake appear from the plaintiff's own pleadings, when it may be taken advantage of by demurrer or in arrest of judgment; 1 Saund. 271; 18 Johns. 459; 1 B. & P. 72. Non-joinder of a co-tenant may be pleaded when the suit respects the land held in common; 44 Me. 92. When the contract is several as well as joint, the plaintiff is at liberty to proceed against the parties separately or jointly. 1

Chitty, Pl. 43; 1 Saund. 153, n. 1; 2 Burr. 1190; Bract. Vt. 22. In actions of tort the plaintiff may join the parties concerned in the tort, or not, at his election; 6 Taunt. 29, 35, 42; 1 Saund. 291; 6 Moore, 154; 7 Price, Exch. 408; 3 B. & P. 54; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 118; 3 East, 62. The non-joinder of any of the wrong-doers is no defence in any form of action.

When husband and wife should be sued jointly, and one is sued alone, the non-joinder may be pleaded in abatement; Archbold, Civ. Pl. 309. Non-joinder of co-executors or co-administrators may be pleaded in abatement; Comyn, Dig. Abt. F. The form of action is of no account where the action is substantially founded in contract; 6 Term, 369; 5 id. 651. The law under this head has in a great measure become obsolete in many of the States, by statutory provisions making contracts which by the common law were joint, both joint and several.

Privilege of defendant from being sued may be pleaded in abatement; 9 Yerg. 1; Bacon, Abr. Abt. C. See PRIVILEGE. A peer of England cannot, as formerly, plead his peerage in abatement of a writ of summons; 2 Wm. IV. ch. 39. It is a good cause of abatement that the defendant was arrested at a time when he was privileged from arrest; 2 N. H. 468; 4 T. B. Monr. 539; or that he was served with process while privileged from suits, 2 Wend. 586; 1 South. N. J. 366; 1 Ala. 276. The privilege of defendant as member of the legislature has been pleaded in abatement; 4 Day, 129.

For cases where the defendant may plead non-tenure, see Archbold, Civ. Pl. 310; Cro. Eliz. 559; 33 Me. 343.

Where he may plead a disclaimer, see Archbold, Civ. Pl.; Comyn, Dig. Abt. F, 15; 2 N. H. 10.

PLEAS IN ABATEMENT TO THE COUNT required oyer of the original writ; and, as this cannot now be had, these pleas are, it seems, abolished; 1 Chitty, Pl. 450 (6th Lond. ed.); Saunders, Pl. Abatement.

PLEAS IN ABATEMENT OF THE WRIT.—In general, any irregularity, defect, or informality in the terms, form, or structure of the writ, or mode of issuing it, is a ground of abatement; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, s. 132. Among them may be enumerated want of date, or impossible date; want of venue, or in local actions, a wrong venue; a defective return; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, s. 133. Oyer of the writ being prohibited, these errors cannot be objected to unless they appear in the declaration, which is presumed to correspond with the writ; 1 B. & P. 645–648; 6 Fla. 724; 3 B. & P. 399; 14 M. & W. 161. The objection then is to the writ through the declaration; 1 B. & P. 648; there being no plea to the declaration alone, but in bar; 2 Saund. 209; 10 Mod. 210.

Such pleas are either to the form of the writ, or to the action thereof.

Those of the first description were formerly either for matter apparent on the face of the writ, or for matter dehors; Comyn, Dig. Abt. H, 17.

Pleas in abatement to the form of the writ were formerly allowed for very trifling errors apparent on the face of the writ, 1 Lutw. 25; 1 Strange, 556; Ld. Raym. 1541; 2 B. & P. 395, but since oyer has been prohibited have fallen into disuse; Tidd, Pr. 636.

Pleas in abatement of the form of the writ are now principally for matters dehors, Comyn, Dig. Abt. H, 17; Gilbert, C. P. 51, existing at the time of suing out the writ, or arising afterwards; such as misnomer of the plaintiff or defendant in Christian name or surname; Tidd, Pr. 637.

Pleas in Abatement to the Action of the Writ are that the action is misconceived, as if assumpsit is brought instead of account, or trespass when case is the proper action; 1 Show. 71; Hob. 199; Tidd. Pr. 579; or that the right of action had not accrued at the commencement of the suit; 2 Lev. 197; Cro. Eliz. 325; Hob. 199; Comyn, Dig. Action, E, 1. But these pleas are unusual, since advantage may be taken for the same reasons on demurrer or under the general issue; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, s. 137; 1 C. & M. 492, 768. It may also be pleaded in abatement that there is another action pending; Comyn, Dig. Abt. H, 24; Bacon, Abr. Abt. M; 1 Chitty, Pl. 448. See LIS PENDENS.

Variance. Where the count varies from the writ, or the writ varies from the record or instrument on which the action is brought, it is pleadable in abatement; 2 Wils. 85, 395; Cro. Eliz. 722; 1 H. Bla. 249; 17 Ark. 254; 17 Ill. 529; 25 N. H. 521. If the variance is only in matter of mere form, as in time or place, when that circumstance is immaterial, advantage can be taken only by plea in abatement; 8 Ind. 354; 10 Ill. 75; Yelv. 120; Latch, 173; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, ss. 97, 98–101. But if the variance is in matter of substance, as if the writ sounds in contract and the declaration in tort, advantage may also be taken by motion in arrest of judgment; 28 N. H. 90; Hob. 279; Cro. Eliz. 722. Pleas under this head have been virtually abolished by the rule refusing oyer of the writ; and the operation of this rule extends to all pleas in abatement that cannot be proved without examination of the writ; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, s. 101. It seems that oyer of the writ is allowed in some of the states which retain the old system of pleading, as well as in those which have adopted new systems. In such states these rules as to variance are of force. 28 N. H. 90; 25 id. 521; 17 Ill. 529; 22 Ala. N. s. 588; 23 Miss. 193; 8 Ind. 354; 21 Ala. N. s. 404; 11 Ill. 573; 35 N. H. 172; 17 Ark. 154; 1 Harr. & G. 164; 1 T. B. Monr. 35; 11 Wheat. 280; 12 Johns. 430; 4 Halst. 284.

QUALITIES OF PLEAS IN ABATEMENT. The defendant may plead in abatement to part, and demur or plead in bar to the residue, of the declaration; 1 Chitty, Pl. 458 (6th Lond. ed.); 2 Saund. 210. The general rule is that whatever proves the writ false at the time of suing it out shall abate the writ entirely; Gilbert, C. P. 247; 1 Saund. 286 (n. 7).

As this plea delays the ascertainment of the merits of the action, it is not favored by the courts; the greatest accuracy and precision are therefore required; and it cannot be amended; 3 Term, 186; Willes, 42; 2 Saund. 298; Comyn, Dig. I, 11; Coke, Litt. 392; Cro. Jac. 82; 13 M. & W. 464; 2 Johns. Cas. 312; 8 Bingh. 416; 44 Me. 482; 18 Ark. 236; 1 Hempst. 215; 27 Ala. N. s. 678; 24 id. 329. It must contain a direct, full, and positive averment of all the material facts; 30 Vt. 76; 35 N. H. 172; 4 R. I. 110; 37 Me. 49; 28 N. H. 18; 26 Vt. 48; 24 Ala. N. s. 329; 1 Mich. 254. It must give enough so as to enable the plaintiff by amendment completely to supply the defect or avoid the mistake on which the plea is founded; 6 Taunt. 595; 4 Term, 224; 8 id. 515; 1 Saund. 274 (n. 4); 6 East, 600; 1 Day, 28; 3 Mass. 24; 2 id. 362; 1 Hayw. 501; 2 Ld. Raym. 1178; 1 East, 634.

It must not be double or repugnant; 5 Term, 487; Carth. 207; 3 M. & W. 607. It must have an apt and proper beginning and conclusion; 3 Term, 186; 2 Johns. Cas. 312; 10 Johns. 49; 2 Saund. 209. The whole matter of complaint must be covered by the plea; 2 B. & P. 420. It cannot be pleaded after making full defence; 1 Chitty, Pl. 441 (6th Lond. ed.).

As to the time of pleading matter in abatement, it must be pleaded before any plea to the merits, both in civil and criminal cases, except in cases where it arises or comes to the knowledge of the party subsequently; 6 Metc. 224; 11 Cush. 164; 21 Vt. 52; 40 Me. 218; 22 Barb. 244; 14 Ark. 445; 35 Me. 121; 15 Ala. 675; 13 Mo. 547; and the right is waived by a subsequent plea to the merits; 14 How. 505; 15 Ala. 675; 19 Conn. 493; 1 Iowa, 165; 4 Gill, Md. 166. See PLEA PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE.

Of the Affidavit of Truth. Every dilatory plea must be proven to be true, either by affidavit, by matter apparent upon the record, or probable matter shown to the court to induce them to believe it; 3 & 4 Anne, ch. 16, s. 11; 3 B. & P. 397; 2 W. Bla. 1088; 3 Nev. & M. 260; 30 Vt. 177; 1 Curt. 494; 17 Ala. 30; 1 Chandl. 16; 1 Swan, 391; 1 Iowa, 165. It is not necessary that the affidavit should be made by the party himself; his attorney, or even a third person, will do; Barnes, 344; 1 Saunders, Pl. & Ev. 3 (5th Am. ed.). The plaintiff may waive an affidavit; 5 Dowl. & L. 737; 16 Johns. 307. The affidavit must be coextensive with the plea, 3 Nev. & M. 260, and leave nothing to be collected by inference, Say. 293. It should state that the plea is true in substance and fact, and not merely that the plea is a true plea; 3 Strange, 705; 1 Browne, 77; 2 Dall. 184; 1 Yeates, 185.

JUDGMENT ON PLEAS IN ABATEMENT. If issue be joined on a plea in abatement, a judgment for the plaintiff upon a verdict is final, 2 Wils. 368; 1 Ld. Raym. 992; Tidd, Pr. 641; 1 Strange, 532; 1 Bibb, 234; 6 Wend. 649; 8 Cush. 301; 3 N. H. 282; 2 Penn. St. 361; 3 Wend. 258; but judgment for plaintiff upon a demurrer to a plea in abatement is not final, but merely respondeat ouster; 1 East, 542; 1 Ventr. 137; Ld. Raym. 992; Tidd, Pr. 641; 16 Mass. 147; 14 N. H. 371; 32 id. 361; 1 Blackf. Ind. 388. After judgment of respondeat ouster, the defendant has four days' time to plead, commencing after the judgment has been signed; 8 Bingh. 177. He may plead again in abatement, provided the subject-matter pleaded be not of the same degree, or of any preceding degree or class with that before pleaded; Comyn, Dig. Abt. I, 3; 1 Saunders, Pl. & Ev. 4 (5th Am. ed.); Tidd, Pr. 641.

If the plea is determined in favor of the defendant either upon an issue of law or fact, the judgment is that the writ or bill be quashed; Yelv. 112; Bacon, Abr. Abt. P; Gould, Pl. ch. 5, § 159; 2 Saund. 211 (n. 3).

See further, on the subject of abatement of actions, Comyn, Dig. Abt.; Bacon, Abr. Abt.; United States Digest, Abt.; 1 Saunders, Pl. & Ev. 1 (5th Am. ed.); Graham, Pr. 224; Tidd, Pr. 636; Gould, Pl. ch. 5; 1 Chitty, Pl. 446 (6th Lond. ed.); Story, Pl. 1–70.

Of Taxes. A diminution or decrease in the amount of tax imposed upon any person. The provisions for securing this abatement are entirely matters of statute regulation; 5 Gray, 365; 4 R. I. 313; 30 Penn. St. 227; 18 Ark. 380; 18 Ill. 312, and vary in the different States. See the various digests of State laws and collections of statutes.

ABATOR. One who abates or destroys a nuisance. One who, having no right of entry, gets possession of the freehold to the prejudice of an heir or devisee, after the time when the ancestor died, and before the heir or devisee enters; Littleton, § 397; Perkins, Conv. § 383; 2 Preston, Abstr. 296, 300. See Adams, Eject. 43; 1 Washb. R. P. 225.

ABATUDA. Any thing diminished; as, moneta abatuda, which is money clipped or diminished in value. Cowel.

ABAVITA. Used for abamita, which see.

ABAVUNCULUS. A great-great-grandmother's brother. Calvinus, Lex.

ABBEY. A society of religious persons, having an abbot or abbess to preside over them.

ABBREVIATION. A shortened form of a word, obtained by the omission of one or more letters or syllables from the middle or end of the word.

The abbreviations in common use in modern times consist of the initial letter or letters, syllable or syllables, of the word. Anciently, also, contracted forms of words, obtained by the omission of letters intermediate between the initial and final letters were much in use. These latter forms are now more commonly designated by the term contraction. Abbreviations are of frequent use in referring to text-books, reports, &c., and in indicating dates, but should be very sparingly employed, if at all, in formal and important legal documents. See 4 C. & P. 51; 9 Coke, 48. No part of an indictment should contain any abbreviations except in cases where a fac-simile of a written instrument is necessary to be set out. 1 East, 180, n. The variety and number of abbreviations are as nearly illimitable as the ingenuity of man can make them; and the advantages arising from their use are, to a great extent, counterbalanced by the ambiguity and uncertainty resulting from the usually inconsiderate selection which is made.

The following list is believed to contain all abbreviations in common use. Where a shorter and a longer abbreviation are in common use, both are given. For a fuller explanation of the reports in this list, see REPORTS.

ABBREVIATORS. Eccl. law. Officers whose duty it is to assist in drawing up the Pope's briefs, and reducing petitions into proper form, to be converted into Papal Bulls.

ABBROCHMENT. Old Eng. law. The forestalling of a market or fair.

ABBUTTALS. See ABUTTALS.

ABDICATION. A simple renunciation of an office; generally understood of a supreme office.

James II. of England, Charles V. of Germany, and Christiana, Queen of Sweden, are said to have abdicated. When James II. of England left the kingdom, the Commons voted that he had abdicated the government, and that thereby the throne had become vacant. The House of Lords preferred the word deserted; but the Commons thought it not comprehensive enough, for then the king might have the liberty of returning.

ABDUCTION. Forcibly taking away a man's wife, his child, or his maid; 3 Bla. Com. 139–141.

The unlawful taking or detention of any female for purposes of marriage, concubinage, or prostitution; 4 Steph. Com. 84.

The remedy for taking away a man's wife was by a suit by the husband for damages, and the offender was also answerable to the king. 3 Bla. Com. 139.

If the original removal was without consent, subsequent assent to the marriage does not change the nature of the act.

It is stated to be the better opinion, that if a man marries a woman under age, without the consent of her father or guardian, that act is not indictable at common law; but if children are taken from their parents or guardians, or others intrusted with the care of them, by any sinister means, either by violence, deceit, conspiracy, or any corrupt or improper practices, as by intoxication, for the purpose of marrying them, though the parties themselves consent to the marriage, such criminal means will render the act an offence at common law; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 458; 1 Rus. Cr. 962; Rose. Cr. Ev. 260.

ABEARANCE. Behavior; as a recognizance to be of good abearance, signifies to be of good behavior; 4 Bla. Com. 251, 256.

ABEREMURDER. In old Eng. law. An apparent, plain, or downright murder. It was used to distinguish a wilful murder from chance-medley, or manslaughter; Spelman; Cowel; Blount.

ABET. In crim. law. To encourage or set another on to commit a crime. This word is always applied to aiding the commission of a crime. To abet another to commit a murder, is to command, procure, or counsel him to commit it. Old Nat. Brev. 21; Coke, Litt. 475.

ABETTOR. An instigator, or setter on; one that promotes or procures the commission of a crime. Old Nat. Brev. 21.

The distinction between abettors and accessaries is the presence or absence at the commission of the crime; Cowel; Fleta, lib. 1, cap. 34. Presence and participation are necessary to constitute a person an abettor; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 33; Russ. & R. 99; 9 Bingh. N. C. 440; 13 Mo. 382; 1 Wis. 159; 10 Pick. 477.

ABEYANCE (Fr. abbayer, to expect). In expectation, remembrance, and contemplation of law; the condition of a freehold when there is no person in being in whom it is vested.

In such cases the freehold has been said to be in nubibus (in the clouds), and in gremio legis (in the bosom of the law). It has been denied by some that there is such a thing as an estate in abeyance; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 513. See also the note to 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 107.

The law requires that the freehold should never, if possible, be in abeyance. Where there is a tenant of the freehold, the remainder or reversion in fee may exist for a time without any particular owner, in which case it is said to be in abeyance; 9 S. & R. 367; 3 Plowd. 29 a, b, 35 a; 1 Washb. R. P. 47.

A glebe, parsonage lands, may be in abeyance, in the United States. 9 Cranch, 47; 2 Mass. 500; 1 Washb. R. P. 48. So also may the franchise of a corporation. 4 Wheat. 691. So, too, personal property may be in abeyance or legal sequestration, as in case of a vessel captured at sea from its capture until it becomes invested with the character of a prize. 1 Kent, 102; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 139; 3 id. 97, n. See generally, also, 5 Mass. 555; 15 id. 464.

ABIDING BY. In Scotch law. A judicial declaration that the party abides by the deed on which he founds, in an action where the deed or writing is attacked as forged. Unless this be done, a decree that the deed is false will be pronounced. Paterson, Comp. It has the effect of pledging the party to stand the consequences of founding on a forged deed. Bell, Dict.

ABIGEATORES. See ABIGEUS.

ABIGEATUS. The offence of driving away and stealing cattle in numbers. See ABIGEUS.

ABIGEI. See ABIGEUS.

ABIGERE. See ABIGEUS.

ABIGEUS. (Lat. abigere). One who steals cattle in numbers.

This is the common word used to denote a stealer of cattle in large numbers, which latter circumstance distinguishes the abigeus from the fur, who was simply a thief. He who steals a single animal may be called fur; he who steals a flock or herd is an abigeus. The word is derived from abigere, to lead or drive away, and is the same in signification as Abactor (q. v.), Abigeatores, Abigatores, Abigei. Du Cange; Guyot, Rép. Univ.; 4 Bla. Com. 239.

A distinction is also taken by some writers depending upon the place whence the cattle are taken; thus, one who takes cattle from a stable is called fur. Calvinus, Lex, Abigei.

ABJUDICATIO (Lat. abjudicare). A removal from court. Calvinus, Lex. It has the same signification as foris-judicatio both in the civil and canon law. Coke, Litt. 100 b. Calvinus, Lex.

ABJURATION (Lat. abjuratio, from abjurare, to forswear). A renunciation of allegiance, upon oath.

In Am. law. Every alien, upon application to become a citizen of the United States, must declare on oath or affirmation before the court where the application is made, amongst other things, that he doth absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity which he owes to any foreign prince, state, etc., and particularly, by name, the prince, state, etc., whereof he was before a citizen or subject. Rawle, Const. 93; 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 850.

In Eng. law. The oath by which any person holding office in England was formerly obliged to bind himself not to acknowledge any right in the Pretender to the throne of England; 1 Bla. Com. 368; 13 and 14 W. III. c. 6. Repealed by 30 and 31 Vic. c. 59.

It also denotes an oath abjuring certain doctrines of the church of Rome.

In the ancient English law, it was a renunciation of one's country and taking an oath of perpetual banishment. A man who had committed a felony, and for safety fled to a sanctuary, might within forty days confess and take the oath of abjuration and perpetual banishment; he was then transported. This was abolished by stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 28. Ayliffe, Parerg. 14; Burr. L. Dic., Abjuration of the Realm; 4 Bla. Com. 332.

But the doctrine of abjuration has been referred to, at least, in much later times; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 56, 124, 332; 11 East, 301; 2 Kent, 156, n.; Termes de la Ley.

ABLEGATI. Papal ambassadors of the second rank, who are sent with a less extensive commission to a court where there are no nuncios. This title is equivalent to envoy, which see.

ABNEPOS (Lat.). A great-great-grandson. The grandson of a grandson or granddaughter. Calvinus, Lex.

ABNEPTIS (Lat.). A great-great-granddaughter. The granddaughter of a grandson or granddaughter. Calvinus, Lex.

ABOLITION (Lat. abolitio, from abolere, to utterly destroy). The extinguishment, abrogation, or annihilation of a thing.

In the civil, French, and German law, abolition is used nearly synonymously with pardon, remission, grace. Dig. 39. 4. 3. 3. There is, however, this difference: grace is the generic term; pardon, according to those laws, is the clemency which the prince extends to a man who has participated in a crime, without being a principal or accomplice; remission is made in cases of involuntary homicides, and self-defence. Abolition is different: it is used when the crime cannot be remitted. The prince then may by letters of abolition remit the punishment, but the infamy remains, unless letters of abolition have been obtained before sentence. Encycl. de D'Alembert.

ABORDAGE (Fr.). The collision of vessels.

If the collision happen in the open sea, and the damaged ship is insured, the insurer must pay the loss, but is entitled in the civil law, at least, to be subrogated to the rights of the insured against the party causing the damage. Ordonnance de la Marine de 1681, Art. 8; Jugements d' Oléron; Emer. Ins. c. 12, 14.

ABORTION. The expulsion of the fœtus at a period of utero-gestation so early that it has not acquired the power of sustaining an independent life.

Its natural and innocent causes are to be sought either in the mother—as in a nervous, irritable temperament, disease, malformation of the pelvis, immoderate venereal indulgence, a habit of miscarriage, plethora, great debility; or in the fœtus or its dependencies; and this is usually disease existing in the ovum, in the membranes, the placenta, or the fœtus itself.

The criminal means of producing abortion are of two kinds. General, or those which seek to produce the expulsion through the constitution of the mother, which are venesection, emetics, cathartics, diuretics, emmenagogues, comprising mercury, savin, and the secale cornutum (spurred rye, ergot), to which much importance has been attached; or local or mechanical means, which consist either of external violence applied to the abdomen or loins, or of instruments introduced into the uterus for the purpose of rupturing the membranes and thus bringing on premature action of the womb. The latter is the more generally resorted to, as being the most effectual. These local or mechanical means not unfrequently produce the death of the mother, as well as that of the fœtus.

At common law, an attempt to destroy a child en ventre sa mere, appears to have been held in England to be a misdemeanor. Rosc. Cr. Ev. 4th Lond. ed. 260; 1 Russ. Cr. 3d Lond. ed. 671. At an early period it was held to be murder, in case of death of the child. 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1220. In this country, it has been held that it is not an indictable offence, at common law, to administer a drug, or perform an operation upon a pregnant woman with her consent, with the intention and for the purpose of causing an abortion and premature birth of the fœtus of which she is pregnant, by means of which an abortion is in fact caused, unless, at the time of the administration of such drug or the performance of such operation, such woman was quick with child; 9 Metc. 263; 11 Gray, 85; 2 Zabr. 52; 3 Clarke (Iowa), 274; 15 Iowa, 177; 49 N. Y. 86. A recent case in Kentucky citing all the earlier cases holds that this is the rule at common law, and must prevail in the absence of statute; 10 Cent. L. J. 338. But in Pennsylvania a contrary doctrine has been held; 13 Penn. St. 631. Wharton supports the latter doctrine on principle. See, also, 116 Mass. 343.

The former English statutes on this subject, the 43 Geo. III. c. 58, and 9 Geo. IV. c. 51, § 14, distinguished between the case where the woman was quick and was not quick with child; and under both acts the woman must have been pregnant at the time. 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 216; 3 C. & P. 605. The terms of the recent act (24 and 25 Vic. c. 100, s. 62) are, "with intent to procure the miscarriage of any woman whether she be with child or not." See 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 18; 2 C. & K. 293.

When, in consequence of the means used to secure an abortion, the death of the woman ensues, the crime is murder. And if a person, intending to procure abortion, does an act which causes a child to be born so much earlier than the natural time that it is born in a state much less capable of living, and afterwards dies in consequence of its exposure to the external world, the person who by this misconduct so brings the child into the world, and puts it thereby in a situation in which it cannot live, is guilty of murder; and the mere existence of a possibility that something might have been done to prevent the death will not render it less murder; 2 C. & K. 784.

A woman who takes a potion given to her to cause a miscarriage, is not an accomplice with the person administering it; 39 N. J. L. 598.

Consult 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 288–331, 429–435; Rose. Cr. Ev. 190; 1 Russ. Cr. 3d Lond. ed. 671; 1 Briand, Méd. Leg. pt. 1, c. 4; Alison, Scotch Cr. Law, 628; 2 Whart. & Still. Med. Jur. § 84 et seq.; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1220 et seq.

ABORTIVE TRIAL. Used "when a case has gone off, and no verdict has been pronounced without the fault, contrivance, or management of the parties." Jebb & B. 51.

ABORTUS. The fruit of an abortion; the child born before its time, incapable of life. See ABORTION; BIRTH; BREATH; DEAD-BORN; GESTATION; LIFE.

ABPATRUUS. (Lat.). A great-great-uncle; or, a great-great-grandfather's brother. Du Cange, Patruus. It sometimes means uncle, and sometimes great-uncle.

ABRIDGE. In practice. To shorten a declaration or count by taking away or severing some of the substance of it; Brooke, Abr. Abridgment; Comyn, Dig. Abridgment; 1 Viner, Abr. 109.

To abridge a plaint is to strike out a part of the demand and pray that the tenant answer to the rest. This was allowable generally in real actions where the writ was de libero tenemento, as assize, dower, etc., where the demandant claimed land of which the tenant was not seized. See 1 Wms. Saund. 207, n. 2; 2 id. 24, 330; Brooke, Abr. Abridgment; 1 Pet. 74; Stearns, Real Act. 204.

ABRIDGMENT. An epitome or compendium of another and larger work, wherein the principal ideas of the larger work are summarily contained.

Copyright law. When fairly made, it may justly be deemed, within the meaning of the law, a new work, the publication of which will not infringe the copyright of the work abridged. The abridgment must be something more than a mere copy of the whole or parts of the original. It must be the result of independent labor other than copying, and there must be substantial fruits of authorship on the part of the maker; Drone on Copyright, 158; 4 McLean, 306; 2 Am. L. T. R. U. S. 402. See 16 U. C. B. 409. For a discussion of this subject, in which it is maintained that an abridgment is piratical, see Drone, Copyright, p. 44. See, also, 5 Am. L. T. R. 158; L. R. 8 Exch. 1.

An injunction will be granted against a mere colorable abridgment. 2 Atk. 143; 1 Brown, Ch. 451; 5 Ves. 709; Lofft, 775; Ambl. 403; 1 Story, 11; 3 id. 6; 1 Y. & C. Ch. 298; 39 Leg. Obs. 346; 2 Kent, 382.

Abridgments of the law or digests of adjudged cases serve the very useful purpose of an index to the cases abridged; 5 Coke, 25. Lord Coke says they are most profitable to those who make them; Coke, Litt., in preface to the table at the end of the work. With few exceptions, they are not entitled to be considered authoritative. See 2 Wils. 1, 2; 1 Burr. 364; 1 W. Bla. 101; 3 Term, 64, 241; and an article in the North American Review, July, 1826, pp. 8–13, for an account of the principal abridgments, which was written by the late Justice Story, and is reprinted in his "Miscellaneous Writings," p. 79. Warren Law Stud. 778 et seq.

ABROGATION. The destruction of or annulling a former law, by an act of the legislative power, or by usage.

A law may be abrogated, or only derogated from: it is abrogated when it is totally annulled; it is derogated from when only a part is abrogated; derogatur legi, cum pars detrahitur; abrogatur legi, cum prorsus tollitur. Dig. 50. 17. 1. 102. Lex rogatur dum fertur (when it is passed); abrogatur dum tollitur (when it is repealed); derogatur idem dum quoddam ejus caput aboletur (when any part of it is abolished); subrogatur dum aliquid ei adjicitur (when any thing is added to it); abrogatur denique, quoties aliquid in eâ mutatur (as often as any thing in it is changed). Dupin, Proleg. Jur. art. iv.

Express abrogation is that literally pronounced by the new law either in general terms, as when a final clause abrogates or repeals all laws contrary to the provisions of the new one, or in particular terms, as when it abrogates certain preceding laws which are named.

Implied abrogation takes place when the new law contains provisions which are positively contrary to the former laws, without expressly abrogating such laws; for it is a maxim, posteriora derogant prioribus; 10 Mart. La. 172, 560; and also when the order of things for which the law had been made no longer exists, and hence the motives which had caused its enactment have ceased to operate; ratione legis omnino cessante, cessat lex; Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. tit. prel. § 11, n. 151; Merlin, Répert., Abrogation.

ABSCOND. To go in a clandestine manner out of the jurisdiction of the courts, or to lie concealed, in order to avoid their process.

ABSCONDING DEBTOR. One who absconds from his creditors.

The statutes of the various states, and the decisions upon them, have determined who shall be treated in those states, respectively, as absconding debtors, and liable to be proceeded against as such. A person who has been in a state only transiently, or has come into it without any intention of settling therein, cannot be treated as an absconding debtor; 2 Cal. 318; 15 Johns. 196; nor can one who openly changes his residence; 3 Yerg. 414; 5 Conn. 117; 43 Ill. 185. For the rule in Vermont, see 2 Vt. 489; 6 id. 614. It is not necessary that the debtor should actually leave the state; 7 Md. 209. It is essential that there be an intention to delay and defraud creditors.

ABSENCE. The state of being away from one's domicile or usual place of residence.

A presumption of death arises after the absence of a person for seven years without having been heard from; Peake, Ev. c. 14, § 1; 2 Starkie, Ev. 457, 458; Park, Ins. 433; 1 W. Bla. 404; 1 Stark. 121; 2 Campb. 113; 4 B. & Ald. 422; 4 Wheat. 150, 173; 15 Mass. 305; 18 Johns. 141; 1 Hardin, 479.

In Louisiana a curator is appointed under some circumstances to take charge of the estate of those who are out of the state during their absence; La. Civ. Code, art. 50, 51.

ABSENTEE. A landlord who resides in a country other than that from which he draws his rents. The discussions on the subject have generally had reference to Ireland. McCulloch, Polit. Econ.; 33 British Quarterly Review, 455.

ABSOILE. To pardon; to deliver from excommunication. Staunford, Pl. Cr. 72; Kelham. Sometimes spelled Assoile, which see.

ABSOLUTE (Lat. absolvère). Complete, perfect, final; without any condition or incumbrance; as an absolute bond (simplex obligatio) in distinction from a conditional bond; an absolute estate, one that is free from all manner of condition or incumbrance. See CONDITION.

A rule is said to be absolute when on the hearing it is confirmed and made final. A conveyance is said to be absolute, as distinguished from a mortgage or other conditional conveyance; 1 Powell, Mort. 125.

Absolute rights are such as appertain and belong to particular persons merely as individuals or single persons, as distinguished from relative rights, which are incident to them as members of society; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 123; 1 Chitty, Pl. 364; 1 Chitty, Pr. 32.

Absolute property is where a man hath solely and exclusively the right and also the occupation of movable chattels; distinguished from a qualified property, as that of a bailee; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 388; 2 Kent, 347.

ABSOLUTION. In Civil Law. A sentence whereby a party accused is declared innocent of the crime laid to his charge.

In Canon Law. A juridical act whereby the clergy declare that the sins of such as are penitent are remitted. The formula of absolution in the Roman Church is absolute; in the Greek Church it is deprecatory; in the Reformed Churches, declaratory. Among Protestants it is chiefly used for a sentence by which a person who stands excommunicated is released or freed from that punishment. Encyc. Brit.

In French Law. The dismissal of an accusation.

The term acquittment is employed when the accused is declared not guilty, and absolution when he is recognized as guilty but the act is not punishable by law or he is exonerated by some defect of intention or will; Merlin, Rep.

ABSOLUTISM. In politics. That government in which public power is vested in some person or persons, unchecked and uncontrolled by any law or institution.

The word was first used at the beginning of this century, in Spain, where one who was in favor of the absolute power of the king, and opposed to the constitutional system introduced by the Cortes during the struggle with the French, was called absolutista. The term Absolutist spread over Europe, and was applied exclusively to absolute monarchism; but absolute power may exist in an aristocracy and in a democracy as well. Dr. Lieber, therefore, uses in his works the term Absolute Democracy for that government in which the public power rests unchecked in the multitude (practically speaking, in the majority).

ABSQUE ALIQUO INDE REDDENDO (Lat. without reserving any rent therefrom). A term used of a free grant by the crown; 2 Rolle, Abr. 502.

ABSQUE HOC (Lat.). Without this. See TRAVERSE.

ABSQUE IMPETITIONE VASTI (Without impeachment of waste). A term indicating freedom from any liability on the part of the tenant or lessee to answer in damages for the waste he may commit. See WASTE.

ABSQUE TALI CAUSA (Lat. without such cause). In pleading. A form of replication in an action ex delicto which works a general denial of the whole matter of the defendant's plea of de injuria; Gould, Plead. c. 7, § 10.

ABSTENTION. In French Law. The tacit renunciation of a succession by an heir; Merlin, Répert.

ABSTRACT OF A FINE. A part of the record of a fine, consisting of an abstract of the writ of covenant and the concord; naming the parties, the parcel of land, and the agreement; 2 Bla. Com. 351.

ABSTRACT OF A TITLE. An epitome, or brief statement of the evidences of ownership of real estate.

An abstract should set forth briefly, but clearly, every deed, will, or other instrument, every recital or fact relating to the devolution of the title, which will enable a purchaser, or mortgagee, or his counsel, to form an opinion as to the exact state of the title.

In England this is usually prepared at the expense of the owner; 1 Dart, Vend. and Purch. 279. The failure to deliver an abstract in England relieves the purchaser from his contract in law; id. 305. It should run back for sixty years; or, since the Act of 38 and 39 Vic. c. 78, forty years prior to the intended sale, etc.

In the United States, where offices for registering deeds are universal, and conveyancing much less complicated, abstracts are much simpler than in England, and are usually prepared at the expense of the purchaser, etc., or by his conveyancer.

See Whart. Law Dict.; 7 W. Va. 390.

ABUSE. Every thing which is contrary to good order established by usage. Merlin, Répert.

Among the civilians, abuse has another signification; which is the destruction of the substance of a thing in using it. For example, the borrower of wine or grain abuses the article borrowed by using it, because he cannot enjoy it without consuming it.

ABUSE OF A FEMALE CHILD. An injury to the genital organs in an attempt at carnal knowledge, falling short of actual penetration. 58 Ala. 376. See RAPE.

ABUT. To reach, to touch.

In old law, the ends were said to abut, the sides to adjoin. Cro. Jac. 184.

To take a new direction; as where a bounding line changes its course. Spelman, Gloss. Abuttare. In the modern law, to bound upon. 2 Chitty, Pl. 660.

ABUTTALS (Fr.). The buttings or boundings of lands, showing to what other lands, highways, or places they belong or are abutting. Termes de la Ley.

AC ETIAM (Lat. and also). The introduction of the statement of the real cause of action, used in those cases where it was necessary to allege a fictitious cause of action to give the court jurisdiction, and also the real cause in compliance with the statutes. It was first used in the K. B., and was afterwards adopted by Lord C. J. North in addition to the clausum fregit writs of his court upon which writs of capias might issue. He balanced awhile whether he should not use the words nec non instead of ac etiam. It is sometimes written acetiam. 2 Strs. 922. This clause is no longer used in the English courts. 2 Will. IV. c. 39. See Burgess, Ins. 142–157; 3 Bla. Com. 288.

AC ETIAM BILLÆ. And also to a bill. See AC ETIAM.

ACCEDAS AD CURIAM (Lat. that you go to court). In Eng. law. An original writ issuing out of chancery and directed to the sheriff, for the purpose of removing a replevin suit from the Hundred Court or Court Baron before one of the superior courts of law. It directs the sheriff to go to the lower court, and there cause the plaint to be recorded and to return, etc. See Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 18; Dy. 169.

ACCEDAS AD VICE COMITEM (Lat. that you go to the sheriff). In Eng. law. A writ directed to the coroner, commanding him to deliver a writ to the sheriff, when the latter, having had a pone delivered him, suppressed it; Reg. Orig. 83.

ACCELERATION. The shortening of the time for the vesting in possession of an expectant interest. Wharton.

ACCEPTANCE (Lat. accipere, to receive). The receipt of a thing offered by another with an intention to retain it, indicated by some act sufficient for the purpose; 2 Parsons, Contr. 221.

The element of receipt must enter into every acceptance, though receipt does not necessarily mean in this sense some actual manual taking. To this element there must be added an intention to retain. This intention may exist at the time of the receipt, or subsequently; it may be indicated by words, or acts, or any medium understood by the parties; and an acceptance of goods will be implied from mere detention, in many instances.

An acceptance involves very generally the idea of a receipt in consequence of a previous undertaking on the part of the person offering to deliver such a thing as the party accepting is in some manner bound to receive. It is through this meaning that the term acceptance, as used in reference to bills of exchange, has a relation to the more general use of the term. As distinguished from assent, acceptance would denote receipt of something in compliance with, and satisfactory fulfilment of, a contract to which assent had been previously given. See ASSENT.

Under the statute of frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3) delivery and acceptance are necessary to complete an oral contract for the sale of goods, in most cases. In such cases, it is said the acceptance must be absolute and past recall; 2 Exch. 290; 5 Railw. Cas. 496; 1 Pick. 278; 10 id. 326, and communicated to the party making the offer; 4 Wheat. 225; 6 Wend. 103, 397. As to how far a right to make future objections invalidates an acceptance, see 3 B. & Ald. 521; 5 id. 557; 10 Bingh. 376; 10 Q. B. 111; 6 Exch. 903.

Acceptance of rent destroys the effect of a notice to quit for non-payment of such rent; 3 Taunt. 78; 4 Bingh. N. C. 178; 4 B. & Ald. 401; 13 Wend. 530; 11 Barb. 33; 1 Bush. 418; 2 N. H. 163; 19 Vt. 587; 1 Washb. R. P. 322; and may operate a waiver of forfeiture for other causes; 3 Coke, 64; 1 Wms. Saund. 287 c, note; 3 Cow. 220; 5 Barb. 339; 3 Cush. 325.

Of Bills of Exchange. An engagement to pay the bill in money when due. 4 East, 72; 19 Law Jour. 297; Byles on Bills, 288.

Acceptances are said to be of the following kinds.

Absolute, which is a positive engagement to pay the bill according to its tenor.

Conditional, which is an undertaking to pay the bill on a contingency.

The holder is not bound to receive such an acceptance, but if he does receive it, must observe its terms; 4 M. & S. 466; 1 Campb. 425; 2 Wash. C. C. 485; Dan. Neg. Inst. 411. For some examples of what do and what do not constitute conditional acceptances, see 1 Term, 182; 2 Strange, 1152, 1211; 2 Wils. 9; 6 C. & P. 218; 3 C. B. 841; 15 Miss. 245; 7 Me. 126; 1 Ala. 73; 10 Ala. N. s. 533; 1 Strob. 271; 1 Miles, 294; 4 Watts & S. 346; 105 Mass. 401; 10 C. B. N. s. 214; 44 Ga. 513; 73 Ill. 469; 62 Me. 498; 14 Cal. 407.

Express or absolute, which is an undertaking in direct and express terms to pay the bill.

Implied, which is an undertaking to pay the bill inferred from acts of a character fairly to warrant such an inference.

Partial, which is one varying from the tenor of the bill.

An acceptance to pay part of the amount for which the bill is drawn, 1 Strange, 214; 2 Wash. C. C. 485; or to pay at a different time, 14 Jur. 806; 25 Miss. 376; Molloy, b. 2, c. 10, § 20; or at a different place, 4 M. & S. 462, would be partial.

Qualified, which are either conditional or partial, and introduce a variation in the sum, time, mode, or place of payment; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 414.

Supra protest, which is the acceptance of the bill after protest for non-acceptance by the drawee, for the honor of the drawer or a particular indorser.

When a bill has been accepted supra protest for the honor of one party to the bill, it may be accepted supra protest by another individual for the honor of another; Beawes, Lex Marc., Bills of Exchange, pl. 52; 5 Campb. 447.

The acceptance must be made by the drawee or some one authorized to act for him. The drawee must have capacity to act and bind himself for the payment of the bill, or it may be treated as dishonored. See ACCEPTOR SUPRA PROTEST; Marius, 22; 2 Q. B. 16. As to when an acceptance by an agent, an officer of a corporation, etc., on behalf of the company, will bind the agent or officer personally, see 15 Jur. 335; 20 Law Jour. 160; 6 C. B. 766; 10 id. 318; 9 Exch. 154; 4 N. Y. 208; 6 Mass. 58; 8 Pick. 56; 11 Me. 267; 2 South. 828; see also 17 Wend. 40; 5 B. Monr. 51; 2 Conn. 660; 19 Me. 352; 16 Vt. 220; 2 Metc. Mass. 47; 7 Miss. 371.

It may be made before the bill is drawn, in which case it must be in writing; 3 Mass. 1; 9 id. 55; 15 Johns. 6; 10 id. 207; 2 Wend. 545; 1 Bail. 522; 2 Green, 239; 2 Dana, 95; 5 B. Monr. 8; 15 Penn. St. 453; 2 Ind. 488; 3 Md. 265; 1 Pet. 264; 4 id. 121; 2 Wheat. 66; 2 McLean, 462; 2 Blatchf. C. C. 335. See 1 Story 22; 2 id. 213. It may be made after it is drawn and before it comes due, which is the usual course, or after it becomes due; 1 H. Bla. 313; 2 Green, 339; or even after a previous refusal to accept; 5 East, 514; 1 Mas. 176. It must be made within twenty-four hours after presentment, or the holder may treat the bill as dishonored; Chitty, Bills, 212, 217. And upon refusal to accept, the bill is at once dishonored, and should be protested; Chitty, Bills, 217.

It may be in writing on the bill itself or on another paper; 4 East, 91; and it seems that the holder may insist on having a written acceptance, and in default thereof consider the bill as dishonored; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 406; or it may be oral; 1 East, 67; Rep. temp. Hardw. 74; 6 C. & P. 218; 1 Wend. 522; 2 Green, 339; 1 Rich. 249; 3 Mass. 1; 2 Metc. 53; 22 N. H. 153; 115 Mass. 374; 91 U. S. 406; 75 Ill. 595; 11 Moore, 320. An acceptance by telegraph has been held good; 87 Ill 98; 109 Mass. 414; but must now be in writing, in England and New York; Stat. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, § 6. The usual form is by writing "accepted" across the face of the bill and signing the acceptor's name; 1 Parsons, Contr. 223; 1 Mann. & R. 90; but the drawee's name alone is sufficient, or any words of equivalent force to accepted. See Byles, Bills, 147; 1 Atk. 611; 1 Mann. & R. 90; 21 Pick. 307; 3 Md. 265; 9 Gill, 350.

Consult Bayley, Byles, Chitty, Parsons, and Story, on Bills; Parsons on Contracts; Dan. Neg. Inst.

In Insurance. Acceptance of abandonment in insurance is in effect an acknowledgment of its sufficiency, and perfects the right of the assured to recover for a total loss if the cause of loss and circumstances have been truly made known. No particular form of acceptance is requisite, and the underwriter is not obliged to say whether he accepts; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1689. An acceptance may be a constructive one, as by taking possession of an abandoned ship to repair it without authority so to do; 2 Curt. C. C. 322; or by retaining such possession an unreasonable time, under a stipulation authorizing the underwriter to take such possession; 16 Ill. 235.

ACCEPTILATION. In Civil Law. A release made by a creditor to his debtor of his debt, without receiving any consideration. Ayliffe, Pand. tit. 26, p. 570. It is a species of donation, but not subject to the forms of the latter, and is valid unless in fraud of creditors. Merlin, Répert.

Acceptilation may be defined verborum conceptio qua creditor debitori, quod debet, acceptum fert; or, a certain arrangement of words by which, on the question of the debtor, the creditor, wishing to dissolve the obligation, answers that he admits as received what in fact he has not received. The acceptilation is an imaginary payment; Dig. 46. 4. 1, 19; Dig. 2. 14. 27. 9; Inst. 3. 30. 1.

ACCEPTOR. One who accepts a bill of exchange. 3 Kent, 75.

The party who undertakes to pay a bill of exchange in the first instance.

The drawee is in general the acceptor; and unless the drawee accepts, the bill is dishonored. The acceptor of a bill is the principal debtor, and the drawer the surety. He is bound, though he accepted without consideration and for the sole accommodation of the drawer. By his acceptance he admits the drawer's handwriting; for before acceptance it was incumbent upon him to inquire into the genuineness of the drawer's handwriting; 3 Kent, 75; 3 Burr. 1384; 1 W. Bla. 390; 4 Dall. 204.

ACCEPTOR SUPRA PROTEST. One who accepts a bill which has been protested, for the honor of the drawer or any one of the endorsers.

Any person, even the drawee himself, may accept a bill supra protest; Byles, Bills, *262, and two or more persons may become acceptors supra protest for the honor of different persons. A general acceptance supra protest is taken to be for the honor of the drawer; Byles, Bills, *263. The obligation of an acceptor supra protest is not absolute but only to pay if the drawee do not; 16 East, 391. See 3 Wend. 491; 19 Pick. 220; 8 N. H. 66. An acceptor supra protest has his remedy against the person for whose honor he accepted, and against all persons who stand prior to that person. If he takes up the bill for the honor of the endorser, he stands in the light of an endorsee paying full value for the bill, and has the same remedies to which an endorsee would be entitled against all prior parties, and he can, of course, sue the drawer and endorser; 1 Ld. Raym. 574; 1 Esp. 112; Bayley, Bills, 209; 3 Kent, 75; Chitty, Bills, 312. The acceptor supra protest is required to give the same notice, in order to charge a party, which is necessary to be given by other holders; 19 Pick. 220.

ACCESS. Approach, or the means or power of approaching.

Sometimes by access is understood sexual intercourse; at other times, the opportunity of communicating together so that sexual intercourse may have taken place, is also called access.

In this sense a man who can readily be in company with his wife is said to have access to her; and in that case her issue are presumed to be his issue. But this presumption may be rebutted by positive evidence that no sexual intercourse took place; 1 Turn. & R. 141.

Parents are not allowed to prove non-access for the purpose of bastardizing the issue of the wife, whether the action be civil or criminal, or whether the proceeding is one of settlement or bastardy, or to recover property claimed as heir at law; Rep. temp. Hardw. 79; Buller, N. P. 113; Cowp. 592; 8 East, 203; 11 id. 133; 2 Munf. 242; 3 id. 599; 3 Hawks, 323; 3 Hayw. 221; 1 Ashm. 269; 1 Grant Cas. 377; 3 Paige, Ch. 129.

The modern doctrine is that children born in lawful wedlock (when there has been no divorce a mensa et thoro) are presumed legitimate, but this presumption may be rebutted by evidence (not that of the parents) tending to show that intercourse could not have taken place, impotency, etc. Where there were opportunities for intercourse, evidence is generally not allowed to establish illegitimacy; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 150, 151, and n. See 9 Beav. 552.

Non-access is not presumed from the mere fact that husband and wife lived apart; 1 Gale & D. 7. See 3 C. & P. 215; 1 Sim. & S. 153; 1 Greenleaf Ev. § 28.

ACCESSARY. In Criminal Law. He who is not the chief actor in the perpetration of the offence, nor present at its performance, but is some way concerned therein, either before or after the fact committed.

An accessary before the fact is one who, being absent at the time of the crime committed, yet procures, counsels, or commands another to commit it; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 615. With regard to those cases where the principal goes beyond the terms of the solicitation, the approved test is, "Was the event alleged to be the crime to which the accused is charged to be accessary, a probable cause of the act which he counselled?" 1 F. & F. Cr. Cas. 242; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 181. When the act is committed through the agency of a person who has no legal discretion or a will, as in the case of a child or an insane person, the incitor, though absent when the crime was committed, will be considered, not an accessary, for none can be accessary to the acts of a madman, but a principal in the first degree; 1 Hale Pl. Cr. 514. But if the instrument is aware of the consequences of his act, he is a principal in the first degree, and the employer, if he is absent when the fact is committed, is an accessary before the fact; 1 R. & R. Cr. Cas. 363; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 37; 1 C. & K. 589; or if he is present, as a principal in the second degree; 1 Fost. Cr. Cas. 349; unless the instrument concur in the act merely for the purpose of detecting and punishing the employer, in which case he is considered as an innocent agent.

An accessary after the fact is one who, knowing a felony to have been committed, receives, relieves, comforts, or assists the felon; 4 Bla. Com. 37.

No one who is a principal can be an accessary.

In certain crimes, there can be no accessaries; all who are concerned are principals, whether they were present or absent at the time of their commission. These are treason, and all offences below the degree of felony; 4 Bla. Com. 35–40; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 29, § 16; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 228; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 453; 5 Cox, Cr. Cas. 521; 2 Mood. Cr. Cas. 276; 8 Dana, 28; 20 Miss. 58; 3 Cush. 284; 3 Gray, 448; 14 Mo. 137; 18 Ark. 198; 4 J. J. Marsh. 182; 67 Ill. 587. Such is the English law; but in the United States it appears not to be determined as regards the cases of persons assisting traitors. Sergeant, Const. Law, 382; 4 Cranch. 472, 501; U. S. v. Fries, 3 Dall. 515. See 2 Wall. Jr. 134, 139; 16 Wall. 147; 12 Wall. 347. That there cannot be an accessary in cases of treason, see Davis, Cr. L. 38. Contra, 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 224.

It is evident there can be no accessary when there is no principal; if a principal in a transaction be not liable under our laws, no one can be charged as a mere accessary to him; 1 Woodb. & M. 221.

By the rules of the common law, an accessary cannot be tried, without his consent, before the conviction of the principal; Fost. Cr. Cas. 360. This is altered by statute in most of the states.

But an accessary to a felony committed by several, some of whom have been convicted, may be tried as accessary to a felony committed by these last; but if he be indicted and tried as accessary to a felony committed by them all, and some of them have not been proceeded against, it is error; 7 S. & R. 491; 10 Pick. 484. If the principal is dead, the accessary cannot, by the common law, be tried at all; 16 Mass. 423.

ACCESSIO (Lat.). An increase or addition; that which lies next to a thing, and is supplementary and necessary to the principal thing; that which arises or is produced from the principal thing; Calvinus, Lex.

A manner of acquiring the property in a thing which becomes united with that which a person already possesses.

The doctrine of property arising from accessions is grounded on the rights of occupancy. It is said to be of six kinds in the Roman law.

First. That which assigns to the owner of a thing its products, as the fruit of trees, the young of animals.

Second. That which makes a man the owner of a thing which is made of another's property, upon payment of the value of the material taken. See La. Civ. Code, art. 491. As where wine, bread, or oil is made of another man's grapes or olives; 2 Bla. Com. 404; 10 Johns. 288.

Third. That which gives the owner of land new land formed by gradual deposit. See ALLUVION.

Fourth. That which gives the owner of a thing the property in what is added to it by way of adorning or completing it; as if a tailor should use the cloth of B. in repairing A.'s coat, all would belong to A.; but B. would have an action against both A. and the tailor for the cloth so used. This doctrine holds in the common law; F. Moore, 20; Poph. 38; Brooke, Abr. Properties, 23.

Fifth. That which gives islands formed in a stream to the owner of the adjacent lands on either side.

Sixth. That which gives a person the property in things added to his own so that they cannot be separated without damage. Guyot, Répert. Univ.

An accessary obligation, and sometimes also the person who enters into an obligation as surety in which another is principal. Calvinus, Lex.

ACCESSION. The right to all which one's own property produces, whether that property be movable or immovable, and the right to that which is united to it by accession, either naturally or artificially; 2 Kent, 360; 2 Bla. Com. 404.

If a man hath raised a building upon his own ground with the material of another, or, on the contrary, if a man shall have built with his own materials upon the ground of another, in either case the edifice becomes the property of him to whom the ground belongs; for every building is an accession to the ground upon which it stands; and the owner of the ground, if liable at all, is only liable to the owner of the materials for the value of them; Inst. 2. 1. 29, 30; 2 Kent, 362. And the same rule holds where trees, vines, vegetables, or fruits are planted or sown in the ground of another; Inst. 2. 1. 31, 32.

If the materials of one person are united by labor to the materials of another, so as to form a single article, the property in the joint product is, in the absence of any agreement, in the owner of the principal part of the materials by accession; 7 Johns. 473; 5 Pick. 177; 6 id. 209; 32 Me. 404; 16 Conn. 322; Inst. 2. 1. 26. But a vessel built of materials belonging to different persons, it has been said, will belong to the owner of the keel, according to the rule, proprietas totius navis carinæ causam sequitur; 2 Kent, 361; 6 Pick. 209; 7 Johns. 473; 11 Wend. 139. It is said to be the doctrine of the civil law, that the rule is the same though the adjunction of materials may have been dishonestly contrived; for, in determining the right of property in such a case, regard is had only to the things joined, and not to the persons, as where the materials are changed in species; Wood, Inst. 93; Inst. 2. 1. 25. And see ADJUNCTION.

Where, by agreement, an article is manufactured for another, the property in the article, while making and when finished, vests in him who furnished the whole or the principal part of the materials; and the maker, if he did not furnish the same, has simply a lien upon the article for his pay; 2 Denio, 268; 10 Johns. 268; 15 Mass. 242; 4 Ired. 102.

The increase of an animal, as a general thing, belongs to its owner; but, if it be let to another, the person who thus becomes the temporary proprietor will be entitled to its increase; 8 Johns. 435; Inst. 2. 1. 38; though it has been held that this would not be the consequence of simply putting a mare to pasture, in consideration of her services; 2 Penn. St. 166. The Civil Code of Louisiana, following the Roman law, makes a distinction in respect of the issue of slaves, which, though born during the temporary use or hiring of their mothers, belong not to the hirer, but to the permanent owner; La. Code, art. 539; Inst. 2. 1. 37; and see 31 Miss. 557; 4 Sneed, 99; 2 Kent, 361. But the issue of slaves born during a tenancy for life belong to the tenant for life; 7 Harr. & J. 257.

If there be a sale, mortgage, or pledge of a chattel, carried into effect by delivery or by a recording of the mortgage where that is equivalent to a delivery, and other materials are added, afterwards, by the labor of the vendor or mortgagor, these pass with the principal by accession; 12 Pick. 83; 1 R. I. 511.

If, by the labor of one man, the property of another has been converted into a thing of different species, so that its identity is destroyed, the original owner can only recover the value of the property in its unconverted state, and the article itself will belong to the person who wrought the conversion, if he wrought it believing the material to be his own. Such a change is said to be wrought when wheat is made into bread, olives into oil, or grapes into wine; Inst. 2. 1. 25; 4 Denio, 532; Year B. 5 H. VII. 15; Brooke, Abr. Property, 23.

But, if there be a mere change of form or value, which does not destroy the identity of the materials, the original owner may still reclaim them or recover their value as thus improved; Brooke, Abr. Property, 23; F. Moore, 20; 2 N. Y. 379. So, if the change have been wrought by a wilful trespasser, or by one who knew that the materials were not his own; in such case, however radical the change may have been, the owner may reclaim them, or recover their value in their new shape: thus, where whiskey was made out of another's corn, 2 N. Y. 379; shingles out of another's trees, 9 Johns. 362; coals out of another's wood, 6 Johns. 168; 12 Ala. N. S. 590; leather out of another's hides, 21 Barb. 92; in all these cases, the change having been made by one who knew the materials were another's, the original owner was held to be entitled to recover the property, or its value in the improved or converted state. And see 6 Hill, 425; 2 Rawle, 427; 5 Johns. 349; 21 Me. 287; 30 id. 370; 11 Metc. 493; Story, Bailm. § 40; 1 Brown, Civil and Adm. Law, 240, 241.

In International Law. The absolute or conditional acceptance, by one or several States, of a treaty already concluded between other sovereignties. Merlin, Répert., Accession.

ACCESSORY. Any thing which is joined to another thing as an ornament, or to render it more perfect.

For example, the halter of a horse, the frame of a picture, the keys of a house, and the like, each belong to the principal thing. The sale of the materials of a newspaper establishment will carry with it, as an accessory, the subscription list, 2 Watts, 111; but a bequest of a house would not carry the furniture in it, as accessory to it. Domat, Lois Civ., Part 2, liv. 4, tit. 2, s. 4, n. 1. Accessorium non ducit, sed sequitur principale. Coke, Litt. 152, a.

See ACCESSION; ADJUNCTION; APPURTENANCES. Used also in the same sense as ACCESSARY, which see.

ACCESSORY ACTIONS. In Scotch Law. Those which are in some degree subservient to others. Bell, Dict.

ACCESSORY CONTRACT. One made for assuring the purpose of the performance of a prior contract, either by the same parties or by others; such as suretyship, mortgages, and pledges.

It is a general rule, that payment or release of the debt due, or the performance of a thing required to be performed by the first or principal contract, is a full discharge of such accessory obligation; Pothier, Ob. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 2, n. 14; id. n. 182, 186; see 8 Mass. 551; 15 id. 233; 17 id. 419; 4 Pick. 11; 8 id. 422; 5 Metc. Mass. 310; 7 Barb. 22; 2 Barb. Ch. 119; 1 Hill. & D. 65; 6 Penn. St. 228; 24 N. H. 484; 3 Ired. 337; and that an assignment of the principal contract will carry the accessory contract with it; 7 Penn. St. 280; 17 S. & R. 400; 5 Cow. 202; 5 Cal. 515; 4 Iowa, 434; 24 N. H. 484.

If the accessory contract be a contract by which one is to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, it must, under the statute of frauds, be in writing, and disclose the consideration, either explicitly, or by the use of terms from which it may be implied; 5 Mees. & W. 128; 7 id. 410; 5 B. & Ad. 1109; 1 Bingh. N. C. 761; 6 Bingh. 201; 9 East, 348; 8 Cush. 156; 15 Penn. St. 27; 20 Barb. 298; 13 N. Y. 232; 4 Jones, No. C. 287. Such a contract is not assignable so as to enable the assignee to sue thereon in his own name; 21 Pick. 140; 5 Wend. 307.

An accessory contract of this kind is discharged not only by the fulfilment or release of the principal contract, but also by any material change in the terms of such contract by the parties thereto; for the surety is bound only by the precise terms of the agreement he has guaranteed; 2 Nev. & P. 126; 9 Wheat. 680; 1 Eng. L. & Eq. 1; 3 Wash. C. C. 70; 12 N. H. 320; 13 id. 240. Thus, the surety will be discharged if the right of the creditor to enforce the debt be suspended for any definite period, however short; and a suspension for a day will have the same effect as if it were for a month or a year; 2 Ves. Sen. 540; 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. 707; 5 Ired. Eq. 91; 7 Hill, 250; 3 Denio, 512; 2 Wheat. 253; 28 Vt. 209. But the surety may assent to the change, and waive his right to be discharged because of it; 13 N. H. 240; 2 McLean, 99; 5 Ohio, 510; 8 Me. 121.

If the parties to the principal contract have been guilty of any misrepresentation, or even concealment, of any material fact, which, had it been disclosed, would have deterred the surety from entering into the accessory contract, the security so given is voidable at law on the ground of fraud; 5 Bingh. N. C. 156; B. & C. 605; 1 B. & P. 419; 9 Ala. N. S. 42; 2 Rich. 590; 10 Clark & F. Hou. L. 936.

So the surety will be discharged should any condition, express or implied, that has been imposed upon the creditor by the accessory contract, be omitted by him; 8 Taunt. 208; 14 Barb. 123; 6 Cal. 24; 27 Penn. St. 317; 6 Hill, 540; 9 Wheat. 680; 17 Wend. 179, 422.

An accessory contract to guarantee an original contract, which is void, has no binding effect; 7 Humphr. 261; and see 27 Ala. N. S. 291.

ACCESSORY OBLIGATIONS. In Scotch Law. Obligations to antecedent or primary obligations, such as obligations to pay interest, etc.; Erskine, Inst. lib. 3, tit. 3, § 60.

ACCIDENT (Lat. accidere,—ad, to, and cadere, to fall). An event which, under the circumstances, is unusual and unexpected by the person to whom it happens.

The happening of an event without the concurrence of the will of the person by whose agency it was caused; or the happening of an event without any human agency. The burning of a house in consequence of a fire made for the ordinary purposes of cooking or warming the house is an accident of the first kind; the burning of the same house by lightning would be an accident of the second kind; 1 Fonbl. Eq. 374, 375, n.

In Equity Practice. Such an unforeseen event, misfortune, loss, act, or omission as is not the result of any negligence or misconduct in the party; Francis, Max. 87; Story, Eq. Jur. § 78.

An occurrence in relation to a contract which was not anticipated by the parties when the same was entered into, and which gives an undue advantage to one of them over the other in a court of law; Jeremy, Eq. 358. This definition is objected to, because, as accidents may arise in relation to other things besides contracts, it is inaccurate in confining accidents to contracts; besides, it does not exclude cases of unanticipated occurrence resulting from the negligence or misconduct of the party seeking relief. See also 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 628. In many instances it closely resembles MISTAKE, which see.

In general, courts of equity will relieve a party who cannot obtain justice at law in consequence of an accident which will justify the interposition of a court of equity.

The jurisdiction which equity exerts in case of accident is mainly of two sorts: over bonds with penalties to prevent a forfeiture where the failure is the result of accident; 2 Freem. Ch. 128; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 629; 25 Ala. N. S. 452; 9 Ark. 533; 4 Paige, Ch. 148; 4 Munf. 68; as sickness; 1 Root, 298, 310; or where the bond has been lost; 5 Ired. Eq. 331. And, second, where a negotiable or other instrument has been lost, in which case no action lay at law, but where equity will allow the one entitled to recover upon giving proper indemnity; 4 Term, 170; 1 Ves. Ch. 338; 5 id. 288; 16 id. 430; 4 Price, 176.

The ground of equitable interference where a party has been defeated in a suit at law to which he might have made a good defence had he discovered the facts in season, may be referred also to this head; 2 Rich. Eq. 63; 3 Ga. 226; 7 Humphr. 130; 18 Miss. 502; 6 How. 114. See 4 Ired. Eq. 178; but in such case there must have been no negligence on the part of the defendant; 18 Miss. 103; 7 Humphr. 130; 1 Morr. 150; 7 B. Monr. 120.

Under this head equity will grant relief in cases of the defective exercise of a power in favor of a purchaser, creditor, wife, child, or charity, but not otherwise; Bisph. Eq. § 182. So also in other cases, viz., where a testator cancels a will, supposing that a later will is duly executed, which it is not; where boundaries have been accidentally confused; where there has been an accidental omission to endorse a promissory note, etc. Id. § 183.

See INEVITABLE ACCIDENT; MISTAKE; ACT OF GOD.

It is exercised by equity where there is not a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law; 44 Me. 206; but not where such a remedy exists; 9 Gratt. 379; 5 Sandf. 612; and a complete excuse must be made; 14 Ala. N. S. 342.

ACCOMENDA. A contract which takes place when an individual intrusts personal property with the master of a vessel, to be sold for their joint account.

In such case, two contracts take place: first, the contract called mandatum, by which the owner of the property gives the master power to dispose of it; and the contract of partnership, in virtue of which the profits are to be divided between them. One party runs the risk of losing his capital, the other his labor. If the sale produces no more than first cost, the owner takes all the proceeds: it is only the profits which are to be divided; Emerigon, Mar. Loans, s. 5.

ACCOMMODATION PAPER. Promissory notes or bills of exchange made, accepted, or endorsed without any consideration therefor.

Such paper, in the hands of the party to whom it is made or for whose benefit the accommodation is given, is open to the defence of want of consideration, but when taken by third parties in the usual course of business, is governed by the same rules as other paper; 2 Kent, 86; 1 Bingh. N. C. 267; 1 M. & W. 212; 12 id. 705; 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 282; 2 Duer, 33; 26 Vt. 19; 5 Md. 389.

Consult Chitty; Parsons; Story, Bills of Exchange; Byles; Daniel.

ACCOMPLICE (Lat. ad and complicare—con, with, together, plicare, to fold to wrap, —to fold together).

In Criminal Law. One who is concerned in the commission of a crime.

The term in its fulness includes in its meaning all persons who have been concerned in the commission of a crime, all participes criminis, whether they are considered in strict legal propriety as principals in the first or second degree, or merely as accessaries before or after the fact; Fost. Cr. Cas. 341; 1 Russ. Cr. 21; 4 Bla. Com. 331; 1 Phillips, Ev. 28; Merlin, Répert., Complice.

It has been questioned, whether one who was an accomplice to a suicide can be punished as such. A case occurred in Prussia where a soldier, at the request of his comrade, had cut the latter in pieces; for this he was tried capitally. In the year 1817, a young woman named Leruth received a recompense for aiding a man to kill himself. He put the point of a bistoury on his naked breast, and used the hand of the young woman to plunge it with greater force into his bosom; hearing some noise, he ordered her away. The man, receiving effectual aid, was soon cured of the wound which had been inflicted, and she was tried and convicted of having inflicted the wound, and punished by ten years' imprisonment. Lepage, Science du Droit, ch. 2, art. 3, § 5. The case of Saul, the King of Israel, and his armor-bearer (1 Sam. xxxi. 4), and of David and the Amalekite (2 Sam. i. 2-16), will doubtless occur to the reader.

In Massachusetts, it has been held, that, if one counsels another to commit suicide, he is principal in the murder; for it is a presumption of law, that advice has the influence and effect intended by the adviser, unless it is shown to have been otherwise, as, for example, that it was received with scoff or manifestly rejected and ridiculed at the time; 13 Mass. 359. See 7 Bost. Law Rep. 215.

It is now finally settled, that it is not a rule of law, but of practice only, that a jury should not convict on the unsupported testimony of an accomplice. Therefore, if a jury choose to act on such evidence only, the conviction cannot be quashed as bad in law. The better practice is for the judge to advise the jury to acquit, unless the testimony of the accomplice is corroborated, not only as to the circumstances of the offence, but also as to the participation of the accused in the transaction; and when several parties are charged, that it is not sufficient that the accomplice should be confirmed, as to one or more of the prisoners, to justify a conviction of those prisoners with respect to whom there is no confirmation; 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 20; Dearsl. Cr. Cas. 555; 20 Pick. 397; 10 Cush. 535. See 1 Fost. & F. 388; Greenl. Ev. § 111; 127 Mass. 424; 34 Amer. Rep. 391, 408.

ACCORD. In Contracts. An agreement between two parties to give and accept something in satisfaction of a right of action which one has against the other, which when performed is a bar to all actions upon this account; generally used in the phrase "accord and satisfaction;" 2 Greenl. Ev. 28; 3 Bla. Com. 15; Bacon, Abr. Accord; 5 Md. 170. It may be pleaded to all actions except real actions; Bacon, Abr. Accord (B).

It must be legal. An agreement to drop a criminal prosecution, as a satisfaction for an assault and imprisonment, is void; 5 East, 294. See 2 Wils. 341; Cro. Eliz. 541.

It must be advantageous to the creditor, and he must receive an actual benefit therefrom which he would not otherwise have had; 2 Watts, 325; 2 Ala. 476; 3 J. J. Marsh. 497. Restoring to the plaintiff his chattels, or his land, of which the defendant has wrongfully dispossessed him, will not be any consideration to support a promise by the plaintiff not to sue him for those injuries; Bacon, Abr. Accord, A; Perkins, § 749; Dy. 75; 5 East, 230; 11 id. 390; 1 Stra. 426; 3 Hawks. 580; 2 Litt. Ky. 49; 5 Day, 360; 1 Root, 426; 1 Wend. 164; 3 id. 66; 14 id. 116. The payment of a part of the whole debt due is not a good satisfaction, even if accepted; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 28; 2 Parsons, Contr. 199; 4 Mod. 88; 3 Bingh. N. C. 454; 10 Mees. & W. Exch. 367; 12 Price, Exch. 183; 1 Zabr. 391; 5 Gill, 189; 20 Conn. 559; 70 N. C. 573; 6 Heisk. 1; 1 Metc. Mass. 276; 27 Me. 362, 370; 39 id. 203; 2 Strobh. 203; 15 B. Monr. 566; otherwise, however, if the amount of the claim is disputed; Cro. Eliz. 429; 3 Mees. & W. Exch. 651; 5 B. & Ald. 117; 1 Ad. & E. 106; 21 Vt. 223; 23 id. 561; 4 Gill, 406; 4 Denio, 166; 2 Duer, 302; 65 Barb. 161; 43 Conn. 455; 56 Ga. 494; 52 Miss. 494; 12 Metc. n. 551; or contingent, 14 B. Monr. 451; or there are mutual demands, 6 El. & B. 691; and if the negotiable note of the debtor, 15 Mees. & W. 23, or of a third person, 2 Metc. Mass. 283; 20 Johns. 76; 1 Wend. 164; 14 id. 116; 13 Ala. 353; 11 East, 390; 4 Barnew. & C. 506; 51 Ala. 349, for part, be given and received, it is sufficient; or if a part be given at a different place, 3 Hawks. 580; 29 Miss. 139, or an earlier time, it will be sufficient, 18 Pick. 414; and, in general, payment of part suffices if any additional benefit be received; 30 Vt. 424; 26 Conn. 392; 27 Barb. 485; 4 Jones, 518; 4 Iowa, 219. Acceptance by several creditors, by way of composition of sums respectively less than their demands, held to bar actions for the residue; 37 Iowa, 410. And the receipt of specific property, or the performance of services, if agreed to, is sufficient, whatever its value; 19 Pick. 273; 5 Day, 360; 51 Ala. 349; provided the value be not agreed upon; 65 Barb. 161; but both delivery and acceptance must be proved; 1 Wash. C. C. 328; 3 Blackf. 354; 1 Dev. & B. 565; 8 Penn. St. 106; 16 id. 450; 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 185.

It must be certain. An agreement that the defendant shall relinquish the possession of a house in satisfaction, etc., is not valid, unless it is so agreed at what time it shall be relinquished; Yelv. 125. See 4 Mod. 88; 2 Johns. 342; 3 Lev. 189; 2 Iowa, 553; 1 Hempst. 315; 102 Mass. 140.

It must be complete. That is, every thing must be done which the party undertakes to do; Comyns, Dig. Accord, B, 4; T. Raym. 203; Kebl. 690; Cro. Eliz. 46; 9 Coke, 79, b; 14 Eng. L. & Eq. 296; 2 Iowa, 553; 5 N. H. 136; 24 id. 289; 3 Johns. Cas. 243; 5 Johns. 386; 16 id. 86; 1 Gray, 245; 8 Ohio, 393; 7 Blackf. 582; 14 B. Monr. 459; 2 Ark. 45; 44 Me. 121; 15 Tex. 198; 29 Penn. St. 179; 8 Md. 188; 50 Tex. 113; 64 Me. 563; but this performance may be merely the substitution of a new undertaking for the old by way of novation if the parties so intended; 2 Parsons, Contr. 194 n.; 24 Conn. 613; 23 Barb. 546; 7 Md. 259; 16 Q. B. 1039; it is a question for the jury whether the agreement or the performance was accepted in satisfaction; 16 Q. B. 1039; and in some cases it is sufficient if performance be tendered and refused; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 31; 2 B. & Ad. 328; 3 id. 701. Whether an accord with an unaccepted tender of performance is a defence, seems unsettled; but where there is a sufficient consideration to support the agreement, it seems that a tender, though unaccepted, would bar an action; Story, Contr.

§ 1357; 3 Johns. Cas. 243. But see 3 Bingh. N. C. 715; 16 Barb. 598; 5 R. I. 219.

It must be by the debtor or his agent; 3 Wend. 66; 2 Ala. 84; and if made by a stranger, will not avail the debtor in an action at law; Stra. 592; 3 T. B. Monr. 302; 6 Johns. 37. See 6 Ohio St. 71. His remedy in such a case is in equity; Cro. Eliz. 541; 3 Taunt. 117; 5 East, 294.

Accord with satisfaction, when completed, has two effects: it is a payment of the debt; and it is a species of sale of the thing given by the debtor to the creditor, in satisfaction; but it differs from it in this, that it is not valid until the delivery of the article, and there is no warranty of the thing thus sold, except perhaps the title; for in regard to this it cannot be doubted, that if the debtor gave on an accord and satisfaction the goods of another, there would be no satisfaction. But the intention of the parties is of the utmost consequence; 30 Vt. 424; as the debtor will be required only to execute the new contract to that point whence it was to operate a satisfaction of the pre-existing liability. See, generally, 2 Greenl. Ev. § 28 et seq.; 2 Parsons, Contr. 193 et seq.; 2 Story, Contr. § 1354 et seq.; Comyns, Dig. Accord; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 805; 3 id. n. 2478–2481; notes to Cumber v. Wane, 1 Sm. Lead. Cas.

In America accord and satisfaction may be given in evidence under the general issue, in assumpsit, but it must be pleaded specially in debt, covenant, and trespass; Greenl. Ev. § 29. In England it must be pleaded specially in all cases; Rosc. N. P. 569. PAYMENT.

ACCOUCHEMENT. The act of giving birth to a child. It is frequently important to prove the filiation of an individual: this may be done in several ways. The fact of the accouchement may be proved by the direct testimony of one who was present, as a physician, a midwife, or other person; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 314.

ACCOUNT. A detailed statement of the mutual demands in the nature of debt and credit between parties, arising out of contracts or some fiduciary relation; 1 Metc. Mass. 216; 1 Hempst. 114; 32 Penn. 202.

A statement of the receipts and payments of an executor, administrator, or other trustee, of the estate confided to him.

An open account is one in which some term of the contract is not settled by the parties, whether the account consists of one item or many; 1 Ala. N. S. 62; 6 id. 438.

A form of action, called also account render, in which such a statement, and the recovery of the balance which thereby appears to be due, is sought by the party bringing it.

In Practice. In Equity. Jurisdiction concurrent with courts of law is taken over matters of account; 9 Johns. 470; 2 A. K. Marsh. 338; 1 J. J. Marsh. 82; 2 Caines, Cas. 1; 1 Paige, Ch. 41; 1 Yerg. 360; 1 Ga. 376, on three grounds: mutual accounts, 18 Beav. 575; dealings so complicated that they cannot be adjusted in a court of law; 1 Sch. & L. 305; 2 id. 400; 2 Hou. L. Cas. 28; 2 Leigh, 6; 1 Metc. Mass. 216; 15 Ala. N. S. 34; 17 Ga. 558; the existence of a fiduciary relation between the parties; 1 Sim. Ch. N. S. 573; 4 Gray, 227; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 8th ed. § 459, a.

In addition to these peculiar grounds of jurisdiction, equity will grant a discovery in cases of account on the general principles regulating discoveries; 8 Ala. N. S. 743; 4 Sandf. 112; 35 N. H. 339, and will afterwards proceed to grant full relief in many cases; 1 Madd. 86; 6 Ves. 136; 9 id. 437; 10 Johns. 587; 17 id. 384; 5 Pet. 495.

Equitable jurisdiction over accounts applies to the appropriation of payments; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 8th ed. §§ 459–461; agency; 2 McCord, Ch. 469; including factors, bailiffs, consignees, receivers, and stewards, where there are mutual or complicated accounts; 1 Jac. & W. 135; 13 Ves. 53; 9 Beav. 284; 17 Ala. Equity follows the analogy of the law, in refusing to interfere with stated accounts; 2 Sch. & L. 629; 3 Brown, Ch. 639, n.; 19 Ves. 180; 13 Johns. Ch. 578; 6 id. 360; 3 McLean C. C. 83; 4 Mas. C. C. 143; 3 Pet. 44; 6 id. 61; 9 id. 405. See ACCOUNT STATED.

At Law. The action lay against bailiffs, receivers, and guardians, in socage only, at the common law, and, by a subsequent extension of the law, between merchants; 11 Coke, 89; 12 Mass. 149.

Privity of contract was required, and it did not lie by or against executors and administrators; 1 Wms. Saund. 216, n.; Willes, 208, until statutes were passed for that purpose, the last being that of 3 & 4 Anne, c. 16; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 445.

In several states of the United States, the action has received a liberal extension; 4 Watts & S. 550; 13 Vt. 517; 28 id. 338; 7 Penn. St. 175; 25 Conn. 137; 5 R. I. 402. Thus, it is said to be the proper remedy for one partner against another; 1 Dall. 340; 3 Binn. 317; 10 S. & R. 220; 15 id. 153; 2 Conn. 425; 4 Vt. 137; 3 Barb. 419; 1 Cal. 448; for money used by one partner after the dissolution of the firm; 18 Pick. 299; though equity seems to be properly resorted to where a separate tribunal exists; 1 Hen. & M. 9; 1 Johns. Ch. 305. And see 1 Metc. Mass. 216; 1 Iowa, 240.

In other states, reference may be made to an auditor by order of the court, in the common forms of actions founded on contract or tort, where there are complicated accounts or counter-demands; 12 Mass. 525; 6 Pick. 193; 8 Conn. 499; 13 N. H. 275; 1 Tex. 646. See AUDITOR. In the action of account, an interlocutory judgment of quod computet is first obtained; 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 36, 39; 11 Ired. 391; 12 Ill. 111, on which no damages are awarded except ratione interplacitationis. Cro. Eliz. 83; 5 Binn. 564.

The account is then referred to an auditor, who now generally has authority to examine parties, 4 Fost. 198 (though such was not the case formerly), before whom issue of law and fact may be taken in regard to each item, which he must report to the court; 2 Ves. 388; Yelv. 202; 5 Binn. 433; 5 Vt. 543; 26 N. H. 139.

A final judgment quod recuperet is entered for the amount found by him to be due; and the auditor's account will not be set aside except upon a very manifest case of error; 5 Penn. St. 413; 1 La. Ann. 380. See AUDITORS.

If the defendant is found in surplusage, that is, is creditor of the plaintiff on balancing the accounts, he cannot in this action recover judgment for the balance so due. He may bring an action of debt, or, by some authorities, a sci. fac., against the plaintiff, whereon he may have judgment and execution against the plaintiff. See Palm. 512; 2 Bulst. 277–8; 1 Leon. 219; 3 Kebl. 362; 1 Rolle, Abr. 599, pl. 11; Brooke, Abr. Accord, 62; 1 Rolle, 87.

As the defendant could wage his law, 2 Wms. Saund. 65 a; Cro. Eliz. 479; and as the discovery, which is the main object sought, 5 Taunt. 431, can be more readily obtained and questions in dispute more readily settled in equity, resort is generally had to that jurisdiction in those states where a separate tribunal exists, or under statutes to the courts of law; 18 Vt. 345; 13 N. H. 275; 8 Conn. 499; 1 Metc. Mass. 216.

ACCOUNT BOOK. A book kept by a merchant, trader, mechanic, or other person, in which are entered from time to time the transactions of his trade or business. Such books, when regularly kept, may be admitted in evidence; Greenl. Ev. §§ 115–118.

ACCOUNT CURRENT. An open or running account between two parties.

ACCOUNT IN BANK. See BANK ACCOUNT.

ACCOUNT STATED. An agreed balance of accounts. An account which has been examined and accepted by the parties. 2 Atk. 251.

In Equity. Acceptance may be inferred from circumstances, as where an account is rendered to a merchant, and no objection is made, after sufficient time; 2 Vern. 276; 1 Sim. & S. 333; 3 Johns. Ch. 569; 7 Cranch, 147; 1 M'Cord, Ch. 156; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 433; 10 Barb. 213.

Such an account is deemed conclusive between the parties; 2 Brown, Ch. 62, 310; 2 Ves. 566, 837; 1 Swanst. 460; 6 Madd. 146; 20 Ala. N. s. 747; 3 Johns. Ch. 587; 1 Gill, 350; 3 Jones, Eq. 109; to the extent agreed upon; 1 Hopk. Ch. 239; unless some fraud, mistake, or plain error is shown; 1 Parsons, Contr. 174; 1 Johns. Ch. 550; 1 M'Cord, Ch. 156; and in such case, generally, the account will not be opened, but liberty to surcharge or falsify will be given; 2 Atk. 119; 9 Ves. 265; 1 Sch. & L. 192; 7 Gill, 119; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 306.

At Law. An account stated is conclusive as to the liability of the parties, with reference to the transactions included in it; 3 Jones; except in cases of fraud or manifest error; 1 Esp. 159; 24 Conn. 591; 4 Wis. 219; 5 Fla. 478. See 4 Sandf. 311.

Acceptance by the party to be charged must be shown by the one who relies upon the account; 10 Humphr. 238; 12 Ill. 111. The acknowledgment that the sum is due is sufficient; 2 Mod. 44; 2 Term, 480, though there be but a single item in the account; 13 East, 249; 5 Maule & S. 65; 1 Show. 215.

Acceptance may also be inferred from retaining the account a sufficient time without making objection; 7 Cranch, 147; 3 Watts & S. 109; 10 Barb. 213; 4 Sandf. 311; see 22 Penn. St. 454; and from other circumstances; 1 Gill, 234.

A definite ascertained sum must be stated to be due; 9 S. & R. 241.

It must be made by a competent person, excluding infants and those who are of unsound mind; 1 Term, 40.

Husband and wife may join and state an account with a third person; 2 Term, 483; 16 Eng. L. & Eq. 290.

An agent may bind his principal; 3 Johns. Ch. 569. Partners may state accounts; and an action lies for the party entitled to the balance; 4 Dall. 434; 1 Wash. C. C. 435; 16 Vt. 169.

The acceptance of the account is an acknowledgment of a debt due for the balance, and will support assumpsit. It is not, therefore, necessary to prove the items, but only to prove an existing debt or demand, and the stating of the account; 16 Ala. N. S. 742.

ACCOUNTANT. One who is versed in accounts. A person or officer appointed to keep the accounts of a public company.

He who renders to another or to a court a just and detailed statement of the property which he holds as trustee, executor, administrator, or guardian. See 16 Viner, Abr. 155.

ACCOUNTANT GENERAL. An officer of the English Court of Chancery, by whom the moneys paid into court are received, deposited in bank, and disbursed. The office appears to have been established by an order of May 26, 1725, and 12 Geo. I. c. 32, before which time the effects of the suitors were locked up in the vaults of the Bank of England, under the care of the masters and two of the six clerks; 1 Smith, Ch. Pr. 22.

ACCOUPLE. To unite; to marry.

ACCREDIT. In International Law. To acknowledge.

Used of the act by which a diplomatic agent is acknowledged by the government near which he is sent. This at once makes his public character known, and becomes his protection. It is used also of the act by which his sovereign commissions him.

ACCRESCERE (Lat.). To grow to; to be united with; to increase.

The term is used in speaking of islands which are formed in rivers by deposit. Calvinus, Lex.; 3 Kent, 428.

In Scotch Law. To pass to any one. Bell, Dict.

It is used in a related sense in the common law phrase jus accrescendi, the right of survivorship; 1 Washb. R. P. 426.

In Pleading. To commence; to arise; to accrue. Quod actio non accrevit infra sex annos, that the action did not accrue within six years; 3 Chitty, Pl. 914.

ACCRETION (Lat. accrescere, to grow to). The increase of real estate by the addition of portions of soil, by gradual deposition through the operation of natural causes, to that already in possession of the owner; 2 Washb. R. P. 451.

The term alluvion is applied to the deposit itself, while accretion rather denotes the act.

If an island in a non-navigable stream results from accretion, it belongs to the owner of the bank on the same side of the filum aquæ; 2 Washb. R. P. 452. Consult 2 Washb. R. P. 451–453; 2 Bla. Com. 261, n.; 3 Kent, 428; Hargrave, Law Tracts, 5; Hale, de Jur. Mar. 14; 3 Barn. & C. 91, 107; 6 Cow. 537; 4 Pick. 268; 17 id. 41; 17 Vt. 387.

ACCROACH. To attempt to exercise royal power. 4 Bla. Com. 76.

A knight who forcibly assaulted and detained one of the king's subjects till he paid him a sum of money was held to have committed treason on the ground of accroachment; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 80.

In French Law. To delay. Whishaw.

ACCRUE. To grow to; to be added to, as the interest accrues on the principal. Accruing costs are those which become due and are created after judgment; as the costs of an execution.

To arise, to happen, to come to pass; as the statute of limitation does not commence running until the cause of action has accrued; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 861; 2 Rawle, 277; 10 Watts, 363; Bacon, Abr. Limitation of Actions (D, 3).

ACCUMULATIVE JUDGMENT. A second or additional judgment given against one who has been convicted, the execution or effect of which is to commence after the first has expired.

Thus, where a man is sentenced to an imprisonment for six months on conviction of larceny, and afterwards he is convicted of burglary, he may be sentenced to undergo an imprisonment for the latter crime, to commence after the expiration of the first imprisonment: this is called an accumulative judgment. And if the former sentence is shortened by a pardon, or by reversal on a writ of error, it expires, and the subsequent sentence takes effect, as if the former had expired by lapse of time; 11 Metc. 581. Where an indictment for misdemeanor contained four counts, the third of which was held on error to be bad in substance, and the defendant, being convicted on the whole indictment, was sentenced to four successive terms of imprisonment of equal duration, one on each count, it was held that the sentence on the fourth count was not invalidated by the insufficiency of the third count, and that the imprisonment on it was to be computed from the end of the imprisonment on the second count; 15 Q. B. 594.

Upon an indictment for misdemeanor containing two counts for distinct offences, the defendant may be sentenced to imprisonment or penal servitude for consecutive terms of punishment, although the aggregate of the punishments may exceed the punishment allowed by law for one offence.

Upon an indictment for perjury charging offences committed in different suits, the defendant, upon conviction, may be sentenced to distinct punishments, although the suits were instituted with a common object; 5 Q. B. Div. 490.

Where upon trial of an indictment—containing several counts—charging separate and distinct misdemeanors, identical in character, a general verdict of guilty is rendered, or a verdict of guilty upon two or more specified counts, the court has no power to impose a sentence or cumulative sentences exceeding in the aggregate what is prescribed by statute as the maximum punishment for one offence of the character charged. 15 Sickels, 559.

ACCUSATION. In Criminal Law. A charge made to a competent officer against one who has committed a crime or misdemeanor, so that he may be brought to justice and punishment.

A neglect to accuse may in some cases be considered a misdemeanor, or misprision (which see); 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 247; 2 id. 389; Inst. lib. 4, tit. 18.

It is a rule that no man is bound to accuse himself or testify against himself in a criminal case; 7 Q. B. 126. A man is competent, though not compellable, to prove his own crime; 14

Mees. & W. 256. See EVIDENCE; INTEREST; WITNESS.

ACCUSED. One who is charged with a crime or misdemeanor.

ACCUSER. One who makes an accusation.

ACHAT. In French Law. A purchase.

It is used in some of our law-books, as well as achetor, a purchaser, which in some ancient statutes means purveyor. Stat. 36 Edw. III.; Merlin, Répert.

ACHERSET. An ancient English measure of grain, supposed to be the same with our quarter, or eight bushels.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT. The act of one who has executed a deed, in going before some competent officer or court and declaring it to be his act or deed.

The acknowledgment is certified by the officer or court; and the term acknowledgment is sometimes used to designate the certificate.

The function of an acknowledgment is twofold: to authorize the deed to be given in evidence without further proof of its execution, and to entitle it to be recorded. The same purposes may be accomplished by a subscribing witness going before the officer or court and making oath to the fact of the execution, which is certified in the same manner; but in some states this is only permitted in case of the death, absence, or refusal of the grantor. In some of the states a deed is void except as between the parties and their privies, unless acknowledged or proved.

Nature of. In most states the act is held to be a judicial one, while in some it is held to be a ministerial act.

Who may take. An officer related to the parties; 6 N. Y. 422. The presumption is that the officer took it within his jurisdiction; 16 La. Ann. 100; 19 Me. 274; 60 Mo. 33.

A notary cannot take acknowledgment in another county than the one within which he was appointed and resides; 33 How. Pr. 312; nor the attorney of record; 4 How. Pr. 153; 11 N. B. R. 289.

One cannot take an acknowledgment of a deed in which he has any interest; 20 Me. 413; 13 Mich. 329; 2 Sandf. 630; 54 Miss. 351; 38 Tex. 645. Contra; 14 Bank. Reg. 513.

Sufficiency of. Certificate need only substantially comply with the statute. The fact of acknowledgment and the identity of the parties are the essential parts, and must be stated; 8 Cal. 461; 21 Miss. 373; 13 Miss. 470; 9 Mo. 514. Important words omitted cannot be supplied by intendment; 20 Ark. 190; 11 Conn. 129; 17 Iowa, 528; 5 Biss. 160.

Effect of. Only purchasers for value can take advantage of defects; 46 Mo. 472; 61 Mo. 196.

An acknowledged deed is evidence of seizin in grantee, and authorizes recording it; 82 Mass. 48.

An unacknowledged deed is good between the parties and subsequent purchasers with actual notice; 8 Kan. 112; 82 Mass. 48; 46 Mo. 404, 472, 483.

The certificate will prevail over the unsupported denial of the grantor; 65 Ill. 505.

Identification of grantor. An introduction by a common friend is sufficient to justify officer in making certificate; 8 Wall. 513. Contra; 48 Barb. 568; 4 Col. 211.

A notary imposed upon by a personation is liable only for clear negligence. It is a legal presumption that he acted on reasonable information, and his absence of memory as to details of what occurred does not destroy that presumption; 10 W. N. C. Pa. 392.

The certificate is not invalidated by want of recollection of the officer; 30 N. J. Eq. 394.

Correction. Where a notary fails to set forth the necessary facts, he may correct his certificate, and may be compelled by mandamus, but equity has no jurisdiction to correct it; 51 Mo. 150. Contra; 6 N. Y. 422.

The following is a statement of the substance of the laws of the several states and territories on this subject. Though it is not to be inferred that every certificate not conforming to the text is void, an acknowledgment which does may be deemed sufficient. In addition to the statutes cited, there are in many states various acts curing irregularities in acknowledgments and certificates. References are made to the original statutes in the various states where there has been no change in the law by later revisions.

Vide Hubbell's Leg. Direc.; Snyder's Manual.

The certificate must show, in addition to the fact of the acknowledgment, that the person making such acknowledgment was personally known to the officer taking the same, to be the person whose name was subscribed to the conveyance as a party thereto, or must show that he was proved to be such by a credible witness (naming him). Cal. Laws, 1850–53, 513, §§ 6, 7.

Cal. Laws, 1850–53, 515, § 13.

CONNECTICUT.—All grants and deeds of bargain and sale, and mortgages, must be acknowledged, whether within or without the state, by the grantors to be their free act and deed before a justice of the peace, or a notary public, or a town clerk, or before a judge of the supreme or district court of the United States, or of the supreme or superior court, or court of common pleas, or county court of any individual state; before any officer having power by law to take acknowledgments; or before a Connecticut commissioner; or, within this state, before the commissioners of the school fund and commissioners of the superior court. When deeds are executed by an attorney, his acknowledgment is sufficient, when the power of attorney is acknowledged by the grantor of the power. All such instruments executed by any grantors residing in a foreign state or country, without the United States, may be acknowledged likewise before any United States consul resident in such country, or any notary public or justice of the peace of such country, or before a Connecticut commissioner. A certificate of the county clerk should be annexed to an acknowledgment by a justice of the peace or notary public. A separate examination of wife is not necessary.

DAKOTA.—Conveyances may be made between husband and wife; all rights of dower or curtesy are abolished. The wife need not join in a conveyance of land belonging to husband, nor need the husband join in a conveyance of land belonging to wife; except of homesteads, when, if both husband and wife reside in the territory, both must be parties to conveyance. A conveyance by a married woman has no validity until acknowledged, and the certificate of acknowledgment must set forth that upon an examination without the hearing of her husband, having been made acquainted with the contents of the instrument by the officer taking the same, she did acknowledge that she executed the same freely, and did not wish to retract such execution.

Acknowledgments may be made, within the territory, before a justice, clerk of the supreme court, or notary public; or, within their respective districts, before a judge or clerk of a court of record, a mayor, register of deeds, or justice of the peace. Without the territory, but within the United States; before a justice, judge, or clerk of any court of record, a notary public, or any officer authorized to take acknowledgments by the laws of such state or territory, or by a Dakota commissioner. Without the United States; before a minister, commissioner, a chargé d'affaires, a consul, or consular agent of the United States, a judge of a court of record, or a notary public.

No certificate of the official character of the officer is needed. Rev. Code, pp. 339–341, §§ 665–670.

DELAWARE.—A deed may be acknowledged by any party to it, or by his attorney, the power of attorney being first proved; or it may be proved by a subscribing witness. If acknowledged by a party, it may be in the superior court or before the chancellor, or any judge or notary public, or before two justices of the peace for the same county. A deed may be acknowledged in the superior court by attorney, by virtue of a power either contained in the deed or separate from it, or may be proved in that court by a subscribing witness.

A married woman who executes a deed to which her husband is a party must acknowledge, upon a private examination apart from her husband, that she executed it willingly, without compulsion or threats, or fear of her husband's displeasure. Her examination may be taken in any county before the officers above mentioned.

The certificate of any acknowledgment or proof must be authenticated under the hand and seal of the clerk or prothonotary of the court in which, or under the hand of the chancellor or other officer before whom, the same is taken, and must be endorsed on or annexed to the deed.

An acknowledgment or proof, or the private examination of a married woman, may be taken, out of the state, before any consul-general, consul, or commercial agent of the United States, duly appointed in any foreign country at the places of their respective official residence, or before a judge of any district or circuit court of the United States, or the chancellor, or any judge of a court of record of any state, territory, or country, or the chief officer of any city or borough; or, within the United States, by a Delaware commissioner. It must then be certified under the hand of such officer and his official seal; or the acknowledgment or proof may be taken in any court above mentioned, and certified under the hand of the clerk or other officer, and the seal of the court. In case of a certificate by a judge, the seal of his court may be affixed to his certificate, or to a certificate of attestation of the clerk or keeper of the seal. Rev. Code (1874), 501–3.

A deed of a corporation may be acknowledged before the chancellor or any judge of the state, or a judge of the district or circuit court of the United States, or a notary public, or two justices of the peace of the same county, by the presiding officer or legally constituted attorney of the corporation. Id.

GEORGIA.—Deeds are to be executed in the presence of two witnesses. They are to be acknowledged or proved, when within the state; before a justice of the peace, or the chief justice, or an assistant justice, or a notary public. It is not necessary for the officer to affix his seal.

Without the state, and within the United States; before a Georgia commissioner; or they may be proved before the governor, chief justice, or other justice of either of the United States, or a mayor, and certified under the common or public seal of the state, city, court, or place. Consuls and vice-consuls may take the acknowledgments of citizens of the United States, or of other persons, being or residing within the districts of their consulates.

A married woman should acknowledge, on a private examination before the chief justice, or any justice of the peace, that she did, of her own free will and accord, subscribe, seal, and deliver the deed, with an intention thereby to renounce, give up, and forever quit-claim her right of dower and thirds of, in, and to the lands, etc., therein mentioned.

IOWA.—Acknowledgment or proof may be made, within the state, before some court having a seal, or a judge or clerk thereof, or some justice of the peace, notary public, or a county auditor, or his deputy, or any deputy clerk of court. A deed made or acknowledged without the state, but within the United States, shall be acknowledged before some court of record, or officer holding the seal thereof, or before an Iowa commissioner, or before some notary public or justice of the peace; and when before a justice of the peace, a certificate, under the official seal of the proper authority, of the official character of the justice and of his authority to take such acknowledgments, and of the genuineness of his signature, shall accompany the certificate of acknowledgment. Code, § 1218, as amended by Laws of 1855, 75, § 2.

A deed executed without the United States may be acknowledged or proved before any [the words "court of any" seem to have been omitted here, in the statute] state, republic, kingdom, or province having a seal, or before any officer authorized by the laws of such foreign country to take acknowledgments; or any ambassador, minister, secretary of legation, consul, chargé d'affaires, consular agent, or any other officer of the United States in any foreign country, who is authorized to issue certificates under the seal of the United States; if he have an official seal, the certificate to be attested by the official seal, and in case the same is not before a court of record, or mayor, or other officer of a town having such seal, proof under the official seal of the proper authority that the officer was authorized by the laws of the country to do so, and that his certificate is genuine, must accompany it. Laws of 1855, 75, § 1.

If the grantor die before acknowledging, or if his attendance cannot be procured, or, appearing, he refuses to acknowledge, proof may be made by any competent testimony. In such case the certificate must state the title of the court or officer; that it was satisfactorily proved that the grantor was dead, or that his attendance could not be procured, or that having appeared he refused to acknowledge the deed; the names of the witnesses by whom the proof was made, and that it was proved by them that the instrument was executed by the person whose name is thereunto subscribed as a party. A separate examination of wife is not necessary.

KANSAS.—No instrument affecting real estate is of any validity against subsequent purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice, unless recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the county in which the land lies, or in such other office as is, or may be, provided by law.

If acknowledged within the state, it must be before some court having a seal, or some judge, justice, or clerk thereof, or some justice of the peace, notary public, or register of deeds, county clerk, or mayor of a city. Comp. Stat. (1862).

If acknowledged out of the state, it must be before some court of record, or clerk, or officer holding the seal thereof, or before some commissioner to take the acknowledgments of deeds for this state, or before some notary public, or justice of the peace, or any United States consul resident abroad. If taken before a justice of the peace, the acknowledgment shall be accompanied by a certificate of his official character, under the hand of the clerk of some court of record, to which the seal of said court shall be affixed.

The court or person taking the acknowledgment must endorse upon the deed a certificate setting forth the following particulars: 1. The title of the court or person before whom the acknowledgment is taken; 2. That the person making the acknowledgment was personally known to at least one of the judges of the court, or to the officer taking the acknowledgment, to be the identical person whose name is affixed to the deed as grantor, or that such identity was proved by at least one credible witness (naming him); 3. That such person acknowledged the instrument to be his own voluntary act and deed.

If the grantor die before acknowledging the deed, or if, for any other reason, his attendance cannot be procured in order to make the acknowledgment, or if, having appeared, he refuses to acknowledge it, proof of the due execution and delivery of the deed may be made by any competent testimony before the same court or officers as are authorized to take acknowledgments of grantors.

The certificate endorsed upon the deed must state in this last case: 1. The title of the court or officer taking the proof; 2. That it was satisfactorily proved that the grantor was dead, or that, for some other cause, his attendance could not be procured to make the acknowledgment, or that, having appeared, he refused to acknowledge the deed; 3. The names of the witnesses by whom the proof was made, and that it was proved by them that the instrument was executed by the person whose name is thereunto subscribed as a party.

The certificate of proof or acknowledgment may be given under seal or otherwise, according to the mode by which the courts or officers granting the same usually authenticate their most solemn and formal official acts.

Any court or officer having power to take the proof above contemplated may issue the necessary subpœnas, and compel the attendance of witnesses residing within the county, by attachments, if necessary.

No instrument containing a power to convey, or in any manner affect real estate, certified and recorded as above prescribed, can be revoked by an act of the parties by whom it was executed, until the instrument containing such revocation is acknowledged and deposited for record, and entered on the entry-book, in the same office in which the instrument conferring the power is recorded.

Every instrument in writing affecting real estate which is acknowledged or proved, and certified as hereinbefore directed, may be read in evidence, without further proof. Kans. Comp. Stat. 1862, c. 41, §§ 15–24.

A married woman may convey her interest in the same manner as other persons. Id. § 9.

KENTUCKY.—A deed executed within the state can be acknowledged before the clerk of the county court where the property lies; or the deed may be proved by the subscribing witnesses, or by one of them if he can prove the attestation of the other; or by proof by two witnesses that the two subscribing witnesses are dead, or out of the state, and proof of the signature of one of them and of the grantor. In such case, the certificate must state the witnesses' names.

A deed executed out of the state, and within the United States, may be acknowledged before a judge and certified under the seal of his court, or before a clerk of a court, notary public, mayor of a city, secretary of state, or Kentucky commissioner, and certified under his official seal.

A deed executed out of the United States may be acknowledged or proved before any foreign minister, consul, or secretary of legation of the United States, or before the secretary of foreign affairs, certified under his seal of office, or a judge of a superior court of the nation where acknowledged. On making proof by others than the subscribing witnesses, the names and residence of the witnesses must be stated in the certificate.

If a married woman is a grantor, the officer must explain to her the contents and effect of the deed separately and apart from her husband; and she must also declare that she did freely and voluntarily execute it, and is willing that it should be recorded. When the acknowledgment of a married woman is taken within the state, the officer may simply certify that the acknowledgment was made before him, and its date, and it will be presumed that the law was complied with.

When taken without the state, the certificate must be to this effect:—

County (or, Town, City, Department, or Parish) of , ss.

I, A. B. [here give title], do certify that this instrument of writing from C. D. and wife [or, from E. F., wife of C. D.] was this day produced to me by the parties (which was acknowledged by the said C. D. to be his act and deed); and the contents and effect of the instrument being explained to the said E. F. by me, separately and apart from her husband, she thereupon declared that she did, freely and voluntarily, execute and deliver the same, to be her free act and deed, and consented that the same might be recorded.

Given under my hand and seal of office.

[SEAL] A. B.

If the deed of a married woman is not recorded within the time prescribed (viz., if executed in the state, eight months; without the state, and in the United States, twelve months; and without the United States, eighteen months), it is not effectual, but must be re-acknowledged before it can be recorded. Rev. Stat. (1852) 198; 200, §§ 15–23.

LOUISIANA.—The authentication of instruments in the state is effected by the parties appearing before a notary, who reduces the contract to writing and signs it, together with them, in the presence of two male witnesses of at least fourteen years of age.

Without the state, and within the United States, acknowledgments and proof may be taken by Louisiana commissioners, and certified under their signature and seal; but the commissioner can only take such acknowledgment or proof where the party making it resides in the state or territory where the commissioner resides. Any acknowledgment made in conformity with the laws of the state where the act is passed is valid in Louisiana. Rev. Stat. (1856) 102, 103. In any foreign country, all American ministers, chargés d'affaires, consuls-general, consuls, vice-consuls, and commercial agents may act as commissioners. Id. 103.

The certificate of acknowledment by a married woman must set forth an examination by the officer apart from the presence of her husband touching the freedom of her action, and that he informed her fully of the nature of her rights upon the property of her husband. As to execution by agent of a power to renounce a mortgage or privilege on the husband's estate, see id. 561.

MAINE.—Deeds are to be acknowledged by the grantors, or one of them, or by their attorney executing the same, before a justice of the peace or notary public within the state, or any justice of the peace, magistrate, or notary public within the United States, or any minister or consul of the United States, or notary public in any foreign country. Rev. Stat. (1857) 451, § 17.

When a grantor dies or leaves the state without acknowledging the deed, it may be proved by a subscribing witness before any court of record in the state; and in their absence by proof of the handwriting of the grantor and witness. Id. §§ 18, 19.

A certificate must be endorsed on, or annexed to, the deed. Id. § 23.

Acknowledgments and proof may also be taken without the state, but, according to the laws of the state, by a Maine commissioner; his certificate to be under official seal, and annexed or endorsed. Id. 629, §§ 1, 2. Private examination of wife not necessary.

If acknowledged without the United States, before any minister or consul of the United States, a notary public, or a commissioner of Maryland, as above.

When an acknowledgment is taken before a judge, the seal of the court must be affixed.

There must be added to the acknowledgments of mortgages and bills of sale the affidavit of the mortgagee or vendee, that the consideration is true and bona fide as therein set forth. Id.

MASSACHUSETTS.—Acknowledgments of deeds are to be by the grantors, or one of them, or by the attorney executing the same.

They may be taken before any justice of the peace of the state, or before any justice of the peace, magistrate, or notary public, or Massachusetts commissioner, within the United States or in any foreign country; or before a minister or consul of the United States in any foreign country. Gen. Stat. (1860) 467, §§ 18, 19.

When acknowledgments are taken out of the state by a justice of the peace, there should be appended a certificate of his appointment and authority, made by the secretary of state or clerk of a court of record.

The wife is not required to be examined separate and apart from her husband.

If the grantor dies, or leaves the state, the execution may be proved by a subscribing witness.

MICHIGAN.—A deed executed within the state may be acknowledged before any judge or commissioner of a court of record, or any notary public, or justice of the peace. The officer must endorse on the deed a certificate of the acknowledgment, and the time and date of making it, under his hand.

A deed executed without the state, and within the United States, may be executed according to the laws of the state, territory, or district where executed, and may be acknowledged before any judge of a court of record, notary public, justice of the peace, master in chancery, or other officer, authorized by the laws thereof to take acknowledgments, or before a Michigan commissioner. In such case, unless the acknowledgment is taken before a Michigan commissioner, there must be attached a certificate of the clerk, or other proper certifying officer, of a court of record for the county or district within which the acknowledgment was taken, under his official seal, that the person subscribing the certificate was, at the date of it, such officer as represented; that he believes the officer's signature to be genuine, and that the deed is executed according to the laws of the state, territory, or district. A deed executed in a foreign country may be executed according to the laws thereof, and acknowledged before any notary public, or any minister plenipotentiary, extraordinary, or resident; any chargé d'affaires, commissioner, or consul of the United States appointed to reside therein.

The acknowledgment of a married woman of a deed, in which she joins with her husband, may be the same as if she were sole. Laws of 1875, p. 142.

If a grantor dies, or leaves the state, or resides out of the state, the execution of the deed may be proved before any court of record by proceedings given by the statute; and if the grantor is residing in the state, and refuses to acknowledge the deed, he must be summoned to attend. Rev. Stat. 1846, c. 65, ss.; 2 Comp. Laws, 1857, 840 (2733), §§ 14–20.

Without the state, and within the United States; the deed may be executed according to the laws of the state, territory, or district where executed, and acknowledged before any judge of a court of record, notary public, justice of the peace, or before a Minnesota commissioner.

In a foreign country, the execution may be according to its laws, and the acknowledgment may be before a notary public therein, or any minister plenipotentiary, extraordinary, or resident, chargé d'affaires, commissioner, or consul of the United States, appointed to reside therein, to be certified under the hand of the officer, and, if he is a notary, under his seal.

The separate acknowledgment of a married woman is not necessary.

Proof by witnesses may be taken before any court of record, when the grantor dies, or resides out of the state, or refuses to acknowledge. Minn. Comp. Stat. (1858), c. 35, §§ 8–26.

MISSISSIPPI.—When in the state, deeds may be acknowledged, or proved by one or more of the subscribing witnesses to them, before any judge of the high court of errors and appeals, or a judge of the circuit courts, or judge of probate, any clerk of any court of record, who shall certify the same under the seal of his office, or any justice of the peace, or any chancellor, or member of the board of county supervisors, whether the lands be within his county or not.

When in another state or territory of the United States, such deeds must be acknowledged or proved, as aforesaid, before a judge of the supreme court or of the district courts of the United States, or before any judge of the supreme or superior court of any state or territory in the Union; or any justice of the peace, whose official character shall be certified under the seal of some court of record in his county or by a Mississippi commissioner.

When out of the United States, such acknowledgment or proof may be made before any court of record, or mayor, or other chief magistrate of any city, borough, or corporation of such foreign kingdom, state, nation, or colony, or before any ambassador, secretary of legation, or consul of the United States to the kingdom or state, nation or colony; and the certificate in such cases must show the identity of the party, and that he acknowledged the execution of the deed, or that the execution was duly proved; or, if made before an ambassador, minister, or consul, then as such acts are usually certified by such officer. In the same way, a married woman residing without the United States may acknowledge her conveyance of lands or right to dower.

The real property or right of dower of a married woman does not pass by her deed, either jointly with her husband or alone, without a previous acknowledgment, on a private examination apart from her husband, before the proper officer, that she signed, sealed, and delivered the same as her voluntary act and deed, freely, without any fear, threats, or compulsion of her husband, which the certificate must state. Rev. Code (1857), 311, art. 28-32.

MISSOURI.—Within the state; before a court having a seal, or before a judge, justice, or clerk thereof, a notary public, or some justice of the peace for the county where the land lies. Without the state, and within the United States, by any notary public, or by any court of the United States, or of any state or territory, having a seal, or the clerk of such court, or before a Missouri commissioner. Without the United States, by any court of any state, kingdom, or empire, having a seal; or before the mayor or chief officer of any city or town having an official seal; or by any minister or consul of the United States, or notary public, having a seal.

The certificate must be endorsed on the instrument. If granted by a court, it must be under its seal; if by a clerk, then under his hand and the seal of his court; if by an officer having an official seal, then under his hand and seal; if by one who has no seal, then under his hand.

No acknowledgment must be taken unless the person offering to make it is personally known to at least one judge of the court, or to the officer taking it, to be the person whose name is subscribed, or unless he is proved to be such by at least two credible witnesses. The certificate must state this fact, as well as the fact of acknowledgment; and, if the identity was proved by witnesses, their names and residence must be stated. 1 Rev. Stat. (1855) 358, §§ 18-21.

If the deed is attested by a subscribing witness, proof of the execution of the deed may be made by the subscribing witness before one of the officers mentioned, and the certificate must state the residence of the witness, and that he is personally known to the officer so certifying. Id. §§ 22-30.

A married woman's relinquishment of dower may be acknowledged in the same way; but no such acknowledgment can be taken unless, in addition to the requirements in the case of other grantors, she is made acquainted with the contents of the conveyance, and acknowledges, on a separate examination apart from her husband, that she executed the same (and, if it is a relinquishment of her dower, that she relinquishes her dower in the real estate therein mentioned) freely, and without compulsion or undue influence of her husband. The certificate must set forth these facts, as well as those required to be stated in a certificate of acknowledgment by any other party. Id. §§ 31-39.

MONTANA.—Within the territory; before the secretary of the territory, some judge or clerk of a court having a seal, a notary public, a justice of the peace, the county clerk and ex officio county recorder. Without the territory, and within the United States; before some judge or clerk of any court of the United States, or any state or territory having a seal, a notary public, a justice of the peace, or commissioner appointed by the governor of the territory for that purpose. If taken by a justice of the peace, his official character must be certified to under the seal of the court, tribunal, or officer within and for the county in which such justice may be acting, which has cognizance of his official character.

The certificate must state that the person acknowledging the execution is personally known to the officer.

The certificate of an acknowledgment by a married woman must state that the officer first made her acquainted with the contents of the instrument, and that on examination, separate, apart from, and without the hearing of her husband, she acknowledged that she executed the same freely and voluntarily, without fear or compulsion or undue influence of her husband, and that she does not wish to retract the execution of the same.

NEBRASKA.—Within the state; before some court having a seal, or some judge, justice, or clerk thereof, or some justice of the peace, or notary public. Without the state; before a Nebraska commissioner, or before some officer authorized, by the laws of the state or country where the acknowledgment is made, to take the acknowledgment of deeds.

The certificate must be endorsed upon the instrument, and must set forth the title of the court or officer; that the person making the acknowledgment was personally known to at least one of the judges of the court, or to the officer, to be the identical person whose name is affixed to the deed as grantor, or that such identity was proved by at least one credible witness (naming him); that such person acknowledged the instrument to be his voluntary act and deed.

The certificate of acknowledgment or proof may be under seal or otherwise, according to the mode by which the court or officer usually authenticates the most solemn official acts. Laws of 1855, 165, §§ 10-16, 18.

All acknowledgments taken by an officer having no seal must be accompanied with a certificate of a clerk of record or other proper officer of the district, under official seal, that the officer taking the same was the same as represented therein at the date thereof, that the signature is genuine, and the acknowledgment in conformity to law. A certificate under the hand of the woman, and the hand and seal of the judge or magistrate, must be endorsed on the deed or separate instrument of writing to the same effect, in the form or to the purport following, and be recorded in the office of mesne conveyances or office of the clerk of the district where the land lies:—

The State of South Carolina.

District. I, Z. G., one of the judges of the court of common pleas in the said state [or a magistrate of district, as the case may be], do hereby certify unto all whom it may concern, that E. B., the wife of the within named A. B., did this day appear before me, and, upon being privately and separately examined by me, did declare that she does freely, voluntarily, and without any compulsion, dread, or fear of any person or persons whomsoever, renounce, release, and forever relinquish unto the within named C. D., his heirs and assigns forever, all her interest and estate, and all her right and claim of dower of, in, or to all and singular the premises within mentioned and released. Given under my hand and seal, this day of , Anno Domini [L. S.] Z. G., judge of the court of common pleas in the state of South Carolina (or magistrate, as the case may be). E. B.

This provision, it must be observed, applies exclusively to "dower."

A feme covert of the age of twenty-one years, who may be entitled to any real estate as her inheritance, and is desirous of joining her husband in conveying away the fee simple of the same to any other person, may bar herself of her inheritance by joining her husband in the execution of the release, and seven days after the execution of the same going before a judge of the court of common pleas, or a magistrate of the district, and then, upon a private and separate examination by him, declaring to him that she did, at least seven days before such examination, actually join her husband in executing such release, and that she did then, and at the time of her examination still does, freely, voluntarily, and without any manner of compulsion, dread, or fear of any person or persons whomsoever, renounce, release, and forever relinquish all her estate, interest, and inheritance in the premises mentioned in the release unto the grantee and his assigns. Id.

A certificate signed by the woman, and under the hand and seal of the judge or magistrate, must then immediately be endorsed upon the said release, or a separate instrument of writing to the same effect in the form of that required as above in dower, to which must be added to the following effect, to wit: that the woman did declare that the release was positively and bona fide executed at least seven days before such examination. The renunciation is not complete and legal until recorded; but if that be done in the lifetime of husband and wife, it is sufficient.

It may be well enough to remark that the term "inheritance" does not necessarily mean an estate descended to the wife, but an estate in her own right, and which may be inherited from her.

If the words required in the additional certificate appear in the body of the certificate, it will be sufficient.

A deed executed and acknowledged out of the state according to the form and using the necessary words required by the Act of 1795, before a commissioner appointed by South Carolina, would be sufficient.

Tennessee.—By a person within the state, an acknowledgment is to be before the clerk, or legally appointed deputy clerk, of the county court of some county in the state, and any notary public. Without the state, but within the United States, before any court of record, or clerk of any court of record, in any state, or a Tennessee commissioner, or a notary public, or any clerk of any court of record of any state or territory. Without the United States, before a Tennessee commissioner or notary public, or before a consul, minister, or ambassador of the United States.

A certificate taken within the state must be endorsed on or annexed to the instrument. A notary, Tennessee commissioner, a consul, minister, or ambassador, must make the certificate under his seal of office.

If the acknowledgment is taken before a judge, he must certify under his hand, and the clerk of his court must, under seal (a private seal, if there is no official seal), certify to the official character of the judge; or his official character may be certified by the governor of the state or territory, under its great seal. If it is taken before a court of record, a copy of the entry on the record must be certified by the clerk under seal (a private seal, if he has no official seal); and in this case, or if the acknowledgment be before the clerk of a court of record of another state, the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate must certify to the official character of the clerk. She must be privily examined by the officer, apart from her husband, and must declare that she did freely and willingly sign and seal the writing, to be then shown and explained to her, and does not wish to retract it, and must acknowledge the instrument, so again shown to her, to be her act. The certificate must show these facts, and that the instrument was fully explained to her. Id. 72, art. 207.

If the husband and wife executed such conveyance without the state, the acknowledgment (which should be in the same form) may be taken before the officers who are specified above as authorized to take other acknowledgments.

WEST VIRGINIA.—Before a justice, notary public, clerk of a county court, prothonotary, clerk of any court within the United States, or West Virginia commissioner; and, without the United States, before any officer there authorized to take such acknowledgments.

A married woman must be examined separate and apart from her husband, and the certificate must state that the paper executed was fully explained to her, and that she declared that she had willingly executed the same and did not wish to retract it.

WISCONSIN.—Deeds executed within the state may be acknowledged before a judge or commissioner of a court of record, and clerk of the board of supervisors, or a notary public, or justice of the peace of the state. The certificate must state the true date of the acknowledgment.

Deeds executed without the state, and within the United States, before a judge of a court of record, notary public, justice of the peace, master in chancery, or other officer authorized by the law of the place to take acknowledgments, or before a Wisconsin commissioner. Except in the last case, the certificate must be attested by the certifying officer of a court of record.

In a foreign country, before a notary public, or other officer authorized by the laws thereof, or any minister plenipotentiary, minister extraordinary, minister resident, chargé d'affaires, commissioner, or consul of the United States, appointed to reside therein. If before a notary public, his certificate must be under seal. Rev. Stat. (1858), 538, §§ 8, 11.

Married women residing in the state may acknowledge as if they were unmarried. Id. §§ 12, 14.

WYOMING.—Within the territory; before any judge or commissioner of a court of record, or before a notary public or justice of the peace. Without the territory; before a Wyoming commissioner, or any officer there authorized to take such acknowledgment, to be accompanied by a certificate, under the seal of a court of record, of his official capacity and the genuineness of his signature.

A married woman may convey and acknowledge as a feme sole.

See Judge Cooley's paper, 4 Rep. Am. Bar Asso. 1881.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT MONEY. In English Law. A sum paid by tenants of copyhold in some parts of England, as a recognition of their superior lords; Cowel; Blount. Called a fine by Blackstone; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 98.

ACQUEST. An estate acquired by purchase; 1 Reeves, Hist. Eng. Law, 56.

ACQUETS. In Civil Law. Property which has been acquired by purchase, gift, or otherwise than by succession. Immovable property which has been acquired otherwise than by succession; Merlin, Répert.

The profits of all the effects of which the husband has the administration and enjoyment, either of right or in fact, of the produce of the reciprocal industry and labor of both husband and wife, and of the estates which they may acquire during the marriage, either by donations, made jointly to them both, or by purchase, or in any other similar way, even although the purchase be only in the name of one of the two, and not of both.

This is the signification attached to the word in Louisiana; La. Civ. Code, 2371. The rule applies to all marriages contracted in that state, or out of it, when the parties afterward go there to live, as to acquets afterward made there. The acquets are divided into two equal portions between the husband and wife, or between their heirs at the dissolution of their marriage.

The parties may, however, lawfully stipulate there shall be no community of profits or gains; but have no right to agree that they shall be governed by the laws of another country; 3 Mart. La. 581; 17 id. 571; La. Civ. Code, 2369, 2370, 2375. See 2 Kent, 153, note.

As to the sense in which it is used in Canada, see 2 Low. Can. 175.

ACOLYTE. An inferior church servant, who, next under the sub-deacon, followed and waited upon the priests and deacons, and performed the meaner offices of lighting the candles, carrying the bread and wine, and paying other servile attendance; Spelman, Cowel.

ACQUIESCENCE. A silent appearance of consent; Worcester, Dict.

Failure to make any objections.

It is to be distinguished from avowed consent, on the one hand, and from open discontent or opposition, on the other. It amounts to a consent which is impliedly given by one or both parties to a proposition, a clause, a condition, a judgment, or to any act whatever.

When a party is bound to elect between a paramount right and a testamentary disposition, his acquiescence in a state of things which indicates an election, when he was aware of his rights, will be primâ facie evidence of such election. See 2 Roper, Leg. 439; 1 Ves. 335; 2 id. 371; 12 id. 136; 3 P. Wms. 315. The acts of acquiescence which constitute an implied election must be decided rather by the circumstances of each case, than by any general principle; 1 Swans. 382, note, and the numerous cases there cited.

Acquiescence in the acts of an agent, or one who has assumed that character, will be equivalent to an express authority; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1309; 2 Kent, 478; Story, Eq. Jur. § 255; Livermore, Ag. 45; Paley, Ag. Lloyd ed. 41; 4 Wash. C. C. 559; 4 Mas. 296; 3 Pet. 69, 81; 6 Mass. 193; 3 Pick. 495; 1 Johns. Cas. 110; 2 id. 424; 12 Johns. 300; 3 Cowen, 281.

ACQUIETANDIS PLEGIIS. A writ of justices, formerly lying for the surety against a creditor who refuses to acquit him after the debt has been satisfied; Reg. of Writs, 158; Cowel; Blount.

ACQUIRE (Lat. ad, for, and quærere, to seek). To make property one's own.

It is regularly applied to a permanent acquisition. A man is said to obtain or procure a mere temporary acquisition.

ACQUISITION. The act by which a person procures the property of a thing.

The thing the property in which is secured.

Original acquisition is that by which a man secures a property in a thing which is not at the time he acquires it, and in its then existing condition, the property of any other individual. It may result from occupancy; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 490; 2 Kent, 289; accession, 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 499; 2 Kent, 293; intellectual labor—namely, for inventions, which are secured by patent rights; and for the authorship of books, maps, and charts, which is protected by copyrights; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 508.

Derivative acquisitions are those which are procured from others, either by act of law or by act of the parties. Goods and chattels may change owners by act of law in the cases of forfeiture, succession, marriage, judgment, insolvency, and intestacy; or by act of the parties, as by gift or sale.

An acquisition may result from the act of the party himself, or those who are in his power acting for him, as his children while minors; 1 N. H. 28; 1 U. S. Law Journ. 513. See Dig. 41. 1. 53; Inst. 2. 9. 3.

ACQUITTAL. In Contracts. A release or discharge from an obligation or engagement.

According to Lord Coke, there are three kinds of acquittal, namely: by deed, when the party releases the obligation; by prescription; by tenure; Coke, Litt. 100, a.

In Criminal Practice. The absolution of a party charged with a crime or misdemeanor.

The absolution of a party accused on a trial before a traverse jury; 1 Nott & M'C. 36; 3 M'Cord, 461.

Acquittals in fact are those which take place when the jury, upon trial, finds a verdict of not guilty.

Acquittals in law are those which take place by mere operation of law; as where a man has been charged merely as an accessary, and the principal has been acquitted; Coke, 2d Inst. 364.

An acquittal is a bar to any future prosecution for the offence alleged in the first indictment.

When a prisoner has been acquitted, he becomes competent to testify either for the government or for his former co-defendants; 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 341, 342, per Monahan, C. J. And it is clear, that where a married defendant is entirely removed from the record by a verdict pronounced in his favor, his wife may testify either for or against any other persons who may be parties to the record; 12 Mees. & W. 49, 50, per Alderson, B.; 8 Carr. & P. 284; 2 Taylor, Ev. 3d ed. § 1230.

ACQUITTANCE. In Contracts. An agreement in writing to discharge a party from an engagement to pay a sum of money. It is evidence of payment, and differs from a release in this, that the latter must be under seal, while an acquittance need not be under seal; Pothier, Oblig. n. 781. See 3 Salk. 298; Coke, Litt. 212 a, 273 a; 1 Rawle, 391.

ACRE (Germ. Aker, perhaps Lat. Ager, a field). A quantity of land containing one hundred and sixty square rods of land, in whatever shape; Sergeant, Land Laws of Penn. 185; Cro. Eliz. 476, 665; 6 Coke, 67; Poph. 55; Coke, Litt. 5 b. The word formerly signified an open field; whence acre-fight, a contest in an open field; Jacob, Dict.

The measure seems to have been variable in amount in its earliest use, but was fixed by statute at a remote period. As originally used, it was applicable especially to meadow-lands; Cowel.

ACT (Lat. agere, to do; actus, done). Something done or established.

In its general legal sense, the word may denote something done by an individual, as a private citizen, or as an officer; or by a body of men, as a legislature, a council, or a court of justice; including not merely physical acts, but also decrees, edicts, laws, judgments, resolves, awards, and determinations. Some general laws made by the Congress of the United States are styled joint resolutions, and these have the same force and effect as those styled acts.

An instrument in writing to verify facts; Webster, Dict.

It is used in this sense of the published acts of assembly, congress, etc. In a sense approaching this, it has been held in trials for treason that letters and other written documents were acts; 1 Fost. Cr. Cas. 198; 2 Stark. 116.

In Civil Law. A writing which states in a legal form that a thing has been done, said, or agreed; Merlin, Répert.

Private acts are those made by private persons as registers in relation to their receipts and expenditures, schedules, acquittances, and the like; Nov. 73, c. 2; Code, 7. 32. 6; 4. 21; Dig. 22. 4; La. Civ. Code, art. 2231 to 2254; 8 Toullier, Droit Civ. Français, 94.

Acts under private signature are those which have been made by private individuals, under their hands. An act of this kind does not acquire the force of an authentic act by being registered in the office of a notary; 11 Mart. La. 243; 5 Mart. N. S. La. 693; 8 id. 568; 3 id. 396; 3 La. Ann. 419; unless it has been properly acknowledged before the officer by the parties to it; 5 Mart. N. S. La. 196.

Public acts are those which have a public authority, and which have been made before public officers, are authorized by a public seal, have been made public by the authority of a magistrate, or which have been extracted and been properly authenticated from public records.

In Evidence. The act of one of several conspirators, performed in pursuance of the common design, is evidence against all of them. And see TREASON; PARTNER; PARTNERSHIP; AGENT; AGENCY.

In Legislation. A statute or law made by a legislative body.

General or public acts are those which bind the whole community. Of these the courts take judicial cognizance.

Private or special acts are those which operate only upon particular persons and private concerns.

Explanatory acts should not be enlarged by equity; Comb. 410; although such acts may be allowed to have a retrospective operation; Dupin, Notions de Droit, 145. 9. If an act of assembly expire or be repealed while a proceeding under it is in fieri or pending, the proceeding becomes abortive; as a prosecution for an offence; 7 Wheat. 552; or a proceeding under insolvent laws; 1 W.

Bla. 451; 3 Burr. 1456; 6 Cranch, 208; 9 S. & R. 283.

In England, the bankruptcy act of 1869 enumerates the following acts of bankruptcy:

By traders and non-traders alike, conveyance of property to trustees for the benefit of creditors generally; fraudulent conveyance, gift, delivery, or transfer of property; departure out of England; remaining out of England; declaration of inability to pay debts; debtor's summons requiring payment of not less than £50, and that the debtor has not paid or compounded for the same within the time limited by traders only; departure from his dwelling house; otherwise absenting himself; beginning to keep house; suffering himself to be outlawed; that execution issued for not less than £50 has been levied by seizure and sale.

As to conveyance of property to trustees for benefit of creditors generally, see Williams on Bank. 3. As to fraudulent conveyance, gift, delivery, or transfer of property; 1 Sm. L. C. 1; 36 L. J. Q. B. 289; 1 Ad. & E. 456; 1 Esp. 67; 1 Burr. 407; 1 Ld. Raymond, 724. As to departure out of England; 1 Taunt. 270; 1 Q. B. 51; 3 Camp. 349. See generally Williams, Roche, Hazlitt. In the United States see, as to the Act of 1867 (now repealed), Bump, Bankruptcy.

ACT OF GOD. Any accident due to natural causes directly and exclusively without human intervention, such as could not have been prevented by any amount of foresight, and pains, and care reasonably to have been expected; L. R. 1 C. P. D. 423. See also L. R. 10 Ex. 255. The civil law employs, as a corresponding term, vis major.

The term generally applies, broadly, to natural accidents, such as those caused by lightning, earthquakes, and tempests; Story, Bailm. § 511; 2 Ga. 349. A severe snow-storm, which blocked up railroads, held within the rule; 40 Mo. 491. So where fruit-trees were frozen, in transit, it was held to be by the act of God, unless there had been improper delay on the part of the carrier; 63 Mo. 230. The freezing of a canal or river held within the rule; 14 Wend. 213; 23 Id. 306; 4 N. H. 259. A frost of extraordinary severity (11 Ex. 781; s. c. 25 L. J. Ex. 212) and an extraordinary fall of snow (28 L. J. Ex. 51) have been held to be the act of God. A sudden failure of wind has been held to be an act of God; 6 Johns. 160 (but this case has been doubted; 1 Sm. L. C. Am. ed. 417; and Kent, Ch. J., substantially dissented; see also 21 Wend. 190). Losses by fire have not generally been held to fall under the act of God; 1 T. R. 33; 6 Seld. 431; 69 Ill. 285; s. c. 18 Am. R. 613; 76 Ill. 542 (the Chicago fire); (though otherwise when the fire is caused by lightning, 26 Me. 181); but where a distant forest fire was driven by a tornado, to where a carrier's cars were on the track awaiting a locomotive, their destruction was held to be by the act of God; 87 Pa. 234; but see 2 Tex. 115, contra. When a flood had risen higher than ever before, destruction of goods thereby was held to be by act of God; 30 N. Y. 630. The bursting of a boiler does not come within the act of God; 5 Strob. 119. See 28 Barb. 403; 12 Md. 9; 4 Stew. & P. 382; 28 Mo. 323.

In a late and well-considered English case, 1 C. P. D. 34, 423; 34 L. T. R. N. S. 827; s. c. 18 Am. R. 618; 14 Alb. L. J. 164; Cockburn, C. J., held, in an action for the loss of a horse on shipboard, that if a carrier "uses all the known means to which prudent and experienced carriers usually have recourse, he does all that can be reasonably required of him, and if under such circumstances he is overpowered by storm or other natural agency, he is within the rule which gives immunity from the effects of such vis major as the act of God." The accident, to come within the rule, must be due entirely to natural causes without human intervention; ibid., also 2 Zab. 373; 1 Murphy, 173; 2 Bailey, 157, 421.

The term is sometimes defined as equivalent to inevitable accident (2 Sm. & M. 572; 2 Ga. 349), but incorrectly, as there is a distinction between the two; although Sir William Jones proposed the use of inevitable accident instead of Act of God; Jones, Bailm. 104. See Story, Bailm. § 25; 2 Bla. Com. 122; 2 Crabb, R. P. § 2176; 4 Dougl. 287; 21 Wend. 190; 10 Miss. 572; 5 Blackf. 222.

Where the law casts a duty on a party, the performance shall be excused if it be rendered impossible by the act of God; lex neminem cogit ad impossibilia; but where the party by his own contract, engages to do an act, it is deemed to be his own fault that he did not thereby provide against contingencies, and exempt himself from responsibilities in certain events; and in such case (that is, in the instance of an absolute general contract) the non-performance is not excused by an inevitable accident, or other contingency, although not foreseen by, nor within the control of, the party; Aleyn, 26; Chitty, Contr. 272, 3; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1024; 6 Term, 650; 8 id. 267; 3 Maule & S. 267; 7 Mass. 325; 13 id. 94; L. R. 5 C. P. 586; id. 4 Q. B. 134; Leake, Contr. 683.

Certain contracts are construed as containing an implied exception of impossible events, and even general words in the contract will not be held to apply to the possibility of the particular contingency which afterwards happened; Leake, Contr. 702; L. R. 4 Q. B. 185. So if a bail bond to render a debt is discharged by the debtor's death before default; W. Jones, 29. Contracts for strictly personal services, marriage, etc., are discharged by death or incapacity; 3 B. & S. 835; Cro. Eliz. 532; 2 M. & S. 408; L. R. 6 Ex. 269; as where a singer could not sing by reason of ill-health. So, when one employed a bailiff for six months, and died, the contract was held dissolved; L. R. 4 C. P. 744. So of contracts of partnership.

See BAILMENT; COMMON CARRIER; PERIL OF THE SEA; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

ACT OF GRACE. In Scotch Law. A statute by which the incarcerating creditor is bound to aliment his debtor in prison, if such debtor has no means of support, under penalty of a liberation of his debtor if such aliment be not provided; Paterson, Comp.

This statute provides that where a prisoner for debt declares upon oath, before the magistrate of the jurisdiction, that he has not wherewith to maintain himself, the magistrate may set him at liberty, if the creditor, in consequence of whose diligence he was imprisoned, does not aliment him within ten days after intimation for that purpose; Stat. 1696, c. 32; Erskine, Pract. 4.

ACT OF HONOR. An instrument drawn up by a notary public, after protest of a bill of exchange, when a third party is desirous of paying or accepting the bill for the honor of any or all of the parties to it.

The instrument describes the bill, recites its protest, and the fact of a third person coming forward to accept, and the person or persons for whose honor the acceptance is made. The right to pay the debt of another, and still hold him, is allowed by the law merchant in this instance, and is an exception to the general rule of law; and the right can only be gained by proceeding in the form and manner sanctioned by the law; 3 Dan. Ky. 554; Bayley, Bills; Sewell, Banking.

ACT IN PAIS. An act performed out of court, and which is not a matter of record.

A deed or an assurance transacted between two or more private persons in the country, that is, according to the old common law, upon the very spot to be transferred, is matter in pais; 2 Bla. Com. 294.

ACT ON PETITION. A form of summary proceeding formerly in use in the High Court of Admiralty, in England, in which the parties stated their respective cases briefly, and supported their statements by affidavit; 2 Dods. Adm. 174, 184; 1 Hagg. Adm. 1, note.

The suitors of the English Admiralty were, under the former practice, ordinarily entitled to elect to proceed either by act on petition, or by the ancient and more formal mode of "plea and proof;" that is, by libel and answer, and the examination of witnesses; W. Rob. Adm. 169, 171, 172. But, by the new rules which took effect Jan. 1, 1860, the modes of pleading theretofore used, as well in causes by act on petition as by plea and proof, were abolished, and a uniform mode of pleading substituted: the first pleading to be called the petition; the second, the answer; the third, the reply; the fourth, the rejoinder, etc. etc. Rules 65 and 66. Morris, Lectures on the Jurisdiction and Practice of the High Court of Admiralty, p. 28. See as to proof under these rules, Rules 78, 79.

ACT OF SETTLEMENT. In English Law. The statute of 12 & 13 Will. III. c. 2, by which the crown of England was limited to the present royal family; 1 Bla. Com. 128; 2 Steph. Com. 290.

ACTA DIURNA (Lat.). A formula often used in signing; Du Cange.

Daily transactions, chronicles, journals, registers. I do not find the thing published in the acta diurna (daily records of affairs); Tacitus, Ann. 3, 3; Ainsworth, Lex.; Smith, Lex.

ACTA PUBLICA (Lat.). Things of general knowledge and concern; matters transacted before certain public officers; Calvinus, Lex.

ACTIO. In Civil Law. A specific mode of enforcing a right before the courts of law: e. g. legis actio; actio sacramenti. In this sense we speak of actions in our law, e.g. the action of debt. The right to a remedy, thus: ex nudo pacto non oritur actio; no right of action can arise upon a naked pact. In this sense we rarely use the word action; 3 Ortolan, Inst. § 1830; 5 Savigny, System, 10; Mackeldey, Civ. L. (13th ed.), § 198.

The first sense here given is the older one. Justinian, following Celsus, gives the well-known definition: Actio nihil aliud est, quam jus persequendi in judicio, quod sibi debetur, which may be thus rendered: An action is simply the right to enforce one's demands in a court of law. See Inst. Jus. 4. 6, de Actionibus.

In the sense of a specific form of remedy, there are various divisions of actiones.

Actiones civiles are those forms of remedies which were established under the rigid and inflexible system of the civil law, the jus civilis. Actiones honorariæ are those which were gradually introduced by the prætors and ædiles, by virtue of their equitable powers, in order to prevent the failure of justice which too often resulted from the employment of the actiones civiles. These were found so beneficial in practice that they eventually supplanted the old remedies, of which in the time of Justinian hardly a trace remained; Mackeldey, Civ. L. § 194; 5 Savigny, System.

Directæ actiones, as a class, were forms of remedies for cases clearly defined and recognized as actionable by the law. Utiles actiones were remedies granted by the magistrate in cases to which no actio directa was applicable. They were framed for the special occasion, by analogy to the existing forms, and were generally fictitious; that is, they proceeded upon the assumption that a state of things existed which would have entitled the party to an actio directa, and the cause was tried upon this assumption, which the other party was not allowed to dispute; 5 Savigny, System, § 215.

Again, there are actiones in personam and actiones in rem. The former class includes all remedies for the breach of an obligation, and are considered to be directed against the person of the wrong-doer. The second class comprehends all remedies devised for the recovery of property, or the enforcement of a right not founded upon a contract between the parties, and are therefore considered as rather aimed at the thing in dispute, than at the person of the defendant; Mackeldey, Civ. L. § 195; 5 Savigny, System, §§ 206–209; 3 Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1952 et seq.

In respect to their object, actions are either actiones rei persequendæ causa comparatæ, to which class belong all in rem actiones, and those of the actiones in personam, which were directed merely to the recovery of the value of a thing, or compensation for an injury; or they are actiones pœnales, called also actiones ex delicto, in which a penalty was recovered of the delinquent, or actiones mixtæ, in which were recovered both the actual damages and a penalty in addition. These classes, actiones pœnales and actiones mixtæ, comprehended cases of injuries, for which the civil law permitted redress by private action, but which modern civilization universally regards as crimes; that is, offences against society at large, and punished by proceedings in the name of the state alone. Thus, theft, receiving stolen goods, robbery, malicious mischief, and the murder or negligent homicide of a slave (in which case an injury to property was involved), gave rise to private actions for damages against the delinquent; Inst. 4. 1. De obligationibus quæ ex delicto nascuntur; id. 2. De bonis vi raptis; id. 3. De lege Aquilia. And see Mackeldey, Civ. L. § 196; 5 Savigny, System, §§ 210–212.

In respect to the mode of procedure; actiones in personam are divided into stricti juris, and bonæ fidei actiones. In the former the court was confined to the strict letter of the law; in the latter something was left to the discretion of the judge, who was governed in his decision by considerations of what ought to be expected from an honest man under circumstances similar to those of the plaintiff or defendant. Mackeldey, Civ. L. § 197 a.

It would not only be foreign to the purpose of this work to enter more minutely into a discussion of the Roman actio, but it would require more space than can here be afforded, since in Savigny's System there are more than a hundred different species of actio mentioned, and even in the succinct treatise of Mackeldey nearly eighty are enumerated.

In addition to the works cited in passing may be added the Introduction to Sandars' Justinian, which may be profitably consulted by the student.

To this brief explanation of the most important classes of actiones we subjoin an outline of the Roman system of procedure. From the time of the twelve tables (and probably from a much earlier period) down to about the middle of the sixth century of Rome, the system of procedure was that known as the actiones legis. Of these but five have come down to us by name: the actio sacramenti, the actio per judicis postulationem, the actio per condictionem, the actio per manus injectionem, and the actio per pignoris captionem. The first three of these were actions in the usual sense of the term; the last two were modes of execution. The actio sacramenti is the best known of all, because, from the nature of the questions decided by means of it, which included those of status, of property ex jure Quiritium, and of successions; and from the great popularity of the tribunal, the centumviri, which had cognizance of these questions, it was retained in practice long after the other actions had succumbed to a more liberal system of procedure. As the actio sacramenti was the longest-lived, so it was also the earliest, of the actiones leges; and it is not only in many particulars a type of the whole class, but the other species are conceived to have been formed by successive encroachments upon its field. The characteristic feature of this action was the sacramentum, a pecuniary deposit made in court by each party, which was to be forfeited by the loser. Subsequently, however, the parties were allowed, instead of an actual deposit, to give security in the amount required. Our knowledge of all these actions is exceedingly slight, being derived from fragments of the earlier jurisprudence preserved in literary works, laboriously pieced together by commentators, and the numerous gaps filled out by aid of ingenious and most copious conjectures. They bear all those marks which might have been expected of their origin in a barbarous or semi-barbarous age, among a people little skilled in the science of jurisprudence, and having no acquaintance with the refined distinctions and complex business transactions of civilized life. They were all of that highly symbolical character found among men of rude habits but lively imaginations. They abounded in sacramental words and significant gestures, and, while they were inflexibly rigid in their application, they possessed a character almost sacred, so that the mistake of a word or the omission of a gesture might cause the loss of a suit. In the nature of things, such a system could not maintain itself against the advance of civilization, bringing with it increased complications in all the relations of man to man; and accordingly we find that it gradually, but sensibly, declined, and that at the time of Justinian not a trace of it existed in practice. See 3 Ortolan, Justinian, 467 et seq.

About the year of Rome 507 began the introduction of the system known as the procedure per formulam or ordinaria judicia. An important part of the population of Rome consisted of foreigners, whose disputes with each other or with Roman citizens could not be adjusted by means of the actiones leges, these being entirely confined to questions of the strict Roman law, which could only arise between Roman citizens.

To supply the want of a forum for foreign residents, a magistrate, the prætor peregrinus, was constituted with jurisdiction over this class of suits, and from the procedure established by this new court sprang the formulary system, which proved so convenient in practice that it was soon adopted in suits where both parties were Roman citizens, and gradually withdrew case after case from the domain of the legis actiones, until few questions were left in which that cumbrous procedure continued to be employed.

An important feature of the formulary system, though not peculiar to that system, was the distinction between the jus and the judicium, between the magistrate and the judge. The magistrate was vested with the civil authority, imperium, and that jurisdiction over law-suits which in every state is inherent in the supreme power; he received the parties, heard their conflicting statements, and referred the case to a special tribunal of one or more persons, judex, arbiter, recuperatores. The function of this tribunal was to ascertain the facts and pronounce judgment thereon, in conformity with a special authorization to that effect conferred by the magistrate. Here the authority of the judge ended; if the defeated party refused to comply with the sentence, the victor must again resort to the magistrate to enforce the judgment. From this it would appear that the functions of the judge or judges under the Roman system corresponded in many respects with those of the jury at common law. They decided the question of fact submitted to them by the magistrate, as the jury decides the issue eliminated by the pleadings; and the decision made their functions ceased, like those of the jury.

As to the amount at stake, the magistrate, in cases admitting it, had the power to fix the sum in dispute, and then the judge's duties were confined to the simple question whether the sum specified was due the plaintiff or not; and if he increased or diminished this amount he subjected himself to an action for damages. In other cases, instead of a precise sum, the magistrate fixed a maximum sum, beyond which the judge could not go in ascertaining the amount due; but in most cases the magistrate left the amount entirely to the discretion of the judge.

The directions of the magistrate to the judge were made up in a brief statement called the formula, which gives its name to this system of procedure. The composition of the formula was governed by well-established rules. When complete, it consisted of four parts, though some of these were frequently omitted, as they were unnecessary in certain classes of actions. The first part of the formula, called the demonstratio, recited the subject submitted to the judge, and consequently the facts of which he was to take cognizance. It varied, of course, with the subject-matter of the suit, though each class of cases had a fixed and appropriate form. This form, in an action by a vendor against his vendee, was as follows: "Quod Aulus Agerius Numerio Negidio hominem vendidit;" or, in case of a bailment, "Quod Aulus Agerius apud Numerium Negidium hominem deposuit." The second part of the formula was the intentio: in this was stated the claim of the plaintiff, as founded upon the facts set out in the demonstratio. This, in a question of contracts, was in these words: "Si paret Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio sestertium X milia dare oportere," when the magistrate fixed the amount; or, "Quidquid paret Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio dare facere oportere," when he left the amount to the discretion of the judge. In a claim of property the form was, "Si paret hominem ex jure Quiritium Auli Agerii esse." The third part of the complete formula was the adjudicatio, which contained the authority to the judge to award to one party a right of property belonging to the other. It was in these words: "Quantum adjudicari oportet, judex Titio adjudicato." The last part of the formula was the condemnatio, which gave the judge authority to pronounce his decision for or against the defendant. It was as follows: "Judex, Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio sestertium X milia condemna: si non paret, absolve," when the amount was fixed; or, "Judex, Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio dumtaxat X milia condemna: si non paret, absolvito," when the magistrate fixed a maximum; or, "Quanti ea res erit, tantam pecuniam, judex, Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio condemna: si non paret, absolvito," when it was left to the discretion of the judge.

Of these parts, the intentio and the condemnatio were always employed: the demonstratio was sometimes found unnecessary, and the adjudicatio only occurred in three species of actions—familiæ erciscundæ, communi dividundo, and finium regundorum—which were actions for division of an inheritance, actions of partition, and suits for the rectification of boundaries.

The above are the essential parts of the formula in their simplest form; but they are often enlarged by the insertion of clauses in the demonstratio, the intentio, or the condemnatio, which were useful or necessary in certain cases: these clauses are called adjectiones. When such a clause was inserted for the benefit of the defendant, containing a statement of his defence to the claim set out in the intentio, it was called an exceptio. To this the plaintiff might have an answer, which, when inserted, constituted the replicatio, and so on to the duplicatio and triplicatio. These clauses, like the intentio in which they were inserted, were all framed conditionally, and not, like the common-law pleadings, affirmatively. Thus: "Si paret Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio X millia dare oportere (intentio); si in ea re nihil dolo malo Auli Agerii factum sit neque fiat (exceptio); Si non, etc. (replicatio)."

In preparing the formula the plaintiff presented to the magistrate his demonstratio, intentio, etc., which was probably drawn in due form under the advice of a jurisconsult; the defendant then presented his adjectiones, the plaintiff responded with his replications, and so on. The magistrate might modify these, or insert new adjectiones, at his discretion. After this discussion in jure, pro tribunali, the magistrate reduced the results to form, and sent the formula to the judge, before whom the parties were confined to the case thus settled. See 3 Ortolan, Justinian, §§ 1909 et seq.

The procedure per formulam was supplanted in course of time by a third system, extraordinaria judicia, which in the days of Justinian had become universal. The essence of this system consisted in dispensing with the judge altogether, so that the magistrate decided the case himself, and the distinction between the jus and the judicium was practically abolished. This new system commenced with usurpation by the magistrates, in the extension of an exceptional jurisdiction, which had existed from the time of the leges actiones, to cases not originally within its scope. Its progress may be traced by successive enactments of the emperors, and was so gradual that, even when it had completely undermined its predecessor, the magistrate continued to reduce to writing a sort of formula representing the result of the pleadings. In time, however, this last relic of the former practice was abolished by an imperial constitution. Thus the formulary system, the creation of the great Roman jurisconsults, was swept away, and carried with it in its fall all those refinements of litigation in which they had so much delighted. Thenceforth the distinctions between the forms of actions were no longer regarded, and the word actio, losing its signification of a form, came to mean a right, jus persequendi in judicio quod sibi debetur.

ACTIO BONÆ FIDEI (Lat. an action of good faith). In Civil Law. A class of actions in which the judge might at the trial, ex officio, take into account any equitable circumstances that were presented to him affecting either of the parties to the action; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 218.

ACTIO COMMODATI CONTRARIA. In Civil Law. An action by the borrower against the lender, to compel the execution of the contract; Pothier, Prêt à Usage, n. 75.

ACTIO COMMODATI DIRECTA. In Civil Law. An action by a lender against a borrower, the principal object of which is to obtain a restitution of the thing lent; Pothier, Prêt à Usage, nn. 65, 68.

ACTIO COMMUNI DIVIDUNDO. In Civil Law. An action for a division of the property held in common; Story, Partn., Bennett, ed. § 352.

ACTIO CONDICTIO INDEBITATI. In Civil Law. An action by which the plaintiff recovers the amount of a sum of money or other thing he paid by mistake; Pothier, Promutuum, n. 140; Merlin, Rép.

ACTIO EX CONDUCTO. In Civil Law. An action which the bailor of a thing for hire may bring against the bailee, in order to compel him to re-deliver the thing hired; Pothier, du Contr. de Louage, n. 59; Merlin, Rép.

ACTIO EX CONTRACTU. See ACTION.

ACTIO EX DELICTO. See ACTION.

ACTIO DEPOSITI CONTRARIA. In Civil Law. An action which the depositary has against the depositor, to compel him to fulfil his engagement towards him; Pothier, Du Dépôt, n. 69.

ACTIO DEPOSITI DIRECTA. In Civil Law. An action which is brought by the depositor against the depositary, in order to get back the thing deposited; Potheir, Du Dépôt, n. 60.

ACTIO AD EXHIBENDUM. In Civil Law. An action instituted for the purpose of compelling the person against whom it was brought to exhibit some thing or title in his power.

It was always preparatory to another action, which lay for the recovery of a thing movable or immovable; 1 Merlin, Quest. de Droit, 84.

ACTIO IN FACTUM. In Civil Law. An action adapted to the particular case which had an analogy to some actio in jus which was founded on some subsisting acknowledged law; Spence, Eq. Jur. 212. The origin of these actions is strikingly similar to that of actions on the case at common law. See CASE.

ACTIO FAMILIÆ ERCISCUNDÆ. In Civil Law. An action for the division of an inheritance; Inst. 4. 6. 20; Bracton, 100 b.

ACTIO JUDICATI. In Civil Law. An action instituted, after four months had elapsed after the rendition of judgment, in which the judge issued his warrant to seize, first, the movables, which were sold within eight days afterwards; and then the immovables, which were delivered in pledge to the creditors, or put under the care of a curator, and if, at the end of two months, the debt was not paid, the land was sold; Dig. 42. 1; Code, 8. 34.

According to some authorities, if the defendant then utterly denied the rendition of the former judgment, the plaintiff was driven to a new action, conducted like any other action, which was called actio judicati, and which had for its object the determination of the question whether such a judgment had been rendered. The exact meaning of the term is by no means clear. See Savigny, Syst. 305, 411; 3 Ortolan, Just. § 2033.

ACTIO MANDATI. In Civil Law. An action founded upon a mandate; Dig. 17. 1.

ACTIO NON. In Pleading. The declaration in a special plea "that the said plaintiff ought not to have or maintain his aforesaid action thereof against" the defendant (in Latin, actio non habere debet).

It follows immediately after the statement of appearance and defence; 1 Chitty, Plead. 531; 2 id. 421; Stephens, Plead. 394.

ACTIO NON ACCREVIT INFRA SEX ANNOS (Lat.). The action did not accrue within six years.

In Pleading. A plea of the statute of limitations, by which the defendant insists that the plaintiff's action has not accrued within six years. It differs from non assumpsit in this: non assumpsit is the proper plea to an action on a simple contract, when the action accrues on the promise; but when it does not accrue on the promise, but subsequently to it, the proper plea is actio non accrevit, etc.; Lawes, Plead. 733; 5 Binn. 200, 203; 2 Salk. 422; 2 Saund. 63 b.

ACTIO PERSONALIS. A personal action. The proper term in the civil law is actio in personam.

ACTIO PERSONALIS MORITUR CUM PERSONA (Lat.). A personal action dies with the person.

In Practice. A maxim which formerly expressed the law in regard to the surviving of personal actions.

To render the maxim perfectly true, the expression "personal actions" must be restricted very much within its usual limits. In the most extensive sense, all actions are personal which are neither real nor mixed, and in this sense of the word personal the maxim is not true. A further distinction, moreover, is to be made between personal actions actually commenced and pending at the death of the plaintiff or defendant, and causes of action upon which suit might have been, but was not, brought by or against the deceased in his lifetime. In the case of actions actually commenced, the old rule was that the suit abated by the death of either party. But the inconvenience of this rigor of the common law has been modified by statutory provisions in England and the states of this country, which prescribe in substance that when the cause of action survives to or against the personal representatives of the deceased, the suit shall not abate by the death of the party, but may proceed on the substitution of the personal representatives on the record by scire facias, or, in some states, by simple suggestion of the facts on the record. See 6 Wheat. 260. And this brings us to the consideration of what causes of action survive.

CONTRACTS.—It is clear that, in general, a man's personal representatives are liable for his breach of contract on the one hand, and, on the other, are entitled to enforce contracts made with him. This is the rule; but it admits of a few exceptions; 6 Me. 470; 2 D. Chipm. Vt. 41.

No action lies against executors upon a covenant to be performed by the testator in person, and which consequently the executor cannot perform, and the performance of which is prevented by the death of testator; 3 Wils. Ch. 99; Cro. Eliz. 553; 1 Rolle, 359; as if an author undertakes to compose a work, or a master covenants to instruct an apprentice, but is prevented by death. See Wms. Exec. 1467. But for a breach committed by deceased in his lifetime, his executor would be answerable; Cro. Eliz. 553; 1 Mees. & W. 423, per Parke, B.; 19 Penn. 234.

As to what are such contracts, see 2 Perr. & D. 251; 10 Ad. & E. 45; 1 Mees. & W. 423; 1 Tyrwh. 349; 2 Strange, 1266; 2 W. Bla. 856; 3 Wils. 380. But whether the contract is of such a nature is a mere question of construction, depending upon the intention of the parties; Hob. 9; Yelv. 9; Cro. Jac. 282; 1 Bingh. 225; unless the intention be such as the law will not enforce; 19 Penn. 233, per Lowrie, J.

Again, an executor, etc. cannot maintain an action on a promise made to deceased where the damage consisted entirely in the personal suffering of the deceased without any injury to his personal estate, as a breach of promise of marriage; 2 Maule & S. 408; 4 Cush. 408. And as to the right of an executor or administrator to sue on a contract broken in the testator's lifetime, where no damage to the personal estate can be stated, see 2 Cromp. M. & R. 588; 5 Tyrwh. 985, and the cases there cited.

The fact whether or not the estate of the deceased has suffered loss or damage would seem to be the criterion of the right of the personal representative to sue in another class of cases, that is, where there is a breach of an implied promise founded on a tort. For where the action, though in form ex contractu, is founded upon a tort to the person, it does not in general survive to the executor. Thus, with respect to injuries affecting the life and health of the deceased; all such as arise out of the unskilfulness of medical practitioners; or the imprisonment of the party occasioned by the negligence of his attorney, no action, generally speaking, can be sustained by the executor or administrator on a breach of the implied promise by the person employed to exhibit a proper portion of skill and attention; such cases being in substance actions for injuries to the person; 2 Maule & S. 415, 416; 3 Mees. & W. 854. And it has been held that for the breach of an implied promise of an attorney to investigate the title to a freehold estate, the executor of the purchaser cannot sue without stating that the testator sustained some actual damage to his estate; 4 J. B. Moore, 532. But the law on this point has been considerably modified by statute.

On the other hand, where the breach of the implied promise has occasioned damage to the personal estate of the deceased, though it has been said that an action in form ex contractu founded upon a tort whereby damage has been occasioned to the estate of the deceased, as debt against the sheriff for an escape, does not survive at common law, 1 Ga. 514 (though in this case the rule is altered in that state by statute), yet the better opinion is that, if the executor can show that damage has accrued to the personal estate of the deceased by the breach of an express or implied promise, he may well sustain an action at common law, to recover such damage, though the action is in some sort founded on a tort; Wms. Exec. 676; citing, in extenso, 2 Brod. & B. 102; 4 J. B. Moore, 532. And see 3 Wooddeson, Lect. 78, 79; Marsh. 14. So, by waiving the tort in a trespass, and going for the value of the property, the action of assumpsit lies as well for as against executors; 1 Bay, 58.

In the case of an action on a contract commenced against joint defendants one of whom dies pending the suit, the rule varies. In some of the states the personal representatives of the deceased defendant may be added as parties and the judgment taken against them jointly with the survivors; 27 Miss. 455; 9 Tex. 519. In others the English rule obtains which requires judgment to be taken against the survivors only; and this is conceived to be the better rule, because the judgment against the original defendants is de bonis propriis, while that against the executors is de bonis testatoris; 119 Mass. 361.

TORTS.—The ancient maxim which we are discussing applies more peculiarly to cases of tort. It was a principle of the common law that, if an injury was done either to the person or property of another for which damages only could be recovered in satisfaction,—where the declaration imputes a tort done either to the person or property of another, and the plea must be not guilty,—the action died with the person to whom or by whom the wrong was done. See Wms. Exec. 668, 669; 3 Bla. Com. 302; 1 Saund. 216, 217, n. (1); Cowp. 371–377; 3 Wooddeson, Lect. 73; Viner, Abr. Executors, 123; Comyn, Dig. Administrator, B, 13.

But if the goods, etc., of the testator taken away continue in specie in the hands of the wrong-doer, it has long been decided that replevin and detinue will lie for the executor to recover back the specific goods, etc.; W. Jones, 173, 174; 1 Saund. 217, note (1); 1 Hempst. C. C. 711; 10 Ark. 504; or, in case they are sold, an action for money had and received will lie for the executor to recover the value; 1 Saund. 217, n. (1). And actions ex delicto, where one has obtained the property of another and converted it, survive to the representatives of the injured party, as replevin, trespass de bonis asport. But where the wrong-doer acquired no gain, though the other party has suffered loss, the death of either party destroys the right of action; 3 Mass. 351; 6 How. 11; 1 Bay, 58; 4 Mass. 480; 13 id. 272, 454; 1 Root, 216.

Successive innovations upon this rule of the common law have been made by various statutes with regard to actions which survive to executors and administrators.

The stat. 4 Ed. III. c. 7, gave a remedy to executors for a trespass done to the personal estate of their testators, which was extended to executors of executors by the stat. 25 Ed. III. c. 5. But these statutes did not include wrongs done to the person or freehold of the testator or intestate; Wms. Exec. 670. By an equitable construction of these statutes, an executor or administrator shall now have the same actions for any injury done to the personal estate of the testator in his lifetime, whereby it has become less beneficial to the executor or administrator, as the deceased himself might have had, whatever the form of action may be; 1 Saund. 217, n. (1); 1 Carr. & K. 271; Ow. 99; 7 East, 134, 136; 11 Viner, Abr. 125; Latch, 167; Poph. 190; W. Jones, 173, 174; 2 Maule & S. 416; 5 Coke, 27 a; 4 Mod. 403; 12 id. 71; Ld. Raym. 973; 1 Ventr. 31; 1 Rolle, Abr. 912; Cro. Car. 297; 2 Brod. & B. 103; 1 Stra. 212; 2 Brev. 27.

And the laws of the different states, either by express enactment or by having adopted the English statutes, give a remedy to executors in cases of injuries done to the personal property of their testator in his lifetime. Trover for a conversion in the lifetime of the testator may be brought by his executor; T. U. P. Charlt. 261; 4 Ark. 173; 11 Ala. N. S. 859. But an executor cannot sue for expenses incurred by his testator in defending against a groundless suit; 1 Day, 285; nor in Alabama (under the Act of 1826) for any injury done in the lifetime of deceased; 15 Ala. 109; nor in Vermont can he bring trespass on the case, except to recover damages for an injury to some specific property; 20 Vt. 244. And he cannot bring case against a sheriff for a false return in testator's action; Ibid. But he may have case against the sheriff for not keeping property attached, and delivering it to the officer holding the execution in his testator's suit; 20 Vt. 244, n.; and case against the sheriff for the default of his deputy in not paying over to testator money collected in execution; 22 Vt. 108. In Maine, an executor may revive an action against the sheriff for misfeasance of his deputy, but not an action against the deputy for his misfeasance; 30 Me. 194. So, where the action is merely penal, it does not survive; Cam. & N. 72; as to recover penalties for taking illegal fees by an officer from the intestate in his lifetime; 7 S. & R. 183. But in such case the administrator may recover back the excess paid above the legal charge; Ibid.

The stat. 3 & 4 W. IV. c. 42, § 2, gave a remedy to executors, etc., for injuries done in the lifetime of the testator or intestate to his real property, which case was not embraced in the stat. Ed. III. This statute has introduced a material alteration in the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona as well in favor of executors and administrators of the party injured as against the personal representatives of the wrong-doer, but respects only injuries to personal and real property; Chitty, Pl. Parties to Actions in form ex delicto. Similar statutory provisions have been made in most of the states. Thus, trespass quare clausum fregit survives in North Carolina, 4 Dev. & B. 68; 3 Dev. No. C. 153; in Maryland, 1 Md. 102; in Tennessee, 3 Sneed, 128; and in Massachusetts, 21 Pick. 250; even if action was begun after the death of the injured party; 22 Pick. 495; in New Jersey, 38 N. J. L. 296. Proceedings to recover damages for injuries to land by overflowing survive in North Carolina, 7 Ired. 20; and Virginia, 11 Gratt. 1. Aliter in South Carolina, 10 Rich. 92; and Maryland, 1 Harr. & M'H. 224. Ejectment in the U. S. circuit court does not abate by death of plaintiff; 22 Vt. 659. But in Illinois the statute law allows an action to executors only for an injury to the personalty, or personal wrongs, leaving injuries to realty as at common law; 18 Ill. 403.

Injuries to the person. In cases of injuries to the person, whether by assault, battery, false imprisonment, slander, negligence, or otherwise, if either the party who received or he who committed the injury die, the maxim applies rigidly, and no action at common law can be supported either by or against the executors or other personal representatives; 3 Bla. Com. 302; 2 Maule & S. 408. Case for the seduction of a man's daughter; 9 Ga. 69; case for libel; 5 Cush. 544; and for malicious prosecution; 5 Cush. 543; are instances of this. But in one respect this rule has been materially modified in England by the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, known as Lord Campbell's Act, and in this country by enactments of similar purport in many of the states. These provide for the case where a wrongful act, neglect, or default has caused the death of the injured person, and the act is of such a nature that the injured person, had he lived, would have had an action against the wrong-doer. In such cases the wrong-doer is rendered liable, in general, not to the executors or administrators of the deceased, but to his near relations, husband, wife, parent, or child. In the construction given to these acts, the courts have held that the measure of damages is in general the pecuniary value of the life of the person killed to the person bringing suit, and that vindictive or exemplary damages by reason of gross negligence on the part of the wrong-doer are not allowable; Sedg. Damages.

Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and some other states, have statutes founded on Lord Campbell's Act. In Massachusetts, under the statute, an action may be brought against a city or town for damages to the person of deceased occasioned by a defect in a highway; 7 Gray, 544. But where the death, caused by a railway collision, was instantaneous, no action can be maintained under the statute of that state; for the statute supposes the party deceased to have been once entitled to an action for the injury, and either to have commenced the action and subsequently died, or, being entitled to bring it, to have died before exercising the right; 9 Cush. 108. But the accruing of the right of action does not depend upon intelligence, consciousness, or mental capacity of any kind on the part of the person injured; 9 Cush. 478. For the law in New York, see 16 Barb. 54; 15 N. Y. 432; in Missouri, 18 Mo. 162; in Connecticut, 24 Conn. 575; in Maine, 45 Me. 209; in Pennsylvania, 44 Penn. 175.

Actions against the executors or administrators of the wrong-doer. The common law principle was that if an injury was done either to the person or property of another, for which damages only could be recovered in satisfaction, the action died with the person by whom the wrong was committed; 1 Saund. 216 a, note (1); 1 Harr. & M'H. 224. And where the cause of action is founded upon any malfeasance or misfeasance, is a tort, or arises ex delicto, such as trespass for taking goods, etc., trover, false imprisonment, assault and battery, slander, deceit, diverting a watercourse, obstructing lights, and many other cases of the like kind, where the declaration imputes a tort done either to the person or the property of another, and the plea must be not guilty, the rule of the common law is actio personalis moritur cum persona; and if the person by whom the injury was committed dies, no action of that kind can be brought against his executor or administrator. But now in England the stat. 3 & 4 W. IV. c. 42, § 2, authorizes an action of trespass, or trespass on the case, for an injury committed by deceased in respect to property real or personal of another. And similar provisions are in force in most of the states of this country. Thus, in Alabama, by statute, trover may be maintained against an executor for a conversion by his testator; 11 Ala. N. S. 859. So in New Jersey, 1 Harr. (N. J.) 54; Georgia, 17 Ga. 495; and North Carolina, 10 Ired. 169.

In Virginia, by statute, detinue already commenced against the wrong-doer survives against his executor, if the chattel actually came into the executor's possession; otherwise not; 6 Leigh, 42, 344. So in Kentucky, 5 Dana, 34. Replevin in Missouri does not abate on the death of defendant; 21 Mo. 115; nor does an action on a replevin bond in Delaware, 5 Harr. (Del.) 381. It has, indeed, been said that where the wrong-doer has secured no benefit to himself at the expense of the sufferer, the cause of action does not survive, but that where, by means of the offence, property is acquired which benefits the testator, then an action for the value of the property survives against the executor; 6 How. 11; 3 Mass. 321; 4 id. 480; 5 Pick. 285; 20 Johns. 43; 1 Root, Conn. 216; 4 Halst. 173; 1 Bay, 58; and that where the wrong-doer has acquired gain by his wrong, the injured party may waive the tort and bring an action ex contractu against the representatives to recover compensation; 5 Pick. 285; 4 Halst. 173.

But this rule, that the wrong-doer must have acquired a gain by his act in order that the cause of action may survive against his representatives, is not universal. Thus, though formerly in New York an action would not lie for a fraud of deceased which did not benefit the assets, yet it was otherwise for his fraudulent performance of a contract; 20 Johns. 43; and now the statute of that state gives an action against the executor for every injury done by the testator, whether by force or negligence, to the property of another; Hill & D. 116; as for fraudulent representations by the deceased in the sale of land; 19 N. Y. 464; or wasting, destroying, taking, or carrying away personal property; 2 Johns. 227. In Massachusetts, by statute, a sheriff's executors are liable for his official misconduct; 7 Mass. 317; 13 id. 454, but not the executors of a deputy sheriff; Ibid. So in Kentucky; 9 B. Monr. 135. And in Missouri, for false return of execution; 10 Mo. 234. Under the statute of Ohio, case for injury to property survives; 4 McLean, C. C. 599; under statute in Missouri, trespass; 15 Mo. 619; and a suit against an owner for the criminal act of his slave; 23 Mo. 401; in North Carolina, deceit in sale of chattels; 1 Car. Law Rep. 529; and the remedy by petition for damages caused by overflowing lands; 1 Ired. 24; in Pennsylvania, by statute, an action against an attorney for neglect; 24 Penn. St. 114; and such action has been maintained in England; 3 Stark. 154; 1 Dowl. & R. 30.

But in Texas the rule that the right of action for torts unconnected with contract does not survive the death of the wrong-doer, has not been changed by statute; 12 Tex. 11. And in California trespass does not lie against the representatives of the wrong-doer; 3 Cal. 370; nor in Alabama does it survive against the representatives of defendant; 19 Ala. 181; and an action for malicious prosecution does not survive defendant's death; 121 Mass. 550. Detinue does not survive in Tennessee, whether brought in the lifetime of the wrong-doer or not; 3 Yerg. 133; nor in Missouri, under the stat. of 1835; 17 Mo. 362. Trespass for mesne profits does not lie against personal representatives in Pennsylvania; 5 Watts, 474; 3 Penn. 93; nor in New Hampshire; 20 Vt. 326; nor in New York; 2 Bradf. N. Y. 80; but the representatives may be sued on contract; Ibid. But this action lies in North Carolina, 3 Hawks, 390, and Vermont, by statute; 20 Vt. 326. Trespass for crim. con., where defendant dies pending the suit, does not survive against his personal representatives; 9 Penn. 128.

See ABATEMENT.

ACTIO IN PERSONAM. (Lat. an action against the person).

A personal action.

This is the term in use in the civil law to denote the actions which in the common law are called personal. In modern usage it is applied in English and American law to those suits in admiralty which are directed against the person of the defendant, as distinguished from those in rem which are directed against the specific thing from which (or rather the proceeds of the sale of which) the complainant expects and claims a right to derive satisfaction for the injury done to him; 2 Parsons, Mar. Law, 663.

ACTIO PRÆSCRIPTIS VERBIS. In Civil Law. A form of action which derived its force from continued usage or the responsa prudentium, and was founded on the unwritten law; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 212.

The distinction between this action and an actio in factum is said to be, that the latter was founded not on usage or the unwritten law, but by analogy to or on the equity of some subsisting law; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 212.

ACTIO REALIS (Lat.). A real action. The proper term in the civil law was Rei Vindicatio; Inst. 4. 6. 3.

ACTIO IN REM. An action against the thing. See ACTIO IN PERSONAM.

ACTIO REDHIBITORIA. In Civil Law. An action to compel a vendor to take back the thing sold and return the price paid.

ACTIO RESCISSORIA. In Civil Law. An action for rescinding a title acquired by prescription in a case where the party bringing the action was entitled to exemption from the operation of the prescription.

ACTIO PRO SOCIO. In Civil Law. An action by which either partner could compel his co-partners to perform the partnership contract; Story, Partn., Bennett ed. § 352; Pothier, Contr. de Société, n. 34.

ACTIO STRICTI JURIS (Lat. an action of strict right). An action in which the judge followed the formula that was sent to him closely, administered such relief only as that warranted, and admitted such claims as were distinctly set forth by the pleadings of the parties; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 218.

ACTIO UTILIS. An action for the benefit of those who had the beneficial use of property, but not the legal title; an equitable action; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 214.

It was subsequently extended to include many other instances where a party was equitably entitled to relief, although he did not come within the strict letter of the law and the formulæ appropriate thereto.

ACTIO VULGARIS. In Civil Law. A legal action; a common action. Sometimes used for actio directa; 1 Mackeldey, Civ. L. 189.

ACTION (Lat. agere, to do; to lead; to conduct). A doing of something; something done.

In Practice. The formal demand of one's right from another person or party, made and insisted on in a court of justice. In a quite common sense, action includes all the formal proceedings in a court of justice attendant upon the demand of a right made by one person or party of another in such court, including an adjudication upon the right and its enforcement or denial by the court.

In the Institutes of Justinian an action is defined as jus persequendi in judicio quod sibi debetur (the right of pursuing in a judicial tribunal what is due one's self); Inst. 4. 6. In the Digest, however, where the signification of the word is expressly treated of, it is said, Actio generaliter sumitur; vel pro ipso jure quod quis habet persequendi in judicio quod suum est sibi ve debetur; vel pro hac ipsa persecutione seu juris exercitio (Action in general is taken either as that right which each one has of pursuing in a judicial tribunal his own or what is due him; or as the pursuit itself or exercise of the right); Dig. 50. 16. 16. Action was also said continere formam agendi (to include the form of proceeding); Dig. 1. 2. 10.

This definition of action has been adopted by Mr. Taylor (Civ. Law, p. 50). These forms were prescribed by the prætors originally, and were to be very strictly followed. The actions to which they applied were said to be stricti juris, and the slightest variation from the form prescribed was fatal. They were first reduced to a system by Appius Claudius, and were surreptitiously published by his clerk, Cneius Flavius. The publication was so pleasing to the people that Flavius was made a tribune of the people, a senator, and a curule edile (a somewhat more magnificent return than is apt to await the labors of the editor of a modern book of forms); Dig. 1. 2. 5.

These forms were very minute, and included the form for pronouncing the decision.

In modern law the signification of the right of pursuing, etc., has been generally dropped, though it is recognized by Bracton, 98 b; Coke, 2d Inst. 40; 3 Bla. Com. 116; while the two latter senses of the exercise of the right and the means or method of its exercise are still found.

The vital idea of an action is, a proceeding on the part of one person as actor against another, for the infringement of some right of the first, before a court of justice, in the manner prescribed by the court or the law.

Subordinate to this is now connected in a quite common use, the idea of the answer of the defendant or person proceeded against; the adducing evidence by each party to sustain his position; the adjudication of the court upon the right of the plaintiff; and the means taken to enforce the right or recompense the wrong done, in case the right is established and shown to have been injuriously affected.

Actions are to be distinguished from those proceedings, such as writ of error, scire facias, mandamus, and the like, where, under the form of proceedings, the court and not the plaintiff appears to be the actor; 6 Binn. 9. And it is not regularly applied, it would seem, to proceedings in a court of equity; 3 S. C. 417; 71 Penn. 170.

In the Civil Law.

Civil Actions.—Those personal actions which are instituted to compel payments or do some other thing purely civil; Pothier, Introd. Gen. aux Coutumes, 110.

Criminal Actions.—Those personal actions in which the plaintiff asks reparation for the commission of some tort or injury which he or those who belong to him have sustained.

Mixed Actions are those which partake of the nature of both real and personal actions; as, actions of partition, actions to recover property and damages; Just. Inst. 4, 6, 18–20; Domat, Supp. des Lois Civiles, liv. 4, tit. 1, n. 4.

Mixed Personal Actions are those which partake of both a civil and a criminal character.

Personal Actions are those in which one person (actor) sues another as defendant (reus) in respect of some obligation which he is under to the actor, either ex contractu or ex delicto, to perform some act or make some compensation.

Real Actions.—Those by which a person seeks to recover his property which is in the possession of another.

A former meaning seems to have been, to a stream of water; Cowel; Blount. Ad medium filum aquæ would be etymologically more exact; 2 Eden, Inj. 260, and is often used; but the common use of ad filum aquæ is undoubtedly to the thread of the stream; 3 Sumn. C. C. 170; 1 M'Cord, 580; 3 Kent, 431; 20 Wend. 149; 4 Pick. 272.

Brev. 201.

The remedy now applied for holding over is by ejectment, or, under local regulations, by summary proceedings.

AD TUNC ET IBIDEM. In Pleading. The technical name of that part of an indictment containing the statement of the subject-matter "then and there being found;" Bacon, Abr. Indictment, G, 4; 1 No. C. 93.

In an indictment, the allegation of time and place must be repeated in the averment of every distinct material fact; but after the day, year, and place have once been stated with certainty, it is afterwards, in subsequent allegations, sufficient to refer to them by the words et ad tunc et ibidem, and the effect of these words is equivalent to an actual repetition of the time and place. The ad tunc et ibidem must be added to every material fact in an indictment; Saund. 96. Thus, an indictment which alleged that J. S. at a certain time and place made an assault upon J. N., et eum cum gladio felonicè percussit, was held bad, because it was not said, ad tunc et ibidem percussit; Dy. 68, 69. And where, in an indictment for murder, it was stated that J. S. at a certain time and place, having a sword in his right hand, percussit J. N., without saying ad tunc et ibidem percussit, it was held insufficient; for the time and place laid related to the having the sword, and consequently it was not said when or where the stroke was given; Cro. Eliz. 738; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 178. And where the indictment charged that A. B. at N., in the county aforesaid, made an assault upon C. D. of F. in the county aforesaid, and him ad tunc et ibidem quodam gladio percussit, this indictment was held to be bad, because two places being named before, if it referred to both, it was impossible; if only to one, it must be to the last, and then it was insensible; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. § 180.

AD VALOREM (Lat.). According to the valuation.

Duties may be specific or ad valorem. Ad valorem duties are always estimated at a certain per cent. on the valuation of the property; 3 U. S. Stat. at Large, 732; 24 Miss. 501.

AD VITAM AUT CULPAM (For life or until misbehavior).

Words descriptive of a tenure of office "for life or good behavior," equivalent to quamdiu bene se gesserit.

ADDICERE (Lat.). In Civil Law. To condemn; Calvinus, Lex.

Addictio denotes a transfer of the goods of a deceased debtor to one who assumes his liabilities; Calvinus, Lex. Also used of an assignment of the person of the debtor to the successful party in a suit.

ADDITION (Lat. additio, an adding to). Whatever is added to a man's name by way of title or description, as additions of mystery, place, or degree; Cowel; Termes de la Ley; 10 Wentworth, Plead. 371; Salk. 5; 2 Ld. Raym. 988; 1 Wils. 244.

Additions of estate are esquire, gentleman, and the like.

These titles can, however, be claimed by none, and may be assumed by any one. In Nash v. Battersby (2 Ld. Raym. 986; 6 Mod. 80), the plaintiff declared with the addition of gentleman. The defendant pleaded in abatement that the plaintiff was no gentleman. The plaintiff demurred, and it was held ill; for, said the court, it amounts to a confession that the plaintiff is no gentleman, and then not the person named in the count. He should have replied that he is a gentleman.

Additions of mystery are such as scrivener, painter, printer, manufacturer, etc.

Additions of places are descriptions by the place of residence, as A. B. of Philadelphia, and the like. See Bacon, Abr. Addition; Doctr. Plac. 71; 2 Viner, Abr. 77; 1 Lilly, Reg. 39; 1 Metc. Mass. 151.

The statute of additions extends only to the party indicted. An indictment, therefore, need not describe, by any addition, the person upon whom the offence therein set forth is alleged to have been committed; 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 4th ed. 861; 10 Cush. 402. And if an addition is stated, it need not be proved; 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 4th ed. 547; 2 Carr. & P. 230. But where a defendant was indicted for marrying E. C., "widow," his first wife being alive, it was held that the addition was material; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 303; 4 Carr. & P. 579. At common law there was no need of addition in any case; 2 Ld. Raym. 988; it was required only by stat. 1 Hen. V. c. 5, in cases where process of outlawry lies. In all other cases it is only a description of the person, and common reputation is sufficient; 2 Ld. Raym. 849. No addition is necessary in a Homine Replegiando; 2 Ld. Raym. 987; Salk. 5; 1 Wils. 244, 245; 6 Coke, 67.

In French Law. A supplementary process to obtain additional information; Guyot, Répert.

ADDITIONALES. Additional terms or propositions to be added to a former agreement.

ADDRESS. In Equity Pleading. That part of a bill which contains the appropriate and technical description of the court where the plaintiff seeks his remedy; Cooper, Eq. Plead. 8; Barton, Suit in Eq. 26; Story, Eq. Plead. § 26; Van Heythuysen, Eq. Draft. 2.

In Legislation. A formal request addressed to the executive by one or both branches of the legislative body, requesting him to perform some act.

It is provided as a means for the removal of judges who are deemed unworthy longer to occupy their situations, although the causes of removal are not such as would warrant an impeachment. It is not provided for in the Constitution of the United States; and even in those states where the right exists it is exercised but seldom, and generally with great unwillingness.

ADELANTADO. In Spanish Law. The military and political governor of a frontier province. His powers were equivalent to those of the president of a Roman province. He commanded the army of the territory which he governed, and, assisted by persons learned in the law, took cognizance of the civil and criminal suits that arose in his province. This office has long since been abolished.

ADEMPTION (Lat. ademptio, from adimere, to take away). The extinction or withholding of a legacy in consequence of some act of the testator which, though not directly a revocation of the bequest, is considered in law as equivalent thereto, or indicative of an intention to revoke.

The question of ademption of a general legacy depends entirely upon the intention of the testator, as inferred from his acts under the rules established in law. Where the relations of the parties are such that the legacy is, in law, considered as a portion, an advancement during the life of the testator will be presumed an ademption, at least, to the extent of the amount advanced; 5 Mylne & C. 29; 3 Hare, 509; 10 Ala. N. s. 72; 12 Leigh, 1; and see 3 Clark & F. 154; 18 Ves. 151, 153; but not where the advancement and portion are not ejusdem generis; 1 Brown, Ch. 555; 1 Roper, Leg. 375; or where the advancement is contingent and the portion certain; 2 Atk. 493; 3 Mylne & C. 374; or where the advancement is expressed to be in lieu of, or compensation for, an interest; 1 Ves. 257; or where the bequest is of uncertain amount; 15 Ves. 513; 4 Brown, Ch. 494; but see 2 Hou. L. Cas. 131; or where the legacy is absolute and the advancement for life merely; 2 Ves. sen. 38; 7 Ves. 516; or where the devise is of real estate; 3 Younge & C. 397.

But where the testator was not a parent of the legatee, nor standing in loco parentis, the legacy is not to be held a portion, and the rule as to ademption does not apply; 2 Hare, 424; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1117; except where there is a bequest for a particular purpose and money is advanced by the testator for the same purpose; 2 Brown, Ch. 166; 7 Ves. 516; 1 Ball & B. 303; see 3 Atk. 181; 6 Sim. 528; 3 Mylne & C. 359; 2 P. Will. 140; 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. 139; 15 Pick. 133; 1 Roper, Leg. c. 6.

The ademption of a specific legacy is effected by the extinction of the thing or fund, without regard to the testator's intention; 3 Brown, Ch. 432; 2 Cox, Ch. 182; 3 Watts, 338; 1 Roper, Leg. 329; and see 6 Pick. 48; 14 id. 318; 16 id. 133; 2 Halst. 414; but not where the extinction of the specific thing is by act of law and a new thing takes its place; Forrest, 226; Ambl. 59; or where a breach of trust has been committed or any trick or device practised with a view to defeat the specific legacy; 2 Vern., Rathby ed. 748 n.; 8 Sim. 171; or where the fund remains the same in substance, with some unimportant alterations; 1 Cox, Ch. 427; 3 Brown, Ch. 416; 3 Mylne & K. 296; or where the testator lends the fund on condition of its being replaced; 2 Brown, Ch. 113.

Republication of a will may prevent the effect of what would otherwise cause an ademption; 1 Roper, Leg. 351.

ADHERING (Lat. adhærere, to cling to). Cleaving to, or joining; as, adhering to the enemies of the United States.

The constitution of the United States, art. 3, s. 3, defines treason against the United States to consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.

A citizen's cruising in an enemy's ship, with a design to capture or destroy American ships, would be an adhering to the enemies of the United States; 4 State Trials, 328; Salk. 634; 2 Gilbert, Ev., Lofft ed. 798.

If war be actually levied, that is, a body of men be actually assembled for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable enterprise, all those who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are leagued in the general conspiracy, are to be considered as traitors; 4 Cranch, 126.

ADITUS (Lat. adire). An approach; a way; a public way; Coke, Litt. 56 a.

ADJACENT. Next to, or near.

Two of three lots of land might be described as adjacent to the first, while only the second could be said to be adjoining; 1 Cooke, Tenn. 128.

ADJOURN (Fr. adjourner). To put off; to dismiss till an appointed day, or without any such appointment. See ADJOURNMENT.

ADJOURNED TERM. A continuation of a previous or regular term; 4 Ohio St. 473; 22 Ala. N. S. 27. The Massachusetts General Statutes, c. 112, § 26, provide for holding an adjourned law term from time to time.

ADJOURNMENT. The dismissal by some court, legislative assembly, or properly authorized officer, of the business before them, either finally (which, as popularly used, is called an adjournment sine die, without day), or to meet again at another time appointed (which is called a temporary adjournment).

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 5, 4, directs that "neither house, during the session of congress, shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two houses shall be sitting." See Comyns, Dig.; Viner, Abr.; Dict. de Jur.

In Civil Law. A calling into court; a summoning at an appointed time; Du Cange.

ADJOURNMENT DAY. In English Practice. A day appointed by the judges at the regular sittings for the trial of causes at nisi prius.

ADJOURNMENT DAY IN ERROR. In English Practice. A day appointed some days before the end of the term at which matters left undone on the affirmance day are finished; 2 Tidd, Pract. 1224.

ADJOURNMENT IN EYRE. The appointment of a day when the justices in eyre mean to sit again; Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.; 1 Bla. Com. 186.

ADJUDICATAIRE. In Canadian Law. A purchaser at a sheriff's sale. See 1 Low. Can. 241; 10 id. 325.

ADJUDICATION. In Practice. A judgment; giving or pronouncing judgment in a case.

In Scotch Law. A process for transferring the estate of a debtor to his creditor; Erskine, Inst. lib. 2, tit. 12, §§ 39–55; Bell, Dict., Shaw ed. 944.

It may be raised not only on a decree of court, but also where the debt is for a liquidated sum. The execution of a summons and notice to the opposite party prevents any transfer of the estate. Every creditor who obtains a decree within a year and a day is entitled to share with the first creditor, and, after ten years' possession under his adjudication, the title of the creditor is complete; Paterson, Comp. 1137, n. The matter is regulated by statute 1672, c. 19, Feb. 26, 1684. See Erskine, lib. 2, c. 12, §§ 15, 16.

ADJUNCTION (Lat. adjungere, to join to).

In Civil Law. The attachment or union permanently of a thing belonging to one person to that belonging to another. This union may be caused by inclusion, as if one man's diamond be set in another's ring; by soldering, as if one's guard be soldered on another's sword; by sewing, as by employing the silk of one to make the coat of another; by construction, as by building on another's land; by writing, as when one writes on another's parchment; or by painting, as when one paints a picture on another's canvas.

In these cases, as a general rule, the accessory follows the principal: hence those things which are attached to the things of another become the property of the latter. The only exception which the civilians made was in the case of a picture, which, although an accession, drew to itself the canvas, on account of the importance which was attached to it; Inst. 2. 1. 34; Dig. 41. 1. 9. 2. The common law implicitly adopts the civil law doctrines. See 2 Bla. Com. 404; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n, 499.

ADJUSTMENT. In Insurance. The determining of the amount of a loss; 2 Phillips, Ins. §§ 1814, 1815.

There is no specific form essentially requisite to an adjustment. To render it binding, it must be intended, and understood by the parties to a policy, to be absolute and final. It may be made by indorsement on the policy, or by payment of the loss, or the acceptance of an abandonment; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1815; 4 Burr. 1966; 1 Campb. 134, 274; 4 Taunt. 725; 13 La. 13; 4 Metc. Mass. 270; 22 Pick. 191. If there is fraud by either party to an adjustment, it does not bind the other; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1816; 2 Johns. Cas. 233; 3 Campb. 319. If one party is led into a material mistake of fact by fault of the other, the adjustment will not bind him; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1817; 2 East, 469; 2 Johns. 157; 8 id. 334; 4 id. 331; 9 id. 405; 2 Johns. Cas. 233.

The amount of a loss is governed by that of the insurable interest, so far as it is covered by the insurance. See INSURABLE INTEREST; ABANDONMENT; May, Insurance.

ADMEASUREMENT OF DOWER. In Practice. A remedy which lay for the heir on reaching his majority, to rectify an assignment of dower made during his minority, by which the doweress had received more than she was legally entitled to; 2 Bla. Com. 136; Gilbert, Uses, 379.

The remedy is still subsisting, though of rare occurrence. See 1 Washb. R. P. 225, 226; 1 Pick. 314; 2 Ind. 336.

In some of the states, the special proceeding which is given by statute to enable the widow to compel an assignment of dower, is termed an admeasurement of dower.

See, generally, DOWER; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 148; Bacon, Abr. Dower, K; Coke, Litt. 39 a; 1 Washb. R. P. 225, 226.

ADMEASUREMENT OF PASTURE. In Practice. A remedy which lay in certain cases for surcharge of common of pasture.

It lay where a common of pasture appurtenant or in gross was certain as to number; or where one had common appendant or appurtenant, the quantity of which had never been ascertained. The sheriff proceeded, with the assistance of a jury of twelve men, to admeasure and apportion the common as well of those who had surcharged as those who had not, and, when the writ was fully executed, returned it to the superior court. Termes de la Ley.

The remedy is now abolished in England; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 239, n.; and in the United States; 3 Kent, 419.

ADMINICLE. In Scotch Law. Any writing or deed introduced for the purpose of proof of the tenor of a lost deed to which it refers; Erskine, Inst. lib. 4, tit. 1, § 55; Stair, Inst. lib. 4, tit. 32, §§ 6, 7.

In English Law. Aid; support; stat. 1 Edw. IV. c. 1.

In Civil Law. Imperfect proof; Merlin, Répert.

ADMINICULAR EVIDENCE. In Ecclesiastical Law. Evidence brought in to explain and complete other evidence; 2 Lee, Eccl. 595.

ADMINISTERING POISON. An offence of an aggravated character, punishable under the various statutes defining the offence.

The stat. 9 G. IV. c. 31, s. 11, enacts "that if any person unlawfully and maliciously shall administer, or attempt to administer, to any person, or shall cause to be taken by any person, any poison or other destructive thing," etc., every such offender, etc. In a case which arose under this statute, it was decided that, to constitute the act of administering the poison, it was not absolutely necessary there should have been a delivery to the party poisoned, but that if she took it from a place where it had been put for her by the defendant, and any part of it went into her stomach, it was an administering; 4 Carr. & P. 369; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 114.

The statute 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 85 enacts that "whosoever, with intent to procure the miscarriage of any woman, shall unlawfully administer to her, or cause to be taken by her, any poison, or other noxious thing," shall be guilty of felony. Upon an indictment under this section, it was proved that the woman requested the prisoner to get her something to procure miscarriage, and that a drug was both given by the prisoner and taken by the woman with that intent, but that the taking was not in the presence of the prisoner. It was held, nevertheless, that the prisoner had caused the drug to be taken within the meaning of the statute; 1 Dears. & B. 127, 164. It is not sufficient that the defendant merely imagined that the thing administered would have the effect intended, but it must also appear that the drug administered was either a "poison" or a "noxious thing."

ADMINISTRATION (Lat. administrare, to assist in).

Of Estates. The management of the estate of an intestate, or of a testator who has no executor; 2 Bla. Com. 494; 1 Williams, Ex. 401. The term is applied broadly to denote the management of an estate by an executor, and also the management of estates of minors, lunatics, etc. in those cases where trustees have been appointed by authority of law to take charge of such estates in place of the legal owners.

At common law, the real estate of an intestate goes to his heirs; the personal, to his administrator. The fundamental rule is that all just debts shall be paid before any further disposition of the property; Coke, 2d Inst. 398. Originally, the king had the sole power of disposing of an intestate's goods and chattels. This power he early transferred to the bishops or ordinaries; and in England it is still exercised by their legal successors, the ecclesiastical courts, who appoint administrators and superintend the administration of estates; 4 Burns, Eccl. Law, 291; 2 Fonblanque, Eq. 313; 1 Williams, Ex. 402.

Ad colligendum. That which is granted for collecting and preserving goods about to perish (bona peritura). The only power over these goods is under the form prescribed by statute.

Ancillary. That which is subordinate to the principal administration, for collecting the assets of foreigners. It is taken out in the country where the assets are locally situate; Kent, 43 et seq.; 1 Williams, Ex. [362], 6th Am. ed., note (u)—cases cited; 88 Penn. 131; 11 Mass. 256, 263; 44 Ill. 202; 32 Barb. 190; 57 Howard Pr. 208.

Cæterorum. See CÆTERORUM.

Cum testamento annexo. That which is granted where no executor is named in the will, or where the one named dies, or is incompetent or unwilling to act. Such an administrator must follow the statute rules of distribution, except when otherwise directed by the will; Willard, Ex.; 2 Bradf. 22; 4 Mass. 634; 6 Howard, 59, 60. The residuary legatee is appointed such administrator rather than the next of kin; 2 Phil. 54, 310; 1 Ventr. 217; 4 Leigh, 152; 2 Add. 352; 1 Williams, Ex., 6 Am. ed. (462), notes (h)(i).

De bonis non. That which is granted when the first administrator dies before having fully administered. The person so appointed has in general the powers of a common administrator; Bacon, Abr. Executors, B, 1; Rolle, Abr. 907; 22 Miss. 47; 27 Ala. 273; 9 Ind. 342; 4 Sneed, 411; 31 Miss. 519; 29 Vt. 170; 11 Md. 412; 6 Metc. 197, 198.

De bonis non cum testamento annexo. That which is granted when an executor dies leaving a part of the estate unadministered; Comyns, Dig. Adm. B, 1; 3 Cush. 28; 4 Watts, 34, 38, 39.

Durante absentia. That which subsists during the absence of the executor and until he has proved the will. In England, by statute, such an administration is raised during the absence of the executor, and is not determined by the executor's dying abroad; 4 Hagg. Eccl. 360; 3 Bos. & P. 26; see 5 Rawle, 264.

Durante minori ætate. That which is granted when the executor is a minor. It continues until the minor attains his lawful age to act, which at common law is seventeen years; Godolph. 102; 5 Coke, 29. When an infant is sole executor, the statute 38 Geo. III. c. 87, s. 6 provides that probate shall not be granted to him until his full age of twenty-one years, and that adm. cum test. annexo shall be granted in the mean time to his guardian or other suitable person. A similar statute provision exists in most of the United States. This administrator may collect assets, pay debts, sell bona peritura, and perform such other acts as require immediate attention. He may sue and be sued; Bacon, Abr. Executor, B, 1; Cro. Eliz. 718; 2 Bla. Com. 503; 5 Coke, 29; 35 N. H. 484, 493.

Foreign administration. That which is exercised by virtue of authority properly conferred by a foreign power.

The general rule in England and the United States is that letters granted abroad give no authority to sue or be sued in another jurisdiction, though they may be ground for new probate authority; 5 Ves. 44; 9 Cranch, 151; 12 Wheat. 169; 2 Root, 462; 20 Mart. La. 232; 1 Dall. 456; 1 Binn. 63; 27 Ala. 273; 9 Tex. 13; 21 Mo. 434; 29 Miss. 127; 4 Rand. 158; 10 Yerg. 283; 5 Me. 261; 35 N. H. 484; 4 McLean, C. C. 577; 15 Pet. 1; 13 How. 458. Hence, when persons are domiciled and die in one country as A, and have personal property in another as B, the authority must be had in B, but exercised according to the laws of A; Story, Confl. Laws, 23, 447; 15 N. H. 137; 15 Mo. 118; 5 Md. 467; 4 Bradf. 151, 249; and see DOMICIL.

There is no legal privity between administrators in different states. The principal administrator is to act in the intestate's domicile, and the ancillary is to collect claims and pay debts in the foreign jurisdiction and pay over the surplus to his principal; 2 Metc. Mass. 114; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 199; 6 Humph. 116; 21 Conn. 577; 19 Penn. St. 476; 3 Day, 74; 1 Blatchf. & H. 309; 23 Miss. 199; 2 Curt. Eccl. 241; 1 Rich. 116.

But some courts hold that the probate of a will in a foreign state, if duly authenticated, dispenses with the necessity of taking out new letters in their state; 5 Ired. 421; 2 B. Monr. 12; 18 id. 582; 4 Call, 89; 15 Pet. 1; 7 Gill, 95; 12 Vt. 589. So it has been held that possession of property may be taken in a foreign state, but a suit cannot be brought without taking out letters in that state; 2 Ala. 429; 18 Miss. 607; 2 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 173. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Pendente lite. That which is granted pending the controversy respecting an alleged will or the right of appointment. An officer of the court is appointed to take care of the estate only till the suit terminates; 2 P. Will. 589; 2 Atk. 286; 2 Lee, 258; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 313; 26 N. H. 533; 9 Tex. 13; 16 Ga. 13; 18 N. J. L. 15. He may maintain suits, but cannot distribute the assets; 1 Ves. sen. 325; 2 Ves. & B. 97; 1 Ball & B. 192; 7 Md. 282; 31 Penn. St. 465; 51 Mo. 193.

Public. That which the public administrator performs. This happens in many of the states by statute in those cases where persons die intestate, without leaving any who are entitled to apply for letters of administration; 3 Bradf. 151; 4 id 252.

Special. That which is limited either in time or in power. Such administration does not come under the statutes of 31 Edw. III. c. 11, and 21 Hen. VIII. c. 5, on which the modern English and American laws are founded. A judgment against a special administrator binds the estate; 1 Sneed, 430.

Jurisdiction over administrations is in England lodged in the ecclesiastical courts, and these courts delegate the power of administering by letters of administration. In the United States, administration is a subject charged upon courts of civil jurisdiction. A perplexing multiplicity of statutes defines the powers of such courts in the various states. The public officer authorized to delegate the trust is called surrogate, judge of probate, registrar of wills, etc.; Williams, Ex. 237, notes; 8 Cranch, 536; 12 Gratt. 85; 1 Watts & S. 396; 11 Ohio, 257; 22 Ga. 431; 29 Miss. 127; 2 Gray, 228; 2 Jones (N. C.), 387. In some states, these courts are of special jurisdiction, while in others the power is vested in county courts; 2 Kent, 410; 9 Dana, 91; 4 Johns. Ch. 552; 4 Md. 1; 11 S. & R. 432; 7 Paige, Ch. 112; 1 Green, N. J. 480; 1 Hill, N. Y. 130; 5 Miss. 638; 12 id. 707; 30 id. 472.

Death of the intestate must have taken place, or the court will have no jurisdiction. A decree of the court is prima facie evidence of his death, and puts the burden of disproof upon the party pleading in abatement; 3 Term, 130; 26 Barb. 383; 18 Ohio, 268.

The formalities and requisites in regard to valid appointments and rules, as to notice, defective proceedings, etc., are widely various in the different states. Some of the later cases on the subject are these: 26 Mo. 332; 28 Vt. 819; 28 Ala. N. S. 164, 218; 29 id. 510; 1 Bradf. 182; 2 id. 200; 16 N. Y. 180; 4 Ind. 355; 10 id. 60; 18 Ill. 59; 31 Miss. 430; 12 La. Ann. 44. If letters appear to have been unduly granted, or to an unfaithful person, they will be revoked; 9 Gill, 463; 12 Tex. 100; 18 Barb. 24; 14 Ohio, 268; 4 Sneed, 263; 6 Metc. 370.

The personal property of a decedent is appropriated to the payment of his debts, so far as required, and, until exhausted, must be first resorted to by creditors. And, by certain statutes, courts may grant an administrator power to sell, lease, or mortgage land, when the personal estate of the deceased is not sufficient to pay his debts; 1 Bradf. 10, 182, 234; 2 id. 50, 122, 157; 29 Ala. N. s. 210, 542; 4 Mich. 308; 4 Ind. 468; 18 Ill. 519. The purchasers at such a sale get as full a title as if they had been distributees; but no warranty can be implied by the silence of the administrator; 2 Stockt. 206; 20 Ga. 588; 13 Tex. 322; 30 Miss. 147, 502; 31 id. 348, 430. And a fraudulent sale will be annulled by the court; 16 N. Y. 174; 2 Bradf. 200. See ASSETS.

Insolvent estates of intestate decedents are administered under different systems prescribed by the statutes of the various states; 4 R. I. 41; 34 N. H. 124, 381; 35 id. 484; 1 Sneed, 351; 3 Johns. Ch. 58. See, generally, Raff; Redfield; Toller; Williams; Willard, on Executors; Blackstone; Kent; Story, Conflict of Laws; DOMICIL; CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Of Government. The management of the executive department of the government.

Those charged with the management of the executive department of the government.

ADMINISTRATOR. A person authorized to manage and distribute the estate of an intestate, or of a testator who has no executor.

In English law, administrators are the officers of the Ordinary appointed by him in pursuance of the statute, and their title and authority are derived exclusively from the ecclesiastical judge, by grants called letters of administration. Williams, Ex. 331. At first the Ordinary was appointed administrator under the statute of Westm. 2d. Next, the 31 Edw. III. c. 11, required the Ordinary to appoint the next of kin and the relations by blood of the deceased. Next, under the 21 Hen. VIII., he could appoint the widow, or next of kin, or both, at his discretion.

The appointment of the administrator must be lawfully made with his consent, and by an officer having jurisdiction. If an improper administrator be appointed, his acts are not void ab initio, but are good, usually, until his power is rescinded by authority. But they are void if a will had been made, and a competent executor appointed under it; 8 Cra. 23; 1 Dane, Abr. 556–561; 73 N. Y. 292. But, in general, anybody can be administrator who can make a contract. An infant cannot; a feme covert may, with her husband's permission; 4 Bac. Abr. 67; 3 Salk. 21. Improvident persons, drunkards, gamblers, and the like, are disqualified by statute; 6 N. Y. 443; 14 id. 449; 30 N. J. 106.

Persons holding certain relations to the intestate are considered as entitled to an appointment to administer the estate in established order of precedence; 3 Redf. 512.

Order of appointment.—First in order of appointment.—The husband has his wife's personal property, and takes out administration upon her estate. But in some states it is not granted to him unless he is to receive the property eventually. So the widow can ordinarily claim sole administration, though in the discretion of the judge it may be refused her, or she may be joined with another; 2 Bla. Com. 504; Williams, Ex. 342; 18 Pick. 26; 10 Md. 52; 56 Ala. 270.

Second in order of appointment are the next of kin. Kinship is computed by the civil-law rule. The English order, which is adopted in some states, is, first, husband or wife; second, sons or daughters; third, grandsons or granddaughters; fourth, great-grandsons or great-granddaughters; fifth, father or mother; sixth, brothers or sisters; seventh, grandparents; eighth, uncles, aunts, nephews, nieces, etc.; 1 Atk. 454; 1 P. Will. 41; 2 Add. Eccl. 352; 24 Eng. L. & Eq. 593; 12 La. Ann. 610; 2 Kent, 514; 56 Ala. 589.

In New York the order is, the widow; the children; the father; the brothers; the sisters; the grandchildren; any distributee being next of kin; 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 74; 1 Bradf. 64, 200, 259; 2 id. 281, 322; 4 id. 13, 173; 3 Redf. 512.

When two or three are in the same degree, the probate judge or surrogate may decide between them; and in England he is usually guided by the wishes of the majority of those interested. This discretion, however, is controlled by certain rules of priority concerning equigradal parties, which custom or statute has made. Males are generally preferred to females, though from no superior right. Elder sons are preferred to younger, usually, and even when no doctrine of primogeniture subsists. So solvent persons to insolvent, though the latter may administer. So business men to others. So unmarried to married women. So relations of the whole blood to those of the half blood. So distributees to all other kinsmen.

The appointment in all cases is voidable when the court did not give a chance to all parties to come in and claim it. In Massachusetts an administrator cannot be appointed within thirty days, so as to deprive the widow and the next of kin. In general, see Williams, Ex. 251; 1 Salk. 36; 15 Barb. 302; 6 N. Y. 443; 5 Cal. 63; 4 Jones (N. C.), 274; 87 Penn. 163.

Third in order of appointment.—Creditors (and, ordinarily, first the largest one) have the next right. To prevent fraud, a creditor may be appointed when the appointee of the two preceding classes does not act within a reasonable time. In the United States a creditor may make oath of his account to prove his debt, but no rule establishes the size of the debt necessary to be proved before appointment; 1 Cush. 525. After creditors, any suitable person may be appointed. Generally, consuls administer for deceased aliens; but this is by custom only, and in England there is no such rule.

Co-administrators, in general, must be joined in suing and in being sued; but, like executors, the acts of each, in the delivery, gift, sale, payment, possession, or release of the intestate's goods, are the acts of all, for they have joint power; Bacon, Abr. Ex. C, 4; 11 Viner, Abr. 358; Comyns, Dig. Administration (B, 12); 1 Dane, Abr. 383; 2 Litt. (Ky.) 315; 56 Ala. 173. If one is removed by death, or otherwise, the whole authority is vested in the survivors; 6 Yerk. 167; 5 Gray, 341; 29 Penn. St. 265. Each is liable only for the assets which have come to his own hands, and is not liable for the torts of others except when guilty of negligence or connivance; 1 Strange, 20; 2 Ves. 267; 8 Watts & S. 143; 8 Ga. 388; 5 Conn. 19; 24 Penn. St. 413; 4 Wash. C. C. 186; 3 Sandf. Ch. 99; 3 Rich, Eq. (So. C.) 132. As to the several powers of each, see 10 Ired. 263; 9 Paige, Ch. 52; 35 Me. 279; 4 Ired. 271; 28 Penn. 471; 20 Barb. 91; 16 Ill. 329.

The duty of an administrator is in general to do the things set forth in his bond; and for this he is generally obliged to give security; Williams, Ex. 439, Am. notes; 4 Yerg. 20; 5 Gray, 67. He must publish a notice of his appointment, as the law directs. Usually he must render an inventory. In practice, book accounts and unliquidated damages are not inventoried, but debts evidenced by mercantile paper, bonds, notes, etc., are; 1 Stockt. 572; 23 Penn. 223.

He must collect the outstanding claims and convert property into money; 2 Kent, 415; 18 Miss. 404; Taml. 279; 1 Mylne & C. 8; 6 Gill & J. 171; 4 Edw. Ch. 718; 4 Fla. 112; 20 Barb. 100; 25 Miss. 422; 57 Ind. 198; 32 Penn. 193. As to what constitutes assets, see ASSETS.

For this purpose he acquires a property in the assets of the intestate. His right is not a personal one, but an incident to his office; 9 Mass. 74, 352; 16 N. Y. 278. He owns all his intestate's personal property from the day of death, and for any cause of action accruing after that day may sue in his own name; Williams, Ex. 747; 4 Hill (N. Y.), 57; 17 Vt. 176; 4 Mich. 170, 132; 26 Mo. 76. This happens by relation to the day of death; 12 Metc. 425; 7 Jur. 492; 18 Ark. 424; 34 N. H. 407. An administrator is a trustee, who holds the legal property but not the equitable. If he is a debtor to the estate, and denies the debt, he may be removed; but if he inventories it, it is cancelled by the giving of his bond; 11 Mass. 268.

He may declare, as administrator, wherever the money when received will be assets; and he may sue on a judgment once obtained, as if the debt were his own. He may summon supposed debtors or holders of his intestate's property to account, and has the right to an investigation in equity. In equity he may recover fraudulently-conveyed real estate, for the benefit of creditors. He may also bind the estate by arbitration; 4 Harr. (N. J.) 457; 35 Me. 357; 38 Penn. St. 239. He may assign notes, etc. See 35 N. H. 421; 28 Vt. 661; 2 Stockt. 320; 29 Miss. 70; 3 Ind. 369; 18 Ill. 116; 28 Penn. St. 459; 2 Patt. & H. Va. 462; 1 Sandf. N. Y. 132. Nearly all debts and actions survive to the administrator. But he has no power over the firm's assets, when his intestate is a partner, until the debts are paid; 1 Bradf. 24, 165. He must pay the intestate's debts in the order prescribed by law. There is no universal order of payment adopted in the United States; but debts of the last sickness and the funeral are preferred debts everywhere; Bacon, Abr. Ex. L, 2; Williams, Ex. 679, 1213; 2 Kent, 416; 4 Leigh, 35; 10 B. Monr. 147; 7 Ired. Eq. 62; 23 Miss. 228; 28 N. J. Eq. 327.

Next to these, as a general rule, debts due the state or the United States are privileged. This priority of the United States only extends to the net proceeds of the property of the deceased, and therefore the necessary expenses of the administration are first paid. The act of burial and its accompaniments may be done by third parties, who have a preferred claim therefor, if reasonable; 3 Nev. & M. 512; 8 Ad. & E. 348; 4 Sawyer, 199. But the amount is often disputed; 1 B. & Ad. 260; R. M. Charlt. 56. If the administrator pays debts of a lower degree first, he will be liable out of his own estate in case of a deficiency of assets; 2 Kent, 419.

The statute prescribes a fixed time within which the administrator must ascertain the solvency of the estate. During this time he cannot be sued, unless he waives the right; 2 Nott & M'C. 259; 2 Duer, 160; 6 McLean, C. C. 443. And if the commissioner deems the estate insolvent, parties dissatisfied may resort to a court and jury. If the administrator makes payments erroneously, supposing the estate to be solvent, he may recover them, it being a mistake of facts; 3 Pick. 261; 2 Gratt. 319. In some states, debts cannot be brought in before due, if the estate is solvent.

The administrator may plead the statute of limitations, but he is not bound to, if satisfied that the debt is just; 15 S. & R. 231; 1 Atk. 526; 9 Dowl. & R. 40; 11 N. H. 208, 3 Metc. Mass. 369; 9 Mo. 262; 28 Ala. N. S. 484; 10 Md. 242; 23 Penn. 95; 8 How. 402; 10 Humphr. 301; 4 Fla. 481. He is, in some states, chargeable with interest, first, when he receives it upon assets put out at interest; second, when he uses them himself; third, when he has large debts paid him which he ought to have put out at interest; 5 N. H. 497; 1 Pick. 530; 13 Mass. 232. In some cases of need, as to relieve an estate from sale by the mortgagee, he may lend the estate-money and charge interest thereon; 10 Pick. 77. The widow's support is usually decreed by the judge. But the administrator is not liable for the education of infant children, or for mourning-apparel for relatives and friends of the deceased; 11 Paige, Ch. 265; 11 S. & R. 16.

He must distribute the residue amongst those entitled to it, under direction of the court and according to law; 6 Ired. 4; 86 Penn. 149, 363; 3 Redf. 461.

The great rule is, that personal property is regulated by the law of the domicil. The rights of the distributees vest as soon as the intestate dies, but cannot be sued for till the lapse of the statute period of distribution. See 118th Novel of Justinian, Cooper's trans. 393; 2 P. Will. 447; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1205; 20 Pick. 670; 12 Cush. 282; 31 Miss. 556. See DISTRIBUTION; CONFLICT OF LAWS.

The liability of an administrator is in general measured by the amount of assets. On his contracts he may render himself liable personally, or as administrator merely, according to the terms of the contract which he makes; 7 Taunt. 581; 7 B. & C. 450. But to make him liable personally for contracts about the estate, a valid consideration must be shown; Yelv. 11; 3 Sim. 543; 2 Brod. & B. 460. And, in general, assets or forbearance will form the only consideration; 5 Mylne & C. 71; 9 Wend. 273; 13 id. 557. But a bond of itself imports consideration; and hence a bond given by administrators to submit to arbitration is binding upon them personally; 8 Johns. 120; 22 Miss. 161. In general, he is not liable when he has acted in good faith, and with that degree of caution which prudent men exhibit in the conduct of their own affairs; 2 Ashm. 437.

An administrator is liable for torts and for gross negligence in managing his intestate's property. This species of misconduct is called in law a devastavit; 2 Williams, Ex. 1529; 4 Hayw. 134; 1 Dev. Eq. 516. Such is negligence in collecting notes or debts; 2 Green. Ch. 300; an unnecessary sale of property at a discount; 8 Gratt. 140; paying undue funeral expenses; 1 B. & Ad. 260; 2 Carr. & P. 207; and the like mismanagements. So he may be liable for not laying out assets for the benefit of the estate, or for turning the money to his own profit or advantage. In such cases he is answerable for both principal and interest. In England he may be charged with increased interest for money withheld by fraud; 2 Cox, Ch. 113; 4 Ves. 620; and he is sometimes made chargeable with compound interest in this country; 10 Pick. 77. Finally, a refusal to account for funds, or an unreasonable delay in accounting, raises a presumption of a wrongful use of them; 5 Dana, 70; 6 Gill & J. 186; Williams, Ex. 1567.

An administrator receives no compensation in England, 3 Mer. 24; but in this country he is paid in proportion to his services, and all reasonable expenses are allowed him; 84 Penn. 303. An administrator cannot pay himself. His compensation must be ordered by the court; 58 Ind. 374. If too small a compensation be awarded him, he may appeal; 1 Edw. Ch. 195; 4 Whart. 95; 11 Md. 415; 3 Cal. 287; 7 Ohio St. 143; 3 Redf. 465. He cannot buy the estate, or any part of it, when sold by a common auctioneer to pay debts; but he may when the auctioneer is a state officer, and the sale public and bona fide; 2 Patt. & H. 71; 9 Mass. 75; 4 Ind. 355; 6 Ohio St. 189.

ADMIRAL (Fr. amiral). A high officer or magistrate that hath the government of the king's navy, and the hearing of all causes belonging to the sea; Cowel. See ADMIRALTY.

By statute of July 25, 1866, the active lists of line-officers of the navy of the United States were divided into ten grades, of which the highest is that of admiral, and the next that of vice-admiral. By statute of Jan. 24, 1873, these grades will cease to exist when the offices become vacant, and the highest rank will then be rear-admiral.

ADMIRALTY. A court which has a very extensive jurisdiction of maritime causes, civil and criminal.

On the revival of commerce after the fall of the Western empire, and the conquest and settlement by the barbarians, it became necessary that some tribunal should be established that might hear and decide causes that arose out of maritime commerce. The rude courts established by the conquerors had properly jurisdiction of controversies that arose on land, and of matters pertaining to land, that being at the time the only property that was considered of value. To supply this want, which was felt by merchants, and not by the government or the people at large, on the coast of Italy and the northern shores of the Mediterranean, a court of consuls was established in each of the principal maritime cities. Contemporaneously with the establishment of these courts grew up the customs of the sea, partly borrowed, perhaps, from the Roman law, a copy of which had at that time been discovered at Amalfi, but more out of the usage of trade and the practice of the sea. These were collected from time to time, embodied in the form of a code, and published under the name of the Consolato del Mare. The first collection of these customs is said to be as early as the eleventh century; but the earliest authentic evidence we have of their existence is their publication, in 1266, by Alphonso X., King of Castile; 1 Pardessus, Lois Maritimes, 201.

On Christmas of each year, the principal merchants made choice of judges for the ensuing year, and at the same time of judges of appeal, and their courts had jurisdiction of all causes that arose out of the custom of the sea, that is, of all maritime causes whatever. Their judgments were carried into execution, under proper officers, on all movable property, ships as well as other goods, but an execution from these courts did not run against land; Ordonnance de Valentia, 1283, c. 1, §§ 22, 23.

When this species of property came to be of sufficient importance, and especially when trade on the sea became gainful and the merchants began to grow rich, their jurisdiction in most maritime states was transferred to a court of admiralty; and this is the origin of admiralty jurisdiction. The admiral was originally more a military than a civil officer, for nations were then more warlike than commercial; Ordonnance de Louis XIV., liv. 1; 2 Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law, c. 1. The court had jurisdiction of all national affairs transacted at sea, and particularly of prize; and to this was added jurisdiction of all controversies of a private character that grew out of maritime employment and commerce; and this, as nations grew more commercial, became in the end its most important jurisdiction.

The admiralty is, therefore, properly the successor of the consular courts, which were emphatically the courts of merchants and sea-going persons. The most trustworthy account of the jurisdiction thus transferred is given in the Ordonnance de Louis XIV., published in 1631. This was compiled under the inspiration of his great minister Colbert, by the most learned men of that age, from information drawn from every part of Europe, and was universally received at the time as an authoritative exposition of the common maritime law; Valin, Preface to his Commentaries; 3 Kent, 16. The changes made in the Code de Commerce and in the other maritime codes of Europe are unimportant and inconsiderable. This ordinance describes the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts as embracing all maritime contracts and torts arising from the building, equipment, and repairing of vessels, their manning and victualling, the government of their crews and their employment, whether by charter-party or bill of lading, and from bottomry and insurance. This was the general jurisdiction of the admiralty: it took all the consular jurisdiction which was strictly of a maritime nature and related to the building and employment of vessels at sea.

In English Law. The court of the admiral.

This court was erected by Edward III. It was held by the Lord High Admiral, whence it was called the High Court of Admiralty, or before his deputy, the Judge of the Admiralty, by which latter officer it has for a long time been exclusively held. It sat as two courts, with separate commissions, known as the Instance Court and the Prize Court, the former of which was commonly intended by the term admiralty. At its origin the jurisdiction of this court was very extensive, embracing all maritime matters. By the statutes 13 Rich. II. c. 5, and 15 Rich. II. c. 3, especially as explained by the common-law courts, their jurisdiction was much restricted. A violent and long-continued contest between the admiralty and common-law courts resulted in the establishment of the restriction, which continued until the statutes 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 99, materially enlarged its powers. See 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 479, n., 1 Kent, Lect. XVII.; 2 Gall. C. C. 398; 12 Wheat. 611; 1 Baldw. C. C. 544; Davis, 93. This court was abolished by the Judicature Act of 1873, and its functions transferred to the High Court of Justice, the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Divisions.

The civil jurisdiction of the court extends to torts committed on the high seas, including personal batteries; 4 C. Rob. Adm. 73; collision of ships; Abbott, Shipp. 230; restitution of possession from a claimant withholding unlawfully; 2 B. & C. 244; 1 Hagg. 81, 240, 342; 2 Dods. Adm. 38; Edw. Adm. 242; 3 C. Rob. Adm. 93, 133, 213; 4 id. 275, 287; 5 id. 155; cases of piratical and illegal taking at sea and contracts of a maritime nature, including suits between part owners; 1 Hagg. 306; 3 id. 299; 1 Ld. Raym. 223; 2 id. 1235; 2 B. & C. 248; for mariners' and officers' wages; 2 Ventr. 181; 3 Mod. 379; 1 Ld. Raym. 632; 2 id. 1206; 2 Strange, 858, 937; 1 id. 707; pilotage; Abbott, Shipp. 198, 200; bottomry and respondentia bonds; 6 Jur. 241; 3 Hagg. Adm. 66; 3 Term, 267; 2 Ld. Raym. 982; Rep. temp. Holt, 48; and salvage claims; 2 Hagg. Adm. 3; 3 C. Rob. Adm. 355; 1 W. Rob. Adm. 18.

The criminal jurisdiction of the court has been transferred to the Central Criminal Court by the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 36. It extended to all crimes and offences committed on the high seas, or within the ebb and flow of the tide, and not within the body of a county. A conviction for manslaughter committed on a German vessel, by reason of negligent collision with an English vessel, within two and a half miles of the English coast, whereby a passenger on the English vessel was lost, is not within the jurisdiction of the English criminal courts; 46 L. J. M. C. 17.

The first step in the process in a plenary action may be the arrest of the person of the defendant, or of the ship, vessel, or furniture; in which cases the defendant must find bail or fidejussors in the nature of bail, and the owner must give bonds or stipulations equal to the value of the vessel and her immediate earnings; or the first step may be a monition to the defendant. In 1840, the form of proceeding in this court was very considerably changed. The advocates, surrogates, and proctors of the Court of Arches were admitted to practice there; the proceedings generally were assimilated to those of the common-law courts, particularly in respect of the power to take viva voce evidence in open court; power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers; to ordering issues to be tried in any of the courts of Nisi Prius, and allowing bills of exception on the trial of such issues, and the grant of power to admiralty to direct a new trial of such issues; to make rules of court, and to commit for contempt. The judge may have the assistance of a jury, and in suits for collision he usually decides upon his own view of the facts and law, after having been assisted by, and hearing the opinion of, two or more Trinity brethren.

A court of admiralty exists in Ireland; but the Scotch court was abolished by 1 Will. IV. c. 69. See VICE-ADMIRALTY COURTS.

In American Law. A tribunal exercising jurisdiction over all maritime contracts, torts, injuries, or offences; 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 508.

The court of original admiralty jurisdiction in the United States is the United States District Court. From this court causes may be removed, in certain cases, to the Circuit, and ultimately to the Supreme Court. After a somewhat protracted contest, the jurisdiction of admiralty has been extended beyond that of the English admiralty court, and is said to be coequal with that of the English court as defined by the statutes of Rich. II., under the construction given them by the contemporaneous or immediately subsequent courts of admiralty; 3 Pars. Mar. Law, 508. See 2 Gall. C. C. 398; Davis, 93; 3 Mas. C. C. 28; 1 Stor. C. C. 244; 2 id. 176; 12 Wheat. 611; 2 Cranch, 406; 4 id. 444; 3 Dall. 297; 6 How. 344; 17 id. 399, 477; 18 id. 267; 19 id. 82, 239; 20 id. 296, 583.

It extends to the navigable rivers of the United States, whether tidal or not, the lakes, and the waters connecting them; 4 Wall. 455, 411; 8 W. 15; 12 How. 443; 7 Wall. 624;

Adm. 334; to a ferry-boat plying between opposite sides of the Mississippi River; 5 Biss. 200; to an artificial ship-canal connecting navigable waters within the jurisdiction; 2 Hughes, 12; to the Welland canal; 1 Brown, Adm. 170; Newb. 101. See as to Erie canal, 8 Ben. 150. The Judiciary Act of 1789 (R. S. § 563), while conferring admiralty jurisdiction upon the Federal courts, saves to suitors their common-law remedy, which has always existed for damages for collision at sea; 102 U. S. 118.

Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel by mariners for wages against a vessel plying on navigable waters, even though lying entirely within one state; 2 Am. L. Rev. 455; but see 8 id. 610, where all the cases on admiralty jurisdiction by reason of locality are fully treated.

Its civil jurisdiction extends to cases of salvage; 2 Cranch, 240; 1 Pet. 511; 12 id. 72; 2 Low. 302; bonds of bottomry, respondentia, or hypothecation of ship and cargo; 1 Curt. C. Mar. Law, 511, n.; and generally to all assaults and batteries, damages, and trespasses, occurring on the high seas; 2 Pars. Mar. Law; see 2 Sumn. 1; Chase, Dec. 145, 150; 5 Ben. 63.

Its criminal jurisdiction extends to all crimes and offences committed on the high seas or beyond the jurisdiction of any country. See, as to jurisdiction generally, the article COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

A civil suit is commenced by filing a libel, upon which a warrant for arrest of the person, or attachment of his property if he cannot be found, even though in the hands of third persons, or a simple monition to appear, may issue; or, in suits in rem, a warrant for the arrest of the thing in question; or two or more of these separate processes may be combined. Thereupon bail or stipulations are taken if the party offer them.

In most cases of magnitude, oral evidence is not taken; but it may be taken, and it is the general custom to hear it in cases where smaller amounts are involved. The decrees are made by the court without the intervention of a jury.

In criminal cases the proceedings are similar to those at common law.

ADMISSION (Lat. ad, to, mittere, to send).

In Practice. The act by which attorneys and counsellors become recognized as officers of the court and are allowed to practise. The qualifications required vary widely in the different states. See an article in 15 Am. L. Rev. 295; also a learned report to Amer. Bar Asso. by Mr. Hunt, published in Rep. of 2d An. Meeting, 1879.

In Corporations or Companies. The act of a corporation or company by which an individual acquires the rights of a member of such corporation or company.

In trading and joint-stock corporations no vote of admission is requisite; for any person who owns stock therein, either by original subscription or by transfer, is in general entitled to, and cannot be refused, the rights and privileges of a member; 3 Mass. 364; Dougl. 524; 1 Mann. & R. 529.

All that can be required of the person demanding a transfer on the books is to prove to the corporation his right to the property. See 8 Pick. 90.

In a mutual insurance company it has been held that a person may become a member by insuring his property, paying the premium and deposit-money, and rendering himself liable to be assessed according to the rules of the corporation; 2 Mass. 318.

ADMISSIONS. In Evidence. Concessions or voluntary acknowledgments made by a party of the existence or truth of certain facts.

As distinguished from confessions, the term is applied to civil transactions, and to matters of fact in criminal cases where there is no criminal intent. See CONFESSIONS.

As distinguished from consent, an admission may be said to be evidence furnished by the party's own act of his consent at a previous period.

Direct, called also express, admissions are those which are made in direct terms.

Implied admissions are those which result from some act or failure to act of the party.

Incidental admissions are those made in some other connection, or involved in the admission of some other fact.

As to the parties by whom admissions must have been made to be considered as evidence:—

They may be made by a party to the record, or by one identified in interest with him; 9 B. & C. 595; 7 Term, 563; 1 Dall. 65. Not, however, where the party of record is merely a nominal party and has no active interest in the suit; 1 Campb. 392; 2 id. 561; 2 Term, 763; 3 B. & C. 421; 5 Pet. 580; 5 Wheat. 277; 7 Mass. 131; 9 Ala. N. S. 791; 20 Johns. 142; 5 Gill & J. 134.

They may be made by one of several having a joint interest, so as to be binding upon all; 2 Bingh. 306; 8 id. 309; 8 B. & C. 36; 1 Stark. 488; 2 Pick. 581; 3 id. 291; 4 id. 382; 1 M'Cord, 541; 1 Johns. 3; 7 Wend. 441; 4 Conn. 336; 8 id. 268; 7 Me. 26; 5 Gill & J. 144; 1 Gall. 635. Mere community of interest, however, as in case of co-executors; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 176; 4 Cowen, 493; 16 Johns. 277; trustees, 3 Esp. 101; co-tenants; 4 Cowen, 483; 15 Conn. 1; is not sufficient.

The interest in all cases must have subsisted at the time of making the admissions; 2 Stark. 41; 4 Conn. 544; 14 Mass. 245; 5 Johns. 412; 1 S. & R. 526; 9 id. 47; 12 id. 328.

They may be made by any person interested in the subject-matter of the suit, though the suit be prosecuted in the name of another person as a cestui que trust; 1 Wils. 257; 1 Bingh. 45; but see 3 N. & P. 598; 6 M. & G. 261; or by an indemnifying creditor in an action against the sheriff; 7 C. & P. 629.

They may be made by a third person, a stranger to the suit, where the issue is substantially upon the rights of such a person at a particular time; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 181; 2 Stark. 42; or who has been expressly referred to for information; 1 Campb. 366, n.; 3 C. & P. 532; or where there is a privity as between ancestor and heir; 5 B. & Ad. 223; 1 Bingh. N. C. 430; assignor and assignee; 54 Taunt. 16; 2 Pick. 536; 2 Me. 242; 10 id. 244; 3 Rawle, 437; 2 M'Cord, 241; 17 Conn. 399; intestate and administrator; 3 Bingh. N. C. 291; 1 Taunt. 141; grantor and grantee of land; 4 Johns. 230; 7 Conn. 319; 4 S. & R. 174; and others.

They may be made by an agent, so as to bind the principal; Story, Ag. §§ 134–137; so far only, however, as the agent has authority; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 114; and not, it would seem, in regard to past transactions; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 58; 11 Q. B. 46; 7 Me. 421; 4 Wend. 394; 7 Harr. & J. 104; 19 Pick. 220; 8 Metc. 142.

Thus, the admissions of the wife bind the husband so far only as she has authority in the matter; 1 Esp. 142; 4 Campb. 92; 1 Carr. & P. 621; 7 Term, 112; and so the formal admissions of an attorney bind his client; 7 C. & P. 6; 1 Mees. & W. 508; and see 2 C. & K. 216; 3 C. B. 608.

Implied admissions may result from assumed character; 1 B. & Ald. 677; 2 Campb. 513; from conduct; 2 Sim. & S. 600; 6 C. & P. 241; 9 B. & C. 78; 9 Watts, 441; from acquiescence, which is positive in its nature; 1 Sumn. 314; 4 Fla. 340; 3 Mas. 81; 2 Vt. 276; from possession of documents in some cases; 5 C. & P. 75; 25 State Tr. 120.

In civil matters, constraint will not avoid admissions, if imposition or fraud were not made use of.

Admissions made in treating for an adjustment cannot be given in evidence; 33 Mo. 323; 117 Mass. 55; 13 Ga. 406; 40 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 8; whether made "without prejudice" or not; 2 Whart. Ev. § 1090; 15 Md. 510; but they may be as to independent facts; 117 Mass. 55; 44 N. H. 223.

Judicial admissions; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 205; 2 Campb. 341; 5 Mass. 365; 5 Pick. 285, those which have been acted on by others; 3 Rob. La. 243; 17 Conn. 355; 13 Jur. 253; and in deeds as between parties and privies; 4 Pet. 1; 6 id. 611; are conclusive evidence against the party making them.

It frequently occurs in practice, that, in order to save expenses as to mere formal proofs, the attorneys on each side consent to admit, reciprocally, certain facts in the cause without calling for proof of them.

These are usually reduced to writing, and the attorneys shortly add to this effect, namely, "We agree that the above facts shall on the trial of this cause be admitted, and taken as proved on each side;" and signing two copies now called "admissions" in the cause, each attorney takes one; Gresley, Eq. Ev. c. 2, p. 38.

In Pleading. The acknowledgment of recognition by one party of the truth of some matter alleged by the opposite party.

In Equity.

Partial admissions are those which are delivered in terms of uncertainty, mixed up with explanatory or qualifying circumstances.

Plenary admissions are those which admit the truth of the matter without qualification, whether it be asserted as from information and belief or as from actual knowledge.

At Law.

In all pleadings in confession and avoidance, admission of the truth of the opposite party's pleading is made. Express admissions may be made of matters of fact only.

The usual mode of making an express admission in pleading is, after saying that the plaintiff ought not to have or maintain his action, etc., to proceed thus, "Because he says that, although it be true that," etc., repeating such of the allegations of the adverse party as are meant to be admitted; Lawes, Civ. Pl. 143, 144. See 1 Chitty, Pl. 600; Archbold, Civ. Pl. 215.

ADMITTANCE. In English Law. The act of giving possession of a copyhold estate. It is of three kinds: namely, upon a voluntary grant by the lord, upon a surrender by the former tenant, and upon descent; 2 Bla. Com. 366–370.

ADMITTENDO IN SOCIUM. In English Law. A writ associating certain persons to justices of assize; Cowel.

ADMONITION. A reprimand from a judge to a person accused, on being discharged, warning him of the consequences of his conduct, and intimating to him that, should he be guilty of the same fault for which he has been admonished, he will be punished with greater severity; Merlin, Répert.

The admonition was authorized as a species of punishment for slight misdemeanors.

ADNEPOS. The son of a great-great-grandson; Calvinus, Lex.

ADNEPTIS. The daughter of a great-great-granddaughter; Calvinus, Lex.

ADNOTATIO. (Lat. notare). A subscription or signing.

In the civil law, casual homicide was excused by the indulgence of the emperor, signed with his own sign-manual, called adnotatio; Code, 9. 16. 5; 4 Bla. Com. 187.

ADOLESCENCE. That age which follows puberty and precedes the age of majority. It commences for males at fourteen, and for females at twelve years completed, and continues till twenty-one years complete; Wharton.

ADOPTION. The act by which a person takes the child of another into his family, and treats him as his own.

A juridical act creating between two persons certain relations, purely civil, of paternity and filiation; 6 Demolombe, § 1.

Adoption was practised in the remotest antiquity, and was established to console those who had no children of their own. Cicero asks, "Quod est jus adoptionis? nempe ut is adoptet, qui neque procreare jam liberos possit, et cum potuerit, sit expertus." At Athens, he who had adopted a son was not at liberty to marry without the permission of the magistrates. Gaius, Ulpian, and the Institutes of Justinian only treat of adoption as an act creating the paternal power. Originally, the object of adoption was to introduce a person into the family and to acquire the paternal power over him. The adopted took the name of the adopter, and only preserved his own adjectively, as Scipio Æmilianus; Cæsar Octavianus, etc. According to Cicero, adoptions produced the right of succeeding to the name, the property, and the lares: "hereditates nominis, pecuniæ, sacrorum secuta sunt;" Pro Dom. §§ 13, 35.

The first mode of adoption was in the form of a law passed by the comitia curiata. Afterwards, it was effected by the mancipatio, alienatio per æs et libram, and the in jure cessio; by means of the first the paternal authority of the father was dissolved, and by the second the adoption was completed. The mancipatio was a solemn sale made to the emptor in presence of five Roman citizens (who represented the five classes of the Roman people), and a libripens, or scaleman, to weigh the piece of copper which represented the price. By this sale the person sold became subject to the mancipium of the purchaser, who then emancipated him; whereupon he fell again under the paternal power; and in order to exhaust it entirely it was necessary to repeat the mancipatio three times: si pater filium ter venumdabit, filius a patre liber esto. After the paternal power was thus dissolved, the party who desired to adopt the son instituted a fictitious suit against the purchaser who held him in mancipium, alleging that the person belonged to him or was subject to his paternal power; the defendant not denying the fact, the prætor rendered a decree accordingly, which constituted the cessio in jure, and completed the adoption. Adoptantur autem, cum a parente in cujus potestate sunt, tertia mancipatione in jure ceduntur, atque ab eo, qui adoptat, apud eum apud quem legis actio est, vindicantur; Gell. 5. 19.

Towards the end of the Republic another mode of adoption had been introduced by custom. This was by a declaration made by a testator, in his will, that he considered the person whom he wished to adopt as his son: in this manner Julius Cæsar adopted Octavius.

It is said that the adoption of which we have been speaking was limited to persons alieni juris. But there was another species of adoption, called adrogation, which applied exclusively to persons who were sui juris. By the adrogation a paterfamilias, with all who were subject to his patria potestas, as well as his whole estate, entered into another family, and became subject to the paternal authority of the chief of that family. Quæ species adoptionis dicitur adrogatio, quia et is qui adoptat rogatur, id est interrogatur, an velit eum quem adopturus sit justum sibi filium esse; et is, qui adoptatur rogatur an id fieri patiatur; et populus rogatur an id fieri jubeat; Gaius, 1. 99. The formulæ of these interrogations are given by Cicero, in his oration pro Dom. 20: "Velitis, jubeatis, Quirites, uti Lucius Valerius Lucio Titio tam jure legeque filius sibi siet, quam si ex eo patre matreque familias ejus natus esset, utique eo vitæ necisque in eum potestas sit uti pariendo filio est; hoc ita ut dixi vos, Quirites rogo." This public and solemn form of adoption remained unchanged, with regard to adrogation, until the time of Justinian: up to that period it could only take place populi auctoritate. According to the Institutes, 1. 11. 1, adrogation took place by virtue of a rescript of the emperor,—principali rescripto, which only issued causa cognita; and the ordinary adoption took place in pursuance of the authorization of the magistrate,—imperio magistratus. The effect of the adoption was also modified in such a manner, that if a son was adopted by a stranger, extranea persona, he preserved all the family rights resulting from his birth, and at the same time acquired all the family rights produced by the adoption.

In the United States, adoption is regulated by the statutes of the several states. In Louisiana, where the civil law prevails, it was abolished by the Code of 1808, art. 35, p. 50. In many of the continental states of Europe it is still permitted under various restrictions.

ADPROMISSOR (Lat. promittere). One who binds himself for another; a surety; a peculiar species of fidejussor. Calvinus, Lex.

The term is used in the same sense in the Scotch law. The cautionary engagement was undertaken by a separate act: hence, one entering into it was called ad promissor (promissor in addition to); Erskine, Inst. 3. 3. 1.

ADROGATION. In Civil Law. The adoption of one who was impubes, that is, if a male, under fourteen years of age; if a female, under twelve; Dig. 1. 7. 17. 1.

ADSCRIPTI (Lat. scribere). Joined to by writing; ascribed; set apart; assigned to; annexed to.

ADSCRIPTI GLEBÆ. Slaves who served the master of the soil; who were annexed to the land, and passed with it when it was conveyed; Calvinus, Lex.

These servi adscripti (or adscriptitii) glebæ held the same position as the villeins regardant of the Normans; 2 Bla. Com. 93.

ADSCRIPTITII (Lat.). A species of slaves.

Those persons who were enrolled and liable to be drafted as legionary soldiers; Calvinus, Lex.

ADSESSORES (Lat. sedere). Side judges. Those who were joined to the regular magistrates as assistants or advisers; those who were appointed to supply the place of the regular magistrates in certain cases; Calvinus, Lex.

ADULT. In Civil Law. A male infant who has attained the age of fourteen; a female infant who has attained the age of twelve; Domat, Liv. Prel. tit. 2, § 2, n. 8.

In Common Law. One of the full age of twenty-one; Swanst. Ch. 553.

ADULTER (Lat.). One who corrupts; one who corrupts another man's wife.

Adulter solidorum. A corrupter of metals; a counterfeiter; Calvinus, Lex.

ADULTERA (Lat.). A woman who commits adultery; Calvinus, Lex.

ADULTERATION. The act of corrupting or debasing; the act of mixing something impure or spurious with something pure or genuine, or an inferior article with a superior one of the same kind.

ADULTERATOR (Lat.). A corrupter; a counterfeiter.

Adulterator monetæ. A forger; Du Cange.

Adulterations of food, when wilful, are punishable by the laws of most countries. In Paris, malpractices connected with such adulteration are investigated by the Conseil de Salubrité, and punished. In Great Britain, numerous acts have been passed for the prevention of adulterations: they are usually punished by a fine, determined by a summary process before a magistrate. In Pennsylvania, the adulteration of articles of food and drink, and of drugs and medicines, is, by a statute of March 31, 1860, made a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.

ADULTERINE. The issue of adulterous intercourse.

Those are not deemed adulterine who are begotten of a woman openly married through ignorance of a former wife being alive.

Adulterine children are regarded more unfavorably than the illegitimate offspring of single persons. The Roman law refused the title of natural children, and the canon law discouraged their admission to orders.

ADULTERINE GUILDS. Companies of traders acting as corporations, without charters, and paying a fine annually for the privilege of exercising their usurped privileges; Smith, Wealth of Na., book 1, c. 10; Wharton, Dict., 2d Lond. ed.

ADULTERIUM. A fine imposed for the commission of adultery. Barrington, Stat. 62, n.

ADULTERY. The voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife; Bishop, Mar. & D. § 415; 6 Metc. 243; 36 Me. 261; 11 Ga. 56; 2 Strobh. Eq. 174.

The voluntary sexual intercourse of a married woman with a man other than her husband.

Unlawful voluntary sexual intercourse between two persons, one of whom at least is married, is the essence of the crime in all cases. In general, it is sufficient if either party is married; and the crime of the married party will be adultery, while that of the unmarried party will be fornication; 1 Yeates, 6; 2 Dall. 124; 5 Jones, No. C. 416; 27 Ala. N. s. 23; 35 Me. 205; 7 Gratt. 591; 6 id. 673. In Massachusetts, however, by statute, and some of the other states, if the woman be married, though the man be unmarried, he is guilty of adultery; 21 Pick. 509; 2 Blackf. 318; 18 Ga. 264; 9 N. H. 515; and see 1 Harr. N. J. 380; 29 Ala. 313. In Connecticut, and some other states, it seems that to constitute the offence of adultery it is necessary that the woman should be married; that if the man only is married, it is not the crime of adultery at common law or under the statute, so that an indictment for adultery could be sustained against either party; though within the meaning of the law respecting divorces it is adultery in the man.

It is not, by itself, indictable at common law; 4 Bla. Com. 65; 5 Rand. 627, 634; but is left to the ecclesiastical courts for punishment. In the United States it is punishable by fine and imprisonment under various statutes, which generally define the offence.

Parties to the crime may be jointly indicted; 2 Metc. Mass. 190; or one may be convicted and punished before or without the conviction of the other; 5 Jones, No. C. 416.

ADVANCEMENT. A gift by anticipation from a parent to a child of the whole or a part of what it is supposed such child will inherit on the death of the parent; 6 Watts, 87; 4 S. & R. 333; 17 Mass. 358; 11 Johns. 91; Wright, Ohio, 339.

An advancement can only be made by a parent to a child; 5 Miss. 356; 2 Jones, No. C. 137; or in some states, by statute, to a grandchild, 4 Kent, 419; 4 Watts, 82; 4 Ves. 437.

The intention of the parent is to decide whether a gift is intended as an advancement; 23 Penn. 85; 11 Johns. 91; 2 M'Cord, Ch. 103; see 26 Vt. 665.

A mere gift is presumptively an advancement, but the contrary intention may be shown; 22 Ga. 574; 8 Ired. 121; 18 Ill. 167; 3 Jones, No. C. 190; 3 Conn. 31; 6 id. 356; 1 Mass. 527. The maintenance and education of a child, or the gift of money without a view to a portion or settlement in life, is not deemed an advancement; 5 Rich, Eq. 15; 23 Conn. 516. If security is taken for repayment, it is a debt and not an advancement; 21 Penn. 283; 29 id. 298; 28 Ga. 531; 2 Patt. & H. 1; 22 Pick. 508; and see 17 Mass. 93, 359; 2 Harr. & G. 114.

No particular formality is requisite to indicate an advancement; stat. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10; 1 Maddox, Ch. Pr. 507; 4 Kent, 418; 16 Vt. 197; unless a particular form of indicating such intention is prescribed by statute as requisite; 4 Kent, 418; 1 Gray, 587; 5 id. 341; 5 R. I. 255, 457.

The effect of an advancement is to reduce the distributive share of the child by the amount so received, estimating its value at the time of receipt; 1 S. & R. 422; 21 Mo. 347; 3 Yerg. 112; 5 Harr. & J. 459; 1 Wash. Va. 224; 3 Pick. 450; 3 Rand. 117; 2 Hayw. 266; but adding interest in some cases; 2 Watts, 314; 12 Gratt. 33; yet in some states the child has his option to retain the advancement and abandon his distributive share; 9 Dana, 193; 4 Ala. N. S. 121; to abandon his advancement and receive his equal share of the estate; 12 Gratt. 33; 15 Ala. N. S. 85; 26 Miss. 592; 28 id. 674; 18 Ill. 167; but this privilege exists only in case of intestacy; 1 Hill, Ch. 10; 3 Yerg. 95; 3 Sandf. Ch. 520; 5 Paige, Ch. 450; 14 Ves. Ch. 323. See ADEMPTION.

ADVANCES. Payments made to the owner of goods by a factor or agent, who has or is to have possession of the goods for the purpose of selling them.

An agent is entitled to reimburse himself from the proceeds of the goods, and has a lien on them for the amount paid; Livermore, Ag. 38; and an action over for the balance, against his principal, if the sales are insufficient to cover the advances; 22 Pick. 40; 3 N. Y. 62; 12 N. H. 239; 2 Pars. Contr. 466; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1340.

ADVENA (Lat. venire). In Roman Law. One of foreign birth, who has left his own country and settled elsewhere, and who has not acquired citizenship in his new locality: often called albanus; Du Cange.

ADVENT. The period commencing on Sunday falling on St. Andrew's day (30th of November), or the nearest Sunday to it, and continuing till Christmas; Blount.

It took its name from the fact that it immediately preceded the day set apart to commemorate the birth or coming (advent) of Christ; Cowel; Termes de la Ley.

Formerly, during this period, "all contentions at law were omitted." But, by statute 13 Edw. I. (Westm. 2) c. 48, certain actions were allowed.

ADVENTITIOUS (Lat. adventitius). That which comes incidentally, or out of the regular course.

ADVENTITIUS (Lat.). Foreign; coming from an unusual source.

Adventitia bona are goods which fall to a man otherwise than by inheritance.

Adventitia dos is a dowry or portion given by some friend other than the parent.

ADVENTURE. Sending goods abroad under charge of a supercargo or other agent, which are to be disposed of to the best advantage for the benefit of the owners.

The goods themselves so sent.

ADVERSE ENJOYMENT. The possession or exercise of an easement or privilege under a claim of right against the owner of the land out of which the easement is derived; 2 Washb. R. P. 42.

Such an enjoyment, if open, 4 M. & W. 500; 4 Ad. & E. 369, and continued uninterruptedly, 9 Pick. 251; 8 Gray, 441; 17 Wend. 564; 26 Me. 440; 20 Penn. 331; 2 N. H. 255; 9 id. 454; 2 Rich, 136; 11 Ad. & E. 788, for the term of twenty years, raises a conclusive presumption of a grant, provided that there was, during the time, some one in existence, in possession and occupation, who was not under disability to resist the use; 2 Washb. R. P. 48.

ADVERSE POSSESSION. The enjoyment of land, or such estate as lies in grant, under such circumstances as indicate that such enjoyment has been commenced and continued under an assertion or color of right on the part of the possessor; 3 East, 394; 1 Pick. 466; 2 S. & R. 527; 3 Penn. 132; 8 Conn. 440; 2 Aik. Vt. 364; 9 Johns. 174; 18 id. 40, 355; 5 Pet. 402; 4 Bibb, 550; 43 Ala. 643.

When such possession has been actual, 3 S. & R. 517; 7 id. 192; 2 Wash. C. C. 478, and has been adverse for twenty years, of which the jury are to judge from the circumstances, the law raises the presumption of a grant; Angell, Wat. Cour. 85, et seq. But this presumption arises only when the use or occupation would otherwise have been unlawful; 3 Me. 120; 6 Cowen, 617, 677; 8 id. 589; 4 S. & R. 456.

The adverse possession must be "actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct, and hostile;" 6 S. & R. 21. See numerous cases in note to Nepean v. Doe, 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 597.

In 55 Miss. 671 it is said that there must be a claim of ownership; but see 41 N. J. L. 527.

Possession is not adverse:

When both parties claim under the same title; as, if a man seised of certain land in fee have issue two sons, and die seised, and one of the sons enter by abatement into the land, the statute of limitations will not operate against the other son; for when the abator entered into the land of his father, before entry made by his brother, the law intends that he entered claiming as heir to his father, by which title the other son also claims; Coke, Litt. s. 396;

When the possession of the one party is consistent with the title of the other; as, where the rents of a trust estate were received by a cestui que trust for more than twenty years after the creation of the trust, without any interference of the trustee, such possession being consistent with and secured to the cestui que trust by the terms of the deed, the receipt was held not to be adverse to the title of the trustee; 8 East, 248; see 69 Mo. 117;

When, in contemplation of law, the claimant has never been out of possession; as, where Paul devised lands to John and his heirs, and died, and John died, and afterwards the heirs of John and a stranger entered, and took the profits for twenty years; upon ejectment brought by the devisee of the heir of John against the stranger, it was held that the perception of the rents and profits by the stranger was not adverse to the devisee's title; for when two men are in possession, the law adjudges it to be the possession of him who has the right; 1 Ld. Raym. 329;

When the occupier has acknowledged the claimant's titles; as, if a lease be granted for a term, and, after paying the rent for the land during such term, the tenant hold for twenty years without paying rent, his possession will not be adverse. See 1 B. & P. 542; 8 B. & C. 717; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2193, 2194, 2351.

ADVERTISEMENT (Lat. advertere, to turn to).

Information or knowledge communicated to individuals or the public in a manner designed to attract general attention.

A notice published either in handbills or in a newspaper.

The law in many instances requires parties to advertise in order to give notice of acts which are to be done; in these cases, the advertisement is in general equivalent to notice. But there are cases in which such notice is not sufficient, unless brought home to the actual knowledge of the party. Thus, notice of the dissolution of partnership by advertisement in a newspaper printed in the city or county where the business is carried on, although it is of itself notice to all persons who have had no previous dealings with the firm, yet it is not notice to those who have had such previous dealings; it must be shown that persons of the latter class have received actual notice; 4 Whart. 484. See 17 Wend. 526; 22 id. 183; 9 Dan. Ky. 166; 2 Ala. N. S. 502; 8 Humphr. 418; 3 Bingh. 2. It has been held that the printed conditions of a line of public coaches are sufficiently made known to passengers by being posted up at the place where they book their names. W. & S. 373; 3 id. 520. An advertisement by a railroad corporation in a newspaper in the English language of a limitation of its liability for baggage is not notice to a passenger who does not understand English; 16 Penn. 68.

When an advertisement contains the terms of sale, or description of the property to be sold, it will bind the seller; and if there be a material misrepresentation, it may avoid the contract, or at least entitle the purchaser to a compensation and reduction from the agreed price.

Advertisements published bonâ fide for the apprehension of a person suspected of crime, or for the prevention of fraud, are privileged. Thus, an advertisement of the loss of certain bills of exchange, supposed to have been embezzled, made in the belief that it was necessary either for the purposes of justice with a view to the discovery and conviction of the offender, or for the protection of the defendant himself against the liability to which he might be exposed on the bills, is privileged, if these were the defendant's only inducements; Heard, Lib. & Sland. § 131.

A sign-board, at a person's place of business, giving notice of lottery-tickets being for sale there, is an "advertisement;" and, if erected before the passage of a statute making the advertising of lottery-tickets penal, a continuance of it is within the statute; 5 Pick. 42.

ADVICE. Information given by letter by one merchant or banker to another in regard to some business transaction which concerns him; Chitty, Bills, 185.

ADVISARE, ADVISARI (Lat.). To advise; to consider; to be advised; to consult.

Occurring often in the phrase curia advisari vult (usually abbreviated cur. adv. vult or C. A. V.), the court wishes to consider of the matter. When a point of law requiring deliberation arose, the court, instead of giving an immediate decision, ordered a cur. adv. vult to be entered, and then, after consideration, gave a decision. Thus, from amongst numerous examples, in Clement vs. Chivis, 2 B. & C. 172, after the account of the argument we find cur. adv. vult; then, "on a subsequent day judgment was delivered," etc.

ADVISEMENT. Consideration; deliberation; consultation.

ADVOCATE. An assistant; adviser; a pleader of causes.

Derived from advocare, to summon to one's assistance; advocatus originally signified an assistant or helper of any kind, even an accomplice in the commission of a crime; Cicero, Pro Cæcina, c. 8; Livy, lib. ii. 55; iii. 47; Tertullian, De Idolatr. cap. xxiii.; Petron. Satyric. cap. xv. Secondarily, it was applied to one called in to assist a party in the conduct of a suit; Inst. 1, 11, D, 50, 13. de extr. cogn. Hence, a pleader, which is its present signification.

In Civil and Ecclesiastical Law. An officer of the court, learned in the law, who is engaged by a suitor to maintain or defend his cause. Advocates, like counsellors, have the exclusive privilege of addressing the court either orally or in written pleadings; and, in general, in regard to duties, liabilities, and privileges, the same rules apply mutatis mutandis to advocates as to counsellors. See COUNSELLOR.

Lord Advocate.—An officer in Scotland appointed by the crown, during pleasure, to take care of the king's interest before the courts of session, justiciary, and exchequer. All actions that concern the king's interest, civil or criminal, must be carried on with concourse of the lord advocate. He also discharges the duties of public prosecutor, either in person or by one of his four deputies, who are called advocates-depute. Indictments for crimes must be in his name as accuser. He supervises the proceedings in important criminal cases, and has the right to appear in all such cases. He is, in fact, secretary of state for Scotland, and the principal duties are connected directly with the administration of the government.

Inferior courts have a procurator fiscal, who supplies before them the place of the lord advocate in criminal cases; see 2 Bankt. Inst. 492.

College or Faculty of Advocates.—A corporate body in Scotland, consisting of the members of the bar in Edinburgh. A large portion of its members are not active practitioners, however; 2 Bankt. Inst. 486.

Church or Ecclesiastical Advocates.—Pleaders appointed by the church to maintain its rights.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A patron of a living; one who has the advowson, advocatio; Tech. Dict.; Ayliffe, Par. 53; Dane, Abr. c. 31, § 20; Erskine, Inst. 79, 9.

Originally the management of suits at law was undertaken by the patronus for his cliens as a matter of duty arising out of their reciprocal relation. Afterwards it became a profession, and the relation, though a peculiarly confidential one while it lasted, was but temporary, ending with the suit. The profession was governed by very stringent rules: a limited number only were enrolled and allowed to practise in the higher courts—one hundred and fifty before the præfectus prætorio; Dig. 8, 11; Code, 2, 7; fifty before the præf. aug. and dux Ægypticus at Alexandria; Dig. 8, 13; etc. etc. The enrolled advocates were called advocati ordinarii. Those not enrolled were called adv. supernumerarii or extraordinarii, and were allowed to practise in the inferior courts; Dig. 8, 13. From their ranks vacancies in the list of ordinarii were filled; Ibid. The ordinarii were either fiscales, who were appointed by the crown for the management of suits in which the imperial treasury was concerned, and who received a salary from the state; or privati, whose business was confined to private causes. The advocati ordinarii were bound to lend their aid to every one applying to them, unless a just ground existed for a refusal; and they could be compelled to undertake the cause of a needy party; l. 7, C. 2, 6. The supernumerarii were not thus obliged, but, having once undertaken a cause, were bound to prosecute or defend it with diligence and fidelity.

The client must be defended against every person, even the emperor, though the advocati fiscales could not undertake a cause against the fiscus without a special permission; ll. 1 et 2, C. 2, 9; unless such cause was their own, or that of their parents, children, or ward; l. 10, pr. C. 11, D. 3, 1.

An advocate must have been at least seventeen years of age; l. 1, § 3, D. 3, 1; he must not be blind or deaf; l. 1, § 3 et 5, D. 3, 1; he must be of good repute, not convicted of an infamous act; l. 1, § 8, D. 3, 1; he could not be advocate and judge in the same cause; l. 6, pr. C. 2, 6; he could not even be a judge in a suit in which he had been engaged as advocate; l. 17, D. 2, 1; l. 14, C. 1, 51; nor after being appointed judge could he practise as advocate even in another court; l. 14, pr. C. 1, 51; nor could he be a witness in the cause in which he was acting as advocate; l. ult. D. 22, 5; 22 Glück, Pand. p. 161, et seq.

He was bound to bestow the utmost care and attention upon the cause, nihil studii reliquentes, quod sibi possibile est; l. 14, § 1, C. 3, 1. He was liable to his client for damages caused in any way by his fault; 5 Glück, Pand. 110. If he had signed the concepit, he was responsible that it contained no matter punishable or improper; Boehmer, Cons. et Decis. t. ii. p. 1, resp. cviii. no. 5. He must clearly and correctly explain the law to his clients, and honestly warn them against transgression or neglect thereof. He must frankly inform them of the lawfulness or unlawfulness of their cause of action, and must be especially careful not to undertake a cause clearly unjust, or to let himself be used as an instrument of chicanery, malice, or other unlawful action; l. 6, §§ 3, 4, C. 2, 6; l. 13, § 9; l. 14, § 1, C. 3, 1. In pleading, he must abstain from invectives against the judge, the opposite party or his advocate; l. 6, § 1, C. 2, 6. Should it become necessary or advantageous to mention unpleasant truths, this must be done with the utmost forbearance and in the most moderate language; 5 Glück, Pand. 111. Conscientious honesty forbade his betraying secrets confided to him by his client or making any improper use of them; he should observe inviolable secrecy in respect to them; ibid.; he could not, therefore, be compelled to testify in regard to such secrets; l. ult. D. 22, 5.

If he violated the above duties, he was liable, in addition to compensation for the damage thereby caused, to fine, or imprisonment, or suspension, or entire removal from practice, or to still severer punishment, particularly where he had been guilty of a prævaricatio, or betrayal of his trust for the benefit of the opposite party; 5 Glück, Pand. 111.

Compensation.—By the lex Cincia, A. U. C. 549, advocates were prohibited from receiving any reward for their services. In course of time this became obsolete. Claudius allowed it, and fixed ten thousand sesterces as the maximum fee. Trajan prohibited this fee, called honorarium, from being paid before the termination of the action. This, too, was disregarded, and prepayment had become lawful in the time of Justinian; 5 Glück, Pand. 117. The fee was regulated by law, unless the advocate had made a special agreement with his client, when the agreement fixed the amount. But a pactum de quota litis, i. e., an agreement to pay a contingent fee, was prohibited, under penalty of the advocate's forfeiting his privilege of practising; l. 5, C.

2, 6. A palmarium, or conditional fee in addition to the lawful charge and depending upon his gaining the cause, was also prohibited; 5 Glück, Pand. 120 et seq. But an agreement to pay a palmarium might be enforced when it was not entered into till after the conclusion of the suit; l. 1, § 12, D. 50, 13. The compensation of the advocate might also be in the way of an annual salary; 5 Glück, Pand. 122.

Remedy.—The advocate had the right to retain papers and instruments of his client until payment of his fee; l. 26, Dig. 3, 2. Should this fail, he could apply for redress to the court where the cause was tried by petition, a formal action being unnecessary; 5 Glück, Pand. 122.

ADVOCATI (Lat.) In Roman Law. Patrons; pleaders; speakers.

Anciently, any one who lent his aid to a friend, and who was supposed to be able in any way to influence a judge, was called advocatus.

Causidicus denoted a speaker or pleader merely; advocatus resembled more nearly a counsellor; or, still more exactly, causidicus might be rendered barrister, and advocatus attorney; though the duties of an advocatus were much more extended than those of a modern attorney; Du Cange; Calvinus, Lex.

A witness.

ADVOCATI ECCLESIÆ. Advocates of the church.

These were of two sorts: those retained as pleaders to argue the cases of the church and attend to its law-matters; and advocates, or patrons of the advowson; Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.

ADVOCATI FISCI. In Civil Law. Those chosen by the emperor to argue his cause whenever a question arose affecting his revenues; Calvinus, Lex.; 3 Bla. Com. 27.

ADVOCATIA. In Civil Law. The functions, duty, or privilege of an advocate; Du Cange, Advocatia.

ADVOCATION. In Scotch Law. The removal of a cause from an inferior to a superior court by virtue of a writ or warrant issuing from the superior court. See BILL OF ADVOCATION; LETTER OF ADVOCATION.

ADVOCATUS. A pleader; a narrator; Bracton, 412 a, 372 b.

ADVOWSON. A right of presentation to a church or benefice.

He who possesses this right is called the patron or advocate. When there is no patron, or he neglects to exercise his right within six months, it is called a lapse, and a title is given to the ordinary to collate to a church: when a presentation is made by one who has no right, it is called a usurpation.

Advowsons are of different kinds: as advowson appendant, when it depends upon a manor, etc.; advowson in gross, when it belongs to a person and not to a manor; advowson presentative, where the patron presents to the bishop; advowson donative, where the king or patron puts the clerk into possession without presentation; advowson collative, where the bishop himself is a patron; advowson of the moiety of the church, where there are two several patrons and two incumbents in the same church; a moiety of advowson, where two must join the presentation of one incumbent; advowson of religious houses, that which is vested in the person who founded such a house; 2 Bla. Com. 21; Mirehouse, Advowsons; Comyns, Dig. Advowson, Quare Impedit; Bacon, Abr. Simony; Burns, Eccl. Law.

ADVOWTRY. In English Law. The crime committed by a woman who, having committed adultery, continued to live with the adulterer; Cowel; Termes de la Ley.

ÆDES (Lat.). In Civil Law. A dwelling; a house; a temple.

In the country every thing upon the surface of the soil passed under the term ædes; Du Cange; Calvinus, Lex.

ÆDILE (Lat.). In Roman Law. An officer who attended to the repairs of the temples and other public buildings; the repairs and cleanliness of the streets; the care of the weights and measures; the providing for funerals and games; and regulating the prices of provisions; Ainsworth, Lex.; Smith, Lex.; Du Cange.

ÆDILITIUM EDICTUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. That provision by which the buyer of a diseased or imperfect slave, horse, or other animal was relieved at the expense of the vendor who had sold him as sound knowing him to be imperfect; Calvinus, Lex.

AEL (Norman). A grandfather. Spelled also aieul, ayle; Kelham.

ÆS ALIENUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A debt.

Literally translated, the money of another; the civil law considering borrowed money as the property of another, as distinguished from æs suum, one's own.

ÆSTIMATIO CAPITIS (Lat. the value of a head). The price to be paid for taking the life of a human being.

King Athelstan declared, in an assembly held at Exeter, that mulcts were to be paid per æstimationem capitis. For a king's head (or life), 30,000 thuringæ; for an archbishop's or prince's, 15,000; for a priest's or thane's, 2000; Leg. Hen. I.

See AGE. 4 Bla. Com. 22.

AFFECTION. The making over, pawning, or mortgaging a thing to assure the payment of a sum of money, or the discharge of some other duty or service; Techn. Dict.

AFFECTUS (Lat.). Movement of the mind; disposition; intention.

One of the causes for a challenge of a juror is propter affectum, on account of a suspicion of bias or favor; 3 Bla. Com. 363; Coke, Litt. 156.

AFFEER. In English Law. To fix in amount; to liquidate.

To affeer an amercement.—To establish the amount which one amerced in a court-leet should pay.

To affeer an account.—To confirm it on oath in the exchequer; Cowel; Blount; Spelman.

AFFEERORS. In Old English Law. Those appointed by a court-leet to mulct those punishable, not by a fixed fine, but by an arbitrary sum called amercement. Termes de la Ley; 4 Bla. Com. 373.

AFFIANCE (Lat. affidare, ad, fidem, dare, to pledge to).

A plighting of troth between man and woman; Littleton, § 39.

An agreement by which a man and woman promise each other that they will marry together; Pothier, Traité du Mar. n. 24.

Marriage; Coke, Litt. 34 a. See Dig. 23, 1. 1; Code, 5. 1. 4.

AFFIANT. A deponent.

AFFIDARE (Lat. ad fidem dare). To pledge one's faith or do fealty by making oath; Cowel.

Used of the mutual relation arising between landlord and tenant; 1 Washb. R. P. 19; 1 Bla. Com. 367; Termes de la Ley, Fealty. Affidavit is of kindred meaning.

AFFIDATUS. One who is not a vassal, but who for the sake of protection has connected himself with one more powerful; Spelman, Gloss.; 2 Bla. Com. 46.

AFFIDAVIT (Lat.). In Practice. A statement or declaration reduced to writing, and sworn or affirmed to before some officer who has authority to administer an oath or affirmation.

It differs from a deposition in this, that in the latter the opposite party has an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, whereas an affidavit is always taken ex parte; Gresley, Eq. Ev. 413; 3 Blatch. 456.

An affidavit includes the oath, and may show what facts the affiant swore to, and thus be available as an oath, although unavailable as an affidavit; 28 Wis. 460.

By general practice, affidavits are allowable to present evidence upon the hearing of a motion, although the motion may involve the very merits of the action; but they are not allowable to present evidence on the trial of an issue raised by the pleadings. Here the witnesses must be produced before the adverse party. They are generally required on all motions to open defaults or to grant delay in the proceedings and other applications by the defendant addressed to the favor of the court.

Formal parts.—An affidavit must intelligibly refer to the cause in which it is made. The strict rule of the common law is that it must contain the exact title of the cause. This, however, is not absolutely essential; 80 Ill. 307. The place where the affidavit is taken must be stated, to show that it was taken within the officer's jurisdiction; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 601. The deponent must sign the affidavit at the end; 11 Paige, Ch. 173. The jurat must be signed by the officer with the addition of his official title. In the case of some officers the statutes conferring authority to take affidavits require also his seal to be affixed.

In general, an affidavit must describe the deponent sufficiently to show that he is entitled to offer it; for example, that he is a party, or agent or attorney of a party, to the proceeding; 7 Hill, 177; 4 Denio, 71, 258; and this matter must be stated, not by way of recital or as mere description, but as an allegation in the affidavit; 3 N. Y. 41; 8 id. 158.

AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENCE. In Practice. A statement made in proper form that the defendant has a good ground of defence to the plaintiff's action upon the merits.

The statements required in such an affidavit vary considerably in the different states where they are required. In some, it must state a ground of defence; 1 Ashm. 4; Troub. & H. Pr. § 399; in others, a simple statement of belief that it exists is sufficient. Called also an affidavit of merits, as in Massachusetts. See as to its salutary effect, 20 Penn. 387; 1 Grant, 190.

It must be made by the defendant, or some person in his behalf who possesses a knowledge of the facts; 1 Ashm. 4.

The effect of a failure to make such affidavit is, in a case requiring one, to default the defendant; 8 Watts, 367. It was first established in Philadelphia by agreement of members of the bar; 3 Binn. 423; and afterwards by act of assembly. A law permitting judgment in default of such an affidavit is constitutional; 99 Mass. 104; 86 Penn. 225.

AFFIDAVIT TO HOLD TO BAIL. In Practice. An affidavit which is required in many cases before a person can be arrested.

Such an affidavit must contain a statement, clearly and certainly expressed, by some one acquainted with the fact, of an indebtedness from the defendant to the plaintiff, and must show a distinct cause of action; Selwyn, Pr. 104; 1 Chitty, Plead. 165. See BAIL.

AFFILARE. To put on record; to file; 8 Coke, 319; 2 M. & S. 202.

AFFILIATION. In French Law. A species of adoption which exists by custom in some parts of France.

The person affiliated succeeded equally with other heirs to the property acquired by the deceased to whom he had been affiliated, but not to that which he inherited.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A condition which prevented the superior from removing the person affiliated to another convent; Guyot, Répert.

AFFINES (Lat. finis). In Civil Law. Connections by marriage, whether of the persons or their relatives; Calvinus, Lex.

From this word we have affinity, denoting relationship by marriage; 1 Bla. Com. 434.

The singular, affinis, is used in a variety of related significations—a boundary; Du Cange; a partaker or sharer, affinis culpæ (an aider or one who has knowledge of a crime); Calvinus, Lex.

AFFINITAS. In Civil Law. Affinity.

AFFINITAS AFFINITATIS. That connection between parties arising from marriage which is neither consanguinity nor affinity.

This term intends the connection between the kinsmen of the two persons married, as, for example, the husband's brother and the wife's sister; Erskine, Inst. 1. 6. 8.

AFFINITY. The connection existing, in consequence of marriage, between each of the married persons and the kindred of the other.

It is distinguished from consanguinity, which denotes relationship by blood. Affinity is the tie which exists between one of the spouses with the kindred of the other: thus, the relations of my wife, her brothers, her sisters, her uncles, are allied to me by affinity, and my brothers, sisters, etc., are allied in the same way to my wife. But my brother and the sister of my wife are not allied by the ties of affinity.

A person cannot, by legal succession, receive an inheritance from a relation by affinity; neither does it extend to the nearest relations of husband and wife, so as to create a mutual relation between them. The degrees of affinity are computed in the same way as those of consanguinity. See 1 Bla. Com. 435; Pothier, Traité du Mar. pt. 3, c. 3, art. 2; Inst. 1, 10, 6; Dig. 38, 10, 4. 3; 1 Phill. Eccl. 210; 5 Mart. La. 296.

AFFIRM (Lat. affirmare, to make firm; to establish).

To ratify or confirm a former law or judgment; Cowel.

Especially used of confirmations of the judgments of an inferior by an appellate tribunal.

To ratify or confirm a voidable act of the party.

To make a solemn religious asseveration in the nature of an oath. See AFFIRMATION.

AFFIRMANCE. The confirmation of a voidable act by the party acting, who is to be bound thereby.

The term is in accuracy to be distinguished from ratification, which is a recognition of the validity or binding force as against the party ratifying, of some act performed by another person; and from confirmation, which would seem to apply more properly to cases where a doubtful authority has been exercised by another in behalf of the person ratifying; but these distinctions are not generally observed with much care; 1 Parsons, Contr. 243.

Express affirmance takes place where the party declares his determination of fulfilling the contract; Dudl. Ga. 203.

A mere acknowledgment that the debt existed, or that the contract was made, is not an affirmance; 10 N. H. 561; 2 Esp. 628; 1 Bail. 28; 9 Conn. 330; 2 Hawks, 535; 1 Pick. 203; Dudl. Ga. 203; but it must be a direct and express confirmation, and substantially (though it need not be in form) a promise to pay the debt or fulfil the contract; 3 Wend. 479; 4 Day, 57; 12 Conn. 550; 8 N. H. 374; 2 Hill, 120; 19 Wend. 301; 1 Pars. Contr. 243; Bingham, Inf., 1st Am. ed. 69.

Implied affirmance arises from the acts of the party without any express declaration; 15 Mass. 220. See 10 N. H. 194; 11 S. & R. 305; 1 Pars. Contr. 243; 1 Bla. Com. 466, n. 10.

AFFIRMANCE-DAY-GENERAL. In the English Court of Exchequer, is a day appointed by the judges of the common pleas, and barons of the exchequer, to be held a few days after the beginning of every term for the general affirmance or reversal of judgments; 2 Tidd, Pract. 1091.

AFFIRMANT. In Practice. One who makes affirmation instead of making oath that the evidence which he is about to give shall be the truth, as if he had been sworn.

He is liable to all the pains and penalty of perjury, if he shall be guilty of wilfully and maliciously violating his affirmation. See PERJURY.

AFFIRMATION. In Practice. A solemn religious asseveration in the nature of an oath; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 371.

Quakers, as a class, and other persons who have conscientious scruples against taking an oath, are allowed to make affirmation in any mode which they may declare to be binding upon their consciences, in confirmation of the truth of testimony which they are about to give; 1 Atk. 21, 46; Cowp. 340, 389; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 64; 1 Ry. & M. 77; 6 Mass. 262; 16 Pick. 153; Buller, Nisi P. 292; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 371.

AFFIRMATIVE. That which establishes; that which asserts a thing to be true.

It is a general rule of evidence that the affirmative of the issue must be proved; Buller, Nisi P. 298; Peake, Ev. 2. But when the law requires a person to do an act, and the neglect of it will render him guilty and punishable, the negative must be proved, because every man is presumed to do his duty, and in that case they who affirm he did not must prove it; Buller, Nisi P. 298; 1 Rolle, 83; Comb. 57; 3 Bos. & P. 307.

AFFIRMATIVE PREGNANT. In Pleading. An affirmative allegation implying some negative in favor of the adverse party.

For example, if to an action of assumpsit, which is barred by the act of limitations in six years, the defendant pleads that he did not undertake, etc., within ten years, a replication that he did undertake, etc., within ten years would be an affirmative pregnant; since it would impliedly admit that the defendant had not promised within six years. Such a plea should be demurred to; Gould, Pl. c. 6, §§ 29, 37; Stephen, Pl. 381; Lawes, Civ. Pl. 113; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (n. 6).

AFFORCE THE ASSIZE. To compel unanimity among the jurors who disagree.

It was done either by confining them without meat and drink, or, more anciently, by adding other jurors to the panel, to a limited extent, securing the concurrence of twelve in a verdict. See Bracton, 185 b, 292 a; Fleta, book 4, c. 9, § 2.

The practice is now discontinued.

AFFRANCHISE. To make free.

AFFRAY. In Criminal Law. The fighting of two or more persons in some public place to the terror of the people.

It differs from a riot in not being premeditated; for if any persons meet together upon any lawful or innocent occasion, and happen on a sudden to engage in fighting, they are not guilty of a riot, but an affray only; and in that case none are guilty except those actually engaged in it; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. book 1, c. 65, § 3; 4 Bla. Com. 146; 1 Russell, Cr. 271.

Fighting in a private place is only an assault; 1 Crompt. M. & R. 757; 1 Cox, Cr. Cas. 177.

AFFRECTAMENTUM (Fr. fret). Affreightment.

The word fret means tons, according to Cowel. Affreightamentum was sometimes used; Du Cange.

AFFREIGHTMENT. The contract by which a vessel, or the use of it, is let out to hire. See FREIGHT; GENERAL SHIP.

AFORESAID. Before mentioned; already spoken of or described.

Whenever in any instrument a person has once been described, all future references may be made by giving his name merely and adding the term "aforesaid" for the purpose of identification. The same rule holds good also as to the mention of places or specific things described, and generally as to any description once given which it is desirable to refer to.

Where a place is once particularly described in the body of the indictment, it is sufficient afterwards to name such place, and to refer to the venue by adding the word "aforesaid," without repeating the whole description of the venue; 1 Gabbett, Crim. Law, 212; 5 Term, 616.

AFORETHOUGHT. In Criminal Law. Premeditated; prepense.

The length of time during which the accused has entertained the thought of committing the offence is not very material, provided he has in fact entertained such thought; he is thereby rendered criminal in a greater degree than if he had committed the offence without premeditation. See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT; PREMEDITATION; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law, 785; 4 Bla. Com. 199; Fost. Cr. Cas. 132, 291, 292; Cro. Car. 131; Palm. 545; W. Jones, 198; 4 Dall. 146.

AFTERMATH. The second crop of grass.

A right to have the last crop of grass or pasturage; 1 Chitty, Pract. 181.

AGAINST THE FORM OF THE STATUTE. Technical words which must be used in framing an indictment for a breach of the statute prohibiting the act complained of.

The Latin phrase is contra formam statuti.

AGAINST THE WILL. Technical words which must be used in framing an indictment for robbery from the person; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law, 244.

In the statute of 13 Edw. I. (Westm. 2d) c. 34, the offence of rape is described to be ravishing a woman "where she did not consent," and not ravishing against her will. Per Tindal, C. J., and Parke, B., in the addenda to 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 1. And in England this statute definition was adopted by all the judges; Bell, Cr. Cas. 63, 71.

AGARD. Award. Burrill, Dic.

AGE. That period of life at which the law allows persons to do acts or discharge functions which for want of years they were prohibited from doing or undertaking before.

The full age of twenty-one years is held to be completed on the day preceding the twenty-first anniversary of birth; 1 Bla. Com. 464; 1 Sid. 162; 1 Kebl. 589; 1 Salk. 44; 1 Ld. Raym. 84; 3 Harr. Del. 557; 4 Dana, 597.

Males, before fourteen, are said not to be of discretion; at that age they may consent to marriage and choose a guardian. Twenty-one years is full age for all private purposes, and they may then exercise their rights as citizens by voting for public officers, and are eligible to all offices, unless otherwise provided for by law.

Females, at twelve, arrive at years of discretion, and may consent to marriage; at fourteen, they may choose a guardian; and twenty-one, as in males, is full age, when they may exercise all the rights which belong to their sex. The age of puberty for both sexes is fourteen.

In the United States, at twenty-five, a man may be elected a representative in congress; at thirty, a senator; and at thirty-five, he may be chosen president. He is liable to serve in the militia from eighteen to forty-five inclusive, unless exempted for some particular reason. In England no one can be chosen member of parliament till he has attained twenty-one years; nor be ordained a priest under the age of twenty-four; nor made a bishop till he has completed his thirtieth year. The age of serving in the militia is from sixteen to forty-five years. The sovereignty of the realm is assumed at eighteen; though the law, according to Blackstone, recognizes no minority in the heir to the throne.

In French Law. A person must have attained the age of forty to be a member of the legislative body; twenty-five to be a judge of a tribunal de première instance; twenty-seven, to be its president, or to be judge or clerk of a cour royale; thirty, to be its president or procureur-général; twenty-five, to be a justice of the peace; thirty, to be judge of a tribunal of commerce, and thirty-five, to be its president; twenty-five, to be a notary public; twenty-one, to be a testamentary witness; thirty, to be a juror. At sixteen, a minor may devise one-half of his property as if he were a major. A male cannot contract marriage till after the eighteenth year, nor a female before full fifteen years. At twenty-one, both males and females are capable to perform all the acts of civil life; Touillier, Droit, Civ. liv. 1, Intr. n. 188.

In Roman Law. Infancy (infantia) extended to the age of seven; the period of childhood (pueritia), which extended from seven to fourteen, was divided into two periods; the first, extending from seven to ten and a half, was called the period nearest childhood (ætas infantiæ proxima); the other, from ten and a half to fourteen, the period nearest puberty (ætas pubertati proxima); puberty (pubertas) extended from fourteen to eighteen: full puberty extended from eighteen to twenty-five: at twenty-five, the person was major. See Taylor, Civ. Law, 254; Leçon El. du Droit Civ. 22.

AGE-PRAYER. A statement made in a real action to which an infant is a party, of the fact of infancy and a request that the proceedings may be stayed until the infant becomes of age.

It is now abolished; stat. 11 Geo. IV.; 1 Will. IV. c. 37, § 10; 1 Lilly, Reg. 54; 3 Bla. Com. 300.

AGENCY. A relation between two or more persons, by which one party, usually called the agent or attorney, is authorized to do certain acts for, or in relation to the rights or property of, the other, who is denominated the principal, constituent, or employer; Prof. Joel Parker, MS. Lect. 1851.

A contract by which one person, with greater or less discretionary power, undertakes to represent another in certain business relations; Whart. Agency, 1.

The right on the part of the agent to act, is termed his authority or power. In some instances the authority or power must be exercised in the name of the principal, and the act done is for his benefit alone. In others, it may be executed in the name of the agent, and, if the power is coupled with an interest on the part of the agent, it may be executed for his own benefit; Prof. Joel Parker, Harvard Law School Lect. 1851.

The creation of the agency, when express, may be either by deed, in writing not by deed, or by a verbal delegation of authority; 2 Kent, 612; 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 104; 9 Ves. 250; 11 Mass. 27, 97, 288; 1 Binn. 450; 4 Johns. Ch. 667.

When the agency is not express, it may be inferred from the relation of the parties and the nature of the employment, without proof of any express appointment; 2 Kent, 613; 15 East, 400; 1 Wash. Va. 19; 5 Day, 556.

In most of the ordinary transactions of business, the agency is either conferred verbally, or is implied from circumstances. But where the act is required to be done in the name of the principal by deed, the authority to the agent must also be by deed, unless the principal be present and verbally or impliedly authorize the agent to fix his name to the deed; 1 Liverm. Ag. 35; Paley, Ag. 157; Story, Ag. §§ 49, 51; 5 Binn. 613; 1 Wend. 424; 9 id. 54, 68; 12 id. 525; 14 S. & R. 331.

The authority may be general, when it extends to all acts connected with a particular business or employment; or special, when it is confined to a single act; Story, Ag. § 17; 21 Wend. 279; 9 N. H. 263; 3 Blackf. 436. If the powers are special, they form the limits of the authority; if general, they will be more liberally construed, according to the necessities of the occasion and the course of the transaction.

The agency must be antecedently given, or subsequently adopted; and in the latter case there must be an act of recognition, or an acquiescence in the act of the agent from which a recognition may be fairly implied; 2 Kent, 614. If, with full knowledge of what the agent has done, the principal ratify the act, the ratification will be equivalent to an original authority,—according to the maxim, omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato æquiparatur; Paley, Ag. 172; 4 Ex. 798. The ratification relates back to the original making of the contract; 31 L. J. Ex. 163; except as to intermediate vested rights; 4 Ct. Cl. 511; 49 Ill. 59; 43 Mo. 113; 12 Minn. 255. It must be ratified in its entirety; 31 N. Y. 611; 1 Oreg. 115; 45 Ga. 153; 27 Mo. 163; 31 Iowa, 547; and subject to the charges imposed by the agent; 9 H. L. C. 391. An intention to ratify may be presumed from the silence of the principal who has received a letter from the agent informing him of what has been done on his account; 12 Wall. 358; 2 Biss. 255; 105 Mass. 551; 49 Penn. 457; 69 id. 426; 21 Mich. 374; 37 Ill. 442; 26 Iowa, 88; 27 Tex. 120; or from any acts inconsistent with a contrary presumption; 26 Me. 84; 69 Penn. 426; 59 Ill. 23; 12 Kan. 135; or from a suit by the principal; 56 Me. 564; 21 Ark. 539; 28 Ill. 135; 9 B. & C. 59; 12 Wall. 681; 12 Johns. 300; 3 Cow. N. Y. 281; 4 Wash. C. C. 549; 14 S. & R. 30. Ratification can only take place where the agent professed to act for the person ratifying; 5 B. & C. 909; Leake, Contracts, 470. Thus a forged signature to a note cannot be ratified; L. R. 6 Ex. 89; contra, 46 Me. 176; 82 Ill. 387; 33 Conn. 95; 42 Penn. 143; Whart. Ag. § 71.

The business of the agency may concern either the property of the principal, of a third person, of the principal and a third person, or of the principal and the agent, but must not relate solely to the business of the agent. A contract in relation to an illegal or immoral transaction cannot be the foundation of a legal agency; 1 Liverm. Ag. 6, 14.

The termination of the agency may be by a countermand of authority on the part of the principal, at the mere will of the principal; and this countermand may, in general, be effected at any time before the contract is completed; 3 Chitty, Com. & Manuf. 223; Story, Ag. §§ 463, 465; 53 Penn. 256; 46 id. 426; Whart. Ag. § 94; even though in terms irrevocable, provided there is no valid consideration, and the agent has not an interest in the execution of the authority entrusted to him; Story, Ag. §§ 476, 477. But when the authority or power is coupled with an interest, or when it is given for a valuable consideration, or when it is a part of a security, then, unless there is an express stipulation that it shall be revocable, it cannot be revoked; Story, Ag. §§ 476, 477; 2 Kent, 643, 644; 8 Wheat. 174; 10 Paige, 205; 34 N. Y. 24; 53 Penn. 212; 3 Const. 62; 2 Mas C. C. 244, 342. When the authority has been partially executed by the agent, if it admit of severance, or of being revoked as to the part which is unexecuted, it may be revoked as to that part; but if it be not thus severable, and the agent by its execution in part will sustain damage, it cannot be revoked as to the unexecuted part unless the agent be fully indemnified; Story, Ag. § 466. This revocation may be by a formal declaration publicly made known, by an informal writing, or by parol; or it may be implied from circumstances, as, if another person be appointed to do the same act; Story, Ag. § 474; 5 Binn. 305; 6 Pick. 198. See 11 Allen, 208. It takes effect from the time it is made known, and not before, both as regards the agent and third persons; Story, Ag. § 470; 2 Kent, 644; 11 N. H. 397; 7 Ct. of Cl. 535; 44 Ill. 114; 35 Vt. 179; 95 U. S. 48; 38 Conn. 197.

The determination may be by the renunciation of the agent either before or after a part of the authority is executed; Story, Ag. § 478; it should be observed, however, that if the renunciation be made after the authority has been partly executed, the agent by renouncing it becomes liable for the damages which may thereby be sustained by his principal; Story, Ag. § 478; Jones, Bailm. 101; 4 Johns. 84; or, by operation of law, in various ways. And the agency may terminate by the expiration of the period during which it was to exist and to have effect; as, if an agency be created to endure a year, or until the happening of a contingency, it becomes extinct at the end of the year, or on the happening of the contingency; Story, Ag. § 480.

The determination may result from the marriage of the principal, if a feme sole; the insanity of the principal; 10 N. H. 156; 8 Wheat. 174; bankruptcy; Story, Ag. § 482; 16 East, 382; Baldw. C. C. 38; or death; Story, Bailm. § 209; 2 Kent, 645 (in England and most of the United States this revocation is instantaneous, even as to third parties without notice; L. R. 4 C. P. 744; 84 Ill. 286; 10 M. & W. 1; 5 Pet. 319; 12 N. H. 145; 25 Ind. 182; 2 Humph. 350; 31 Ala. 274; 29 Tex. 204; 28 Cal. 645; 77 Iowa, 73; 9 Wend. 452. But notice is necessary in Pennsylvania, Missouri, and, in some cases, in Ohio; 4 W. & S. 282; 26 Mo. 313; 8 Ohio St. 520; and under the civil law; Whart. Ag. § 101); but not when the authority is coupled with an interest; 53 Penn. 266; 4 Campb. 325; 10 Paige, 201; see 4 Pet. 332; or from the insanity; Story, Ag. § 487; bankruptcy; 5 B. & Ald. 27, 31; or death of the agent; 2 Kent, 643; though not necessarily by marriage or bankruptcy; Story, Ag. §§ 485, 486; 12 Mod. 383; 3 Burr. 1469, 1471; from the extinction of the subject-matter of the agency, or of the principal's power over it, or by the complete execution of the trust; Story, Ag. § 499.

As to revocation by lunacy of principal, see late English case in 19 Am. L. Reg. 106, with Judge Bennett's note. As to revocation by death of principal, see id. 401.

AGENS (Lat. agere, to do; to conduct). A conductor or manager of affairs.

Distinguished from factor, a workman.

A plaintiff. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 15, § 8.

AGENT (Lat. agens; from agere, to do). One who undertakes to transact some business, or to manage some affair, for another, by the authority and on account of the latter, and to render an account of it; 1 Livermore, Ag. 67; 2 Bouvier, Inst. 3. See Co. Litt. 207; 1 B. & P. 316.

The term is one of a very wide application, and includes a great many classes of persons to which distinctive appellations are given; as, factors, brokers, attorneys, cashiers of banks, auctioneers, clerks, supercargoes, consignees, ships' husbands, masters of ships, and the like. The terms agent and attorney are often used synonymously. Thus, a letter or power of attorney is constantly spoken of as the formal instrument by which an agency is created; Paley, Ag., Dunl. ed. 1, n.

Who may be.

Many persons disqualified from acting for themselves, such as infants (117 Mass. 479), persons attainted or outlaws, aliens (10 La. Ann. 482; see 18 Wall. 106; 42 N. Y. 54; 62 Ill. 61), slaves, and others, may yet act as agents in the execution of a naked authority; Whart. Ag. § 14; 45 Ala. 656; 1 Hill (s. c.) 270; Coke, Litt. 252 a; Story, Ag. § 4. A feme covert may be the agent of her husband, and as such, with his consent, bind him by her contract or other act; 47 Ala. 624; 16 Vt. 633; 3 Head. (Tenn.) 471. See 70 Penn. 181; and she may be the agent of another in a contract with her husband; Bacon, Abr. Authority, B; 6 N. H. 124; 3 Whart. 369; 16 Vt. 653. But although she is in general competent to act as the agent of a third person; 7 Bingh. 565; 1 Esp. 142; 2 id. 511; 4 Wend. 465; it is not clear that she can do so when her husband expressly dissents, particularly when he may be rendered liable for her acts; Story, Ag. § 7. Persons non compos mentis cannot be agents for others; Whart. Ag. § 15 (but see Ewell's Evans, Agency, *10; 4 Exch. 7; s. c. Ewell, Lead. Cas. on Disabilities, 614; as to cases when one deals with a lunatic, not knowing of his lunacy. See, also, 55 Ill. 62; 34 Ind. 181; 14 Barb. 488; 23 Iowa, 433; 48 N. H. 133; 6 Gray, 279; 23 Ark. 417; 24 Ind. 238); nor can a person act as agent in a transaction where he has an adverse interest or employment; 2 Ves. Ch. 317; 11 Clark & F. 714; 3 Beav. 783; 2 Campb. 203; 2 Chitty, Bail, 205; 30 Me. 431; 24 Ala. N. S. 358; 3 Denio, 575; 19 Barb. 595; 20 id. 470; 6

La. 407; 7 Watts, 472; and whenever the agent holds a fiduciary relation, he cannot contract with the same general binding force with his principal as when such a relation does not exist; Story, Ag. § 9; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 308, 328; 4 M. & C. 134; 14 Ves. 290; 3 Sumn. 476; 2 Johns. Ch. 251; 11 Paige, 538; 5 Me. 420; 6 Pick. 198; 4 Conn. 717; 10 Pet. 269.

Extent of authority.

The authority of the agent, unless the contrary clearly appears, is presumed to include all the necessary and usual means of executing it with effect; Story, Ag. §§ 58, 85, 86; 5 Bingh. 442; 2 H. Bla. 618; 10 Wend. 218; 6 S. & R. 146; 11 Ill. 177; 9 Metc. 91; 22 Pick. 85; 15 Miss. 365; 9 Leigh, Va. 387; 11 N. H. 424; 6 Ired. 252; 10 Ala. N. S. 886; 21 id. 488; 1 Ga. 418; 1 Sneed, 497; 8 Humphr. 509; 15 Vt. 155; 2 McLean, 543; 8 How. 441. Where, however, the whole authority is conferred by a written instrument, its nature and extent must be ascertained from the instrument itself, and cannot be enlarged by parol evidence; Story, Ag. §§ 76, 79; 1 Taunt. 347; 5 B. & Ald. 204; 7 Rich. 45; 1 Pet. 264; 3 Cranch, 415.

Generally, in private agencies, when an authority is given by the principal; 7 N. H. 253; 1 Dougl. Mich. 119; 11 Ala. N. S. 755; 1 B. & P. 229; 3 Term, 592; to two or more persons to do an act, and no several authority is given, all the agents must concur in doing it, in order to bind the principal, though one die or refuse; Story, Ag. § 42; 3 Pick. 232; 6 id. 198; 12 Mass. 185; 23 Wend. 324; 6 Johns. 39; 9 Watts & S. 56; 10 Vt. 532; 12 N. H. 226; 1 Gratt. 226; 53 N. Y. 114; 57 Ill. 180.

The words jointly and severally, and jointly or severally, have been construed as authorizing all to act jointly, or each one to act separately, but not as authorizing any portion of the number to do the act jointly; Paley, Ag., Lloyd ed. 177, note. But where the authority is so worded that it is apparent the principal intended to give power to either of them, an execution by a part will be valid; Coke, Litt. 49 b; Dyer, 62; 5 B. & Ald. 628. And generally, in commercial transactions, each one of several agents possesses the whole power. For example, on a consignment of goods for sale to two factors (whether they are partners or not), each of them is understood to possess the whole power over the goods for the purposes of the consignment; Story, Ag. § 44; 3 Wils. 94, 114; 20 Pick. 59; 24 id. 13; see 53 N. Y. 114. In public agencies an authority executed by a majority will be sufficient; 1 Coke, Litt. 181 b; Comyns, Dig. Attorney, c. 15; Bacon, Abr. Authority, C; 1 Term, 592; 10 Wis. 271; 11 Ala. 755.

A mere agent cannot, generally, appoint a sub-agent, so as to render the latter directly responsible to the principal; 9 Coke, 75; 2 M. & S. 298, 301; 1 Younge & J. 387; 4 Mass. 597; 12 id. 241; 1 Hill, 501; 13 B. Monr. 400; 12 N. H. 226; 3 Story, 411; 72 Penn. 491; 26 Wend. 485; 11 How. 209; 28 Tex. 163; 34 Miss. 63; but may when such is the usage of trade, or is understood by the parties to be the mode in which the particular business might be done; 9 Ves. 234; 1 M. & S. 484; 2 id. 301; 6 S. & R. 386; 1 Ala. N. S. 249; 3 Johns. Ch. 167; 51 N. Y. 117.

Duties and liabilities.

The particular obligations of an agent vary according to the nature, terms, and end of his employment; Paley, Ag. 3; 2 Ld. Raym. 517. He is bound to execute the orders of his principal whenever, for a valuable consideration, he has undertaken to perform them; Story, Ag. § 189; 5 Cowen, 128; 20 Wend. 321. When his authority is limited by instructions, it is his duty to adhere faithfully to those instructions; Paley, Ag. 3, 4; 3 B. & P. 75; 5 id. 269; Story, Ag. § 192; 3 Johns. Cas. 36; 1 Sandf. 111; 26 Penn. 394; 14 Pet. 494; 25 N. J. Eq. 202; 48 Ga. 128; 3 W. Va. 133; 31 Ill. 200; but cases of extreme necessity and unforeseen emergency constitute exceptions to this rule; 1 Story, 45; 4 Binn. 361; 5 Day, 556; 26 Penn. 394; 4 Campb. 83; and where the agent is required to do an illegal or an immoral act; 6 C. Rob. Adm. 207; 7 Term, 157; 11 Wheat. 258; he may violate his instructions with impunity; Story, Ag. §§ 193, 194, 195. If he have no specific instructions, he must follow the accustomed course of the business; Story, Ag. § 199; 1 Gall. C. C. 360; 11 Mart. La. 636. When the transaction may, with equal advantage to the principal, be done in two or more different ways, the agent may in general do it in either, provided a particular mode has not been prescribed to him; 1 Livermore, Ag. 103. He is to exercise the skill employed by persons of common capacity similarly engaged, and the same degree of diligence that persons of ordinary prudence are accustomed to use about their own affairs; 6 Taunt. 495; 10 Bingh. 57; 1 Johns. 364; 20 Pick. 167; 6 Metc. 13; 24 Vt. 149; 57 Mo. 93; 66 Ill. 136; 21 Wall. 178; 38 Miss. 242. It is his duty to keep his principal informed of his doings, and to give him reasonable notice of whatever may be important to his interests; 5 M. & W. 527; 4 Watts & S. 305; 1 Story, 43, 56; 4 Rawle, 229; 6 Whart. 9; 13 Mart. La. 214, 365. He is also bound to keep regular accounts, and to render his accounts to his principal at all reasonable times, without concealment or overcharge; Story, Ag. § 208; 22 Tex. 703; 22 La. An. 599; 9 Iowa, 589; 52 Ill. 512; 4 Mo. Cr. 41.

As to their principals, the liabilities of agents arise from a violation of duties and obligations to them by exceeding his authority, by misconduct, or by any negligence, omission, or act by the natural result or just consequence of which the principal sustains a loss; Paley, Ag. 7, 71, 74; 1 B. & Ad. 415; 6 Hare, 366; 12 Pick. 328; 20 id. 167; 11 Ohio, 363; 13 Wend. 518; 6 Whart. 9. And joint agents who have a common interest are liable for the misconduct and omissions of each other, in violation of their duty, although the business has, in fact, been wholly transacted by one with the knowledge of the principal, and it has been privately agreed between themselves that neither shall be liable for the acts or losses of the other; Story, Ag. § 232; Paley, Ag. 52, 53; 7 Taunt. 403; 3 Wils. 73; 51 N. Y. 373.

The degree of neglect which will make the agent responsible for damages varies according to the nature of the business and the relation in which he stands to his principal. The rule of the common law is, that where a person holds himself out as of a certain business, trade, or profession, and undertakes, whether gratuitously or otherwise, to perform an act which relates to his particular employment, an omission of the skill which belongs to his situation or profession is imputable to him as a fraud upon his employer; Paley, Ag., Lloyd ed. 7, note 4. But where his employment does not necessarily imply skill in the business he has undertaken, and he is to have no compensation for what he does, he will not be liable to an action if he act bonâ fide and to the best of his ability; 1 Livermore, Ag. 336, 339, 340.

As to third parties, generally, when a person having full authority is known to act merely for another, his acts and contracts will be deemed those of the principal only, and the agent will incur no personal responsibility; Story, Ag. § 261; Paley, Ag. 368, 369; 2 Kent, 629, 630; 15 East, 62; 3 P. Will. 277; 6 Binn. 324; 13 Johns. 58, 77; 15 id. 1. But when an agent does an act without authority, or exceeds his authority, and the want of authority is unknown to the other party, the agent will be personally responsible to the person with whom he deals; Story, Ag. § 264; 2 Taunt. 385; 7 Wend. 315; 8 Mass. 178. If the agent having original authority contract in the name of his principal, and it happen that at the time of the contract, unknown to both parties, his authority was revoked by the death of the principal, the agent will not be personally responsible; Story, Ag. § 265 a; 10 M. & W. 1.

An agent will be liable on a contract made with him when he expressly, or by implication, incurs a personal responsibility; Story, Ag. §§ 156–159; 269; as, if he make an express warranty of title, and the like; or if, though known to act as agent, he give or accept a draft in his own name; 5 Taunt. 74; 1 Mass. 27, 54; 2 Duer, 260; 2 Conn. 453; 5 Whart. 288; and public as well as private agents may, by a personal engagement, render themselves personally liable; Paley, Ag. 381. If he makes a contract, signs a note, or accepts a draft as "agent," without disclosing his principal, he becomes personally liable unless the person with whom he is dealing has knowledge of the character and extent of the agency or the circumstances of the transaction are sufficient to inform him; 1 Am. L. C. 766, 767; 61 Penn. 69. In general, although a person contract as agent, yet if there be no other responsible principal to whom resort can be had, he will be personally liable: as, if a man sign a note as "guardian of A. B.," an infant, in that case neither the infant nor his property will be liable, and the agent alone will be responsible; Story, Ag. § 280; 2 Brod. & B. 460; 5 Mass. 299; 6 id. 58; 8 Cowen, 31. The case of an agent of government, acting in that capacity for the public, is an exception to this rule, even though the terms of the contract be such as might, in a case of a private nature, involve him in a personal obligation; it not being presumed that a public agent meant to bind himself individually; Paley, Ag. 376, 377; and see 5 B. & Ald. 34; 1 Brown, Ch. 101; 6 Dowl. & R. 122; 7 Bingh. 110. Masters of ships, though known to contract for the owners of the ships and not for themselves, are liable for the contracts they make for repairs, unless they negative their responsibility by the express terms of the contract; Paley, Ag. 388; 15 Johns. 298; 16 id. 89; 11 Mass. 34. As a general rule, the agent of a person resident in a foreign country is personally liable upon all contracts made by him for his employer, whether he describe himself in the contract as agent or not, this being the usage of trade, and it being presumed that the credit was given to him and not to his principal; Story, Ag. § 268; 15 East, 68; 9 B. & C. 78; L. R. 9 Q. B. 572; 35 Md. 396; 15 East, 62; 22 Wend. 244; 33 Me. 106; 5 W. & S. 9; 3 Hill, N. Y. 72; but this presumption may be rebutted by proof of a contrary agreement; 11 Ad. & E. 589, 594, 595; and does not apply to agents in a different state within the U. S.; 23 Ind. 63.

An agent is personally responsible where money has been paid to him for the use of his principal under such circumstances that the party paying it becomes entitled to recall it. In such cases, as long as the money has not been paid over by the agent, nor his situation altered, as by giving his principal fresh credit upon the faith of it, it may be recovered from the agent; Story, Ag. § 300; 3 M. & S. 344; 7 Johns. 179; 1 Wend. 173; and if, in receiving the money, the agent was a wrong-doer, he will not be exempted from liability by payment to his principal; Paley, Ag. 393, 394; 1 Campb. 396.

With regard to the liability of agents to third persons for torts, there is a distinction between acts of misfeasance or positive wrongs, and non-feasances or mere omissions of duty. In the former case, the agent is personally liable to third persons, although authorized by his principal; Story, Ag. § 311; Paley, Ag. 396; 1 Wils. 328; 1 B. & P. 410; 28 Me. 464; while in the latter he is, in general, solely liable to his principal; Story, Ag. § 308; Paley, Ag. 396, 397, 398; Story, Bailm. §§ 400, 404, 507.

Where the sub-agents are appointed, if the agent has either express or implied authority to appoint a sub-agent, he will not ordinarily be responsible for the acts or omissions of the substitute, 2 B. & P. 438; 2 M. & S. 301; 1 Wash. C. C. 479; 8 Cowen, 198 (but only for negligence in choosing the substitute; Whart. Negl. § 277); and this is especially true of public officers; 1 Ld. Raym. 646; Cowp. 754; 15 East, 384; 7 Cranch, 242; 9 Wheat. 720; 8 Wend. 403; 3 Hill, 531; 22 N. H. 252; 13 Ohio, 523; 1 Pick. 418; 4 Mass. 378; 8 Watts, 455; but the sub-agent will himself be directly responsible to the principal for his own negligence or misconduct; Story, Ag. § 201, 217 a; 2 Gall. C. C. 565; 8 Cow. N. Y. 198.

Rights and privileges.

As to his principal, an agent is ordinarily entitled to compensation for his services, commonly called a commission, which is regulated either by special agreement, by the usage of trade, or by the presumed intention of the parties; Story, Ag. §§ 324, 326; 8 Bingh. 65; 1 Caines, 349; 2 id. 357. In general, he must have faithfully performed the whole service or duty before he can claim any commissions; Story, Ag. §§ 329, 331; 1 C. & P. 384; 4 id. 289; 7 Bingh. 99; 16 Ohio, 412. He may forfeit his right to commissions by gross unskilfulness, by gross negligence, or gross misconduct, in the course of his agency; 3 Campb. 451; 7 Bingh. 569; 12 Pick. 328; as, by not keeping regular accounts; 8 Ves. 48; 11 id. 358; 17 Mass. 145; 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 108; by violating his instructions; by wilfully confounding his own property with that of his principal; 9 Beav. 284; 5 Bos. & P. 136; 11 Ohio, 363; by fraudulently misapplying the funds of his principal; 3 Chitty, Comm. & M. 222; by embarking the property in illegal transactions; or by doing anything which amounts to a betrayal of his trust; 12 Pick. 328, 332, 334; 20 Grat. 672; 21 Iowa, 326; L. R. 9 Q. B. 480; 98 Mass. 348; 25 Conn. 386; 52 Ill. 512; 9 Kans. 320; 29 Cal. 142; 71 Penn. 206.

The agent has a right to be reimbursed his advances, expenses, and disbursements reasonably and in good faith incurred and paid, without any default on his part, in the course of the agency; Story, Ag. §§ 335, 336; 5 B. & C. 141; 3 Binn. 295; 11 Johns. 439; 4 Halst. Ch. 657; and also to be paid interest on such advancements and disbursements whenever it may fairly be presumed to have been stipulated for, or to be due to him; 15 East, 228; 3 Campb. 467; 7 Wend. 315; 3 Caines, 226; 3 Binn. 295. But he cannot recover for advances and disbursements made in the prosecution of an illegal transaction, though sanctioned by or even undertaken at the request of his principal; Story, Ag. § 344; 3 B. & C. 639; and he may forfeit all remedy against his principal even for his advances and disbursements made in the course of legal transactions by his own gross negligence, fraud, or misconduct; 12 Wend. 362; 12 Pick. 328, 332; 20 id. 167; nor will he be entitled to be reimbursed his expenses after he has notice that his authority has been revoked; 2 Term, 113; 8 id. 204; 3 Brown, Ch. 314.

The agent may enforce the payment of a debt due him from his principal on account of the agency, either by an action at law or by a bill in equity, according to the nature of the case; and he may also have the benefit of his claim by way of set-off to an action of his principal against him, provided the claim is not for uncertain damages, and is in other respects of such a nature as to be the subject of a set-off; Story, Ag. §§ 350, 385; 4 Burr, 2133; 6 Cowen, 181; 11 Pick. 482. He has also a lien for all his necessary commissions, expenditures, advances, and services in and about the property intrusted to his agency, which right is in many respects analogous to the right of set-off; Story, Ag. § 378; 40 N. H. 88, 511; 67 Ill. 139; 8 Iowa, 211; 30 Miss. 578; but it is only a particular lien; 9 Cush. 215; 8 Engl. (Ark.) 437; 8 H. L. Cas. 838. Factors have a general lien upon the goods of their principal in their possession, and upon the price of such as have been lawfully sold by them, and the securities given therefor; Story, Ag. § 376; 2 Kent, 640; 26 Wend. 367; 10 Paige, Ch. 205. There are other cases in which a general lien exists in regard to particular classes of agents, either from usage, from a special agreement of the parties, or from the peculiar habit of dealing between them: such, for example, as insurance brokers, bankers, common carriers, attorneys-at-law, and solicitors in equity, packers, calico-printers, fullers, dyers, and wharfingers; Story, Ag. §§ 379–384. See LIEN.

As to third persons, in general, a mere agent who has no beneficial interest in a contract which he has made on behalf of his principal cannot support an action thereon; 1 Livermore, Ag. 215; 22 Penn. 522. An agent acquires a right to maintain an action upon a contract against third persons in the following cases: First, when the contract is in writing, and made expressly with the agent, and imports to be a contract personally with him; as, for example, when a promissory note is given to the agent, as such, for the benefit of the principal, and the promise is to pay the money to the agent eo nomine; in such case the agent is the legal plaintiff, and alone can bring an action; Story, Ag. §§ 393, 394, 396; 1 Livermore, Ag. 215–221; 3 Pick. 322; 16 id. 381; 5 Vt. 500; Dicey, Parties, 134; 5 Penn. 529; 27 Penn. 97; and it has been held that the right of the agent in such case to sue in his own name is not confined to an express contract; thus, it has been said that one holding, as mere agent, a bill of exchange, or promissory note, indorsed in blank, or a check or note payable to bearer, may yet sue on it in his own name; Paley, Ag., Dunl. ed. 361, note. Second, the agent may maintain an action against third persons on contracts made with them, whenever he is the only known and ostensible principal, and consequently, in contemplation of law, the real contracting party; Russ. Fact. & B. 241, 244; Paley, Ag. 361, note; Story, Ag. § 393; Dicey, Parties, 136–138; 5 Penn. 41; as, if an agent sell goods of his principal in his own name, as though he were the owner, he is entitled to sue the buyer in his own name; 12 Wend. 413; 5 M. & S. 833; and, on the other hand, if he so buy, he may enforce the contract by action. The renunciation of the agent's contract by the principal does not necessarily preclude the agent from maintaining an action, but he will still be entitled to sue the party with whom he has contracted for any damages which he may have sustained by reason of a breach of contract by the latter; Russ. Fact. & B. 243, 244; 2 B. & Ald. 962. Third, the right of the agent to sue in his own name exists when, by the usage of trade or the general course of business, he is authorized to act as owner, or as a principal contracting party, although his character as agent is known; Story, Ag. § 393. Fourth, where the agent has made a contract in the subject-matter of which he has a special interest or property, he may enforce his contract by action, whether he held himself out at the time to be acting in his own behalf or not; 1 Livermore, Ag. 215–219; Story, Ag. § 393; 27 Ala. N. s. 215; Dicey, Parties, 139; 22 Penn. 522: for example, an auctioneer who sells the goods of another may maintain an action for the price, though the sale be on the premises of the owner of the goods, because the auctioneer has a possession coupled with an interest; 2 Esp. 493; 1 H. Bla. 81, 84, 85. But this right of the agent to bring an action in his own name is subordinate to the rights of the principal, who may, unless in particular cases where the agent has a lien or some other vested right, bring a suit himself, and suspend or extinguish the right of the agent; 1 Livermore, Ag. 221; Story, Ag. § 403; 3 Hill, 72, 73; 6 S. & R. 27; 4 Campb. 194.

An agent may maintain an action of trespass or trover against third persons for injuries affecting the possession of his principal's property; and when he has been induced by the fraud of a third person to sell or buy goods for his principal, and he has sustained a personal loss, he may maintain an action against such third person for such wrongful act, deceit, or fraud; Story, Ag. §§ 414, 415; 9 B. & C. 208; 3 Campb. 320; 1 H. Bla. 81; 1 B. & Ald. 59. But his remedy for mere torts is confined to cases like the foregoing, where his "right of possession is injuriously invaded, or where he incurs a personal responsibility, or loss, or damage in consequence of the tort;" Story, Ag. § 416.

A sub-agent employed without the knowledge or consent of the principal has his remedy against his immediate employer only, with regard to whom he will have the same rights, obligations, and duties as if the agent were the sole principal. But where sub-agents are ordinarily or necessarily employed in the business of the agency, the sub-agent can maintain his claim for compensation both against the principal and the immediate employer, unless the agency be avowed and exclusive credit be given to the principal, in which case his remedy will be limited to the principal; Story, Ag. §§ 386, 387; 6 Taunt. 147; 4 Wend. 285; 16 La. An. 127; 6 S. & R. 386; 3 Johns. 167.

A sub-agent will be clothed with a lien against the principal for services performed and disbursements made by him on account of the sub-agency, whenever a privity exists between them; Story, Ag. § 388; 2 Campb. 218, 597; 2 East, 523; 6 Wend. 475. He will acquire a lien against the principal if the latter ratifies his acts, or seeks to avail himself of the proceeds of the sub-agency, though employed by the agent without the knowledge or consent of the principal; Story, Ag. § 389; 2 Campb. 218, 597, 598; 4 id. 348, 353. He may avail himself of his general lien against the principal by way of substitution to the rights of his immediate employer, to the extent of the lien of the latter; Story, Ag. § 389; 1 East, 335; 2 id. 523, 529; 7 id. 7; 6 Taunt. 147. And there are cases in which a sub-agent who has no knowledge or reason to believe that his immediate employer is acting as an agent for another, will have a lien on the property for his general balance; 2 Livermore, Ag. 87–92; Paley, Ag. 148, 149; Story, Ag. § 390; 4 Campb. 60, 349, 353.

AGENT AND PATIENT. A phrase indicating the state of a person who is required to do a thing, and is at the same time the person to whom it is done; as, when a man is indebted to another, and he appoints him his executor, the latter is required to pay the debt in his capacity of executor, and entitled to receive it in his own right; he is then agent and patient; Termes de la Ley.

AGER (Lat.). In Civil Law. A field; land generally.

A portion of land enclosed by definite boundaries.

Used like the word acre in the old English law, denoting a measure of undetermined and variable value; Spelman, Gloss.; Du Cange; 3 Kent, 441.

AGGRAVATION (Lat. ad, to, and gravis, heavy; aggravare, to make heavy). That which increases the enormity of a crime or the injury of a wrong.

In Criminal Law. One of the rules respecting variances is, that cumulative allegations, or such as merely operate in aggravation, are immaterial, provided that sufficient is proved to establish some right, offence, or justification included in the claim, charge, or defence specified on the record. This rule runs through the whole criminal law, that it is invariably enough to prove so much of the indictment as shows that the defendant has committed a substantive crime therein specified; per Lord Ellenborough, 2 Campb. 583; 4 B. & C. 329; 21 Pick. 525; 4 Gray, 18; 7 id. 49, 331; 1 Taylor, Ev. § 215. Thus, on an indictment for murder the prisoner may be convicted of manslaughter, for the averment of malice aforethought is merely matter of aggravation; Coke, Litt. 282 a.

In Pleading. The introduction of matter into the declaration which tends to increase the amount of damages, but does not affect the right of action itself; Stephen, Pl. 257; 12 Mod. 597. See 3 Am. Jur. 287-313.

An example of this is found in the case where a plaintiff declares in trespass for entering his house, and breaking his close, and tossing his goods about; the entry of the house is the principal ground and foundation of the action, and the rest is only stated by way of aggravation; 3 Wils. 294; and this matter need not be proved by the plaintiff or answered by the defendant.

AGGREGATE. Consisting of particular persons or items, formed into one body.

See CORPORATION.

AGGRESSOR. He who begins a quarrel or dispute, either by threatening or striking another. No man may strike another because he has been threatened, or in consequence of the use of any words.

AGIO. A term used in commercial transactions to denote the difference of price between the value of bank-notes or other nominal money and the coin of the country.

AGISTMENT. The taking of another person's cattle into one's own ground to be fed, for a consideration to be paid by the owner. See AGISTOR.

AGISTOR. One who takes in horses or other animals to pasture at certain rates; Story, Bailm. § 443.

He is not, like an innkeeper, bound to take all horses offered to him, nor is he liable for any injury done to such animals in his care, unless he has been guilty of negligence, or from his ignorance, negligence may be inferred; Holt, 547.

As to whether he is entitled to a lien, see 3 Hill, 485, and LIEN.

AGNATES. In Scotch Law. Relations on the father's side.

AGNATI. In Civil Law. The members of a Roman family who traced their origin and name to a common deceased ancestor through the male line, under whose paternal power they would be if he were living.

They were called adgnati—adgnati, from the words ad eum nati. Ulpianus says: "Adgnati autem sunt cognati virilis sexus ab eodem orti: nam post suos et consanguineos statim mihi proximus est consanguinei mei filius, et ego ei; patris quoque frater qui patruus appellatur; deinceps que ceteri, si qui sunt, hinc orti in infinitum;" Dig. 38, 16, De suis, 2, § 1. Thus, although, the grandfather and father being dead, the children become sui juris, and the males may become the founders of new families, still they all continue to be agnates; and the agnatio spreads and is perpetuated not only in the direct but also in the collateral line. Marriage, adoption, and adrogation also create the relationship of the agnatio. In the Sentences of Paulus, the order of inheritance is stated as follows: Intestatorum hereditas, lege Duodecim Tabularum primum suis heredibus, deinde agnatis et aliquando quoque gentibus deferebatur.

They are distinguished from the cognati, those related through females. See COGNATI.

AGNATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A relationship through males; the male children.

Especially spoken of the children of a free father and slave mother; the rule in such cases was agnatio sequitur ventrem; Du Cange.

AGNOMEN (Lat.). A name or title which a man gets by some action or peculiarity; the last of the four names sometimes given a Roman. Thus, Scipio Africanus (the African), from his African victories; Ainsworth, Lex.; Calvinus, Lex. See NOMEN.

AGRARIAN LAWS. In Roman Law. Those laws by which the commonwealth disposed of its public land, or regulated the possession thereof by individuals, were termed Agrarian Laws.

The greater part of the public lands acquired by conquest were laid open to the possession of any citizen, but the state reserved the title and the right to resume possession. The object of many of the agrarian laws was to limit the area of public land of which any one person might take possession. The law of Cassius, B. C. 486, is the most noted of these laws.

Until a comparatively recent period, it has been assumed that these laws were framed to reach private property as well as to restrict possession of the public domain, and hence the term agrarian is, in legal and political literature, to a great degree fixed with the meaning of a confiscatory law, intended to reduce large estates and increase the number of landholders. Harrington, in his "Oceana," and the philosophers of the French Revolution, have advocated agrarian laws in this sense. The researches of Heyne, Op. 4. 351; Niebuhr, Hist. vol. ii., trans.; and Savigny, Das Recht des Besitzes, have redeemed the Roman word from the burden of this meaning.

AGREAMENTUM. Agreement.

Spelman says that it is equivalent in meaning to aggregatio mentium, though not derived therefrom.

AGREEMENT. A coming together of parties in opinion or determination; the union of two or more minds in a thing done or to be done; a mutual assent to do a thing; Comyn, Dig. Agreement, A 1; Plowd. 5 a, 6 a.

Aggregatio mentium.—When two or more minds are united in a thing done or to be done.

It ought to be so certain and complete that either party may have an action on it, and there must be a quid pro quo; Dane, Abr. c. 11.

The consent of two or more persons concurring, the one in parting with, the other in receiving, some property, right, or benefit; Bacon, Abr.

A mutual contract in consideration between two or more parties; 5 East, 10; 4 Gill & J. 1; 12 How. 126.

"The expression by two or more persons of a common intention to affect the legal relations of those persons;" Anson, Contr. 3.

An agreement "consists of two persons being of the same mind, intention, or meaning, concerning the matter agreed upon"; Leake, Contr. 12.

"Agreement" is seldom applied to specialties; "contract" is generally confined to simple contracts; and "promise" refers to the engagement of a party without reference to the reasons or considerations for it, or the duties of other parties; Parsons, Contr. 6.

An agreement ceases to be such by being put in writing under seal, but not when put in writing for a memorandum; Dane, Abr. c. 11.

It is a wider term than "contract"; Anson, Contr. 4; an agreement might not be a contract, because not fulfilling some requirement of the law of the place in which it is made.

A promise or undertaking.

This is the loose and inaccurate use of the word; 5 East, 10; 3 B. & B. 14; 3 Conn. 335.

The writing or instrument which is evidence of an agreement.

This is a loose and evidently inaccurate use of the term. The agreement may be valid, and yet the written evidence thereof insufficient: as, if a promissory note be given for twenty dollars, the amount of a previous debt, where the note may generally be neglected and the debt collected by means of other evidence; or, again, if a note good in form be given for an illegal consideration, in which case the instrument is good and the agreement void.

Conditional agreements are those which are to have full effect only in case of the happening of certain events, or the existence of a given state of things.

Executed agreements are those where nothing further remains to be done by the parties.

Executed agreements take place when two or more persons make over their respective rights in a thing to one another, and thereby change their property therein either presently and at once, or at a future time upon some event that shall give it full effect, without either party trusting to the other. Such an agreement exists where a thing is bought, paid for, and delivered.

Executory agreements are such as rest on articles, memorandums, parol promises or undertakings, and the like, to be performed in the future, or which are entered into preparatory to more solemn and formal alienations of property; Powell, Contr.

An executed agreement always conveys a chose in possession, while an executory one conveys a chose in action only.

Express agreements are those in which the terms are openly uttered and avowed by the parties at the time of making.

Implied agreements are those which the law supposes the parties to have made, although the terms were not openly expressed.

Thus, every one who undertakes any office, employment, or duty impliedly contracts to do it with integrity, diligence, and skill; and he impliedly contracts to do whatever is fairly within the scope of his employment; 6 Scott, 761. Implied promises, or promises in law, only exist where there is no express stipulation between the parties touching the same matter; for expressum facit cessare tacitum; 2 Bla. Com. 444; 2 Term, 105; 7 Scott, 69; 1 N. & P. 633.

The parties must agree or assent. There must be a definite promise by one party accepted by the other; 3 Johns. 534; 12 id. 190; 9 Ala. 69; 29 Ala. N. s. 864; 4 R. I. 14; 2 Dutch. 268; 3 Halst. 147; 29 Penn. 358. There must be a communication of assent by the party accepting; a mere mental assent to the terms in his own mind is not enough; L. R. 2 App. Ca. 691. But the assent need not be formally made; it can be inferred from the party's acts; L. R. 6 Q. B. 607; L. R. 10 C. P. 307. They must assent to the same thing in the same sense; 4 Wheat. 225; 1 Sumn. 218; 2 Woodb. & M. 359; 7 Johns. 240; 18 Ala. 605; 9 M. & W. 585; 4 Bing. 660; L. R. 6 Q. B. 597. The assent must be mutual and obligatory; there must be a request on one side, and an assent on the other; 5 Bingh. N. C. 75. The assent must comprehend the whole of the proposition; it must be exactly equal to its extent and provision, and it must not qualify them by any new matter; 1 Parsons, Contr. 400; and even a slight qualification destroys the assent; 5 M. & W. 535; 2 Sandf. 133. The question of assent when gathered from conversations is for the jury; 1 Cush. 89; 13 Johns. 294.

A sufficient consideration for the agreement must exist; 2 Bla. Com. 444; Chitty, Contr. 20; 2 Q. B. 851; 5 Ad. & E. 548; 7 Brown, Ch. 550; 7 Term, 350; as against third parties this consideration must be good or valuable; 10 B. & C. 606; Chitty, Contr. 28; as between the parties it may be equitable only; 1 Pars. Contr. 431.

But it need not be adequate, if only it have some real value; 3 Anstr. 732; 2 Sch. & L. 395, n. a; 9 Ves. 246; 16 East, 372; 11 Ad. & E. 983; 1 Metc. Mass. 84. If the consideration be illegal in whole or in part, the agreement will be void; 6 Dana, 91; 3 Bibb, 500; 9 Vt. 23; 5 Penn. 452; 22 Me. 488. So also if the consideration be impossible; 5 Viner, Abr. 110, Condition; Coke, Litt. 206 a; Sheppard, Touchst. 164; L. R. 5 C. P. 588; 2 Lev. 161. See CONSIDERATION.

The agreement may be to do any thing which is lawful, as to sell or buy real estate or personal property. But the evidence of the sale of real property must generally be by deed, sealed; and in many cases agreements in regard to personal property must be in writing. See STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

The construction to be given to agreements is to be favorable to upholding them, and according to the intention of the parties at the time of making it, as nearly as the meaning of the words used and the rules of law will permit; 1 Pars. Contr. 7; 2 Kent, 555; 1 H.

Bla. 569, 614; 30 Eng. L. & E. 479; 5 Hill, 147; 40 Me. 43; 10 A. & E. 326; 19 Vt. 202. This intent cannot prevail against the plain meaning of words; 5 M. & W. 535. Neither will it be allowed to contravene established rules of law.

And that the agreement may be supported, it will be construed so as to operate in a way somewhat different from that intended, if this will prevent the agreement from failing altogether; 22 Pick. 376; 9 Wend. 611; 16 Conn. 474.

Agreements are construed most strongly against the party proposing (i. e., contra proferentem); 6 M. & W. 662; 2 Parsons, Contr. 20; 3 B. & S. 929; 7 R. I. 26. See CONTRACTS.

The effect of an agreement is to bind the parties to the performance of what they have thereby undertaken. In case of failure, the common law provides a remedy by damages, and equity will in some cases compel a specific performance.

The obligation may be avoided or destroyed by performance, which must be by him who was bound to do it; and whatsoever is necessary to be done for the full discharge of this duty, although only incidental to it, must be done by him; 2 Pars. Contr. 148; 11 Q. B. 368; 4 B. & S. 556; 48 Iowa, 462; 39 Wis. 553; by tender of exact performance according to the terms of the contract, which is sufficient when the other party refuses to accept performance under the contract; 6 M. & G. 610; Benj. Sales, 563; by acts of the party to be benefited, which prevent the performance, or where some act is to be done by one party before the act of the other, the second party is excused from performance, if the first fails; 15 M. & W. 109; 8 Q. B. 358; 8 B. & C. 325; 10 East, 359; by rescission, which may be made by the party to be benefited, without any provision therefor in the agreement, and the mere acquiescence of the other party will be evidence of sufficient mutuality to satisfy the general rule that rescission must be mutual; 4 Pick. 114; 5 Me. 277; 7 Bingh. 266; 1 W. & S. 442; rescission, before breach, must be by agreement; Anson, Contr. 247; Leake, Contr. 787; 7 M. & W. 55; 2 H. & N. 79; 6 Exch. 39; by acts of law, as confusion, merger; 29 Vt. 412; 4 Jones, No. C. 67; death, as when a master who has bound himself to teach an apprentice dies; inability to perform a personal service, such as singing at a concert; L. R. 6 Exch. 269; or extinction of the subject-matter of the agreement. See also ASSENT; CONTRACT; DISCHARGE OF CONTRACTS; PARTIES; PAYMENT; RESCISSION.

AGREEMENT FOR INSURANCE. An agreement often made in short terms preliminary to the filling out and delivery of a policy with specific stipulations.

Such an agreement, specifying the rate of premium, the subject, and risk, and amount to be insured, in general terms, and being assented to by the parties, is binding; 4 Rob. N. Y. 150; 2 Curt. C. C. 277; 19 N. Y. 305. It is usually in writing, but may be by parol or by parol acceptance of a written proposal; 2 Curt. C. C. 524; 19 How. 318; 31 Ala. 711. It must be in such form or expression that the parties, subject, and risk can be thereby distinctly known, either by being specified or by references so that it can be definitely reduced to writing; 1 Phillips, Ins. §§ 6–14 et seq.; 2 Parsons, Marit. Law, 19; 19 N. Y. 305.

Such an agreement must have an express or implied reference to some form of policy. The ordinary form of the underwriters in like cases is implied, where no other is specified or implied; 56 Penn. 256; 7 Taunt. 157; 2 C. & P. 91; 3 Bingh. 285; 3 B. & Ad. 906.

Where the agreement is by a communication between parties at a distance, an offer by either will be binding upon both on a despatch by the other of his acceptance within a reasonable or the prescribed time, and prior to the offer having been countermanded; 1 Phillips, Ins. §§ 17, 21; 27 Penn. 268. See INSURANCE POLICY.

AID AND COMFORT. Help; support; assistance; counsel; encouragement.

The constitution of the United States, art. 3, s. 3, declares, that adhering to the enemies of the United States, giving them aid and comfort, shall be treason. These words, as they are to be understood in the constitution, have not received a full judicial construction; but see 97 U. S. 39, as to their meaning in the Act of Congress, March 12, 1863. See also 92 U. S. 187; 13 Wall. 128; 16 id. 147; 7 Ct. Cl. 398. They import help, support, assistance, countenance, encouragement. The word aid, which occurs in the stat. Westm. 1, c. 14, is explained by Lord Coke (2 Inst. 182) as comprehending all persons counselling, abetting, plotting, assenting, consenting, and encouraging to do the act (and he adds, what is not applicable to the crime of treason), who are not present when the act is done. See also 1 Burn, Just. 5, 6; 4 Bla. Com. 37, 38.

AID BONDS. See BONDS.

AID PRAYER. In English Law. A petition to the court calling in help from another person who has an interest in the matter in dispute. For example, a tenant for life, by the curtesy, or for years, being impleaded, may pray aid of him in reversion; that is, desire the court that he may be called by writ, to allege what he thinks proper for the maintenance of the right of the person calling him, and of his own; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 50; Cowel.

AIDER BY VERDICT. In Pleading. The presumption which arises after verdict, whether in a civil or criminal case, that those facts, without proof of which the verdict could not have been found, were proved, though they are not distinctly alleged in the record; provided it contains terms sufficiently general to comprehend them in reasonable intendment.

The rule is thus laid down, that where a matter is so essentially necessary to be proved, that had it not been in evidence the jury could not have given such a verdict as that recorded, there the want of stating that matter in express terms in a declaration, provided it contains terms sufficiently general to comprehend it in fair and reasonable intendment, will be cured by the verdict; and where a general allegation must, in fair construction, so far require to be restricted that no judge and no jury could have properly treated it in an unrestrained sense, it may reasonably be presumed after verdict that it was so restrained at the trial; 1 Maule & S. 234, 237; 1 Saund., 6th ed. 227, 228; 1 Den. Actual presence is not necessary: it is sufficient to be so situated as to come readily to the assistance of his fellows; 13 Mo. 382.

AIDS. In English Law. A species of tax payable by the tenant of lands to his superior lord on the happening of certain events.

They were originally mere benevolences granted to the lord in certain times of danger and distress, but soon came to be claimed as a right. They were originally given in three cases only, and were of uncertain amount. For a period they were demanded in additional cases; but this abuse was corrected by Magna Charta (of John) and the stat. 25 Edw. I. (confirmatio chartarum), and they were made payable only,—to ransom the lord's person, when taken prisoner; to make the lord's eldest son a knight; to marry the lord's eldest daughter, by giving her a suitable portion. The first of these remained uncertain; the other two were fixed by act of parliament (25 Edw. III. c. 11) at twenty shillings each, being the supposed twentieth part of a knight's fee; 2 Bla. Com. 64. They were abolished by the 12 Car. II. c. 24; 2 Bla. Com. 77, n.

AIR. That fluid transparent substance which surrounds our globe.

No property can be had in the air; it belongs equally to all men, being indispensable to their existence. But this must be understood with this qualification, that no man has a right to use the air over another man's land in such a manner as to be injurious to him. To poison or materially to change the air, to the annoyance of the public, is a nuisance; Cro. Car. 510; 2 Ld. Raym. 1163; 1 Burr. 333; 1 Strange, 686; Dane, Abr., Index; see NUISANCE.

AJUAR. In Spanish Law. The jewels and furniture which a wife brings in marriage.

AJUTAGE (spelled also Adjutage). A conical tube used in drawing water through an aperture, by the use of which the quantity of water drawn is much increased.

When a privilege to draw water from a canal, through the forebay or tunnel, by means of an aperture, has been granted, it is not lawful to add an ajutage, unless such was the intention of the parties; 2 Whart. 477.

ALABAMA. One of the United States of America.

The territory of Alabama was organized under an act of congress of March 3, 1817; 3 Statutes at Large, 371. An act of congress was passed March 2, 1819, authorizing the inhabitants of the territory of Alabama to form for themselves a constitution and state government. In pursuance of that act, the constitution of the state of Alabama was adopted by a convention which met at Huntsville, July 5th, and adjourned August 2, 1819.

The constitution provides that the general assembly may, whenever two-thirds of each house shall deem it necessary, propose amendments thereto, which, having been read on three several days in each house, shall be duly published in such manner as the general assembly may direct, at least three months before the next general election for representatives, for the consideration of the people; that the several returning officers, at the next general election which shall be held for representatives, shall open a poll for the vote of the qualified electors on the proposed amendments, and shall make a return of said vote to the secretary of state; and that, if it shall thereupon appear that a majority of all the qualified electors of the state, who voted at such election, voted in favor of the proposed amendments, said amendments shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as parts of the constitution; Const. art. xvii. § 1.

The constitution also provides "That no convention shall hereafter (Dec. 6, 1875) be held for the purpose of altering or amending the constitution of this state, unless the question of convention or no convention shall be first submitted to a vote of all the electors of the state, and approved by a majority of those voting at said election;" Const. art. xvii. § 2.

Prior to the constitution of 1868, the acceptance by the people of proposed constitutional amendments must have been afterwards, and before another election, ratified by two-thirds of each house of the general assembly. Under this provision the constitution was amended in 1830, 1846, and 1850. In 1861, 1865, 1868, and 1875, respectively, new constitutions were submitted to the people by conventions called for that purpose, and with the exception of that proposed in 1868 were subsequently ratified and adopted.

Every male citizen of the United States, and every male person of foreign birth, who has been naturalized, or who may have legally declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States before he offers to vote, who is twenty-one years old or upwards, who shall have resided in the state one year, three months in the county, and thirty days in the precinct or ward, next immediately preceding the election at which he offers to vote, is a qualified elector, and may vote in the precinct or ward of his actual residence, and not elsewhere, for all officers elected by the people.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—The legislative power of the state is vested in a senate and house of representatives, together composing the general assembly. The senators are elected for a term of four years, and the representatives for a term of two years, on the first Monday in August, by the electors. The voting is by ballot. The senators are divided into two classes, one of which goes out of office at the end of every period of two years; Const. of 1875, art. iv. § 3; Code of 1876, page 131, § 3. The general assembly meets biennially at the capitol, and is composed of thirty-three senators and one hundred representatives, the largest number in both houses allowed by the constitution. The whole number of senators shall not be less than one-fourth, nor more than one-third of the whole number of representatives. The representatives are apportioned among the counties according to the number of their inhabitants, by the general assembly at its regular session next after each decennial census of the United States, each county being entitled to, at least, one representative. The senators are apportioned among thirty-three senatorial districts, the districts being as nearly equal to each other in the number of inhabitants as may be, and each district being entitled to one senator and no more. No county must be divided between two districts, and no district shall be made of two or more counties not contiguous to each other; Const. 1875; Code of 1876, page 143.

The Qualifications of Senators and Representatives are that senators must be at least twenty-seven years of age, and representatives at least twenty-one years of age; both senators and representatives must have been citizens and inhabitants of the state for three years, and inhabitants of their respective counties or district one year, next before their election. Persons are ineligible who hold any office of profit under the United States, except postmasters whose annual salary does not exceed two hundred dollars; or who hold any office of profit under the state, except justices of the peace, constables, notaries public, and commissioners of deeds; or who have been convicted of embezzlement of the public money, bribery, perjury, or other infamous crime; and no member of the legislature is re-eligible thereto who has once been expelled for corruption.

Members of the general assembly are in all cases, except treason, felony, violation of their oath of office, and breach of the peace, privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses, and in going to and returning from the same, and from accountability for words spoken in debate. They receive a compensation fixed by the constitution. They cannot be appointed to offices of profit created or improved in their emoluments during their terms, except such offices as are filled by popular election. A member of the General Assembly who has a personal or private interest in any measure or bill proposed or pending before the general assembly, must disclose the fact to the house of which he is a member, and cannot vote thereon.

All bills for raising revenue must originate in the house of representatives, but the senate may propose amendments as in other bills. No law can be passed except by bill, and no bill must be so altered or amended on its passage through either house as to change its original purpose.

The general assembly has no power to pass a special or local law for the benefit of individuals or corporations in cases which are or can be provided for by a general law, or when the relief sought can be given in any court of the state; but may pass special or local laws concerning public or educational institutions, and industrial, mining, manufacturing, or immigration corporations, or interests, or corporations for constructing canals, or improving navigable rivers or harbors in the state.

The state cannot engage in works of internal improvement, nor lend money on its credit in aid of such; nor be interested in any private or corporate enterprise, or lend money or its credit to any individual, association, or corporation; nor can the state, through the general assembly, authorize any county, city, or town, to so lend its credit, or to grant any public money or thing of value in aid of any individual, association, or corporation, or to become a stockholder in any such corporation, association, or company, by issuing bonds or otherwise.

Each house chooses its presiding officer and other officers; judges of the election, qualification, and returns of its members; determines the rules of its proceedings; punishes for disorderly conduct, or contempt; enforces obedience to its process; protects its members against violence, or offers of bribes, or corrupt solicitations; and may, with the concurrence of two-thirds of either house, expel a member, but not a second time for the same cause. Each house keeps and prints a journal of its proceedings.

A majority of each house constitutes a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may compel the attendance of absent members. Any member may dissent from, or protest against, any act or resolution which he may think injurious to the public or an individual, and have the reasons for his dissent entered on the journals. The governor issues writs of election to fill vacancies. The doors of each house are kept open except when the occasion requires secrecy. Neither house, without the consent of the other, can adjourn for more than three days, or to a different place. Const. art. iv.

Impeachments of the governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, attorney-general, superintendent of education, and judges of the supreme court, are tried by the senate sitting as a court for that purpose, under oath or affirmation, on articles or charges preferred by the house of representatives; Const. art. vii. § 1, p. 141.

THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.—The executive department of the state consists of a governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, state auditor, attorney-general, superintendent of education, and a sheriff for each county.

The governor is the chief magistrate of the state, and in him is vested the supreme executive power.

The governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, state auditor, and attorney-general, are elected by the qualified electors of the state, at the same time and places appointed for the election of members of the general assembly. Contested elections for these offices are determined by both houses of the general assembly. They hold their respective offices for the term of two years. They must reside at the seat of government during their continuance in office, and they receive a compensation for their services, which is fixed by law, and which cannot be increased or diminished during the term for which they are elected.

No person is eligible to the office of secretary of state, state treasurer, state auditor, or attorney-general, unless he shall have been a citizen of the United States at least seven years, and shall have resided in this state at least five years next preceding his election, and unless he is at least twenty-five years old when elected.

The Governor.—The governor must be at least thirty years of age when elected, and must have been a citizen of the United States ten years, and a resident citizen of the state at least seven years next before the day of his election. And no other office under this state, or any other power, can be held at the same time with that of governor. His salary, fixed by statute, is three thousand dollars per annum, and the constitution prohibits its being either increased or diminished during his term of office. He is commander-in-chief of the militia and volunteer forces of the state, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States, and he may call out the same to execute the laws, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion; but he need not command in person, unless directed to do so by a resolution of the general assembly; and when acting in the service of the United States, he may appoint his staff, and the general assembly may fix his rank.

He may require information in writing from the officers of the executive department, and may require at any time information in writing, under oath, from all officers and managers of state institutions, upon all subjects relating to their respective offices and institutions. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly by proclamation. It is his duty to give information to the general assembly, from time to time, of the state of the government, and recommend measures for its consideration; and at the commencement of each of its sessions, and at the close of his term of office, give information of the condition of the state. He must account to the general assembly for all moneys received and paid out by him from any funds subject to his order, with the vouchers therefor; and must, at the commencement of each regular session, present to the general assembly estimates of the amount of money required to be raised by taxation for all purposes. He must approve or veto bills passed by the general assembly; but if a bill returned with his objections is afterwards passed in each house by a majority of all the members elected, it becomes a law without his approval; and if any bill is not returned by the governor within five days after it has been presented to him, it becomes a law as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly prevent its return by their adjournment, in which case it does not become a law.

The governor is required to take care that the laws are faithfully executed, and he has the power of remitting fines and forfeitures under the rules and regulations prescribed by law, and after conviction, to grant reprieves, pardons, and commutation of sentence, except in cases of treason and impeachment; and he may in cases of treason respite the sentence, and report the same to the general assembly at its next regular session, when the general assembly must either pardon, commute the sentence, direct its execution, or grant further reprieve. He must communicate to the general assembly at every regular session each case of reprieve, pardon, or commutation of sentence granted, with his reasons therefor, stating the name and crime of the convict, the sentence, its date, and the date of the reprieve, commutation, reprieve, or pardon.

In case of the governor's impeachment, removal from office, death, refusal to qualify, resignation, absence from the state, or other disability, the president of the senate fills the office until the next election, or until the governor, who is absent or impeached, shall return or be acquitted, or his other disability be removed. And if during such vacancy in the office of governor, the president of the senate is impeached, removed from office, or is under any other disability, the speaker of the house of representatives administers the government.

The Secretary of State is the custodian of the seal of the state, and authenticates therewith all the official acts of the governor, his approval of laws and resolutions excepted, and he countersigns all grants and commissions issued in the name and by the authority of the state, which have been sealed with the seal of the state, and signed by the governor. His salary is eighteen hundred dollars per annum, together with fees which he is allowed to charge for the performance of certain duties.

The State Treasurer and State Auditor.—See, supra, as to the manner of election of these officers, and their terms of office. The annual salary of the state treasurer is two thousand dollars, and of the state auditor, eighteen hundred dollars, exclusive of the fees of his office.

The Attorney-General of the State.—See, supra, as to the manner of his election and term of office. He is required by law to give his opinion on any question of law connected with the interests of the state, or with the duties of any of the departments when required by the governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, or superintendent of education in writing to do so; to give his opinion to the chairman of the judiciary committee of either house, when required, upon any matter under the consideration of the committee; to prepare, on the application of the governor, all contracts and writings in relation to any matter in which the state is interested; to attend, on the part of the state, to all criminal cases pending in the supreme court of the state, and to all civil suits in which the state is a party in the same court, and to all causes other than criminal that may be pending in the courts of Montgomery county, in which the state may be in any manner concerned; and when required to do so by the governor, in writing, to appear in the courts of other states, or of the United States, in any cause in which the state may be interested in the result; to superintend the collection of all notes for school lands; and annually to make a report to the governor, stating the number of persons prosecuted under indictments during the past year in each county, the character of the alleged offence, the results of the trials, and the punishments imposed; together with such suggestions tending to the suppression of crime as he may deem proper. His salary is fifteen hundred dollars a year.

The Superintendent of Education is elected by the qualified electors of the state, and his term of office is two years. His salary is twenty-two hundred and fifty dollars per annum. His duties are, generally, to devote his time to the care and improvement of the common schools, and the promotion of public education, and to exercise a general supervision over all the educational interests of the state; to annually distribute and apportion all money belonging to the educational fund; to cause suits to be entered and prosecuted against all defaulters to the educational fund; to elicit, by correspondence, exchange of official reports, and other proper means, information relative to the systems of public instruction in other states and countries; and at the close of each scholastic year to make a report to the governor of all his transactions done in relation to the duties of his office.

THE JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.—The judicial power of the state is vested in the senate sitting as a court of impeachment, a supreme court, circuit courts, chancery courts, courts of probate, such inferior courts of law and equity, to consist of not more than five members, as the general assembly may from time to time establish, and such persons as may be by law invested with powers of a judicial nature.

The constitution provides that the supreme court shall consist of one chief justice and such number of associate justices as may be prescribed by law. Under this provision the powers of the supreme court have been by statutory regulation vested in three judges, who are elected by the qualified electors of the state, and who appoint one of their number chief justice. They also appoint a reporter of the decisions of the court, its clerk, and the marshal and librarian. Code, §§ 568, 569, 581, 588, 596.

The constitution prescribes that the court shall be held at the seat of government, and that it shall have appellate jurisdiction coextensive with the state, under such restrictions and regulations not repugnant to the constitution as may from time to time be prescribed by law: Provided, that it shall have power to issue writs of injunction, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and such other remedial and original writs as may be necessary to give it a general superintendence and control of inferior jurisdictions; and the judges by the constitution are made conservators of the peace throughout the state; Const., art. vi., §§ 2, 3, 16.

Qualifications—Term of Office, etc.—The judges of the supreme court must have been citizens of the United States, and of this state, for five years next preceding their election or appointment, and must not be less than twenty-five years of age, and learned in the law. They hold office for the term of six years, and until their successors are elected or appointed and qualified, and receive a salary of three thousand dollars per year. They are not allowed to practise law in any of the courts of the state nor of the United States. Vacancies are filled by appointment by the governor, and such appointee holds office for the unexpired term of his predecessor, and until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified.

The Circuit Court.—The circuit court has original jurisdiction in all matters civil and criminal within the state, not otherwise excepted in the constitution; but in civil cases only when the matter or sum in controversy exceeds fifty dollars. A circuit court is required to be held in each county in the state at least twice in every year; and the judges of the several circuits are allowed to hold courts for each other when they deem it expedient, and shall do so when directed by law. The judges of the several courts have power to issue writs of injunction returnable into courts of chancery.

The constitution directs that the state shall be divided into convenient circuits, not to exceed eight in number, unless increased by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the general assembly, and that no circuit shall contain less than three nor more than twelve counties; and that there shall be a judge for each circuit, who shall reside in it. The judges are chosen by the qualified electors of the respective circuits. The number of circuits into which the state was divided has, by recent legislation, been reduced from twelve to eight; Const. art. vi.

City Courts of Mobile and Montgomery.—These courts are held respectively in the cities of Mobile and Montgomery. They were established by statutes passed under the authority given by the constitution to establish inferior courts, and they have jurisdiction concurrent with that of the circuit courts over criminal causes in Mobile and Montgomery counties, respectively, and over civil causes pertaining to courts of common law except to try titles to land; Const. art. vi. § 1; 24 Ala. 521; 18 Ala. 521; 52 Ala. 299; 48 Ala. 171; 45 Ala. 103. The judge of the city courts of Mobile is chosen by the electors of Mobile county; the judge of the city court of Montgomery by the state senate from among three persons nominated by the governor; and the judge of the city court of Selma is appointed directly by the governor. See Acts of 1845–46, p. 29; Acts of 1876–77, p. 266; Acts of 1878–79, p. 418.

Chancery Courts.—Equity jurisdiction was exercised by the circuit courts till 1839, when a separate chancery court was established. The state is now divided into three chancery divisions, for each of which there is a chancellor, who is elected by the qualified electors of his division; Const. p. 139, §§ 1, 7, 8; Acts of 1839, p. 22; Acts of 1878–79, p. 90; Const. p. 140, § 12; Code of 1876, § 615.

Probate Courts.—These courts are established in each county. They have a single officer, who is styled the judge of probate, and is chosen by the electors of the county for a term of six years. He is compensated by fees of office. Courts of probate have, in the cases defined by law, original jurisdiction of the probate of wills; the granting and revoking of letters testamentary, and of administration; of all controversies in relation to the right of executorship, or of administration; the settlement of accounts of executors and administrators; the sale and disposition of the real and personal property belonging to, and the distribution of, intestates' estates; the appointment and removal of guardians for minors and persons of unsound mind; all controversies as to the right of guardianship, and the settlement of guardians' accounts; the binding out of apprentices, and all controversies between master and apprentice; the allotment of dower in lands, in the cases by law provided; the partition of lands within their counties; the change of the names of persons residing in their counties, etc.; Const. art. vi. §§ 1, 9, 12, 15; Code of 1876, §§ 684–694.

The Court of County Commissioners is established by law in each county. It is composed of the probate judge and four commissioners, who are elected by the qualified voters of the county for a term of four years. It has jurisdiction in relation to roads, bridges, causeways, and ferries, and it has authority to direct and control the property of the county; to levy county taxes; to examine, settle, and allow all claims against the county; to examine and audit the accounts of all officers having the care, management, collection, or disbursement of money belonging to the county, or appropriated for its use and benefit; to make rules and regulations for the support of the poor; and to establish, change, or abolish election precincts; Code of 1876, §§ 244, 246, 745, 746, 252.

Justices of the Peace.—The constitution provides that there shall be elected, by the qualified electors of each precinct of the counties, not exceeding two justices of the peace and one constable, such justices to have jurisdiction in all civil cases wherein the amount in controversy does not exceed one hundred dollars, except in cases of libel, slander, assault and battery, and ejectment; and that in all cases tried before such justices the right of appeal, without prepayment of costs, shall be secured by law; Provided, that the governor may appoint one notary public for each election precinct in counties, and one for each ward in cities of over five thousand inhabitants, who, in addition to the powers of notary, shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction as justices of the peace within the precincts and wards for which they are respectively appointed; Const. of 1876, § 26, p. 141. They hold office for four years, and are conservators of the peace and committing magistrates.

Of the Judges generally.—The judges are elected for a term of six years; Const. of 1876, art. vi. § 15; Code of 1876, § 247. Judges of the supreme court, circuit courts, and chancery courts, receive stated salaries, which cannot be diminished during their continuance in office; and they are prohibited from receiving any fees or perquisites of office, and from holding any other office of trust or profit under this state, the United States, or any other power; Const. of 1876, § 10. No judge of any court of record is allowed to practise law in any of the courts of the state, or of the United States.

Regulations applicable to Officers generally.—All members of the general assembly, and all officers, executive and judicial, are required to take an oath to support the constitution of the United States and of the state of Alabama, while remaining citizens of the state, and to discharge, to the best of their abilities, the duties of their offices; Const. art. xv. § 1.

In pursuance of a section of the constitution authorizing the enactment of laws to suppress the evil practice of dueling, laws have been adopted requiring every public officer to take an anti-dueling oath, and disqualifying from holding office under the authority of the state all persons who have in this state, or in any of the United States, given, accepted, or knowingly carried a challenge to fight with deadly weapons; Const. art. iv. § 47; Code of 1876, §§ 149, 155.

ALBA FIRMA. White rents; rents reserved payable in silver, or white money. They were so called to distinguish them from reditus nigri, which were rents reserved payable in work, grain, and the like; Coke, 2d Inst. 19.

ALCALDE. In Spanish Law. A judicial officer in Spain, and in those countries which have received the body of their laws from those of Spain. His powers and duties are similar to those of a justice of the peace.

ALDERMAN (equivalent to senator or senior).

In English Law. An associate to the chief civil magistrate of a corporate town or city.

The word was formerly of very extended signification. Spelman enumerates eleven classes of aldermen. Their duties among the Saxons embraced both magisterial and executive power, but would seem to have been rather an appellation of honor, originally, than a distinguishing mark of office; Spelman, Gloss.

Aldermannus civitatis burgi seu castelli (alderman of a city, borough, or castle); 1 Bla. Com. 475, n.

Aldermannus comitatus (alderman of the county), who is thought by Spelman to have held an intermediate place between an earl and a sheriff; by others, held the same as the earl; 1 Bla. Com. 116.

Aldermannus hundredi seu wapentachii (alderman of a hundred or wapentake); Spelman.

Aldermannus regis (alderman of the king) was so called, either because he was appointed by the king, or because he gave the judgment of the king in the premises allotted to him.

Aldermannus totius Anglia (alderman of all England). An officer of high rank whose duties cannot be precisely determined. See Spelman, Gloss.

The aldermen of the city of London were probably originally the chiefs of guilds. See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 54, 56.

In American Cities. The aldermen are generally a legislative body, having limited judicial powers as a body, as in matters of internal police regulation, laying out and repairing streets, constructing sewers, and the like; though in many cities they hold separate courts, and have magisterial powers to a considerable extent. ALEATOR (Lat. alea, dice). A dice-player; a gambler.

"The more skilful a player he is, the wickeder he is;" Calvinus. Lex.

ALEATORY CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A mutual agreement, of which the effects, with respect both to the advantages and losses, whether to all the parties or to some of them, depend on an uncertain event; La. Civ. Code, art. 2951.

The term includes contracts, such as insurance, annuities, and the like.

ALE-CONNER (also called ale-taster). An officer appointed by the court-leet, sworn to look to the assize and goodness of ale and beer within the precincts of the leet; Kitchin, Courts, 46; Whishaw.

An officer appointed in every court-leet, and sworn to look to the assize of bread, ale, or beer within the precincts of that lordship; Cowel.

This officer is still continued in name, though the duties are changed or given up; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 501.

ALER SANS JOUR (Fr. aller sans jour, to go without day).

In Practice. A phrase formerly used to indicate the final dismissal of a case from court.

The defendant was then at liberty to go, without any day appointed for his subsequent appearance; Kitchin, Courts, 146.

ALFET. The vessel in which hot water was put, for the purpose of dipping a criminal's arm in it up to the elbow in the ordeal by water; Cowel.

ALIA ENORMIA (Lat., other wrongs).

In Pleading. A general allegation, at the end of a declaration, of wrongful acts committed by the defendant to the damage of the plaintiff. In form it is, "and other wrongs then and there did against the peace, etc." Under this allegation, damages and matters which naturally arise from the act complained of may be given in evidence; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 678; including battery of servants, etc., in a declaration for breaking into and entering a house; 6 Mod. 127; 2 Term, 166; 7 Harr. & J. Md. 68; and all matters in general which go in aggravation of damages merely, but would not of themselves be ground for an action; Buller, Nisi P. 89; 3 Mass. 222; 6 Munf. 308.

But matters in aggravation may be stated specially; 15 Mass. 194; Gilm. 227; and matters which of themselves would constitute a ground of action must be so stated; 1 Chitty, Pl. 348; 17 Pick. 284. See generally 1 Chitty, Pl. 648; Buller, Nisi P. 89; 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 268, 273, 278; 2 Salk. 643; Peake, Ev. 505.

ALIAS (Lat. alius, another). In Practice. Before; at another time.

An alias writ is a writ issued where one of the same kind has been issued before in the same cause.

The second writ runs, in such case, "we command you as we have before commanded you" (sicut alias), and the Latin word alias is used to denote both the writ and the clause in which it or its corresponding English word is found. It is used of all species of writs.

ALIAS DICTUS (Lat., otherwise called). A description of the defendant by adding to his real name that by which he is known in some writing on which he is to be charged, or by which he is known; 4 Johns. 118; 2 Caines, 362; 3 id. 219.

ALIBI (Lat., elsewhere). Presence in another place than that described.

When a person, charged with a crime, proves (se eadem die fuisse alibi) that he was, at the time alleged, in a different place from that in which it was committed, he is said to prove an alibi, the effect of which is to lay a foundation for the necessary inference that he could not have committed it. See Bracton, 140.

This proof is usually made out by the testimony of witnesses, but it is presumed it might be made out by writings; as if the party could prove by a record, properly authenticated, that on the day or at the time in question he was in another place.

It has been said that this defence must be subjected to a most rigid scrutiny; and that it must be established by a preponderance of proof; 30 Vt. 377; 5 Cush. 124; 20 Penn. 429; 81 Ill. 565; 24 Iowa, 570. See remarks of Shaw, C. J., in Webster's Case, and 2 Alison's Cr. L. of Scotland, 624. It is peculiarly liable to be supported by perjury and false testimony of all sorts. There must be satisfactory proof that the prisoner could not have been at the place where the crime was committed, but the proof need not be higher than is required as to other facts; 59 Ga. 142; see 48 Iowa, 583.

ALIEN (Lat. alienus, belonging to another; foreign). A foreigner; one of foreign birth.

In England, one born out of the allegiance of the king.

In the United States, one born out of the jurisdiction of the United States, and who has not been naturalized under their constitution and laws; 2 Kent, 50. The children of ambassadors and ministers at foreign courts, however, are not aliens. And see 10 U. S. Stat. 604.

An alien cannot in general acquire title to real estate by descent, or by other mere operation of law; 7 Coke, 25 a; 1 Ventr. 417; 3 Johns. Cas. 109; Hardin, 61; and if he purchase land, he may be divested of the fee, upon an inquest of office found; but until this is done he may sell, convey, or devise the lands and pass a good title to the same; 4 Wheat. 453; 12 Mass. 143; 6 Johns. Ch. 365; 7 N. H. 475; 1 Washb. R. P. 49. The disabilities of aliens in respect to holding lands are removed by statute in many of the states of the United States; in Alabama, wholly; Rev. Code, 1876, § 2860; in Arkansas, if they have declared an intention to become citizens; Rev. Stat. c. iii. § 224; California, wholly, if resident; if non-resident, must appear and claim within five years; Civ. Code, 1880, §§ 671, 672; Colorado, wholly; Laws, 1868, p. 45; Connecticut, wholly; Rev. Stat. 1875; tit. ii. c. 1, § 4; Delaware, as in Arkansas; Rev. Code, 1852, c. 81, § 1; Florida, wholly; Const. 1868, preamble, § 17; Georgia, wholly, so long as alien government is at peace with U. S.; Rev. Code, 1873, § 1661; Illinois, wholly; Rev. Stat. 1880, c. 6, § 1; Iowa, wholly; McClain's Stat. 1880, § 1908; Kentucky, wholly, after declaration of intention to become a citizen of U. S.; a non-resident alien may take and hold by descent or devise, but must alienate within eight years thereafter; Gen. Stat. 1873, p. 191, 192; Maine, wholly; Rev. Stat. 1871, c. 73, § 2; Massachusetts, wholly; Gen. Stat. c. 90, § 38; Michigan, wholly, if bona fide residents; Const., art. xviii. § 13; Mississippi, wholly if resident; Rev. Code, 1871, c. 52, § 2822, art. vi.; Missouri, wholly; Rev. Stat. c. 3, § 325; Nebraska, wholly; Const., art. i. § 14; New Hampshire, wholly, if resident; General Laws, 1878; New Jersey, wholly; Rev. Stat. 1877, c. 1, § 1; New York, partly; 2 Rev. Stat. 1875; p. 1096; Ohio, wholly; 7 Rev. Stat. 1880, § 4173; Oregon, wholly; Gen. Laws, 1872, 588; Pennsylvania, wholly; 1 Purd. Dig. 65; and as to corporations, Act June 1, 1881; Rhode Island, wholly; Gen. Stat. 1872, c. 161, § 6; South Carolina, as in Arkansas; Rev. Stat. 1873, p. 419; see 1 M'Cord, Ch. So. C. 146; Tennessee, partly; 1 Stat. of 1871, §§ 1998, 2427; Texas, wholly if a resident, and an intention to become a resident has been declared; Stat. Laws, 1870, 106; Virginia, partly; Code, 1873, 130; Wisconsin, wholly; Const., art. i. § 15; Maryland, the common law prevails; Mayer's Dig. 1870; North Carolina, wholly; Battle's Revisal, p. 78; Vermont, the common law prevails; but there is no provision in the state constitution or laws for declaring a forfeiture; 25 Vt. 433; 1 Washb. R. P. 49 n.; West Virginia, wholly; 1 Rev. Stat. 1879, 214.

An alien has a right to acquire personal estate, make and enforce contracts in relation to the same; he is protected from injuries and wrongs to his person and property, his relative rights and character; he may sue and be sued; 7 Coke, 17; Dyer, 2 b; 1 Cush. 531; 2 Sandf. Ch. 586; 2 Woodb. & M. 1; 2 Kent, 63.

An alien, even after being naturalized, is ineligible to the office of president of the United States, and in some states, as in New York, to that of governor; he cannot be a member of congress till the expiration of seven years after his naturalization. An alien can exercise no political rights whatever; he cannot, therefore, vote at any political election, fill any office, or serve as a juror; 6 Johns. 332. The disabilities of aliens may be removed, and they may become citizens, under the provisions of the Acts of Congress of April 14, 1802, c. 28; March 3, 1813, c. 184; March 22, 1816, c. 32; May 26, 1824, c. 186; May 24, 1828, c. 116. See 2 Curt. C. C. 98; 1 Woodb. & M. 323; 4 Gray, 559; 33 N. H. 89.

An alien owes a temporary local allegiance, and his property is liable to taxation. As to the case of alien enemies, see that title.

Consult Kent; Washburn, R. P.

Of Estates. To alienate; to transfer.

ALIEN ENEMY. One who owes allegiance to the adverse belligerent; 1 Kent, 73.

He who owes a temporary but not a permanent allegiance is an alien enemy in respect to acts done during such temporary allegiance only; and when his allegiance terminates, his hostile character terminates also; 1 B. & P. 163.

Alien enemies are said to have no rights, no privileges, unless by the king's special favor, during time of war; 1 Bla. Com. 372; Bynkershoek, 195; 8 Term, 166. But the tendency of modern law is to give them protection for person and property until ordered out of the country. If resident within the country, they may sue and be sued; 2 Kent, 63; 10 Johns. 69; 6 Binn. 241; 50 Ill. 186; they may be sued as non-resident defendants; 11 Wall. 259; 30 Md. 512; and may be served by publication, even though they had no actual notice, being within the hostile lines; 37 Md. 25.

ALIENAGE. The condition or state of an alien.

ALIENATE. To convey; to transfer; Coke, Litt. 118 b. Alien is very commonly used in the same sense; 1 Washb. R. P. 53.

ALIENATION. Of Estates. The transfer of the property and possession of lands, tenements, or other things, from one person to another; Termes de la Ley.

It is particularly applied to absolute conveyances of real property; 1 N. Y. 290, 294.

Alienations by deed may be by conveyances at common law, which are either original or primary, being those by means of which the benefit or estate is created or first arises; or derivative or secondary conveyances, being those by which the benefit or estate originally created is enlarged, restrained, transferred, or extinguished; or they may be by conveyances under the statute of uses. The original conveyances are the following: feoffment, gift, grant, lease, exchange, partition. The derivative are, release, confirmation, surrender, assignment, defeasance. Those deriving their force from the statute of uses are, covenants to stand seised to uses, bargains and sale, lease and release, deeds to lead or declare the uses of other more direct conveyances, deeds of revocation of uses; 2 Bla. Com. c. 20; 2 Washb. R. P. 600 et seq. See CONVEYANCE; DEED. Alienations by matter of record may be: by private acts of the legislature; by grants, as by patents of lands; by fines; by common recovery.

As to alienations by devise, see DEVISE; WILL.

In Medical Jurisprudence. A generic term denoting the different kinds of aberration of the human understanding; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 535.

ALIENATION OFFICE. In English Law. An office to which all writs of covenants and entries were carried for the recovery of fines levied thereon.

ALIENEE. One to whom an alienation is made.

In Civil Law. Food and other things necessary to the support of life; money allowed for the purpose of procuring these; Dig. 50. 16. 43.

In Common Law. To supply with necessaries; 3 Edw. Ch. 194.

ALIMENTA (Lat. alere, to support). Things necessary to sustain life.

Under the appellation are included food, clothing, and a house; water also, it is said, in those regions where water is sold; Calvinus, Lex.; Dig. 50. 16. 43.

ALIMONY. The allowance which a husband by order of court pays to his wife, living separate from him, for her maintenance; 2 Bishop, Marr. & D. 351; 55 Me. 21; 36 Ga. 286.

Alimony pendente lite is that ordered during the pendency of a suit.

Permanent alimony is that ordered for the use of the wife after the termination of the suit during their joint lives.

To entitle a wife to permanent alimony, the following conditions must be complied with. First, a legal and valid marriage must be proved; 1 Rob. Eccl. 484; 2 Add. Eccl. 484; 4 Hen. & M. 507; 10 Ga. 477; 5 Sess. Cas. N. S. Sc. 1288. Second, by the common law the relation of husband and wife must continue to subsist; for which reason no alimony could be awarded upon a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, or a sentence of nullity; 1 Lee, Eccl. 621; 1 Blackf. 360; 1 Iowa, 440; 2 Hagg. Cons. 395; Saxt. 96; 13 Mass. 264; 5 Pick. 461; 18 Me. 308; 4 Barb. 295; 1 Gill & J. 463; 8 Yerg. 67. This rule, however, has been very generally changed by statute in this country; 2 Bishop, Marr. & D. § 376. Third, the wife must be separated from the bed and board of her husband by judicial decree; voluntary separation, for whatever cause, is insufficient. And, as a general rule, the alimony must be awarded by the same decree which grants the separation, or at least in the same suit, it not being generally competent to maintain a subsequent and independent suit for that purpose; 9 Watts, 90; 27 Miss. 630, 692; 21 Conn. 185; 1 Blackf. 360; 8 Yerg. 67. Fourth, the wife must not be the guilty party; 1 Paige, Ch. 276; 2 Barb. Ch. 311; 2 Ill. 242; Wright, Ohio, 514; 6 B. Monr. 496; 11 Ala. N. S. 763; 24 N. H. 564; but in some states there are statutes in terms which permit the court, in its discretion, to decree alimony to the guilty wife; 2 Bishop, Marr. & D. 378.

Alimony pendente lite is granted much more freely than permanent alimony, it being very much a matter of course to allow the former, unless the wife has sufficient separate property, upon the institution of a suit; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 773; 1 Curt. Eccl. 444; 2 B. Monr. 142; 2 Paige, Ch. 8; 11 id. 166; either for the purpose of obtaining a separation from bed and board; 1 Edw. Ch. 255; a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, 9 Mo. 539; 18 Me. 308; 1 Bland. Ch. 101; or a sentence of nullity, and whether the wife is plaintiff or defendant. The reason is, that it is improper for the parties to live in matrimonial cohabitation during the pendency of such a suit, whatever may be its final result; 1 Sandf. Ch. 483. Upon the same principle, the husband who has all the money, while the wife has none, is bound to furnish her, whether plaintiff or defendant, with the means to defray her expenses in the suit; otherwise, she would be denied justice; 2 Barb. Ch. 146; Walk. Ch. 421; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 335, 393. See 1 Jones, No. C. 528.

Alimony is not a sum of money nor a specific proportion of the husband's estate given absolutely to the wife, but it is a continuous allotment of sums payable at regular intervals, for her support from year to year; 6 Harr. & J. 485; 9 N. H. 309; 9 B. Monr. 49; 6 W. & S. 85; 75 N. C. 70; 12 Fla. 449; 62 Barb. 109; but in some states statutory allowances of a gross sum have been given to the wife under the name of alimony; see 9 N. H. 309; 21 Conn. 185; 9 Ohio, 37; 107 Mass. 428; 40 Mich. 493; 78 Ill. 402; 36 Wis. 362; 23 Ind. 370; 19 Kan. 159. It must secure to her as wife a maintenance separate from her husband: an absolute title in specific property, or a sale of a part of the husband's estate for her use, cannot be decreed or confirmed to her as alimony; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 322; 7 Dana, 181; 6 Harr. & J. 485; 4 Hen. & M. 587; 6 Ired. 293. Nor is alimony regarded, in any general sense, as the separate property of the wife. Hence she can neither alienate nor charge it; 4 Paige, Ch. 509; if she suffers it to remain in arrear for more than one year, she cannot generally recover such arrears; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 322; if she saves up any thing from her annual allowance, upon her death it will go to her husband; 6 W. & S. 85; 12 Ga. 201; if there are any arrears at the time of her death, they cannot be recovered by her executors; 8 Sim. 321; 8 Term, 545; 6 W. & S. 85; as the husband is only bound to support his wife during his own life, her right to alimony ceases with his death; 1 Root, 349; 4 Hayw. 75; 4 Md. Ch. Dec. 289; and as it is a maintenance for the wife living separate from her husband, it ceases upon reconciliation and cohabitation. So also its amount is liable at any time to be increased or diminished at the discretion of the court; 8 Sim. 315, 321, n.; 6 W. & S. 85. The preceding observations, however, respecting the nature and incidents of alimony should be received with some caution in this country, where the subject is so largely regulated by statute; 10 Paige, Ch. 20; 7 Hill, 207.

In respect to the amount to be awarded for alimony, it depends upon a great variety of considerations and is governed by no fixed rules; 4 Gill, 105; 7 Hill, N.Y. 207; 1 Green,

Ch. 90; 1 Iowa, 151; 10 Ga. 477. The ability of the husband, however, is a circumstance of more importance than the necessity of the wife, especially as regards permanent alimony; and in estimating his ability his entire income will be taken into consideration, whether it is derived from his property or his personal exertions; 3 Curt. Eccl. 3, 41; 1 Rich. Eq. 282; 2 B. Monr. 370; 5 Pick. 427; 1 R. I. 212. But if the wife has separate property; 2 Phill. 40; 2 Add. Eccl. 1, or derives income from her personal exertions, this will also be taken into account. The method of computation is, to add the wife's annual income to her husband's; consider what, under all the circumstances, should be allowed her out of the aggregate; then from the sum so determined deduct her separate income, and the remainder will be the annual allowance to be made her. There are various other circumstances, however, beside the husband's ability, to be taken into consideration: as, whether the bulk of the property came from the wife, or belonged originally to the husband; 2 Litt. Ky. 337; 4 Humphr. 510; or was accumulated by the joint exertions of both, subsequent to the marriage; 11 Ala. N. S. 763; 3 Harr. Del. 142; whether there are children to be supported and educated, and upon whom their support and education devolves; 3 Paige, Ch. 267; 4 id. 643; 3 Green, Ch. 171; 2 Litt. 337; 10 Ga. 477; the nature and extent of the husband's delictum; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 657; 2 Johns. Ch. 391; 4 Des. Eq. 183; 24 N. H. 564; the demeanor and conduct of the wife towards the husband who desires cohabitation; 7 Hill, 207; 5 Dana, 499; 15 Ill. 145; the condition in life, place of residence, health, and employment of the husband, as demanding a larger or smaller sum for his own support; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 526, 532; the condition in life, circumstances, health, place of residence, and consequent necessary expenditures of the wife; 5 Pick. 427; 4 Gill. 105; 11 Ala. N. S. 763; the age of the parties; 6 Johns. Ch. 91; 4 Gill, Md. 105; and whatever other circumstances may address themselves to a sound judicial discretion.

So far as any general rule can be deduced from the decisions and practice of the courts, the proportion of the joint income to be awarded for permanent alimony is said to range from one-half, where the property came from the wife (2 Phill. 235), to one-third, which is the usual amount; 29 L. J. Mat. Cas. 150; 4 Gill, 105; 8 Bosw. 640; 44 Ind. 106; 44 Ala. 437; or even less; 37 Ind. 164; 68 Ill. 17; 38 Ind. 139. In case of alimony pendente lite it is not usual to allow more than about one-fifth, after deducting the wife's separate income; 2 Bishop, Marr. & D. §§ 460, 463; and generally a less proportion will be allowed out of a large estate than a small one; for, though no such rule exists in respect to permanent alimony, there may be good reasons for giving less where the question is on alimony during the suit; when the wife should live in seclusion, and wants only a comfortable subsistence; 2 Phill. Eccl. 40; Bishop, Marr. & D. §§ 603–619. See 4 Thomp. & C. 574; 36 Iowa, 383; 39 Ind. 185; 29 Wis. 517.

ALIO INTUITU (Lat.). Under a different aspect. See DIVERSO INTUITU.

ALITER (Lat.). Otherwise; otherwise held or decided.

ALIUNDE (Lat.). From another place. Evidence aliunde (i. e. from without the will) may be received to explain an ambiguity in a will; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 291.

ALL FOURS. A metaphorical expression, signifying that a case agrees in all its circumstances with another.

ALLEGATA. A word which the emperors formerly signed at the bottom of their rescripts and constitutions; under other instruments they usually wrote signata or testata; Encyc. Lond.

ALLEGATA ET PROBATA (Lat., things alleged and proved). The allegations made by a party to a suit, and the proof adduced in their support.

It is a general rule of evidence that the allegata and probata must correspond; that is, the proof must at least be sufficiently extensive to cover all the allegations of the party; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 51; 2 Sumn. 206; 3 Mart. N. S. La. 636.

ALLEGATION. The assertion, declaration, or statement of a party of what he can prove.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The statement of the facts intended to be relied on in support of the contested suit.

It is applied either to the libel, or to the answer of the respondent, setting forth new facts, the latter being, however, generally called the defensive allegation. See 1 Browne, Civ. Law, 472, 473, n.

ALLEGATION OF FACULTIES. A statement made by the wife of the property of her husband, in order to her obtaining alimony; 11 Ala. N. S. 763; 3 Tex. 168.

To such an allegation the husband makes answer, upon which the amount of alimony is determined; 2 Lee, Eccl. 593; 3 Phill. Eccl. 387; or she may produce other proof, if necessary in consequence of his failure to make a full and complete disclosure; 2 Hagg. Cons. 199; 3 Knapp, 42; Bishop, Marr. & D. § 605.

ALLEGIANCE. The tie which binds the citizen to the government, in return for the protection which the government affords him.

Acquired allegiance is that binding a citizen who was born an alien, but has been naturalized.

Local allegiance is that which is due from an alien while resident in a country, in return for the protection afforded by the government.

Natural allegiance is that which results from the birth of a person within the territory and under the obedience of the government; 2 Kent, 42.

At common law, in England and America, natural allegiance could not be renounced except by permission of the government to which it was due; 1 Bla. Com. 370, 371; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 81; 3 Pet. 99, 242; but see 8 Op. Att.-Gen. U. S. 139; 9 id. 356. Held to be the law of Great Britain in 1868; Cockb. Nationality. It was otherwise in the civil law and in most continental nations. After many negotiations between the two countries, the rule has been changed in the United States by Act of July 27, 1868, and in England by Act of May 10, 1870. Whether natural allegiance revives upon the return of the citizen to the country of his allegiance, is an open question; Whart. Confl. L. § 6. See Cockb. Nationality; Whart. Confl. L.; 18 Am. L. Reg. 595, 565; Lawrence's Wheat. Int. L., App.; NATURALIZATION; EXPATRIATION.

ALLIANCE (Lat. ad, to, ligare, to bind). The union or connection of two persons or families by marriage; affinity.

In International Law. A contract, treaty, or league between two sovereigns or states, made to insure their safety and common defence.

Defensive alliances are those in which a nation agrees to defend her ally in case she is attacked.

Offensive alliances are those in which nations unite for the purpose of making an attack, or jointly waging the war against another nation.

ALLISION. Running one vessel against another.

To be distinguished from collision, which denotes the running of two vessels against each other.

The distinction is not very carefully observed, but collision is used to denote cases strictly of allision.

ALLOCATION. An allowance upon an account in the English Exchequer; Cowel.

Placing or adding to a thing; Encyc. Lond.

ALLOCATIONE FACIENDA. In English Law. A writ directed to the lord treasurer and barons of the exchequer, commanding that an allowance be made to an accountant for such moneys as he has lawfully expended in his office.

ALLOCATUR (Lat., it is allowed).

A Latin word formerly used to denote that a writ or order was allowed.

A word denoting the allowance by a master or prothonotary of a bill referred for his consideration, whether touching costs, damages, or matter of account; Lee, Dict.

ALLOCATUR EXIGENT. A writ of exigent which issued in a process of outlawry, upon the sheriff's making return to the original exigent that there were not five county courts held between the teste of the original writ and the return day; 1 Tidd, Pract. 128.

ALLODARII. Those who own allodial lands.

Those who have as large an estate as a subject can have; Coke, Litt. 1; Bacon, Abr. Tenure, A.

ALLODIUM (Sax. a, privative, and lode or leude, a vassal; that is, without vassalage).

An estate held by absolute ownership, without recognizing any superior to whom any duty is due on account thereof; 1 Washb. R. P. 16.

It is used in opposition to feodum or fief, which means property the use of which was bestowed upon another by the proprietor, on condition that the grantee should perform certain services for the grantor, and upon the failure of which the property should revert to the original possessor.

In the United States the title to land is essentially allodial, and every tenant in fee simple has an absolute and unqualified dominion over it; yet in technical language his estate is said to be in fee, a word which implies a feudal relation, although such a relation has ceased to exist in any form, while in several of the states the lands have been declared to be allodial; 44 Penn. 492; 2 id. 191; 10 Gill & J. 443; but see 7 Cush. 92; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 77, n.; 1 Washb. R. P. 41, 42; Sharswood's Lecture on Feudal Law, 1870. In some states, the statutes have declared lands to be allodial. See also 28 Wis. 367.

In England there is no allodial tenure, for all land is held mediately or immediately of the king; but the words tenancy in fee simple are there properly used to express the most absolute dominion which a man can have over his property; 3 Kent, 390; Cruise, Prelim. Dis. c. 1, § 13; 2 Bla. Com. 45.

ALLONGE (Fr.). A piece of paper annexed to a bill of exchange or promissory note, on which to write endorsements for which there is no room on the instrument itself; Pardessus, n. 343; Story, Prom. Notes, §§ 121, 151.

ALLOY (spelled also allay). An inferior metal used with gold and silver in making coin.

The amount of alloy to be used is determined by law, and is subject to changes from time to time.

ALLUVIO MARIS (Lat.). Soil formed by the washing-up of earth from the sea; Schultes, Aq. Rights, 138.

ALLUVION. That increase of the earth on a shore or bank of a river, or to the shore of the sea, by the force of the water, as by a current or by waves, which is so gradual that no one can judge how much is added at each moment of time; Inst. l. 2, t. 1, § 20; 3 B. & C. 91; Code Civil Annoté, n. 556; Ang. Watercourses, 53; 9 Cush. 551.

The proprietor of the bank increased by alluvion is entitled to the addition, this being regarded as the equivalent for the loss he may sustain from the breaking-in or encroachment of the waters upon his land; 1 Washb. R. P. 451; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 485; 1 Gill & J. 249; 4 Pick. 273; 17 id. 41; 1 Hawks. 56; 6 Mart. La. 19; 11 Ohio, 311; 18 La. 122; 5 Wheat. 380; 48 N. H. 9; 64 Ill. 56; 26 Ohio St. 40; 58 N. Y. 437; 18 Iowa, 549; 23 Wall. 46; 4 Wall. 502. The increase is to be divided among riparian proprietors by the following rule: measure the whole extent of their ancient line on the river, and ascertain how many feet each proprietor owned on this line; divide the newly-formed river-line into equal parts, and appropriate to each proprietor as many of these parts as he owned feet on the old line, and then draw lines from the points at which the proprietors respectively bounded on the old to the points thus determined as the points of division on the newly-formed shore. In applying this rule, allowance must be made for projections and indentations in the old line; 17 Pick. 41; 9 Me. 44; 51 N. H. 496; 17 Vt. 387; see 19 Mich. 325. Where the increase is instantaneous, it belongs to the sovereign, upon the ground that it was a part of the bed of the river of which he was proprietor; 17 Ala. 9; 2 Bla. Com. 269; the character of alluvion depends upon the addition being imperceptible; 3 B. & C. 91; 26 Wall. 46; 18 La. 122.

Sea-weed which is thrown upon a beach, as partaking of the nature of alluvion, belongs to the owner of the beach; 7 Metc. 322; 2 Johns. 322; 3 B. & Ad. 967. But sea-weed below low-water mark on the bed of a navigable river belongs to the public; 9 Conn. 38.

Alluvion differs from avulsion in this, that the latter is sudden and perceptible; 23 Wall. 46. See AVULSION. And see 2 Ld. Raym. 737; Cooper, Inst. l. 2, t. 1; Angell, Watercourses, § 53 et seq.; Phillimore, Int. Law, 255; 2 Am. Law Jour. 282, 393; Angell, Tide Waters, 249; Inst. 2. 1. 20; Dig. 41. 1. 7; id. 39. 2. 9; id. 6. 1. 23; id. 41. 1. 5; 1 Bouvier, Inst. 74.

ALLY. A nation which has entered into an alliance with another nation; 1 Kent, 69.

A citizen or subject of one of two or more allied nations; 4 C. Rob. Adm. 251; 6 id. 205; 2 Dall. 15; Dane, Abr., Index.

ALMS. Any species of relief bestowed upon the poor.

That which is given by public authority for the relief of the poor; Shelford, Mortm. 802, note (X); Haywood, Election, 263; 1 Dougl. El. Cas. 370; 2 id. 107.

ALNAGER (spelled also Ulnager). A public sworn officer of the king, who, by himself or his deputy, looks to the assize of woollen cloth made throughout the land, and to the putting on the seals for that purpose ordained; Statute 17 Ric. II. c. 2; Cowel; Blount; Termes de la Ley.

ALNETUM. A place where alder-trees grow; Domesday Book; Cowel; Blount.

ALTA PRODITIO. High treason.

ALTA VIA. The highway.

ALTARAGE. In Ecclesiastical Law. Offerings made on the altar; all profits which accrue to the priest by means of the altar; Ayliffe, Par. 61.

ALTERATION. A change in the terms of a contract made by the agreement of the parties thereto.

An act done upon an instrument in writing by a party entitled under it, without the consent of the other party, by which its meaning or language is changed.

The term is properly applied to the change in the language of instruments, and is not used of changes in the contract itself. And it is in strictness to be distinguished from the act of a stranger in changing the form or language of the instrument, which is called a spoliation. This latter distinction is not always observed in practice, however.

An alteration avoids the instrument; 11 Coke, 27; 5 C. B. 181; 4 Term, 320; 15 East, 29; 8 Cowen, 71; 2 Halst. 175; but not, it seems, if the alteration be not material; 2 N. H. 543; 8 id. 139; 10 Conn. 192; 5 Mass. 540; 6 id. 519; 20 Vt. 217; 3 Ohio St. 445; 5 Nebr. 233, 439; 12 N. H. 466. The insertion of such words as the law supplies is said to be not material; 15 Pick. 239; 3 Metc. Mass. 103; 29 Me. 298. As to whether tearing and putting on a seal is material; see 2 Pick. 451; 4 Gilm. 411; 11 M. & W. 778; 13 id. 343; 1 Parsons, Contr. 227. The question of materiality is one of law for the court; 1 N. H. 95; 2 id. 543; 11 Me. 115; 13 Pick. 165; 5 Miss. 231; and depends upon the facts of each case; L. R. 1 Ex. D. 176. The principle seems to be that a party "is discharged from his liability, if the altered instrument, supposed to be genuine, would operate differently to the original instrument, whether it be or be not to his prejudice;" Anson, Contr. 319; 5 E. & B. 89. For instances, see 74 N. Y. 307; 39 Mich. 182; 57 Ala. 379; 51 Iowa, 473; 66 Ind. 331; 69 Mo. 429. Alteration of a deed will not defeat a vested estate or interest acquired under the deed; 11 Mees. & W. 800; 2 H. Bla. 259; 23 Pick. 231; 1 Me. 73; 1 Watts, 236; 3 Barb. 404; see 18 Vt. 466; but as to an action upon covenants, has the same effect as alteration of an unsealed writing; 11 M. & W. 800; 23 Pick. 231; 2 Barb. Ch. 119. As to filling up blanks in deeds, see 6 M. & W. 200; 5 Mass. 538; 17 S. & R. 438; 20 Penn. 12; 4 M'Cord, 239; 7 Cowen, 484; 2 Dana, 142; 4 id. 191; 2 Wash. Va. 164; 2 Ala. 517; 10 Am. Dec. 267.

A spoliation by a third party without the knowledge or consent of a party to the instrument will not avoid an instrument even if material, if the original words can be restored with certainty; 1 Parsons, Contr. 224; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 566; but the material alteration of an instrument by a stranger, while it is in the custody of the promisee, avoids his rights under it; 11 Coke, 27 b; L. R. 10 Ex. 330; because one who "has the custody of an instrument made for his benefit, is bound to preserve it in its original state;" 13 M. & W. 352; 3 E. & B. 687. But see 23 Pick. 231.

Where there has been manifestly an alteration of a parol instrument, the party claiming under it is bound to explain the alteration; 6 Cush. 314; 9 Penn. 186; 11 N. H. 395; 13 id. 385; 2 La. 290; 3 Harr. Del. 404; 8 Miss. 414; 17 id. 375; 7 Barb. 564; 6 C. & P. 273; 7 Ad. & E. 444; 8 id. 215; 2 M. & G. 890, 909; see 11 Conn. 531; 9 Mo. 705; 2 Zabr. 424; 5 Harr. & J. 36; 20 Vt. 205; 13 Me. 386. As to the rule in case of deeds, see Coke, Litt. 225 b; 1 Kebl. 22; 5 Eng. L. & Eq. 349; 1 Zabr. 280.

ALTERNAT. A usage among diplomatists by which the rank and places of different powers, who have the same right and pretensions to precedence, are changed from time to time, either in a certain regular order, or one determined by lot. In drawing up treaties and conventions, for example, it is the usage of certain powers to alternate, both in the preamble and the signatures, so that each power occupies, in the copy intended to be delivered to it, the first place; Wheaton, Int. Law, § 157.

ALTERNATIVE. Allowing a choice between two or more things or acts to be done.

In contracts, a party has often the choice which of several things to perform. A writ is in the alternative which commands the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason wherefore he has not done it; Finch, 257; 3 Bla. Com. 273. The first mandamus is an alternative writ; 3 Bla. Com. 111.

ALTIUS NON TOLLENDI. In Civil Law. A servitude by which the owner of a house is restrained from building beyond a certain height.

ALTIUS TOLLENDI. In Civil Law. A servitude which consists in the right, to him who is entitled to it, to build his house as high as he may think proper. In general, every one enjoys this privilege, unless he is restrained by some contrary title.

ALTO ET BASSO. High and low.

This phrase is applied to an agreement made between two contending parties to submit all matters in dispute, alto et basso, to arbitration; Cowel.

ALTUM MARE. The high sea.

ALUMNUS. A foster-child.

ALVEUS (Lat.). The bed or channel through which the stream flows when it runs within its ordinary channel; Calvinus, Lex.

Alveus derelictus, a deserted channel; 1 Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 280.

AMALPHITAN TABLE. A code of sea laws compiled for the free and trading republic of Amalphi toward the end of the eleventh century; 3 Kent, 9.

It consists of the laws on maritime subjects which were or had been in force in countries bordering on the Mediterranean; and, on account of its being collected into one regular system, it was for a long time received as authority in those countries; 1 Azuni, Mar. Law, 376.

AMBACTUS (Lat. ambire, to go about). A servant sent about; one whose services his master hired out; Spelman, Gloss.

AMBASSADOR. In International Law. A public minister sent abroad by some sovereign state or prince, with a legal commission and authority to transact business on behalf of his country with the government to which he is sent.

Extraordinary are those employed on particular or extraordinary occasions, or residing at a foreign court for an indeterminate period; Vattel, Droit des Gens, l. 4, c. 6, §§ 70–79.

Ordinary are those sent on permanent missions.

An ambassador is a minister of the highest rank.

The United States have always been represented by ministers plenipotentiary, never having sent a person of the rank of an ambassador in the diplomatic sense; 1 Kent, 39, n.

Ambassadors, when acknowledged as such, are exempted absolutely from all allegiance, and from all responsibility to the laws; 7 Cranch, 138. If, however, they should be so regardless of their duty, and of the object of their privilege, as to insult or openly to attack the laws of the government, their functions may be suspended by a refusal to treat with them, or application can be made to their own sovereign for their recall, or they may be dismissed, and required to depart within a reasonable time. By fiction of law, an ambassador is considered as if he were out of the territory of the foreign power; and it is an implied agreement among nations, that the ambassador, while he resides in the foreign state, shall be considered as a member of his own country, and the government he represents has exclusive cognizance of his conduct and control of his person; Grotius, b. 2, c. 18, §§ 1–6.

Ambassadors' children born abroad are held not to be aliens; 7 Coke, 18 a. The persons of ambassadors and their domestic servants are exempt from arrest on civil process; 1 Burr. 401; 3 id. 1731; Cas. temp. Hardw. 5; Stat. 7 Anne, c. 12; Act of Cong. April 30, 1790, § 25.

Consult 2 Wash. C. C. 435; 7 Cranch, 138; 1 Kent, 14, 38, 182; 1 Bla. Com. 253; Rutherford, Inst. b. 2, c. 9; Vattel, b. 4, c. 8, § 113; Grotius, l. 2, c. 8, §§ 1, 3.

AMBIDEXTER (Lat.). Skilful with both hands.

Applied anciently to an attorney who took pay from both sides, and subsequently to a juror guilty of the same offence; Cowel.

AMBIGUITY (Lat. ambiguitas, indistinctness; duplicity). Duplicity, indistinctness, or uncertainty of meaning of an expression used in a written instrument.

Latent is that which arises from some collateral circumstance or extrinsic matter in cases where the instrument itself is sufficiently certain and intelligible.

Patent is that which appears on the face of the instrument; that which occurs when the expression of an instrument is so defective that a court of law which is obliged to put a construction upon it, placing itself in the situation of the parties, cannot ascertain therefrom the parties' intention; 4 Mass. 205; 4 Cranch, 167; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 292–300.

The term does not include mere inaccuracy, or such uncertainty as arises from the use of peculiar words, or of common words in a peculiar sense; Wigram, Wills, 174; 3 Sim. 24; 3 Mann. & G. 452; 8 Metc. 576; 13 Vt. 36; see 21 Wend. 651; and intends such expressions as would be found of uncertain meaning by persons of competent skill and information; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 298.

Latent ambiguities are subjects for the consideration of a jury, and may be explained by parol evidence; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 301; and see Wigram, Wills, 48; 2 Starkie, Ev. 565; 1 Stark. 210; 5 Ad. & E. 302; 6 id. 153; 3 B. & Ad. 728; 8 Metc. 576; 7 Cowen, 202; 1 Mas. 11. Patent ambiguity cannot be explained by parol evidence, and renders the instrument as far as it extends inoperative; 4 Mass. 205; 7 Cranch, 167; Jarman, Wills, 315.

AMBIT. A boundary line.

AMBITUS (Lat.). A space beside a building two and a half feet in width, and of the same length as the building; a space two and a half feet in width between two adjacent buildings; the circuit, or distance around; Cicero; Calvinus, Lex.

AMBULATORY (Lat. ambulare, to walk about). Movable; changeable; that which is not fixed.

Ambulatoria voluntas (a changeable will) denotes the power which a testator possesses of altering his will during his lifetime.

AMELIORATIONS. Betterments; 6 Low. Can. 294; 9 id. 503.

AMENABLE. Responsible; subject to answer in a court of justice; liable to punishment.

AMENDE HONORABLE. In English Law. A penalty imposed upon a person by way of disgrace or infamy, as a punishment for any offence, or for the purpose of making reparation for any injury done to another, as the walking into church in a white sheet, with a rope about the neck and a torch in the hand, and begging the pardon of God, or the king, or any private individual, for some delinquency.

In French Law. A punishment somewhat similar to this, and which bore the same name, was common in France; it was abolished by the law of the 25th of September, 1791; Merlin, Répert.

AMENDMENT. In Legislation. An alteration or change of something proposed in a bill or established as law.

Thus, the senate of the United States may amend money-bills passed by the house of representatives, but cannot originate such bills. The constitution of the United States contains a provision for its amendment; U. S. Const. art. 5.

In Practice. The correction, by allowance of the court, of an error committed in the progress of a cause.

Amendments, at common law, independently of any statutory provision on the subject, are in all cases in the direction of the court, for the furtherance of justice. Under statutes in modern practice, they are very liberally allowed in all formal and most substantial matters, either without costs to the party amending, or upon such terms as the court think proper to order.

An amendment, where there is something to amend by, may be made in a criminal as in a civil case; 12 Ad. & E. 217; 2 Pick. 550. But an indictment, which is a finding upon the oaths of the grand jury, can only be amended with their consent before they are discharged; 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 25, §§ 97, 98; 13 Pick. 200.

An information may be amended after demurrer; 4 Term, 457; 4 Burr. 2568.

AMENDS. A satisfaction given by a wrong-doer to the party injured, for a wrong committed; 1 Lilly, Reg. 81.

By statute 24 Geo. II. c. 44, in England, and by similar statutes in some of the United States, justices of the peace, upon being notified of an intended suit against them, may tender amends for the wrong alleged or done by them in their official character, and, if found sufficient, the tender debars the action; 5 S. & R. 209, 517; 4 Binn. 20; 6 id. 83.

AMERCEMENT. In Practice. A pecuniary penalty imposed upon an offender by a judicial tribunal.

The judgment of the court is, that the party be at the mercy of the court (sit in misericordia), upon which the afferors—or, in the superior courts, the coroner—liquidate the penalty. As distinguished from a fine, at the old law an amercement was for a lesser offence, might be imposed by a court not of record, and was for an uncertain amount until it had been affeered. Either party to a suit who failed was to be amerced pro clamore falso (for his false claim); but these amercements have been long since disused; 4 Bla. Com. 379; Bacon, Abr., Fines and Amercements.

The officers of the court, and any person who committed a contempt of court, was also liable to be amerced.

Formerly, if the sheriff failed in obeying the writs, rules, or orders of the court, he might be amerced; but this practice has been generally superseded by attachment. In some of the United States, however, the sheriff may, by statutory provision, be amerced for making a return contrary to the provision of the statute; Coxe, 136, 169; 2 South, 433; 3 Halst. 270; 5 id. 319; 6 id. 334; 1 Green, N. J. 159, 341; 2 id. 350; 1 Ohio, 275; 2 id. 503; 6 id. 452; Wright, Ohio, 720; 3 Ired. 407; 5 id. 385; Cam. & N. 477.

AMEUBLISSEMENT. A species of agreement which by a fiction gives to immovable goods the quality of movable; Merl. Rép.; 1 Low. Can. 25, 58.

AMI (Fr.). A friend. See PROCHEIN AMY.

AMICABLE ACTION. In Practice. An action entered by agreement of parties on the dockets of the courts.

This practice prevails in Pennsylvania. When entered, such action is considered as if it had been adversely commenced and the defendant had been regularly summoned.

AMICUS CURIÆ (Lat. a friend of the court).

In Practice. A friend of the court.

One who, for the assistance of the court, gives information of some matter of law in regard to which the court is doubtful or mistaken; Coke, 2d Inst. 178; 2 Viner, Abr. 475. The information may extend to any matter of which the court takes judicial cognizance; 8 Coke, 15.

Any one as amicus curiæ may make application to the court in favor of an infant, though he be no relation; 1 Ves. sen. 313; and see 11 Gratt. 656; 11 Tex. 698; 2 Mass. 215.

AMITA (Lat.). An aunt on the father's side.

Amita magna. A great-aunt on the father's side.

Amita major. A great-great-aunt on the father's side.

Amita maxima. A great-great-great-aunt, or a great-great-grandfather's sister; Calvinus, Lex.

AMITINUS. The child of a brother or sister; a cousin; one who has the same grandfather, but different father and mother; Calvinus, Lex.

AMITTERE CURIAM (Lat. to lose court).

To be excluded from the right to attend court; Stat. Westm. 2, c. 44.

AMITTERE LIBERAM LEGEM. To lose the privilege of giving evidence under oath in any court; to become infamous, and incapable of giving evidence; Glanville, 2.

If either party in a wager of battle cried "craven," he was condemned amittere liberam legem; 3 Bla. Com. 340.

AMNESTY. An act of oblivion of past offences, granted by the government to those who have been guilty of any neglect or crime, usually upon condition that they return to their duty within a certain period.

Express amnesty is one granted in direct terms.

Implied amnesty is one which results when a treaty of peace is made between contending parties; Vattel, l. 4, c. 2, §§ 20–22.

Amnesty and pardon are very different. The former is an act of the sovereign power, the object of which is to efface and to cause to be forgotten a crime or misdemeanor; the latter is an act of the same authority, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for the crime he has committed; 7 Pet. 160. Amnesty is the abolition and forgetfulness of the offence; pardon is forgiveness. A pardon is given to one who is certainly guilty, or has been convicted; amnesty, to those who may have been so.

Their effects are also different. That of pardon is the remission of the whole or a part of the punishment awarded by the law,—the conviction remaining unaffected when only a partial pardon is granted; an amnesty, on the contrary, has the effect of destroying the criminal act, so that it is as if it had not been committed, as far as the public interests are concerned.

Their application also differs. Pardon is always given to individuals, and properly only after judgment or conviction; amnesty may be granted either before judgment or afterwards, and it is in general given to whole classes of criminals or supposed criminals, for the purpose of restoring tranquillity in the state. But sometimes amnesties are limited, and certain classes are excluded from their operation.

The term amnesty belongs to international law, and is applied to rebellions which, by their magnitude, are brought within the rules of international law, but has no technical meaning in the common law, but is a synonym of oblivion, which, in the English law, is the synonym of pardon; 10 Ct. Cl. 397.

As to amnesty proclamation of 29 May, 1865, see 7 Ct. Cl. 444.

The general amnesty granted by President Johnson on Dec. 25, 1868, does not entitle one receiving its benefits to the proceeds of his property previously condemned and sold under the act of 17 July, 1862, the proceeds having been paid into the treasury; 95 U. S. 147. As to amnesty in cases arising out of the rebellion; 6 Wall. 766; 4 id. 333; 13 id. 128, 154; 16 id. 147; 7 Ct. Cl. 398, 443, 501, 595; 8 id. 457.

AMORTISE. To alien lands in mortmain.

AMORTIZATION. An alienation of lands or tenements in mortmain.

The reduction of the property of lands or tenements to mortmain.

AMOTION (Lat. amovere, to remove; to take away).

An unlawful taking of personal chattels out of the possession of the owner, or of one who has a special authority in them.

A turning out the proprietor of an estate in realty before the termination of his estate; 3 Bla. Com. 198, 199.

In Corporations. A removal of an official agent of a corporation from the station assigned to him, before the expiration of the term for which he was appointed; 8 Term, 356; 1 East, 562; 6 Conn. 532; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 238.

The term is distinguished from disfranchisement, which deprives a member of a public corporation of all rights as a corporator. Expulsion is the usual phrase in reference to loss of membership of private corporations. The term seems in strictness not to apply properly to cases where officers are appointed merely during the will of the corporation, and are superseded by the choice of a successor, but, as commonly used, includes such cases.

The right of amotion of an officer for just cause is a common law incident of all corporations; 1 Burr. 517; 2 Kent, 297; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 267; and in case of mere ministerial officers appointed durante bene placito, at the mere pleasure of those appointing him, without notice; Willcock, Mun. Corp. 253; 23 Mo. 22; see 1 Ventr. 77; 2 Show. 70; 11 Mod. 403; 9 Wend. N. Y. 394. Notice and an opportunity to be heard are requisite where the appointment is during good behavior, or the removal is for a specified cause; 32 Pa. 478; 8 B. Monr. 648; 3 Dutch. 265; 32 Ind. 74; 13 Mich. 346; 10 H. of L. Cas. 404. Mere acts, which are a cause for amotion, do not create a vacancy till the amotion takes place; 2 Green, N. J. 332; 5 Ind. 77; 12 Pick. 244.

The causes for amotion are said by Lord Mansfield (1 Burr. 538) to be:—"first, such as have no immediate relation to the office, but are in themselves of so infamous a nature as to render the offender unfit to execute any public franchise (but indictment and conviction must precede amotion for such causes, except where he has left the country before conviction; 1 B. & Ad. 936); second, such as are only against his oath and the duty of his office as a corporator, and amount to breaches of the tacit condition annexed to his office; third, such as are offences not only against the duty of his office, but also matter indictable at common law;" Dougl. 149; 2 Binn. 448; 50 Penn. 107.

Sufficient grounds of removal:—poverty and inability to pay taxes; 3 Salk. 229; total desertion of duty; Bull. N. P. 206; 1 Burr. 541; as to neglect of duty, see Ang. & Am. Corp. § 427; 2 Kyd, 65; 1 B. & Ad. 936; 4 Burr. 2004; 2 Stra. 819; 1 Vent. 146; habitual drunkenness; 3 Salk. 231; 3 Bulst. 190; official misconduct, in the office; 4 Burr. 1999. See 1 Q. B. 751.

II. c. 6, and by many others. But the civilians' relations in the ascending line, up to the great-grandfather's parents, and those above them, they term majores, which common lawyers aptly expound antecessors or ancestors, for in the descendants of like degree they are called posteriores; Cary, Litt. 45. The term ancestor is applied to natural persons. The words predecessors and successors are used in respect to the persons composing a body corporate. See 2 Bla. Cr. 503; 4 Bla. Com. 229. See 2 Russell, Crimes, 96; 2 Tyl. Com. 272. The Jews began their computation of time from the creation; the Romans, from the founding of Rome; the Mohammedans, from the Hegira, or flight of the Prophet; the Greeks reckoned by Olympiads; but Christians everywhere reckon from the birth of Jesus Christ.

In a complaint, the year of the alleged offence may be stated by means of the letters "A.D.," followed by words expressing the year; 4 Cush. 596. But an indictment or complaint which states the year of the commission of the offence in figures only, without prefixing the letters "A.D.," is insufficient; 5 Gray, 91 The letters "A.D." followed by figures expressing the year, have been held sufficient in several states; 3 Vt. 481; 1 Greene, Iowa, 418; 35 Me. 489; 1 Bennett & H. ANNUAL ASSAY. An annual trial of the gold and silver coins of the United States, to ascertain whether the standard fineness and weight of the coinage is maintained.

At every delivery of coins made by the coiner to a superintendent, it is made the duty of the superintendent, in the presence of the assayer, to take indiscriminately a certain number of pieces of each variety for the annual trial of coins, the number for gold coins being not less than one piece for each one thousand pieces, or any fractional part of one thousand pieces delivered; and for silver coins, one piece for each two thousand pieces, or any fractional part of two thousand pieces delivered. The pieces so taken shall be carefully sealed up in an envelope, properly labelled, stating the date of the delivery, the number and denominations of the pieces enclosed, and the amount of the delivery from which they were taken. These sealed parcels containing the reserved pieces shall be deposited in a pyx, designated for the purpose at each mint, which shall be under the joint care of the superintendent and assayer, and be so secured that neither can have access to its contents without the presence of the other, and the reserved pieces in their envelopes from the coinage of each mint shall be transmitted quarterly to the mint at Philadelphia. A record shall also be kept of the number and denomination of the pieces so delivered, a copy of which shall be transmitted quarterly to the director of the mint; Sect. 40, Act of Feb. 12, 1873; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3539.

To secure a due conformity in the gold and silver coins to their respective standards and weights, it is provided by law that an annual trial shall be made of the pieces reserved for this purpose at the mint and its branches, before the judge of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the comptroller of the currency, the assayer of the assay office at New York, and such other persons as the president shall from time to time designate for that purpose, who shall meet as assay commissioners, on the second Wednesday in February annually, at the mint in Philadelphia, to examine and test, in the presence of the director of the mint, the fineness and weight of the coins reserved by the several mints for this purpose, and may continue their meetings by adjournment, if necessary; and if a majority of the commissioners shall fail to attend at any time appointed for their meeting, then the director of the mint shall call a meeting of the commissioners at such other time as he may deem convenient, and if it shall appear that these pieces do not differ from the standard fineness and weight by a greater quantity than is allowed by law, the trial shall be considered and reported as satisfactory; but if any greater deviation from the legal standard or weight shall appear, this fact shall be certified to the president of the United States, and if, on a view of the circumstances of the case, he shall so decide, the officer or officers implicated in the error shall be thenceforward disqualified from holding their respective offices; § 48, Act of Feb. 12, 1873 (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3547); id. §§ 49, 50 (R. S. §§ 3548, 3549). As to the standard weight and fineness of the gold and silver coins of the United States, see sections of the last-cited act. The limit of allowance for wastage is fixed; § 43, Act of Feb. 12, 1873; R. S. § 3542.

For the purpose of securing a due conformity in the weight of the coins of the United States, the brass troy pound weight procured by the minister of the United States (Mr. Gallatin) at London, in the year 1827, for the use of the mint, and now in the custody of the director thereof, shall be the standard troy pound of the mint of the United States, conformably to which the coinage thereof shall be regulated; and it is made the duty of the director of the mint to procure and safely keep a series of standard weights corresponding to the aforesaid troy pound, and the weights ordinarily employed in the transactions of the mint shall be regulated according to such standards at least once in every year under his inspection, and their accuracy tested annually in the presence of the assay commissioners on the day of the annual assay; Act of Feb. 12, 1873; R. S. § 3548.

In England, the accuracy of the coinage is reviewed once in about every four years; no specific period being fixed by law. It is an ancient custom or ceremony, and is called the Trial of the Pyx; which name it takes from the pyx or chest in which the specimen-coins are deposited. These specimen-pieces are taken to be a fair representation of the whole money coined within a certain period. It having been notified to the government that a trial of the pyx is called for, the lord chancellor issues his warrant to summon a jury of goldsmiths, who, on the appointed day, proceed to the Exchange Office, Whitehall, and there, in the presence of several privy councillors and the officers of the mint, receive the charge of the lord chancellor as to their important functions, who requests them to deliver to him a verdict of their finding. The jury proceed to Goldsmiths' Hall, London, where assaying apparatus and all other necessary appliances are provided, and, the sealed packages of the specimen-coins being delivered to them by the officers of the mint, they are tried by weight, and then a certain number are taken from the whole and melted into a bar, from which the assay trials are made, and a verdict is rendered according to the results which have been ascertained; Encyc. Brit. titles Coinage, Mint, Money, Numismatics.

An annuity is different from a rent-charge, with which it is sometimes confounded,—the annuity being chargeable on the person merely, and so far personalty; while a rent-charge is something reserved out of realty, or fixed as a burden upon the estate in land; 2 Bla. Com. 40; Rolle, Abr. 226; 10 Watts, 127. An annuity in fee is said to be a personal fee; for, though transmissible, as is real estate of inheritance; Ambl. Ch. 782; liable to forfeiture as a hereditament; 7 Coke, 34 a; and not constituting assets in the hands of an executor, it lacks some other characteristics of realty. The husband is not entitled to curtesy, nor the wife to dower, in an annuity; Coke, Litt. 32 a. It cannot be conveyed by way of use; 2 Wils. 224; is not within the statute of frauds, and may be bequeathed and assigned as personal estate; 2 Ves. Sen. 70; 4 B. & Ald. 59; Roscoe, Real Act. 68, 35; 3 Kent, 460.

To enforce the payment of an annuity, an action of annuity lay at common law, but when brought for arrears must be before the annuity determines; Coke, Litt. 285. In case of the insolvency or bankruptcy of the debtor, the capital of the constituted annuity becomes exigible; La. Civ. Code, art. 2769; stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, §§ 54, 108; 5 Ves. 708; 4 id. 763; 1 Belt, Supp. Ves. 308, 431. See 1 Roper, Leg. 588; CHARGE.

ANNUUS REDITUS. A yearly rent; annuity; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 41; Reg. Orig. 158 b.

ANONYMOUS. Without name.

Books published without the name of the author are said to be anonymous. Cases in the reports of which the names of the parties are not given are said to be anonymous.

ANSWER. In Equity Pleading. A defence in writing, made by a defendant to the charges contained in a bill or information filed by the plaintiff against him in a court of equity.

In case relief is sought by the bill, the answer contains both the defendant's defence to the case made by the bill, and the examination of the defendant, on oath, as to the facts charged in the bill, of which discovery is sought; Gresley, Eq. Ev. 19; Jeremy's Mitf. Eq. Pl. 15, 16. These parts were kept distinct from each other in the civil law; their union, in chancery, has caused much confusion in equity pleading; Langd. Eq. Pl. 41; Story, Eq. Pl. § 850.

As to the form of the answer, it usually contains, in the following order: the title, specifying which of the defendants it is the answer of, and the names of the plaintiffs in the cause in which it is filed as answer; 8 Ves. 79; 11 id. 62; 1 Russ. 441; see 17 Ala. N. S. 89; a reservation to the defendant of all the advantages which might be taken by exception to the bill, which is mainly effectual in regard to other suits; Beames, Eq. Pl. 46; 1 Hempst. 715; 4 Md. 107; the substance of the answer, according to the defendant's knowledge, remembrance, information, and belief, in which the matter of the bill, with the interrogatories founded thereon, are answered, one after the other, together with such additional matter as the defendant thinks necessary to bring forward in his defence, either for the purpose of qualifying or adding to the case made by the bill, or to state a new case on his own behalf; a general traverse or denial of all unlawful combinations charged in the bill, and of all other matters therein contained.

The answer must be upon oath of the defendant, or under the seal of a corporation defendant; 21 Ga. 161; 1 Barb. 22; see 8 Gill, 170; unless the plaintiff waives the right; Story, Eq. Pl. § 824; 10 Cush. 58; 2 Gray, 431; in which case it must be generally signed by the defendant; 6 Ves. 171, 285; 10 id. 441; 14 id. 172; Cooper, Eq Pl. 326; and must be signed by counsel; Story, Eq. Pl. § 876; unless taken by commissioners; 4 McL. C. C. 136.

As to substance, the answer must be full and perfect to all the material allegations of the bill, confessing and avoiding, denying or traversing, all the material parts; Comyns, Dig. Chauncery, K, 2; 28 N. H. 440; 6 Rich. Eq. 1; 10 Ga. 449; 3 id. 302; not literally merely, but answering the substance of the charge; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 309; 28 Ala. N. S. 289; 16 Ga. 442; 1 Hulst. Ch. 60; and see 2 Stockt. Ch. 267; must be responsive; 3 Halst. Ch. 17; 13 Ill. 318; 21 Vt. 326; and must state facts, and not arguments, directly and without evasion; Story, Eq. Pl. § 852; 7 Ind. 661; 24 Vt. 70; 4 Ired. Eq. 390; 9 Mo. 605; without scandal; 19 Mc. 214; 18 Ark. 215; or impertinence; 3 Story, 13; 6 Beav. 558; 4 McL. 202; 8 Blackf. 124. See 10 Sim. 345; 13 id. 583; 17 Eng. L. & Eq. 509; 22 Ala. N. S. 221.

Insufficiency of answer is a ground for exception when some material allegation, charge, or interrogatory is unanswered or not freely answered; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 358; 7 How. 726; 6 Humphr. 18. See 10 Humphr. 280; 11 Paige, 543.

An answer may, in some cases, be amended; 2 Brown, Ch. 143; 2 Ves. 85; to correct a mistake of fact; Ambl. 292; 1 P. Will. 297; but not of law; Ambl. 65; nor any mistake in a material matter except upon evidence of surprise; 36 Me. 124; 3 Sumn. 583; 1 Brown, Ch. 319; and not, it seems, to the injury of others; Story, Eq. Pl. § 904; 1 Halst. Ch. 49. A supplemental answer may be filed to introduce new matter; 6 McL. 459; or correct mistakes; 2 Coll. 133; 15 Ala. N. S. 634; 7 Ga. 99; 8 Blackf. 24; which is considered as forming a part of the original answer. See DISCOVERY; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 244, 254; Cooper, Eq. Plead. 312, 327; Beames, Eq. Plead. 34; Bouv. Inst., Index. The 60th Equity Rule S. C. of U. S. provides for amendments.

For an historical account of the instrument, see 2 Brown, Civ. Law, 371, n.; Barton, Suit in Eq. See also Langdell's learned Summary of Equity, 41 to 52.

In Practice. The declaration of a fact by a witness after a question has been put, asking for it.

ANTAPOCHA (Lat.). An instrument by which the debtor acknowledges the debt due the creditor, and binds himself. A copy of the apocha signed by the debtor and delivered to the creditor; Calvinus, Lex.

ANTE JURAMENTUM (Lat.; called also Juramentum Calumniæ). The oath formerly required of the parties previous to a suit,—of the plaintiff that he would prosecute, and of the defendant that he was innocent; Jacobs, Dict.; Whishaw.

ANTE LITEM MOTAM. Before suit brought.

ANTE-NUPTIAL. Before marriage; before marriage, with a view to entering into marriage.

ANTEDATE. To put a date to an instrument of a time before the time it was written.

ANTENATI. (Lat. born before). Those born in a country before a change in its political condition such as to affect their allegiance.

The term is ordinarily applied by American writers to denote those born in this country prior to the declaration of Independence. It is distinguished from postnati, those born after the event.

As to the rights of British antenati in the United States, see Kirby, 413; 2 Halst. 305, 337; 2 Mass. 236, 244; 9 id. 460; 2 Pick. 394; 2 Johns. Cas. 29; 3 id. 109; 4 Johns. 75; 1 Munf. 218; 6 Call, 60; 3 Binn. 75; 4 Cranch, 321; 7 id. 603; 3 Pet. 99. As to their rights in England, see 7 Coke, 1, 27; 2 B. & C. 779; 5 id. 771; 1 Wooddesson, Lect. 382.

ANTI MANIFESTO. The declaration of the reasons which one of the belligerents publishes, to show that the war as to him is defensive. Wolffius, § 1187.

ANTICHRESIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. An agreement by which the debtor gives to the creditor the income from the property which he has pledged, in lieu of the interest on his debt; Guyot, Répert.

It is analogous to the Welsh mortgage of the common law. In the French law, if the income was more than the interest, the debtor was entitled to demand an account of the income, and might claim any excess; La. Civ. Code, 2085. See Dig. 20. 1. 11; id. 13. 7. 1; Code, 8. 28. 1; 11 Pet. 351; 1 Kent, 137.

ANTICIPATION (Lat. ante, before, capere, to take). The act of doing or taking a thing before its proper time.

In deeds of trust there is frequently a provision that the income of the estate shall be paid by the trustee as it shall accrue, and not by way of anticipation. A payment made contrary to such provision would not be considered as a discharge of the trustee.

ANTINOMIA. In Roman Law. A real or apparent contradiction or inconsistency in the laws; Merlin, Répert.

It is sometimes used as an English word, and spelled Antinomy.

ANTIQUA CUSTUMA (L. Lat. ancient custom). The duty due upon wool, woolfells, and leather, under the statute 3 Edw. I.

The distinction between antiqua and nova custuma arose upon the imposition of a new and increased duty upon the same articles, by the king, in the twenty-second year of his reign; Bacon, Abr., Smuggling, C. I.

ANTIQUA STATUTA. Also called Vetera Statuta. English statutes from the time of Richard First to Edward Third; Reeves, Hist. Eng. Law, 227.

ANTITHETARIUS. In old English Law. A man who endeavors to discharge himself of the crime of which he is accused, by retorting the charge on the accuser. He differs from an approver in this, that the latter does not charge the accuser, but others; Jacobs, Law Dict.

ANY TERM OF YEARS. In Criminal Law. In Massachusetts, this term, in the statutes relating to additional punishment, means a period of time not less than two years; 14 Pick. 40, 86, 90, 94.

APANAGE. In French Law. A portion set apart for the use and support of the younger ones, upon condition, however, that it should revert, upon failure of male issue, to his original donor and his heirs; Spelman, Gloss.

APARTMENT. A part of a house occupied by a person, while the rest is occupied by another, or others; 7 M. & G. 95; 6 Mod. 214; Woodfall, L. & T. 178. As to what is not an apartment, see 10 Pick. 293.

APEX JURIS (Lat. the summit of the law).

A rule of law of extreme refinement. A term used to denote a stricter application of the rules of law than is indicated by the phrase summum jus; 2 Caines, 117; 2 Stor. 143; 5 Conn. 334; 1 Burr. 341; 14 East, 522; 2 Parsons, Notes and Bills, ch. 25, § 11. See, also, Coke, Litt. 3046; Wingate, Max. 19; MAXIMS.

APOCÆ (Lat.) A writing acknowledging payments; acquittance.

It differs from acceptilation in this, that acceptilation imports a complete discharge of the former obligation whether payment be made or not; apocha, discharge only upon payment being made; Calvinus, Lex.

APOCRISARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A messenger; an ambassador.

Applied to legatees or messengers, as they carried the messages (ἀπόκρισις) of their principals. They performed several duties distinct in character, but generally pertaining to ecclesiastical affairs.

A messenger sent to transact ecclesiastical business and report to his superior; an officer who had charge of the treasury of a monastic edifice; an officer who took charge of opening and closing the doors; Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex.

Apocrisarius Cancellarius. An officer who took charge of the royal seal and signed royal despatches.

Called, also, secretarius, consiliarius (from his giving advice); referendarius; a consiliis (from his acting as counsellor); a responsis, or responsalis.

APOGRAPHIA. In Civil Law. An examination and enumeration of things possessed; an inventory; Calvinus, Lex.

APOPLEXY AND PARALYSIS. In Medical Jurisprudence. These terms imply an affection of the brain, and they are supposed to be only different degrees of the same affection.

In the first, the patient is suddenly deprived of all consciousness and sensibility, and so continues for a period varying from a few hours to a few days, when he dies or begins to recover. The recovery, however, may be imperfect, some mental impairment, or loss of power in the muscles of voluntary motion, remaining for a time, if not for life. Paralysis is a loss of power in some of the voluntary muscles—those of the face, eyes, arms, or legs. It may be the sequel of apoplexy, or it may be the primary affection, occurring very much like an attack of apoplexy.

The mental impairment succeeding these disorders presents no uniform characters, but varies indefinitely, in extent and severity, from a little failure of memory, to an entire abolition of all the intellectual faculties. The power of speech is usually more or less affected: it may be a slight difficulty of utterance, or an inability to remember certain words or parts of words, or an entire loss of the power of articulation. This feature may arise from two different causes—either from a loss of the power of language, or a loss of power in the muscles of the larynx. This fact must be borne in mind by the medical jurist, and there can be little difficulty in distinguishing between them. In the latter, the patient is as capable as ever of reading, writing, or understanding spoken language. In the former, he is unable to communicate his thoughts by writing, because they are disconnected from their articulate signs. He recognizes their meaning when he sees them, but cannot recall them by any effort of the perceptive powers. This affection of the faculty of language is manifested in various ways. One person loses all recollection of the names of persons and things, while other parts of speech are still at command. Another forgets every thing but substantives, and only those which express some mental quality or abstract idea. Another loses the memory of all words but yes or no. In these cases the patient is able to repeat the words on hearing them pronounced, but, after a second or third repetition, loses them altogether.

Wills and contracts are not unfrequently made in that equivocal condition of mind which sometimes follows an attack of apoplexy or paralysis; and their validity is contested on the score of mental incompetency. In cases of this kind there are generally two questions at issue, viz., the absolute amount of mental impairment, and the degree of foreign influence exerted upon the party. They cannot be considered independently of each other. Neither of them alone might be sufficient to invalidate an act, while together, even in a much smaller degree, they would have this effect.

In testing the mental capacity of paralytics, reference should be had to the nature of the act in question. The question is not, had the testator sufficient capacity to make a will? but, had he sufficient capacity to make the will in dispute? A capacity which might be quite adequate to a distribution of a little personal property among a few near relatives would be just as clearly inadequate to the disposition of a large estate among a host of relatives and friends possessing very unequal claims upon the testator's bounty. Here, as in other mental conditions, all that is required is mind sufficient for the purpose, neither more nor less. See DEMENTIA; DELIRIUM; IMBECILITY; MANIA. In order to arrive at correct conclusions on this point, we must be careful, among other things, not to confound the power to appreciate the terms of a proposition with the power to discern its relations and consequences.

In testing the mental capacity of one who has lost the power of speech, it is always difficult, and often impossible, to arrive at correct results. If the person is able and willing to communicate his thoughts in writing, his mental capacity may be clearly revealed. If not disposed to write, he may communicate by constructing words and sentences by the help of a dictionary or block letters. Failing in this, the only other intellectual manifestation possible is the expression of assent or dissent by signs to propositions made by others. Any of these means of communication, other than that of writing, must leave us much in the dark respecting the amount of intellect possessed by the party. If the act in question is complicated in its relations, if it is unreasonable in its dispositions, if it bears the slightest trace of foreign influence, it cannot but be regarded with suspicion. If the party has only the power of assenting or dissenting, it must always be impossible to decide whether this does not refer to the terms rather than the merits of the proposition; and, therefore, an act which bears no other evidence than this of the will of the person certainly ought not to be established. Besides, it must be considered that a will drawn up in this manner is, actually, not the will of the testator, since every disposition has originated in the minds of others; Ray, Med. Jur. 363. The phenomena and legal consequences of paralytic affections are extensively discussed in 1 Paige, Ch. 171; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 502, 577; 2 id. 84; 1 Curt. Eccl. 782; Parish Will Case, 4 vols. N. Y. 1858. And see DEATH; INSANITY.

APOSTLES. Brief letters of dismissal granted to a party who takes an appeal from the decision of an English court of admiralty, stating the case, and declaring that the record will be transmitted; 2 Brown, Civ. and Adm. Law, 438; Dig. 49. 6.

This term was used in the civil law. It is derived from apostolos, a Greek word, which signifies one sent, because the judge from whose sentence an appeal was made, sent to the superior judge these letters of dismission, or apostles; Merlin, Répert., mot Apôtres; 1 Parsons, Marit. Law, 745; 1 Blatchf. C. C. 663.

APOSTOLI. In Civil Law. Certificates of the inferior judge from whom a cause is removed, directed to the superior; Dig. 49. 6. See APOSTLES.

Those sent as messengers; Spelman, Gloss.

APPARATOR (Lat.). A furnisher; a provider.

The sheriff of Bucks had formerly a considerable allowance as apparator comitatus (apparator for the county); Cowel.

APPARENT (Lat. apparens). That which appears; that which is manifest; what is proved. It is required that all things upon which a court must pass should be made to appear, if matter in pays, under oath; if matter of record, by the record. It is a rule that those things which do not appear are to be considered as not existing: de non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio; Broom, Max. 20. What does not appear does not exist: quod non apparet, non est; 8 Cow. N. Y. 600; 1 Term, 404; 12 Mees. & W. 316.

APPARITOR (Lat.). An officer or messenger employed to serve the process of the spiritual courts in England and summon offenders: Cowel.

APPARURA (Lat.). In Old English Law. Furniture or implements.

Carucariæ apparura, plough-tackle; Cowel; Jacob, Dict.

APPEAL (Fr. appeler, to call). In Criminal Practice. A formal accusation made by one private person against another of having committed some heinous crime; 4 Bla. Com. 312.

Anciently, appeals lay for treason as well as felonies; but appeals for treason were abolished by statutes 5 Edw. III. c. 9, 25 Edw. III. c. 24, and 1 Hen. IV. c. 14, and for all other crimes by the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 46.

An appeal lay for the heir male for the death of his ancestors; for the widow while unmarried for the death of her husband; and by the party injured, for certain crimes, as robbery, rape, mayhem, etc.; Coke, Litt. 287 b.

It might be brought at any time within a year and a day, even though an indictment had been found. If the appellee was found innocent, the appellor was liable to imprisonment for a year, a fine, and damages to the appellee.

The appellee might claim wager of battle. This claim was last made in the year 1818 in England; 1 B. & Ald. 405. And see 2 W. Blackst. 718; 5 Burr. 2643, 2793; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 312–318, and notes.

In Practice. The removal of a cause from a court of inferior to one of superior jurisdiction, for the purpose of obtaining a review and retrial; Ellsworth, C. J., 3 Dall. 321; 7 Cranch, 110; 10 Pet. 205; 14 Mass. 414; 1 S. & R. 78; 1 Binn. 219; 3 id. 48.

It is a civil-law proceeding in its origin, and differs from a writ of error in this, that it subjects both the law and the facts to a review and a retrial, while a writ of error is a common-law process which removes matter of law only for re-examination; 7 Cranch, 111.

On an appeal the whole case is examined and tried, as if it had not been tried before, while on a writ of error the matters of law merely are examined, and judgment reversed if any errors have been committed; Dane, Abr. Appeal. The word is used, however, in the sense here given both in chancery and in common-law practice; 16 Md. 282; 20 How. 198; and in criminal as well as in civil law; 9 Ind. 569; 6 Fla. 679.

An appeal generally supersedes the judgment of the inferior court so far that no action can be taken upon it until after the final decision of the cause; 26 Barb. N. Y. 55; 5 Fla. 234; 4 Iowa, 230; 5 Wisc. 185.

The rules of the various states regulating appeals are too numerous and various, and too much matters of mere local practice, to be given here. For the practice in federal courts, see Phillips, Pr. in S. C. of U. S.; Rev. Stat. U. S., title Judiciary; and COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

In Legislation. The act by which a member of a legislative body who questions the correctness of a decision of the presiding officer, or "chair," procures a vote of the body upon the decision. In the House of Representatives of the United States the question on an appeal is put to the House in this form: "Shall the decision of the chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

If the appeal relates to an alleged breach of decorum, or transgression of the rules of order, the question is taken without debate. If it relates to the admissibility or relevancy of a proposition, debate is permitted, except when a motion for the previous question is pending.

APPEARANCE. In Practice. A coming into court as party to a suit, whether as plaintiff or defendant.

The formal proceeding by which a defendant submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court.

Appearance anciently meant an actual coming into court, either in person or by attorney. It is so used both in the civil and the common law. It is indicated by the word "comes," "and the said C. D. comes and defends," and, in modern practice, is accomplished by the entry of the name of the attorney of the party in the proper place on the record, or by filing bail where that is required. It was a formal matter, but necessary to give the court jurisdiction over the person of the defendant.

A time is generally fixed within which the defendant must enter his appearance; usually the quarto die post. If the defendant failed to appear within this period, the remedy in ancient practice was by distress infinite when the injuries were committed without force, and by capias or attachment when the injuries were committed against the peace, that is, were technical trespasses. But, until appearance, the courts could go no further than apply this process to secure appearance. See PROCESS.

In modern practice, a failure to appear generally entitles the plaintiff to judgment against the defendant by default. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

It may be of the following kinds:—

Compulsory.—That which takes place in consequence of the service of process.

Conditional.—One which is coupled with conditions as to its becoming general.

De bene esse.—One which is to remain an appearance, except in a certain event. See DE BENE ESSE.

General.—A simple and absolute submission to the jurisdiction of the court.

Gratis.—One made before the party has been legally notified to appear.

Optional.—One made where the party is not under any obligation to appear, but does so to save his rights. It occurs in chancery practice, especially in England.

Special.—That which is made for certain purposes only, and does not extend to all the purposes of the suit.

Subsequent.—An appearance by the defendant after one has already been entered for him by the plaintiff. See Daniell, Ch. Pract.

Voluntary.—That which is made in answer to a subpœna or summons, without process; 1 Barbour, Ch. Pract. 77.

How to be made.—On the part of the plaintiff no formality is required. On the part of the defendant it may be effected by making certain formal entries in the proper office of the court, expressing his appearance; 5 Watts & S. 215; 2 Ill. 250; 3 id. 462; 15 Ala. 352; 18 id. 272; 6 Mo. 50; 7 id. 411; 17 Vt. 531; 2 Ark. 26; or, in case of arrest, is effected by giving bail; or by putting in an answer; 4 Johns. Ch. 94; or a demurrer; 6 Pet. 323; or notice to the other side; 4 Johns. Ch. 94.

By whom to be made.—In civil cases it may in general be made either by the party or his attorney; and in those cases where it is said that the party must appear in person, it is sufficient if it is so entered on the record; although, in fact, the appearance is by attorney; 2 Johns. N. Y. 192; 14 id. 417.

An appearance by attorney is, in strictness, improper where a party wishes to plead to the jurisdiction of the court, because the appointment of an attorney of the court admits its jurisdiction; 1 Chitty, Plead. 398; 2 Wms. Saund. 209 b; and is insufficient in those cases where the party has not sufficient capacity to appoint an attorney. Thus, an idiot can appear only in person, and as a plaintiff he may sue in person or by his next friend.

An infant cannot appoint an attorney; he must, therefore, appear by guardian or prochein ami.

A lunatic, if of full age, may appear by attorney; if under age, by guardian only. 2 Wms. Saund. 335; id. 232 (a), n. (4).

A married woman, when sued without her husband, should defend in person; 1 Wms. Saund. 209 b. And see 1 Chitty, Plead. 398.

In criminal cases the personal presence in court of the defendant is often necessary; see 2 Burr. 931; id. 1786; 1 W. Blackst. 198.

The effect of an appearance by the defendant is, that both parties are considered to be in court.

In criminal cases the personal appearance of the accused is often necessary. The verdict of the jury must, in all cases of treason and felony, be delivered in open court, in the presence of the defendant. In cases of misdemeanor, the presence of the defendant during the trial is not essential; Bacon, Abr. Verdict, B; Archbold, Crim. Plead., 14th ed. 149.

No motion for a new trial is allowed unless the defendant, or if more than one, the defendants who have been convicted, are present in court when the motion is made; 3 Maule & S. 10, note; 17 Q. B. 503; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 372, note. But this rule does not apply where the offence of which the defendant has been convicted is punishable by a fine only; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 459; or where the defendant is in custody on criminal process; 4 B. & C. 329. On a charge of felony, a party suing out a writ of error must appear in person to assign errors; and it is said that if the party is in custody in the prison of the county or city in which the trial has taken place, he must be brought up by habeas corpus, for the purpose of this formality, which writ must be moved for on affidavit. This course was followed in 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 287; 17 Q. & B. 317; 8 E. & B. 54; 1 D. & B. 375.

Where a defendant is not liable to personal punishment, but to a fine, sentence may be pronounced against him in his absence; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 695; 2 Burr. 931; 3 id. 1780.

APPELLANT. In Practice. He who makes an appeal from one jurisdiction to another.

APPELLATE JURISDICTION. In Practice. The jurisdiction which a superior court has to re-hear causes which have been tried in inferior courts. See JURISDICTION.

APPELLATIO. (Lat.). An appeal.

APPELLEE. In Practice. The party in a cause against whom an appeal has been taken.

APPELLOR. A criminal who accuses his accomplices; one who challenges a jury.

APPENDANT (Lat. ad, to, pendere, to hang). Annexed or belonging to something superior; an incorporeal inheritance belonging to another inheritance.

Appendant in deeds includes nothing which is substantial corporeal property, capable of passing by feoffment and livery of seisin. Coke, Litt. 121; 4 Coke, 86; 8 B. & C. 150; 6 Bingh. 150. A matter appendant must arise by prescription; while a matter appurtenant may be created at any time; 2 Viner, Abr. 594; 3 Kent, 404.

APPENDITIA. (Lat. appendere, to hang at or on). The appendages or pertinances of an estate; the appurtenances to a dwelling, etc.; thus, pent-houses are the appenditia domus.

APPLICATION. (Lat. applicare). The act of making a request for something.

A written request to have a certain quantity of land at or near a certain specified place; 3 Binn. 21; 5 id. 151.

The use or disposition made of a thing.

In Insurance. The preliminary statement made by a party applying for an insurance on life, or against fire. It usually consists of written answers to interrogatories proposed by the company applied to, respecting the proposed subject. It corresponds to the "representations" preliminary to maritime insurance. It is usually referred to expressly in the policy as being the basis or a part of the contract, and this reference creates in effect a warranty of the truth of the statements. If the policy does not make the answers a part of the contract, this will have only the effect of representation; May, Ins. § 159; 50 Penn. 331. A mere reference in the policy to the application does not make its answers warranties; it is a question of intention; 7 Wend. 72; 22 Conn. 235; 18 Ind. 352; the courts tend to consider the answers representations, rather than warranties, except in a clear case; 98 Mass. 381; 31 Iowa, 216; 4 R. I. 141. An oral misrepresentation of a material fact will defeat a policy on life or against fire, no less than in maritime insurance on the ground of fraud; 1 Phillips, Ins. § 650. See REPRESENTATION; MISREPRESENTATION.

Of Purchase-Money. The disposition made of the funds received by a trustee on a sale of real estate held under the trust.

Where there is a general power to sell for debts, or debts and legacies, the purchaser need not look to the application of the purchase-money; 2 Rawle, 392; 13 Pick. 393; 1 Bess. 69; 5 Ired. Eq. 357; 3 Mas. 178; so as to legacies where there is a trust for reinvestment; 8 Wheat. 421; 6 Hamm. 114; where the trust is to pay specified debts, the purchaser must see to the application of the purchase-money; 3 Mas. 178; 10 Penn. 267; 1 Pars. Eq. 57; 6 Gill, 487. See note to Elliot v. Merryman, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 74; Perry, Trusts; Adams, Eq. (by Phillips) *155. The doctrine is abolished in England by 23 and 24 Vict. c. 145, § 29.

Of Payments. See APPROPRIATION.

APPOINTEE. A person who is appointed or selected for a particular purpose; as, the appointee under a power is the person who is to receive the benefit of the power.

APPOINTMENT. The designation of a person, by the person or persons having authority therefor, to discharge the duties of some office or trust.

The making out a commission is conclusive evidence of an appointment to an office for holding which a commission is required; 1 Cranch, 137; 10 Pet. 343.

As distinguished from an election, it seems that an appointment is generally made by one person, or a limited number acting with delegated powers, while an election is made by all of a class.

The word is sometimes used in a sense quite akin to this, and apparently derived from it as denoting the right or privilege conferred by an appointment: thus, the act of authorizing a man to print the laws of the United States by authority, and the right thereby conveyed, are considered such an appointment, but the right is not an office; 17 S. & R. 29, 233. And see 3 id. 157; Cooper, Justin. 599, 604.

In Chancery Practice. The exercise of a right to designate the person or persons who are to take the use of real estate; 2 Washb. R. P. 302.

By whom to be made.—It must be made by the person authorized; 2 Bouv. Inst. § 1922; who may be any person competent to dispose of an estate of his own in the same manner; 4 Kent, 324; including a married woman; 1 Sugd. Pow. 182; 3 C. B. 578; 5 id. 741; 3 Johns. Ch. 523; 2 Dall. 201; 8 How. 27; even though her husband be the appointee; 21 Penn. 72; or an infant, if the power be simply collateral; 2 Washb. R. P. 317. And see 1 Sugd. Pow. ed. 1856, 211. Where two or more are named as donees, all must, in general, join; 2 Washb. R. P. 322; 14 Johns. 553; but where given to several who act in a trust capacity, as a class, it may be by the survivors; 10 Pet. 564; 13 Metc. Mass. 220; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1062, n.

How to be made.—A very precise compliance with the directions of the donor is necessary; 2 Ves. Ch. 231; 1 P. Will. 740; 3 East, 410, 430; 1 Jac. & W. Ch. 93; 6 Mann. & G. 386; 8 How. 30; having regard to the intention, especially in substantial matters; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 306; 2 Washb. R. P. 318; Ambl. Ch. 555; 3 Ves. Ch. 421. It may be a partial execution of the power only, and yet be valid; 4 Cruise, Dig. 205; or, if excessive, may be good to the extent of the power; 2 Ves. Sen. 640; 3 Dru. & War. 339. It must come within the spirit of the power; thus, if the appointment is to be to and amongst several, a fair allotment must be made to each; 4 Ves. Ch. 771; 2 Vern. Ch. 513; otherwise, where it is made to such as the donee may select; 5 Ves. Ch. 857.

The effect of an appointment is to vest the estate in the appointee, as if conveyed by the original donor; 2 Washb. R. P. 320; 2 Crabb, R. P. 726, 741; 2 Sugd. Pow. 22; 11 Johns. 169. See POWER. Consult 2 Washb. R. P. 298, 337; Tudor, Lead. Cas., Chance, Pow.; 4 Greenl. Cruise, Dig.

APPOINTOR. One authorized by the donor, under the statute of uses, to execute a power; 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1923.

APPORTIONMENT. The division or distribution of a subject-matter in proportionate parts; Coke, Litt. 147; 1 Swanst. 37, n.; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 475 a.

Of Contracts. The allowance, in case of the partial performance of a contract, of a proportionate part of what the party would have received as a recompense for the entire performance of the contract.

Where the contract is to do an entire thing for a certain specified compensation, there can be no apportionment; 9 B. & C. 92; 2 Parsons, Contr. 520; 82 Penn. 267; 44 Cal. 18; 38 Conn. 290; 4 Heisk. 590; but see contra, 36 Tex. 1. A contract for the sale of goods is entire; 9 B. & C. 386; 60 Penn. 182; 6 Oreg. 248; but where there has been a part delivery of the goods, the buyer is liable on a quantum valebant if he retain the part delivered; 9 B. & C. 386; 10 id. 441; 18 Pick. 555 (but contra in New York and Ohio; 13 Wend. 258; 5 Denio, 46; 16 Ohio, 238); though he may return the part delivered and escape liabilities. A contract consisting of several distinct items, and founded on a consideration apportioned to each item, is several; 66 Penn. 351. The question of entirety is one of intention, to be gathered from the contract; 2 Pars. Contr. *521. Where no compensation is fixed, the contract is usually apportionable; 3 B. & Ad. 404; Cutter v. Powel, 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. note (q. v. on this whole subject).

Annuities, at common law, are not apportionable; but by statute 11 Geo. II. it was enacted that annuities, rents, dividends, etc., and all other payments of every description made payable at fixed periods, should be apportioned; 2 P. Wms. 501; 3 Atk. 260; 2 W. Bla. 843; 17 S. & R. 173; 3 Kent, 471. This has been adopted by statute or decision in many of the states.

Wages are not apportionable where the hiring takes place for a definite period; 6 Term, 320; 5 B. & P. 651; 11 Q. B. 755; 19 Pick. 528; 12 Metc. Mass. 286; 28 Ill. 257; 34 Me. 102; 13 Johns. 365; 14 Wend. 257; 12 Vt. 49; 1 Ind. 257; 19 Ala. N. s. 54; 44 Conn. 333. See 2 Pick. 332; 17 Me. 38; 11 Vt. 273; 3 Denio, 175; contra, 6 N. H. 481.

Of Incumbrances. Determining the amounts which each of several parties interested in an estate shall pay towards the removal or in support of the burden of an incumbrance.

As between a tenant for life and the remainder man, the tenant's share is limited to keeping down the interest; but not beyond the amount of rent accruing; 46 Vt. 45; 31 E. L. & E. 345; if the principal is paid, the tenant for life must pay a gross sum equivalent to the amount of all the interest he would pay, making a proper estimate of his chances of life; 1 Washb. R. P. 96; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 487. See 2 Dev. & B. Eq. 179; 5 Johns. Ch. 482; 10 Paige, Ch. 71, 158; 13 Pick. 158; 27 Barb. 49.

Of Rent. The allotment of their shares in a rent to each of several parties owning it.

The determination of the amount of rent to be paid when the tenancy is terminated at some period other than one of the regular intervals for the payment of rent.

An apportionment of rent follows upon every transfer of a part of the reversion; 17 Mass. 439; 22 Wend. 121; 22 Penn. 144; see 18 N. Y. 529; or where there are several assignees, as in case of a descent to several heirs; 3 Watts, 394; 13 Ill. 25; 25 Wend. 456; 10 Coke, 128; Comyn, Land. & Ten. 422; where a levy for debt is made on a part of the reversion, or is set off to a widow for dower; 1 Rolle, Abr. 237; but whoever owns at the time the rent falls due is entitled to the whole; 7 Md. 368; 3 Metc. Mass. 76; 1 Washb. R. P. 98, 337. See Williams, Ex. 709.

Rent is not, at common law, apportionable as to time; Smith, Land. & T. 134; Taylor, Land. & T. §§ 384–387; 3 Kent, 470; 5 W. & S. 432; 13 N. H. 343; 3 Bradf. Surr. 359. It is apportionable by statute 11 Geo. II. c. 19, § 15; and similar statutes have been adopted in this country to some extent; 2 Washb. R. P. 289; 13 N. H. 343; 14 Mass. 94; 1 Hill, Abr. c. 16, § 50.

Consult also 3 Kent, 469, 470; 2 Parsons, Contr. 33; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 475 a; Williams, Exec. 709; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1675.

Of Representatives. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several states according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each state, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for president and vice-president of the United States, representatives in congress, the executive and judicial officers of a state, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such state, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced to the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such state; Art. 14, § 2, U. S. Const.

The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct. The number of representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand; but each state shall have at least one representative; U. S. Const. Art. 1, § 2.

The Revised Statutes of the United States (1878), § 20, provide that from and after March 3, 1873, the house of representatives shall be composed of two hundred and ninety-two members, and provide the number to which each state is entitled. Upon the admission of a new state, the representatives to be assigned to it are in addition to the above two hundred and ninety-two; id. § 21.

Under the present constitution, representatives' apportionments have been made as follows. The first house of representatives consisted of sixty-five members, or one for every thirty thousand of the representative population. By the census of 1790, it consisted of one hundred and six representatives, or one for every thirty-three thousand; by the census of 1800, one hundred and forty-two representatives, or one for every thirty-three thousand; by the census of 1810, one hundred and eighty-three representatives, or one for every thirty-five thousand; by the census of 1820, two hundred and thirteen representatives, one for every forty thousand; by the census of 1830, two hundred and forty-two representatives, or one for every forty-seven thousand seven hundred; by the census of 1840, two hundred and twenty-three representatives, or one for every seventy thousand six hundred and eighty; by the census of 1850, and under the act of May 23, 1850, the number of representatives was increased to two hundred and thirty-three, or one for every ninety-three thousand four hundred and twenty-three of the representative population; Sheppard's Const. Text Book, 65; Acts 30 July, 1852, 10 Stat. 25; May 11, 1858, 11 Stat. 285; 14 Feb. 1859, 11 Stat. 383.

Under the census of 1860, the ratio was ascertained to be for one hundred and twenty-four thousand one hundred and eighty-three upon the basis of two hundred and thirty-three members; but by the act of 4th March, 1862, the number of representatives was increased to two hundred and forty-one, by allowing one additional representative to each of the following states—Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Vermont, and Rhode Island.

APPOSAL OF SHERIFFS. In English Law. The charging them with money received upon account of the Exchequer; 22 & 23 Car. II.; Cowel.

APPOSER. In English Law. An officer of the Exchequer, whose duty it was to examine the sheriffs in regard to their accounts handed in to the exchequer. He was also called the foreign apposer.

APPOSTILLE. In French Law. An addition or annotation made in the margin of a writing; Merlin, Répert.

APPRAISEMENT. A just valuation of property.

Appraisements are required to be made of the property of persons dying intestate, of insolvents, and others; an inventory (q. v.) of the goods ought to be made, and a just valuation put upon them. When property real or personal is taken for public use, an appraisement of it is made, that the owner may be paid its value.

APPRAISER. In Practice. A person appointed by competent authority to appraise or value goods or real estate.

APPREHENSION. In Practice. The capture or arrest of a person on a criminal charge.

The term apprehension is applied to criminal cases, and arrest to civil cases; as, one having authority may arrest on civil process, and apprehend on a criminal warrant. See ARREST.

APPRENTICE. A person bound in due form of law to a master, to learn from him his art, trade, or business, and to serve him during the time of his apprenticeship; 1 Bla. Com. 426; 2 Kent, 211; 3 Rawle, 307; 4 Term, 735; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

Formerly the name of apprentice en la ley was given indiscriminately to all students of law. In the reign of Edward IV. they were sometimes called apprentici ad barras. And in some of the ancient law-writers the terms apprentice and barrister are synonymous; Coke, 2d Inst. 214; Eunomus, Dial. 2, § 53, p. 155.

APPRENTICESHIP. A contract by which one person who understands some art, trade, or business, and is called the master, undertakes to teach the same to another person, commonly a minor, and called the apprentice, who, on his part, is bound to serve the master, during a definite period of time, in such art, trade, or business.

The term during which an apprentice is to serve; Pardessus, Droit Comm. n. 34.

At common law, an infant may bind himself apprentice by indenture, because it is for his benefit; 5 M. & S. 257; 6 Term, 652; 5 D. & R. 339. But this contract, both in England and in the United States, on account of its liability to abuse, has been regulated by statute, and is not binding upon the infant unless entered into by him with the consent of the parent or guardian (the father, if both parents be alive, being the proper party to such consent; 8 W. & S. 339), or by the parent and guardian for him, with his consent, such consent to be made a part of the contract; 2 Kent, 261; 8 Johns. 328; 14 id. 374; 2 Penn. 977; 4 Watts, 80; 43 Me. 458; 12 N. H. 437; 4 Leigh, 493; or, if the infant be a pauper, by the proper authorities without his consent; 3 S. & R. 158; 32 Me. 299; 3 Jones, No. C. 21; 15 B. Monr. 499; 30 N. H. 104; 5 Gratt. 285. The contract need not specify the particular trade to be taught, but is sufficient if it be a contract to teach such manual occupation or branch of business as shall be found best suited to the genius or capacity of the apprentice; 9 Barb. 309; 1 Sandf. 672. In a common indenture of apprenticeship the father is bound for the performance of the covenants by the son; Dougl. 500; 3 B. & Ald. 59. But to an action of covenant against the father for the desertion of the son, it is a sufficient answer that the master has abandoned the trade which the son was apprenticed to learn, or that he has driven the son away by cruel treatment; 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 412; 4 Mass. 480; 2 Pick. 357.

This contract must generally be entered into by indenture or deed; 1 Salk. 68; 4 M. & S. 383; 10 S. & R. 416; 1 Vt. 69; 18 Conn. 337; and is to continue, if the apprentice be a male, only during minority, and if a female, only until she arrives at the age of eighteen; 2 Kent, 264; 5 Term, 715. The English statute law as to binding out minors as apprentices to learn some useful art, trade, or business, has been generally adopted in the United States, with some variations which cannot be noticed here; 2 Kent, 264. As to the provisions of the English statutes, see 1 Harrison, Dig. 206–227.

The duties of the master are to instruct the apprentice by teaching him the knowledge of the art which he has undertaken to teach him, though he will be excused for not making a good workman if the apprentice is incapable of learning the trade, the burden of proving which is on the master; 2 Dana, 131; 5 Metc. Mass. 37; 1 Dev. & B. 402. He ought to watch over the conduct of the apprentice, giving him prudent advice and showing him a good example, and fulfilling towards him the duties of a father, as in his character of master he stands in loco parentis. He is also required to fulfil all the covenants he has entered into by the indenture. He must not abuse his authority, either by bad treatment or by employing his apprentice in menial employments wholly unconnected with the business he has to learn, or in any service which is immoral or contrary to law; 4 Clark & F. 234; but may correct him with moderation for negligence and misbehavior; 1 Ashm. 267. He cannot dismiss his apprentice except by consent of all the parties to the indenture; 1 S. & R. 330; 12 Pick. 110; 2 Burr. 766, 801; 1 Carr. & K. 622; or with the sanction of some competent tribunal; 1 Mass. 24; 2 Pick. 451; 8 Conn. 14; 1 Bail. 209; even though the apprentice should steal his master's property, or by reason of incurable illness become incapable of service, the covenants of the master and apprentice being independent; 2

Pick. 451; 2 Dowl. & R. 465; 1 B. & C. 460. He cannot remove the apprentice out of the state under the laws of which he was apprenticed, unless such removal is provided for in the contract or may be implied from its nature; and if he do so remove him, the contract ceases to be obligatory; 6 Binn. 202; 6 S. & R. 526; 2 Pick. 357; 13 Metc. Mass. 80. An infant apprentice is not capable in law of consenting to his own discharge; 1 Burr. 501; 3 B. & C. 484; nor can the justices, according to some authorities, order money to be returned on the discharge of an apprentice; Stra. 69; contra, Salk. 67, 68, 490; 11 Mod. 110; 12 id. 498, 553. After the apprenticeship is at an end, the master cannot retain the apprentice on the ground that he has not fulfilled his contract, unless specially authorized by statute.

An apprentice is bound to obey his master in all his lawful commands, take care of his property, and promote his interest, endeavor to learn his trade or business, and perform all the covenants in his indenture not contrary to law. He must not leave his master's service during the terms of his apprenticeship; 6 Johns. 274; 2 Pick. 357. The apprentice is entitled to payment for extraordinary services when promised by the master; 1 Am. L. Jour. 308; see 1 Whart. 113; and even when no express promise has been made, under peculiar circumstances; 2 Cranch, 240, 270; 3 C. Rob. Adm. 237; but see 1 Whart. 113. Upon the death of the master, the apprenticeship, being a personal trust, is dissolved; 1 Salk. 66; Strange, 284; 1 Day, 30.

To be binding on the apprentice, the contract must be made as prescribed by statute; 5 Cush. 417; 5 Pick. 250; but if not so made, it can only be avoided by the apprentice himself; 9 Barb. 309; 8 Johns. 328; 5 Strobh. 104; and if the apprentice do elect to avoid it, he will not be allowed to recover wages for his services, the relation being sufficient to rebut any promise to pay which might otherwise be implied; 12 Barb. 473; 2 id. 208; but see 13 Metc. Mass. 80. The master will be bound by his covenants, though additional to those required by statute; 10 Humphr. 179.

Where an apprentice is employed by a third person without the knowledge or consent of the master, the master is entitled to all his earnings, whether the person who employed him did or did not know that he was an apprentice; 6 Johns. 274; 3 N. H. 274; 7 Me. 457; 2 Aik. 243; 1 E. D. Smith, N. Y. 408; 1 Sandf. 711; but in an action for harboring or enticing away an apprentice, a knowledge of the apprenticeship by the defendant is a prerequisite to recovery; 2 Harr. & G. 182; 1 Wend. 376; 1 Gilm. 46; 5 Ired. 216.

Apprenticeship is a relation which cannot be assigned at common law; 5 Binn. 423; 4 Term, 373; Dougl. 70; 3 Keble, 519; 12 Mod. 554; 18 Ala. N. S. 99; Busb. 419; though, if under such an assignment the apprentice continue with his new master, with the consent of all the parties and his own, it will be construed as a continuation of the old apprenticeship; Dougl. 70; 4 Term, 373; 19 Johns. 113; 5 Cowen, 363; 2 Bail. 93. But in Pennsylvania and some other states the assignment of indentures of apprenticeship is authorized by statute; 1 S. & R. 249; 3 id. 161; 6 Vt. 430. See, generally, 2 Kent, 261-266; Bacon, Abr. Master and Servant; 1 Saund. 313, n. 1, 2, 3, and 4; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 396 et seq. The law of France on this subject is strikingly similar to our own; Pardessus, Droit Com. nn. 518, 522.

APPRIZING. In Scotch Law. A form of process by which a creditor formerly took possession of the estates of the debtor in payment of the debt due.

It is now superseded by adjudications.

APPROACH. The right of visit or visitation to determine the national character of the ship approached for that purpose only; 1 Kent, Comm. 153.

APPROBATE AND REPROBATE. In Scotch Law. To approve and reject.

The doctrine of approbate and reprobate is the English doctrine of election. A party cannot both approbate and reprobate the same deed; 4 Wils. & S. Hou. L. 460; 1 Ross, Lead. Cas. 617; Paterson, Comp. 710; 1 Bell, Comm. 146.

APPROPRIATION. In Ecclesiastical Law. The perpetual annexation of an ecclesiastical benefice which is the general property of the church, to the use of some spiritual corporation, either sole or aggregate.

It corresponds with impropriation, which is setting apart a benefice to the use of a lay corporation. The name came from the custom of monks in England to retain the churches in their gift and all the profits of them in proprio usus to their own immediate benefit. 1 Burns, Eccl. Law, 71.

To effect a good appropriation, the king's license and the bishop's consent must first be obtained. When the corporation having the benefice is dissolved, the parsonage becomes disappropriate at common law; Coke, Litt. 46; 1 Bla. Com. 385; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 162. There have been no appropriations since the dissolution of monasteries. For the form of an appropriation, see Jacob, Introd. 411.

Of Payments. The application of a payment made to a creditor by his debtor, to one or more of several debts.

The debtor has the first right of appropriation; 1 Mer. 605; 2 B. & C. 72. No precise declaration is required of him, his intention (12 N. J. Eq. 233, 312), when made known, being sufficient; 7 Blackf. 236; 10 Ill. 449; 1 Fla. 409; 4 B. & C. 715; 7 Beav. 10; 30 Ind. 429; 58 Ga. 176; 39 Wis. 300; 74 Ill. 238; Taney, 460; 59 Ala. 345; 62 Ind. 128; 54 N. H. 395. Still, such facts must be proved as will lead a jury to infer that the debtor did purpose the specific appropriation claimed; 14 East, 239, 243, n.;

4 Ad. & E. 840; 8 W. & S. 320; 2 Hall, 185; 10 Leigh, 481; 1 Ga. 241; 17 Mass. 575; 5 Ired. 551; 2 Rob. 2, 27; 12 Vt. 608; 36 Me. 222; 4 J. J. Marsh. 621; 4 Gill & J. 361. An entry made by the debtor in his own book at the time of payment is an appropriation, if made known to the creditor; but otherwise, if not made known to him. The same rule applies to a creditor's entry communicated to his debtor; 8 Dowl. & R. 549; 8 C. & P. 704; 2 B. & C. 65; 5 Denio, 470; 11 Barb. 80. The appropriation must be made by the debtor at or before the time of payment; if not made by the debtor, the creditor may appropriate at any time before suit brought; suit fixes the appropriation; 14 Cal. 446. The intention to appropriate may be referred to the jury on the facts of the transaction; 5 W. & S. 542.

The creditor may apply the payment, as a general rule, if the debtor does not; 4 Cranch, 316; 7 How. 681; 20 Pick. 339; 25 Penn. 411; 1 M'Cord, 308; 5 Day, 166; 1 Mo. 315; 2 Ill. 196; 54 Ga. 174; 39 Wis. 300; 32 Ark. 645; 54 N. H. 345. But there are some restrictions upon this right. The debtor must have known and waived his right to appropriate. Hence an agent cannot always apply his principal's payment. He cannot, on receipt of money due his principal, apply the funds to debts due himself as agent, selecting those barred by the statute of limitations; 8 Dowl. Bail, 563; 1 Mann. & G. 54; 5 N. H. 237. But on an agent's appropriations, see 5 Bligh. N. s. 1; 3 B. & Ad. 320; 9 Pick. 325; 1 La. Ann. 393; 19 N. H. 479; 29 Miss. 139. A prior legal debt the creditor must prefer to a posterior equitable debt. Where only one of several debts is valid and lawful, all the payments must be applied to this, irrespective of its order in the account; 27 Vt. 187. Whether if the equitable be prior it must first be paid, see 9 Cow. 420; 2 Stark. 74; 1 C. & M. 33; 6 Taunt. 597.

If the creditor is also trustee for another creditor of his own debtor, he must apply the unappropriated funds pro rata to his own claims and those of his cestui que trust; 18 Pick. 361. But, if the debtor, besides the debts in his own right, owe also debts as executor or administrator, the unappropriated funds should first be applied to his personal debt, and not to his debts as executor; 2 Str. 1194; 4 Harr. & J. 566; 14 N. H. 352; 2 Dowl. Parl. Cas. 477. A creditor cannot apply unappropriated funds to such of his claims as are illegal and not recoverable at law; 3 B. & C. 165; 4 M. & G. 860; 4 Dowl. & R. 783; 2 Deac. & C. 534; 11 Cush. 44; 14 N. H. 431. But in the case of some debts illegal by statute—namely, those contracted by sales of spirituous liquors—an appropriation to them has been adjudged good; 2 Ad. & E. 41; 5 C. & P. 19; 1 M. & R. 100; 34 Me. 112. And the debtor may always elect to have his payment applied to an illegal debt.

If some of the debts are barred by the statute of limitations, the creditor cannot first apply the unappropriated funds to them, and thus revive them and take them out of the statute; 2 Cr. M. & R. Exch. 723; 2 C. B. 476; 7 Scott, 444; 31 Eng. L. & Eq. 555; 13 Ark. 754; 1 Gray, 630. Still, a debtor may waive the bar of the statute, just as he may apply his funds to an illegal debt; and the creditor may insist, in the silence of the debtor, unless other facts controvert it, that the money was paid on the barred debts; 5 M. & W. 300; 26 N. H. 85; 23 Penn. 411. Proof of such intent on the debtor's part may be deduced from a mutual adjustment of accounts before the money is sent, or from his paying interest on the barred debt. But, in general, the creditor cannot insist that a part-payment revives the rest of the debt. He can only retain such partial payment as has been made; 1 Gray, 630. It has been held that the creditor may first apply a general payment to discharging any one of several accounts all barred, and by so doing he will revive the balance of that particular account, but he is not allowed to distribute the funds upon all the barred notes, so as to revive all; 19 Vt. 26. See LIMITATIONS.

Wherever the payment is not voluntary, the creditor has not the option in appropriation, but he must apply the funds received ratably to all the notes or accounts. This is the rule wherever proceeds are obtained by judicial proceedings. So, in cases of assignment by an insolvent debtor, the share received by a creditor, a party to the assignment, must be applied pro rata to all his claims, and not to such debts only as are not otherwise secured; 10 Pick. 129; 24 id. 270; 1 M. & G. 54; 1 Perr. & D. 138; 1 Miss. 526; 12 N. H. 320; 22 Me. 295; 1 Sandf. 416. See 22 La. Ann. 289.

A creditor having several demands may apply the payments to a debt not secured by sureties, where other rules do not prohibit it; 11 Metc. 185. Where appropriations are made by a receipt, prima facie the creditor has made them, because the language of the receipt is his; Dav. Dist. Ct. 146.

It is sufficiently evident from the foregoing rules that the principle of the Roman law which required the creditor to act for his debtor's interest in appropriation more than for his own, is not a part of the common law; 6 W. & S. 9. The nearest approach to the civil law rule is the doctrine that when the right of appropriation falls to the creditor he must make such an application as his debtor could not reasonably have objected to; 21 Vt. 456; 20 Miss. 631. See IMPUTATION.

The law will apply part-payments in accordance with the justice and equity of the case; 9 Wheat. 720; 12 S. & R. 301; 2 Vern. 24; 6 Cranch, 28, 253, 264; 5 Mas. 82; 1 Abb. App. Dec. 295; 2 Del. Ch. 333; Taney, 460.

Unappropriated funds are always applied to a debt due at the time of payment, rather than to one not then due; 2 Esp. 666; 1

Bibb, 334; 5 Gratt. 57; 9 Cow. 420; 5 Mas. 11; 27 Ala. N. S. 445; 20 id. 313; 10 Watts, 255; 4 Wisc. 442. But an express agreement with the debtor will made good an appropriation to debts not due; 22 Pick. 305. The creditor should refuse a payment on an account not yet due, if he be unwilling to receive it; but if he do receive it he must apply it as the debtor directs; 40 Me. 325; 59 Ala. 345. A payment is applied to a certain rather than to a contingent debt, and, therefore, to a debt on which the payer is bound directly, rather than to one which binds him collaterally; 22 Me. 295; 1 Smedes & M. Ch. 331. And where the amount paid is precisely equal to one of several debts, a jury is authorized to infer its intended application to that debt; 8 Wend. 403; 3 Caines, 14; 1 Woodb. & M. 150.

The law, as a general rule, will apply a payment in the way most beneficial to the debtor at the time of payment; 50 Miss. 175; 78 Penn. 96. This rule seems to be similar to the civil law doctrine. Thus, e. g., courts will apply money to a mortgage debt rather than to a simple contract debt; see 12 Mod. 559; 2 Harr. & J. 402; 10 Humphr. 238; 12 Vt. 246; 9 Cow. 747, 765; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 160; 25 Miss. 95. Yet, on the other hand, in the pursuit of equity, courts will sometimes assist the creditor. Hence, of two sets of debts, courts allow the creditor to apply unappropriated funds to the debts least strongly secured; 1 Stark. 153; 1 Freem. Ch. 502; 18 Miss. 113; 15 Conn. 438; 10 Ired. 165; 11 id. 253; 2 Rich. Eq. 63; 13 Vt. 15; 46 id. 512; 6 Cranch, 8; 11 Leigh, 512; 14 Ark. 86; 4 Gratt. 53; 15 Ga. 321; 9 Cow. 747, 765.

Interest. Payments made on account are first to be applied to the interest which has accrued thereon. And if the payment exceed the amount of interest, the balance goes to extinguish the principal; 1 Dev. 341; 11 Paige, Ch. 619; 1 Strobh. Eq. 426; 16 Miss. 368; 10 Tex. 216; 5 Cow. 331; 3 Sandf. Ch. 608; Wright, Ohio, 169; 5 Ohio, 260; 2 Fla. 445; 8 Watts & S. 17; 4 Neb. 190. Funds must be applied by the creditor to a judgment bearing interest, and not to an unliquidated account; 4 T. B. Mour. 389; nor to usurious interest; 22 La. Ann. 418; 34 Ohio St. 142.

Priority. When no other rules of appropriation intervene, the law applies part-payments to debts in the order of time, discharging the oldest first; 3 Woodb. & M. 150, 390; 1 Bay, 497; 40 Me. 378; 10 Barb. 183; 4 Harr. & J. 351; 7 Gratt. 86; 27 Vt. 478; 9 Watts, 386; 27 Ala. N. S. 445; 46 Vt. 448; 39 Iowa, 330; 116 Mass. 374. So strong is this priority rule that it has been said that equity will apply payments to the earliest items even where the creditor has security for these items and none for later ones; 6 N. Y. 147. But this is opposed to the prevailing rule.

Sureties. The general rule is that neither debtor nor creditor can so apply a payment as to affect the liabilities of sureties, without their consent; 12 N. H. 320; 1 McLean, 493; 16 Pet. 121; Gilp. 106. Where a principal makes general payments, the law presumes them, prima facie, to be made upon debts guaranteed by a surety, rather than upon others; though circumstances and intent will control this rule of surety, as they do other rules of appropriation; 2 Maule & S. 18, 39; 2 Stark. 101; 1 C. & P. 600; 8 Ad. & E. 855; 10 J. B. Moore, 362; 4 Gill & J. 361; 5 Leigh, 329.

Continuous Accounts. In these, payments are applied to the earliest items of account, unless a different intent can be inferred; 1 Mer. 529, 609; 2 Brod. & B. 70; 5 Bingh. 13; 4 B. & Ad. 766; 2 id. 45; 1 Nev. & M. 742; 4 Q. B. 792; 9 Wheat. 720; 3 Sumn. 98; 23 Me. 24; 28 Vt. 498; 4 Mas. 336; 5 Metc. Mass. 268; 19 Conn. 191; 53 Ill. 414; 27 Ala. 445; 32 Ga. 1.

Partners. Where a creditor of the old firm continues his account with the new firm, payments by the latter will be applied to the old debt, prima facie, the preceding rule of continuous accounts guiding the appropriations. As above, however, a different intent, clearly proved, will prevail; 3 Nev. & M. 167; 5 B. & Ad. 925; 2 id. 39; 3 Bingh. 71; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 39; 10 J. B. Moore, 362; 3 Younge & C. 625; 3 Dowl. & R. 252; 3 Moore & S. 174; 6 Watts & S. 9. When a creditor of the firm is also the creditor of one partner, a payment by the latter of partnership funds must be applied to the partnership debts. Yet circumstances may allow a different application; 1 Mood. & M. 40; 10 Conn. 175; 1 Rice, 291; 2 A. K. Marsh. 277; 28 Me. 91; 2 Harr. Del. 172. And so, unappropriated payments made by a party indebted severally and also jointly with another to the same creditor, for items of book-charges, are to be applied upon the several debts; 33 Me. 428.

The rules of appropriation, it has now been seen, apply equally well whether the debts are of the same or of different orders, and though some are specialties while others are simple contracts; 2 Vt. 606; 4 Cranch, 317; 15 Ga. 221; 22 Penn. 492; 2 Hayw. 385. As to the time during which the application must be made in order to be valid, there is much discrepancy among the authorities. But perhaps a correct rule is that any time will be good as between debtor and creditor, but a reasonable time only when third parties are affected; 6 Taunt. 597; 9 Mod. 427; 3 Green, N. J. 314; 20 Me. 457; 1 Bail. 89; 1 Bail. Eq. 430; 1 Overt. 488; 4 Ired. Eq. 42; 12 Vt. 249; 10 Conn. 184.

When once made, the appropriation cannot be changed but by common consent; and rendering an account, or bringing suit and declaring in a particular way, is evidence of an appropriation; 1 Wash. Va. 128; 12 S. & R. 305; 2 Rawle, 316; 2 Wash. C. C. 47; 12 Ill. 159; 28 Me. 91.

Of Government. No money can be drawn from the treasury of the United States but in consequence of appropriations made by law; Const. art. 1, s. 9. Under this clause of the constitution it is necessary for congress to appropriate money for the support of the federal government and in payment of claims against it; and this is done annually by acts of appropriation, some of which are for the general purposes of government, and others special and private in their nature. These general appropriation bills, as they are commonly termed, extend to the 30th of June in the following year, and usually originate in the house of representatives, being prepared by the committee of ways and means; but they are distinct from the bills for raising revenue, which the constitution declares shall originate in the house of representatives. A rule of the house gives appropriation bills precedence over all other business, and requires them to be first discussed in committee of the whole. Where money once appropriated remains unexpended for more than two years after the expiration of the fiscal year in which the act shall have been passed, such appropriations are deemed to have ceased and determined, and the moneys so unexpended are immediately thereafter carried to the "surplus fund," and it is not lawful thereafter to pay them out for any purpose without further and specific appropriations by law. Certain appropriations, however, are excepted from the operation of this law, viz.: moneys appropriated for payment of the interest on the funded debt, or the payment of interest and reimbursement according to contract of any loan or loans made on account of the United States; as likewise moneys appropriated for a purpose in respect to which a longer duration is specially assigned by law. No expenditure is allowed in any department in any year in excess of the appropriation for that year; Rev. St. 1878, §§ 3660–3692; 7 Opinions of Attorney-Generals, 1.

APPROVE. To increase the profits upon a thing.

Used of common or waste lands which were enclosed and devoted to husbandry; 3 Kent, 406; Old Nat. Brev. 79.

While confessing crime one's self, to accuse another of the same crime.

It is so called because the accuser must prove what he asserts; Staundford, Pl. Cr. 142; Crompton, Jus. Peace, 250.

To vouch. To appropriate. To improve. Kelham.

APPROVED INDORSED NOTES. Notes endorsed by another person than the maker, for additional security.

Public sales are generally made, when a credit is granted, on approved endorsed notes. The meaning of the term is that the purchaser shall give his promissory note for the amount of his purchases, endorsed by another, which, if approved of by the seller, shall be received in payment. If the party approve of the notes, he consents to ratify the sale; 20 Wend. 431.

APPROVER. In English Criminal Law. One confessing himself guilty of felony, and accusing others of the same crime to save himself. Crompton, Inst. 250; Coke, 3d Inst. 129.

Such an one was obliged to maintain the truth of his charge, by the old law; Cowel. The approvement must have taken place before plea pleaded; 4 Bla. Com. 330.

Certain men sent into the several counties to increase the farms (rents) of hundreds and wapentakes, which formerly were let at a certain value to the sheriffs; Cowel.

Sheriffs are called the king's approvers. Termes de la Ley.

Approvers in the Marches were those who had license to sell and purchase beasts there.

APPURTENANCES. Things belonging to another thing as principal, and which pass as incident to the principal thing; 10 Pet. 25; Angell, Wat. C. 43; 1 S. & R. 169; 5 id. 110; Cro. Jac. 121; 1 P. Thus, if a house and land be conveyed, every thing passes which is necessary to the full enjoyment thereof and which is in use as incident or appurtenant thereto; 1 Sumn. 492. Under this term are included the curtilage, 2 Bla. Com. 17; a right of way, 4 Ad. & E. 749; water-courses and secondary easements, under some circumstances, Angell, Water-Courses, 43; a turbary, 3 Salk. 40; and, generally, anything necessary to the enjoyment of a thing; 4 Kent, 468, n.; but not an adjacent strip of land; land cannot pass as appurtenant to land; 49 Barb. 501; 10 Pet. 25; but it may be aliter to give effect to the intent of a will; 9 Pick. 293. The mere use of the term "appurtenances," without more, will not pass a right of way established over one portion of land merely for convenience of the owner, it not being a way of necessity; 68 N. Y. 62; s. c. 23 Am. Rep. 149.

If a house is blown down, a new one erected there shall have the old appurtenances; 4 Coke, 86. The word appurtenances, at least in a deed, will not pass any corporeal real property, but only incorporeal easements, or rights and privileges; Coke, Litt. 121; 8 B. & C. 150; 6 Bingh. 150; 1 Chitty, Pract. 153, 4; see APPENDANT.

Appurtenances of a ship include whatever is on board a ship for the objects of the voyage and adventure in which she is engaged, belonging to her owner. Ballast was held no appurtenance; 1 Leon. 46. Boats and cable

Such can be claimed only by immemorial usage and prescription.

APUD ACTA (Lat.). Among the recorded acts. This was one of the verbal appeals (so called by the French commentators), and was obtained by simply saying, appello.

Lalaure, Des Serv. 23. It is recognized in the common law as an easement of drip; 15 Barb. 96; Gale & Whatley, Easements. See EASEMENTS.

AQUAGIUM (Lat.). A water-course. Cowel.

Canals or ditches through marshes. Spelman. A signal placed in the aquagium to indicate the height of water therein. Spelman.

AQUATIC RIGHTS. Rights which individuals have in water.

ARALIA (Lat. arare). Land fit for the plough. Denoting the character of land, rather than its condition. Spelman. Kindred in meaning, arare, to plough; arator, a ploughman; aratrum terræ, as much land as could be cultivated by a single arator; araturia, land fit for cultivation.

ARBITER. A person bound to decide according to the rules of law and equity, as distinguished from an arbitrator, who may proceed wholly at his own discretion, so that it be according to the judgment of a sound man. Cowel.

This distinction between arbiters and arbitrators is not observed in modern law. Russell, Arbitrator, 112. See ARBITRATOR.

One appointed by the prætor to decide by the equity of the case, as distinguished from the judex, who followed the law. Calvinus, Lex.

One chosen by the parties to decide the dispute; an arbitrator. Bell, Dict.

ARBITRAMENT AND AWARD. A plea to an action brought for the same cause which had been submitted to arbitration and on which an award had been made. Watson, Arb. 256.

ARBITRARY PUNISHMENT. In Practice. That punishment which is left to the decision of the judge, in distinction from those defined by statute.

ARBITRATION (Lat. arbitratio). In Practice. The investigation and determination of a matter or matters of difference between contending parties, by one or more unofficial persons, chosen by the parties, and called arbitrators, or referees. Worcester, Dict.; 3 Bla. Com. 16.

Compulsory arbitration is that which takes place when the consent of one of the parties is enforced by statutory provisions.

Voluntary arbitration is that which takes place by mutual and free consent of the parties.

It usually takes place in pursuance of an agreement (commonly in writing) between the parties, termed a submission; and the determination of the arbitrators or referee is called an award. See SUBMISSION; AWARD.

At common law it was either in pais,—that is, by simple agreement of the parties,—or by the intervention of a court of law or equity. The latter was called arbitration by rule of court; 3 Bla. Com. 16.

Besides arbitration at common law, there exists arbitration, in England as well as the United States, under various statutes, to which reference is made for local peculiarities.

Most of them are founded on the 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 15, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. ch. 42, § 49, by which it is allowed to refer a matter in dispute, not then in court, to arbitrators, and agree that the submission be made a rule of court. This agreement, being proved on the oath of one of the witnesses thereto, is enforced as if it had been made at first under a rule of court; 3 Bla. Com. 18; Kyd, Aw. 22. Particular reference may be made to the statutes of Pennsylvania, in which state the legislation on the subject of arbitration has been extensive and peculiar.

Any matter may be determined by arbitration which the parties may adjust by agreement, or which may be the subject of a suit at law. Crimes, however, and perhaps actions (qui tam) on penal statutes by common informers, cannot be made the subject of adjustment and composition by arbitration. See SUBMISSION.

Any person who is capable of making a valid and binding contract with regard to the subject may, in general, be a party to a reference or arbitration. Every one is so far, and only so far, bound by the award as he would be by an agreement of the same kind made directly by him. For example, the submission of a minor is not void, but voidable. See SUBMISSION.

At common law it is entirely voluntary, and depends upon the agreement of the parties, to waive the right of trial in court by a jury.

In Pennsylvania, however, there exist compulsory arbitrations. Either party in a civil suit or action, or his attorney, may enter at the prothonotary's office a rule of reference, wherein he shall declare his determination to have arbitrators chosen on a day certain, to be mentioned therein, not exceeding thirty days, for the trial of all matters in variance in the suit between the parties. A copy of this rule is served on the opposite party.

On the day appointed, they meet at the prothonotary's and endeavor to agree upon arbitrators. If they cannot, the prothonotary makes out a list, on which are inscribed the names of a number of citizens, and the parties alternately strike, each, one of them from the list, beginning with the plaintiff, until only the number agreed upon, or fixed by the prothonotary, are left, who are to be the arbitrators. A time of meeting is then agreed upon, or appointed by the prothonotary if the parties cannot agree; at which time the arbitrators, having been sworn or affirmed justly and equitably to try all matters in variance submitted to them, proceed to hear and decide the case. Their award is filed in the office of the prothonotary, and has the effect of a judgment, subject, however, to appeal, which may be entered at any time within twenty days from the filing of such award. Act of 16th June, 1836; Pamphl. p. 715; see, also, act of 1874.

This is somewhat similar to the arbitrations of the Romans. There the prætor selected, from a list of citizens made for the purpose, one or more persons, who were authorized to decide all suits submitted to them and which had been brought before him. The authority which the prætor gave them conferred on them a public character, and their judgments were without appeal. Toullier, Droit Civ. Fr. liv. 3, t. 3, c. 4, n. 820.

ARBITRATOR. In Practice. A private extraordinary judge, to whose decision matters in controversy are referred by consent of the parties; Worcester, Dict.

Referee is of frequent modern use as a synonym of arbitrator, but is in its origin of broader signification and less accurate than arbitrator.

Appointment.—Usually, a single arbitrator is agreed upon, or the parties each appoint one, with a stipulation that, if they do not agree, another person, called an umpire, named, or to be selected by the arbitrators, shall be called in, to whom the matter is to be referred; Caldwell, Arb. 99; 2 Vern. 485; 16 East, 51; 9 B. & C. 624; 3 B. & A. 248; 5 B. & Ad. 488; 7 Scott, 841; 9 Ad. & E. 699; 6 Harr. & J. 403; 17 Johns. 405; 1 Barb. 325; 2 M'Cord, 279; 4 Rand. 275; 15 Vt. 548; 2 Bibb, 88; 4 Dall. 471; 9 Ind. 150. Monr. 536; one who goes to trial before a referee without requiring an oath, waives the oath; 97 U. S. 581.

The powers and duties of arbitrators are now regulated very fully by statute, both in England and the United States. See SUBMISSION, and also ARBITRATION.

ARBITRIUM (Lat.). Decision; award; judgment.

For some cases the law does not prescribe an exact rule, but leaves them to the judgment of sound men; 1 Bla. Com. 61. The decision of an arbiter is arbitrium, as the etymology indicates; and the word denotes, in the passage cited, the decision of a man of good judgment who is not controlled by technical rules of law, but is at liberty to adapt the general principles of justice to the peculiar circumstances of the case.

ARBOR (Lat.). A tree; a plant; something larger than an herb; a general term including vines, osiers, and even reeds. The mast of a ship; Brissonius. Timber; Ainsworth; Calvinus, Lex.

Arbor Civilis. A genealogical tree; Coke, Inst.

A common form of showing genealogies is by means of a tree representing the different branches of the family. Many of the terms in the law of descent are figurative, and derived hence. Such a tree is called, also, arbor consanguinitatis.

ARCARIUS (Lat. arca). A treasurer; one who keeps the public money; Spelman, Gloss.

ARCHAIONOMIA. The name of a collection of Saxon laws published during the reign of the English Queen Elizabeth, in the Saxon language, with a Latin version, by Mr. Lambard. Dr. Wilkins enlarged this collection in his work entitled Leges Anglo-Saxonicæ, containing all the Saxon laws extant, together with those ascribed to Edward the Confessor, in Latin; those of William the Conqueror, in Norman and Latin; and of Henry I., Stephen, and Henry II., in Latin.

ARCHBISHOP. In Ecclesiastical Law. The chief of the clergy of a whole province.

He has the inspection of the bishops of that province, as well as of the inferior clergy, and may deprive them on notorious cause. The archbishop has also his own diocese, in which he exercises episcopal jurisdiction, as in his province he exercises archiepiscopal authority; 1 Bla. Com. 380; 1 Ld. Raym. 541.

ARCHDEACON. In Ecclesiastical Law. A ministerial officer subordinate to the bishop.

In the primitive church, the archdeacons were employed by the bishop in the more servile duties of collecting and distributing alms and offerings. Afterwards they became, in effect, "eyes to the overseers of the Church;" Cowel.

His jurisdiction is ecclesiastical, and immediately subordinate to that of the bishop throughout the whole or a part of the diocese. He is a ministerial officer; 1 Bla. Com. 383.

ARCHDEACON'S COURT. In English Law. The lowest court of ecclesiastical jurisdiction in England.

It is held before a person appointed by the archdeacon, called his official. Its jurisdiction is limited to ecclesiastical causes arising within the archdeaconry. It had until recently, also, jurisdiction of matters of probate and granting administrations. In ordinary cases, its jurisdiction is concurrent with that of the Bishop's Court; but in some instances cases must be commenced in this court. In all cases, an appeal lies to the Bishop's Court; 24 Hen. VIII. c. 12; 3 Bla. Com. 64.

ARCHES' COURT. See COURT OF ARCHES.

ARCHIVES (archivum, arcibum). The Rolls; any place where ancient records, charters, and evidences are kept. In libraries, the private depositary; Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.

The records need not be ancient to constitute the place of keeping them the Archives.

ARCHIVIST. One to whose care the archives have been confided.

ARCTA ET SALVA CUSTODIA (Lat.). In safe and close custody or keeping.

When a defendant is arrested on a capias ad satisfaciendum (ca. sa.), he is to be kept arcta et salva custodia; 3 Bla. Com. 415.

AREA. An enclosed yard or opening in a house; an open place adjoining to a house; 1 Chitty, Pract. 176.

ARENALES. In Spanish Law. Sandy beaches.

ARENTARE (Lat.). To rent; to let out at a certain rent. Cowel.

Arentatio. A renting.

ARGENTARII (Lat. argentum). Moneylenders.

Called, also, nummularii (from nummus, coin) mensarii (lenders by the month). They were so called whether living in Rome or in the country towns, and had their shops or tables in the forum. Argentarius is the singular. Argentarium denotes the instrument of the loan, approaching in sense to our note or bond.

Argentarius miles was the servant or porter who carried the money from the lower to the upper treasury to be tested. Spelman, Gloss.

ARGENTUM ALBUM (Lat.). Unstamped silver; bullion. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowel.

ARGENTUM DEI (Lat.). God's money; God's penny; money given as earnest in making a bargain. Cowel.

ARGUMENT AB INCONVENIENTI. An argument arising from the inconvenience which the construction of the law would create.

It is to have effect only in a case where the law is doubtful: where the law is certain, such an argument is of no force. Bacon, Abr. Baron and Feme, H.

ARGUMENTATIVE. By way of reasoning.

A plea must be (among other things) direct and positive, and not argumentative; 3 Bla. Com. 308; Stephen, Pl. 191.

ARIBANNUM. A fine for not setting out to join the army in obedience to the summons of the king.

ARIMANNI (Lat.). The possessors of lands holden or derived from their lords. Clients joined to some lord for protection. By some, said to be soldiers holding lands from a lord; but the term is also applied to women and slaves. Spelman, Gloss.

ARISTOCRACY. A government in which a class of men rules supreme.

Aristotle classified governments according to the person or persons in whom the supreme power is vested: in monarchies or kingdoms, in which one rules supreme; in aristocracies, in which a class of men rules supreme; and in democracies, in which the people at large, the multitude, rules. The term aristocracy is derived from the Greek word ἄριστος, which came, indeed, to settle down as the superlative of ἀγαθός, good, but originally meant the strongest, the most powerful; and in the compound term aristocracy it meant those who wielded the greatest power and had the greatest influence,—the privileged ones. The aristocracies in ancient Greece were, in many cases, governments arrogated by violence. If the number of ruling aristocrats was very small, the government was called an oligarchy. Aristotle says that in democracies the "demagogues lead the people to place themselves above the laws, and divide the people, by constantly speaking against the rich; and in oligarchies the rulers always speak in the interest of the rich. At present," he says, "the rulers, in some oligarchies, take an oath, 'And I will be hostile to the people, and advise, as much as is in my power, what may be injurious to them.'" (Politics, v. ch. 9.) There are circumstances which may make an aristocracy unavoidable; but it has always this inherent deficiency, that the body of aristocrats, being set apart from the people indeed, yet not sufficiently so, as the monarch is (who, besides, being but one, must needs rely on the classes beneath him), shows itself severe and harsh so soon as the people become a substantial portion of the community. The struggle between the aristocratic and the democratic element is a prominent feature of the middle ages; and at a later period it is equally remarkable that the crown, in almost every country of the European continent, waged war, generally with the assistance of the commonalty, with the privileged class, or aristocracy. The real aristocracy is that type of government which has nearly entirely vanished from our cis-Caucasian race; although the aristocratic element is found, like the democratic element, in various degrees, in most of the existing governments. The term aristocracy is at present frequently used for the body of privileged persons in the government of any institution,—for instance, in the church. In the first French Revolution, Aristocrat came to mean any person not belonging to the levellers, and whom the latter desired to pull down. The modern French communists use the slang term Aristo for aristocrat. The most complete and consistently developed aristocracy in history was the Republic of Venice,—a government considered by many early publicists as a model: it illustrated, however, in an eminent degree, the fear and consequent severity inherent in aristocracies. See GOVERNMENT; ABSOLUTISM; MONARCHY.

ARISTO-DEMOCRACY. A form of government where the power is divided between the great men of the nation and the people.

ARIZONA. One of the territories of the United States.

The Organic Act is the act of congress of Feb. 24, 1862, U. S. Stat. at Large, 664. By this act, the territory embraces "all that part of the territory of New Mexico situated west of a line running due south, from the point where the southwest corner of the territory of Colorado joins the northern boundary of the territory of New Mexico, to the southern boundary of the territory of New Mexico." The frame of government is substantially the same as that of New Mexico, and the laws of New Mexico are substantially extended to Arizona. See NEW MEXICO.

The qualifications of voters are:—Every white male citizen of the United States, and every white male citizen of Mexico, who shall have elected to become a citizen of the United States under the treaty of peace exchanged and ratified at Quintero, on the 30th day of May, 1848, and the Gadsden treaty of 1854, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the territory six months next preceding the election, and the county or precinct in which he claims his vote ten days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now, or hereafter may be authorized by law.

For the purpose of voting no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence in the service of the United States; nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this territory, or of the United States, or of the high seas; nor while a student of any seminary of learning; nor while kept at any almshouse or other asylum; nor while confined in any public prison.

No idiot, or insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector. A crime shall be deemed infamous which is punishable by death, or by imprisonment in the state prison.

Absence from this territory on business of the territory, or of the United States, shall not affect the question of residence of any person.

By the Organic Act of Arizona, it is provided that the government thereby authorized shall consist of an executive, legislative, and judicial power. The executive power shall be vested in a governor. The legislative power shall consist of a council of nine members, and a house of representatives of eighteen. The judicial power shall be vested in a supreme court, to consist of three judges, and such inferior courts as the legislative council may by law prescribe; there shall also be a secretary, a marshal, a district attorney, and a surveyor-general for said territory, who, together with the governor and judges of the supreme court, shall be appointed by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and the term of office for each, the manner of their appointment, and the powers, duties, and the compensation of the governor, legislative assembly, judges of the supreme court, secretary, marshal, district attorney, and surveyor-general aforesaid, with their clerks, draughtsmen, deputies, and sergeant-at-arms, shall be such as are conferred upon the same officers by the act organizing the territorial government of New Mexico, which subordinate officers shall be appointed in the same manner, and not exceed in number those created by said act; and acts amendatory thereto, together with all legislative enactments of the territory of New Mexico not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby extended to and continued in force, in the said territory of Arizona, until repealed or amended by future legislation.

No session of the legislature can exceed forty days. The legislative power of the territory extends to all rightful subjects of legislation, not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States, or the Organic Act. No law is to be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no taxes to be imposed upon property of the United States, and lands and other property of non-residents cannot be taxed higher than lands and other property of residents. All laws passed by the legislative assembly must be submitted to congress, and if disapproved are null and of no effect; Organic Act, sec. 7. The legislature cannot pardon or commute the sentence of any prisoner; or audit and settle any private claim; or authorize lotteries, or the sale of lottery tickets; Acts, 1877, 2. All township, district, and county officers not otherwise provided for in the Organic Act, are appointed, or elected, as the case may be, by the legislature of the territory. No member of the legislature can hold, or be appointed to, any office which shall have been created, or the salary or emoluments of which shall have been increased, while he was a member, during the time for which he was elected, and for one year after the expiration of such term; and no person holding a commission or appointment under the United States, except postmasters, shall be a member of the legislative assembly or shall hold any office under the government of the territory; Org. Act, § 9. The legislature shall meet on the second Monday of January, 1883, and bi-annually thereafter on that day; Acts, 1881, 134.

The Executive power is vested in a governor, who shall hold office four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed by the president of the United States. The governor shall reside within the territory, shall be commander-in-chief of the militia thereof, shall perform the duties and receive the emoluments of superintendent of Indian affairs, and shall approve all laws passed by the legislative assembly before they shall take effect; he may grant pardons for offences against the laws of the territory, and reprieves for offences against the laws of the United States until the decision of the president can be made known thereon; he shall commission all officers who shall be appointed to office under the laws of the said territory, and shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed; Org. Act, § 8.

He may convene the legislature by proclamation on extraordinary occasions; may grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons for all offences against the laws of the territory, upon such condition, etc., as he may deem proper; he may fill by appointment any vacancy in any territorial or county office for the unexpired term of such office, when no other provision of law is made for that purpose; he may, upon notice and hearing, remove any such officer for neglect or misconduct, or incompetency; he may accept any grants of land made by congress to the territory upon the conditions named in the grant.

Besides the Supreme Court the legislature has established the District Court, Probate Court, and Justice's Courts; there are three district courts, each presided over by one of the judges of the supreme court assigned for that purpose. Their original jurisdiction extends to all civil cases exceeding one hundred dollars, and to all criminal cases not otherwise provided for, and to all cases involving real property, and issues from the probate court. The appellate jurisdiction from inferior courts is vested in this court. Writs of error and appeals from the supreme court to the supreme court of the United States are allowed in the same manner as from the circuit courts of the United States, when the sum in controversy exceeds $1000, and upon cases of habeas corpus. The district courts have the same jurisdiction as the circuit and district courts of the United States, subject to writs of error and appeal to the supreme court of the territory.

ARKANSAS. One of the United States of America; admitted into the union by an act of congress of June 15, 1836.

It was formed of a part of the Louisiana territory, purchased of France by the United States, by treaty of April 30, 1803. By act of congress of March 2, 1819, a separate territorial government was established for Arkansas; 3 Stat. at Large, 493.

The first constitution of the state was adopted on the 30th January, 1836.

The present constitution of the state was ratified by a popular vote on the 13th October, 1874, and went into effect October 30, 1874.

It contains a preamble setting forth the name and style of the state as "The State of Arkansas;" and also a declaration of rights, enumerating and securing many rights to the people, in whom all power is declared to inhere.

Male citizens of the United States of the age of twenty-one, who have resided in the state two years, in the county six months, and in the voting precinct one month, are entitled to vote; but idiots and lunatics, and United States soldiers, sailors, and marines are debarred the right. The general election takes place biennially on the first Monday in September, and the voting is by ballot. The electors are privileged from arrest, except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, while attending, going to, and returning from elections. Public defaulters are ineligible to any office.

THE LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.—The Senate is to consist of not less than thirty nor more than thirty-five members, chosen every four years by the qualified electors of their respective districts. The senators must be citizens of the United States, must have resided in the state two years, and must be twenty-five years of age. The senators at their first meeting were divided by lot into two classes, in order that one class might be elected every two years.

The state is to be divided from time to time into senatorial districts, so that each senator may, as near as possible, represent an equal number.

The representatives are elected every two years, and must be at least twenty-one years of age, and possess in other respects the same qualifications as the senators.

The House of Representatives is to consist of not less than seventy-three nor more than one hundred members. Each county existing at the time of the adoption of the constitution is entitled to one representative, and the remainder are to be apportioned among the several counties according to the number of adult male inhabitants, upon a ratio of two thousand, until the number of representatives amounts to one hundred, when the ratio shall be increased.

The general assembly meets biennially, and can remain in session only sixty days, unless by a two-thirds vote the session is extended.

The vacancies in either house are to be filled by writs of election issued by the governor.

No person holding any lucrative office under the state or the United States, except militia officers, justices of the peace, postmasters, public school officials, and notaries, is eligible to a seat in either house; nor is any person who has been convicted of an infamous crime eligible.

Each house is the sole judge of the election and qualifications of its members, may establish rules for its own proceedings, and may punish for contempt.

The members when attending the sessions of the general assembly, and when going to and from the same, are exempt from arrest, except for treason, felony, and breach of the peace; and for any speech or debate they cannot be questioned in any other place. Their compensation cannot be increased during the session.

The style of laws is, "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas."

No law can be passed except by bill, and bills cannot be so amended as to change their original purpose.

Every bill must be read at length on three different days in each house, unless the rules be suspended by a two-thirds vote; and no bill can become a law unless the vote on its final passage be taken by ayes and nays, the names of those voting for and against be entered on the journals, and a majority of each house be recorded in its favor.

No law can be revived or amended by reference to its title, but must be re-enacted at length.

No special law changing the venue in criminal cases, changing names of persons, adopting or legitimating children, granting divorces, or vacating roads or streets, can be passed.

No special law can be passed where a general law would apply, nor can general laws be suspended for the benefit of individuals or associations, nor can special laws be passed where the courts have jurisdiction to grant the relief.

No local bill can be passed unless notice of the intention to apply therefor has been published in the neighborhood. No additional compensation can be made to any officer or contractor after the performance of the service or the making of the contract, unless by a two-thirds vote.

Neither house can adjourn for more than three days without the consent of the other, nor to any other place.

No money can be drawn from the treasury except pursuant to a specific appropriation.

The general assembly cannot limit the amount to be recovered for injuries resulting in death, and the right of action in such cases survives.

No liability of any corporation to the state can be postponed, exchanged, or remitted by the general assembly.

Impeachments are to be preferred by the house and tried by the senate, the chief justice presiding. All state officers are liable to impeachment, or may be removed by the governor for cause upon the joint address of two-thirds of each house.

Either house may propose constitutional amendments, and, if approved by a majority of the members elected to each house, shall be entered on the journals, and submitted to the people at the next general election for ratification. Not more than three amendments can be submitted at once.

THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.—The executive department consists of the governor, secretary of state, treasurer of state, auditor of state, attorney-general, commissioner of state lands, and superintendent of public instruction. The governor is elected for a term of two years at each general election. He must be a citizen of the United States, at least thirty years of age, and must have resided in the state seven years. The person receiving the highest number of votes is to be the governor, and in case of a tie, he is to be elected by a joint vote of the general assembly.

He is commander-in-chief of the army and militia of the state, except when called into the service of the United States; may require information in writing from the officers of the executive department relative to their official duties; may convene the general assembly, by proclamation, on extraordinary occasions, at the seat of government, or at a different place, if that shall have become dangerous, since the last adjournment, from an enemy or contagious disease; in case of disagreement between the two houses with respect to the time of adjournment, may adjourn them to such time as he may think proper, not beyond the day of the next meeting of the general assembly; shall give them information of the state of government, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he may deem expedient. He shall take care that the laws are faithfully executed; in criminal and penal cases, except treason, where the consent of the senate is required, and impeachment, he has power to grant pardons and remit fines. He is the keeper of the seal of the state. All commissions and grants must be signed by him, sealed with the great seal of the state, and attested by the secretary of state.

He has the power to veto any bill or concurrent resolution; but such bill or resolution may be passed over his veto, if a majority of the members of both houses, after it is returned with the objections of the governor, vote in favor of its passage. If a bill be not returned by the governor within five days after its passage, it shall become a law; except when its return is prevented by adjournment, in which case it becomes a law, unless he shall file it with his objections in the office of the secretary of state within twenty days after adjournment. He has the power to veto any designated item in an appropriation bill.

In case of the death, absence, or other disability of the governor, the president of the senate performs the duties of the office.

The other members of the executive department are elected at the same time and in the same manner as the governor.

THE JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.—The supreme court is composed of three judges, one of whom is styled chief justice; two of them constitute a quorum, and the concurrence of two is necessary to a decision. The supreme court has appellate jurisdiction only, which is co-extensive with the state. It has a superintending control over inferior courts, and has power to issue the necessary remedial writs, and to hear and determine the same. The judges are conservators of the peace throughout the state. They are elected for a term of eight years. They must be at least thirty years of age, and must have been lawyers for at least eight years prior to their election.

The court appoints its clerk and reporter, who hold office for a term of six years.

When any supreme judge is disqualified to sit in any case, the governor appoints a special judge to take his place.

The circuit courts are composed of judges of whom one is elected in each judicial circuit. The circuit judge must be at least twenty-eight years of age, must reside in his circuit, and is a conservator of the peace therein. Circuit judges may temporarily exchange circuits.

The circuit courts have jurisdiction of all civil and criminal cases, the exclusive jurisdiction of which is not vested in some other court provided for by this constitution. They have a superintending control over all inferior courts, and may issue such writs as may be necessary to carry their powers into effect.

Until the establishment of separate courts of chancery, the circuit courts have jurisdiction in matters of equity.

The circuit judge cannot sit in a case where he is related by blood or affinity to either party; and when the circuit judge is absent or disqualified, the members of the bar elect a special judge.

Judges must not charge juries as to matters of fact, but must declare the law.

Circuit courts have jurisdiction to remove from office all county and township officers for malfeasance or incompetency.

A prosecuting attorney is elected in each circuit at each general election.

The county court consists of one judge, except that all the justices of the peace in the county sit with the county judge when the court is engaged in making appropriations and levying taxes. The county judges are elected in the respective counties at each general election for the term of two years.

The county court has exclusive jurisdiction of all matters relating to the internal improvement and local concerns of the county.

The general assembly may authorize the county judge to hold courts of common pleas, which shall have such jurisdiction in matters of contract, not affecting the title to land, as may be prescribed.

The county judge is also the judge of the probate court, and has exclusive jurisdiction of all matters relating to the estates of deceased persons, lunatics, and minors.

Appeals lie from the county and probate courts and from justices of the peace to the circuit court.

In the absence of the circuit judge the county judge may order the issue of injunctions and other provisional writs.

Justices of the peace are elected at each general election for the term of two years.

They have exclusive jurisdiction of all matters of contract not involving more than one hundred dollars, and jurisdiction concurrent with the circuit court of matters of contract not exceeding three hundred dollars; concurrent jurisdiction in suits for the recovery of personal property where the amount does not exceed three hundred dollars, and of matters of damages to personal property where the amount does not exceed one hundred dollars; concurrent jurisdiction of misdemeanors; jurisdiction to sit as examining courts; and are conservators of the peace within their respective counties; but they have no jurisdiction of suits affecting the title or possession of real property.

The chancery court of Pulaski county is continued in existence, and has all the jurisdiction of a court of equity in the county. It has also jurisdiction to enforce the liens on real estate bank lands throughout the state.

At each general election in each county there are elected a sheriff, who is ex-officio collector of taxes, an assessor, coroner, treasurer, and county surveyor, who hold for two years.

At each general election in each township a constable is elected, who is commissioned by the county court; but all other county officers are commissioned by the governor.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.—The militia consists of all the able-bodied male residents of the state between the ages of eighteen and forty-five.

No county or municipal corporation can become a stockholder in any company, or lend its credit to any such company.

Corporations must be formed under general laws.

The state shall always maintain an efficient system of public schools.

No county or municipal corporation can levy a tax exceeding one-half of one per cent. for all general purposes, but may levy an additional one-half of one per cent. to pay debts existing at the time of the adoption of this constitution.

No person who denies the being of a God can hold any office, or testify in any court.

All contracts for a greater rate of interest than ten per cent. are void as to principal and interest; but when no rate of interest is specified, the rate shall be six per cent.

All distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments is abolished except as to the statute of limitations.

No witness can be excluded on account of interest in the suit.

The state cannot be sued in her own courts.

The proper pronunciation of the name of the state is declared to be "in three syllables, with the final 's' silent, the 'a' in each syllable with the Italian sound, and the accent on the first and last syllable," etc. Acts, 1881, 216.

ARLES. Earnest.

Used in Yorkshire in the phrase Arles-penny. Cowel. In Scotland it has the same signification. Bell, Dict.

ARM OF THE SEA. A portion of the sea projecting inland, in which the tide ebbs and flows.

It includes bays, roads, creeks, coves, ports, and rivers where the water flows and reflows. An arm of the sea is considered as extending as far into the interior of a country as the water of fresh rivers is propelled backward by the ingress and pressure of the tide. Angell, Tide Wat. 2d ed. 73; 7 Pet. 324; 2 Dougl. 441; 6 Clark & F. Hou. L. 628; Olc. Adm. 18. Arms of the sea, so closely embraced by land that a man standing on one shore can reasonably discern with the naked eye objects and what is done on the opposite shore, are within county limits; Bish. Cr. L. § 146; 2 East, P. C. 805; Russ. & R. 243. Lord Coke said (Owen, 122) that the admiral has no jurisdiction when a man may see from one side to another. This was followed by Cockburn, C. J., in Reg. v. Keyn, L. R. 2 Ex 164, 168. See CREEK; HAVEN; NAVIGABLE; PORT; RELICTION; RIVER; ROAD.

ARMIGER (Lat.). An armor-bearer; an esquire. A title of dignity belonging to gentlemen authorized to bear arms. Kennett, Paroch. Antiq.; Cowel.

In its earlier meaning, a servant who carried the arms of a knight. Spelman, Gloss.

A tenant by scutage; a servant or valet; applied, also, to the higher servants in convents. Spelman, Gloss.; Wishaw.

ARMISTICE. A cessation of hostilities between belligerent nations for a considerable time.

It is either partial and local, or general. It differs from a mere suspension of arms, which takes place to enable the two armies to bury their dead, their chiefs to hold conferences or pourparlers, and the like. Vattel, Droit des Gens, l. 3, c. 16, § 233. The terms truce and armistice are sometimes used in the same sense. See TRUCE.

ARMS. Any thing that a man wears for his defence, or takes in his hands, or uses in his anger, to cast at or strike at another. Coke, Litt. 161 b, 162 a; Crompton, Just. P. 65; Cunningham, Dict.

The constitution of the United States, Amend. art. 2, declares that, "a well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." This is said to be not a right granted by the constitution, and not dependent upon that instrument for its existence. The amendment means no more than that this right shall not be infringed by congress; it restricts the powers of the national government, leaving all matters of police regulations, for the protection of the people, to the states; 92 U. S. 553.

An act forbidding the carrying of pistols, dirks, etc., is not repugnant to this article; the "arms" referred to are the arms of a soldier, etc.; 35 Tex. 473. A statute prohibiting the wearing of concealed deadly weapons is constitutional; 77 Penn. 470; 3 Heisk. 165; 53 Ga. 472; 31 Ark. 455; 7 Blackf. 572; 31 Ala. 387; contra, 2 Litt. 90; see Story, Const. §§ 1889, 1890; Rawle, Const. 125.

Signs of arms, or drawings, painted on shields, banners, and the like.

The arms of the United States are described in the resolution of congress of June 20, 1782.

ARPENNUS. A measure of land of uncertain amount. It was called arpent also; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowel.

In French Law. A measure of different amount in each of the sixty-four provinces; Guyot, Répert., Arpenteur.

The measure was adopted in Louisiana; 6 Pet. 763.

ARPENT. A quantity of land containing a French acre; 4 Hall, Law J. 518.

ARPENTATOR. A measurer or surveyor of land.

ARRA. In Civil Law. Earnest; evidence of a completed bargain.

Used of a contract of marriage, as well as any other. Spelled, also, Arrha, Arræ; Calvinus, Lex.

ARRAIGN. To call a prisoner to the bar of the court to answer the matter charged in the indictment; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 216. To set in order. An assize may be arraigned; Littleton, § 242; 3 Mod. 273; Termes de la Ley; Cowel.

ARRAIGNMENT. In Criminal Practice. Calling the defendant to the bar of the court, to answer the accusation contained in the indictment.

The first step in the proceeding consists in calling the defendant to the bar by his name, and commanding him to hold up his hand.

This is done for the purpose of completely identifying the prisoner as the person named in the indictment. The holding up his hand is not, however, indispensable; for if the prisoner should refuse to do so, he may be identified by any admission that he is the person intended; 1 W. Blackst. 33; see Archbold, Cr. Pl. 1859 ed., 128.

The second step is the reading the indictment to the accused person.

This is done to enable him fully to understand the charge to be produced against him. The mode in which it is read is, after saying, "A B, hold up your hand," to proceed, "you stand indicted by the name of A B, late of, etc., for that you, on, etc.," and then go through the whole of the indictment.

The third step is to ask the prisoner,

"How say you [A B], are you guilty, or not guilty?"

Upon this, if the prisoner confesses the charge, and it appears to the satisfaction of the judge that he rightly comprehends the effect of his plea, the confession is recorded, and nothing further is done till judgment. If, on the contrary, he answers, "Not guilty," that plea is entered for him, and the clerk or attorney-general replies that he is guilty; when an issue is formed; 1 Mass. 95; see 4 Bla. Com. c. xxv. The holding up of the hand is no longer obligatory in England, though still maintained in some of the United States with the qualification that if the defendant refuses to hold up his hand, but confesses that he is the person named, it is enough; Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. § 609. In cases where arraignment of the defendant is required, a failure to arraign is fatal; 54 Ind. 159; 31 Mich. 471; 3 Penn. (Wis.) 367; 1 Tex. Ap. 408; 52 Cal. 480; see contra, 12 Kan. 550. In cases of a mistrial (58 Ga. 35), or removal to another court (39 Md. 355), there need not be a fresh arraignment.

If the defendant, when called upon, makes no answer, and it is a matter of doubt whether or not he is mute of malice, the court may direct a jury to be forthwith impanelled and sworn, to try whether the prisoner is mute of malice or ex visitatione Dei; and such jury may consist of any twelve men who may happen to be present. If a person is found to be mute ex visitatione Dei, the court in its discretion will use such means as may be sufficient to enable the defendant to understand the charge and make his answer; and if this is found impracticable, a plea of not guilty will be entered, and the trial proceed. But if the jury return a verdict that he is mute fraudulently and wilfully, the court will pass sentence as upon a conviction; 1 Mass. 103; 13 id. 299; 9 id. 402; 10 Metc. Mass. 222; Archbold, Cr. Pl. 14th Lond. ed. 129; Carrington, Cr. Law, 57; 3 C. & K. 121; Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 4th Lond. ed. 215. See the case of a deaf person who could not be induced to plead; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 4th ed. 451; of a person deaf and dumb, 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 4th ed. 102; 14 Mass. 207; 7 C. & P. 503; 6 Cox, Cr. Cas. 386; 3 C. & K. 328.

ARRAMEUR. An ancient officer of a port, whose business was to load and unload vessels.

There were formerly, in several ports of Guyenne, certain officers, called arrameurs, or stowers, who were master-carpenters by profession, and were paid by the merchants, who loaded the ship. Their business was to dispose right, and stow closely, all goods in casks, bales, boxes, bundles, or otherwise; to balance both sides, to fill up the vacant spaces, and manage every thing to the best advantage. It was not but that the greatest part of the ship's crew understood this as well as these stowers, but they would not meddle with it, nor undertake it, to avoid falling under the merchant's displeasure, or being accountable for any ill accident that might happen by that means. There were also sacquiers, who were very ancient officers, as may be seen in the Theodosian code, Unica de Scaccariis Portus Romæ, lib. 14. Their business was to load and unload vessels loaded with salt, corn, or fish, to prevent the ship's crew defrauding the merchant by false tale, or cheating him of his merchandise otherwise; 1 Pet. Adm. App. xxv.

ARRAS. In Spanish Law. The donation which the husband makes to his wife, by reason or on account of marriage, and in consideration of the dote, or portion, which he receives from her. Aso & Man. Inst. b. 1, t. 7, c. 3.

The property contributed by the husband ad sustinenda onera matrimonii (for bearing the expenses).

The husband is under no obligation to give arras; but it is a donation purely voluntary. He is not permitted to give in arras more than a tenth of his property. The arras is the exclusive property of the wife, subject to the husband's usufruct during his life; Burge, Confl. Laws, 417.

ARRAY. In Practice. The whole body of jurors summoned to attend a court, as they are arrayed or arranged on the panel; see CHALLENGES; Dane, Abr. Index; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law, 536; Comyns, Dig. Challenge, B.

ARREARAGES. Arrears.

ARREARS (Fr.). The remainder of an account or sum of money in the hands of an accountant. Any money due and unpaid at a given time; Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.

ARRECT. To accuse. Arrectati, those accused or suspected.

ARREST (Fr. arrêter, to stay, to stop, to detain). To deprive a person of his liberty by legal authority. The seizing a person and detaining him in the custody of the law. See Baldw. 234.

As ordinarily used, the terms arrest and attachment coincide in meaning to some extent; though in strictness, as a distinction, an arrest may be said to be the act resulting from the service of an attachment. And in the more extended sense which is sometimes given to attachment, including the act of taking, it would seem to differ from arrest in that it is more peculiarly applicable to a taking of property, while arrest is more commonly used in speaking of persons.

The terms are, however, often interchanged when speaking of the taking a man by virtue of legal authority. Arrest is also applied in some instances to a seizure and detention of personal chattels, especially of ships and vessels; but this use of the term is not common in modern law.

In Civil Practice. The apprehension of a person by virtue of a lawful authority to answer the demand against him in a civil action.

One of the means which the law gives the creditor to secure the person of his debtor while the suit is pending, or to compel him to give security for his appearance after judgment; La. Civ. Code, art. 211. Acts which amount to a taking into custody are necessary to constitute an arrest; but there need be no actual force or manual touching the body: it is enough if the party be within the power of the officer and submit to the arrest; Cas. temp. Hardw. 301; 5 B. & P. 211; Buller, N. P. 62; 2 N. H. 318; 8 Dana, 190; 3 Harr. Del. 416; 1 Harp. 453; 8 Me. 127; 1 Wend. 215; 21 Ala. 240; 20 Ga. 369; 2 Blackf. 294; but mere words without submission are not sufficient; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 129; 13 Ark. 79; 13 Ired. 448. See, generally, 8 Dana, 190; 3 Harr. Del. 416.

Whom to be made by. It must be made by on officer having proper authority. This is, in the United States, the sheriff, or one of his deputies, general or special (see United States Digest, Sheriff, and the statutes of the various states), or by a mere assistant of the officer, if he be so near as to be considered as acting, though he do not actually make the arrest; Cowp. 65.

The process of the United States courts is executed by a marshal. As to the power of the sergeant-at-arms of a legislative body to arrest for contempt or other cause, see 1 Kent, 236, and notes; Bost. Law Rep. May, 1860.

Who is liable to. All persons found within the jurisdiction are liable to arrest, with the exception of certain specified classes, including administrators in suits on the intestate's promises; Metc. Yelv. 63; see 1 Term, 16; ambassadors and their servants, 1 B. & C. 554; 3 D. & R. 25, 833; 4 Sandf. 619; attorneys at law; barristers attending court or on circuit, 1 H. Monr. 540; women, Wright, Ohio, 455; but see 2 Abb. N. C. 193; 13 N. Y. 1; and perhaps other classes, under local statutes. Reference must be had in many of the above cases to statutes for modifications of the privilege. In all cases where the privilege attaches in consideration of an attendance at a specified place in a certain character, it includes the stay and a reasonable time for going and returning; 2 W. Blackst. 1113; 4 Dall. 329; 2 Johns. Cas. 222; 6 Blackf. 278; 3 Harr. Del. 517; but not including delays in the way, 3 B. & Ald. 252; 4 Dall. 329; or deviations; 19 Pick. 260. And see infra.

Where and when it may be made. An arrest may be made in any place, except in the actual or constructive presence of court, and the defendant's own house; 4 Bla. Com. 288; 6 Taunt. 246; Cowp. 1 (contra, 73 N. C. 394); and even there the officer may break inner doors to find the defendant when the outer door is open; 5 Johns. 352; 17 id. 127; 8 Taunt. 250; Cowp. 2. See 10 Wend. 300. It cannot be made on Sunday or any public holiday; Stat. 29 Car. II. c. 7; contra, 6 Blackf. 447.

Discharge from arrest on mesne process may be obtained by giving sufficient bail, which the officer is bound to take; 4 Taunt. 669; 1 Bingh. 103; 3 Maule & S. 283; 6 Term, 355; 15 East, 320; but when the arrest is on final process, giving bail does not authorize a discharge.

If the defendant otherwise withdraw himself from arrest, or if the officer discharge him without authority, it is an escape; and the sheriff is liable to the plaintiff. See ESCAPE. If the party is withdrawn forcibly from the custody of the officer by third persons, it is a rescue. See RESCUE.

Extended facilities are offered to poor debtors to obtain a discharge under the statutes of most if not all of the states of the United States. In consequence, except in cases of apprehended fraud, as in the concealment of property or an intention to abscond, arrests are infrequently made. See, as to excepted cases, 19 Conn. 540; 28 Me. 45.

Generally. An unauthorized arrest, as under process materially irregular or informal; 26 N. H. 268; 6 Barb. 654; 1 Hayw. 471; 5 Ired. 72; 11 id. 242; 3 H. & M'H. 113; 3 Yerg. P. 83; 5 Wend. 175; 3 Barb. 17; 12 Vt. 661; 6 Ill. 401; 1 Rich. 147; 2 J. J. Marsh. 44; 1 Conn. 40; 6 Blackf. 249, 344; 3 Munf. 458; 13 Mo. 171; 3 Binn. 38; 8 Metc. Mass. 326; 1 R. In Criminal Cases. The apprehending or detaining of the person in order to be forthcoming to answer an alleged or suspected crime.

The word arrest is said to be more properly used in civil cases, and apprehension in criminal. Thus, a man is arrested under a capias ad respondendum, and apprehended under a warrant charging him with larceny.

Who may make. The person to whom the warrant is addressed is the proper person in case a warrant has been issued, whether he be described by name; Salk. 176; 24 Wend. 418; 2 Ired. 201; or by his office; 1 B. & C. 288; 2 D. & R. 444; 7 Exch. 827; 6 Barb. 654. See 1 Mass. 488. But, if the authority of the warrant is insufficient, he may be liable as a trespasser. See supra.

An arrest may be made at night as well as by day; and for treason, felony, breach of the peace, or generally for an indictable offence, on Sunday as well as on other days; 16 M. & W. 172; 2 E. & B. 717; 13 Mass. 547; 24 Me. 158. And the officer may break open doors even of the criminal's own house; 10 Cush. 501; 14 B. Monr. 305 (even to arrest a person therein, not the owner; 120 Mass. 190); as may a private person in fresh pursuit, under circumstances which authorize him to make an arrest; 4 Bla. Com. 293.

It must be made within the jurisdiction of the court under whose authority the officer acts; 1 Hill. N. Y. 377; 2 Cranch, 187; 8 Vt. 194; 3 Harr. Del. 416; and see 4 Maule & S. 361; 1 B. & C. 288; and jurisdiction for this purpose can be extended to foreign countries only by virtue of treaties or express laws of those countries; 1 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 598; Wheaton, Int. Law, 177; 10 S. & R. 125; 12 Vt. 631; 1 W. & M. 66; 1 Barb. 248; 1 Park. Crim. N. Y. 108, 429. And see, as between the states of the United States, 5 How. 215; 5 Metc. Mass. 536; 4 Day, 121; R. M. Charlt. 120; 2 Humphr. 258. As to arrest in a different county; 41 Ind. 181. As to what constitutes an arrest; 2 Thomp. & C. 224.

Manner of making. An officer authorized to make an arrest, whether by warrant or from the circumstances, may use necessary force; 9 Port. Ala. 195; 3 Harr. Del. 568; 24 Me. 158; 35 id. 472; 16 Barb. 268; 4 Cush. 60; 7 Blackf. 64; 2 Ired. 52; 4 B. & C. 596; 6 D. & R. 623; 43 Tex. 93 (but he may not strike except in self-defence); he may kill the felon if he cannot otherwise be taken; see 7 C. & P. 140; 2 Mood. & R. 39; 73 Ill. 78; see 1 Hugh. 560; and so may a private person in making an arrest which he is enjoined to make; 4 Bla. Com. 293; and if the officer or private person is killed, in such case it is murder. Reading a warrant and directing the defendant to appear, is not an arrest; 82 Ill. 485. Arresting the body and exhibiting the process is enough; 50 Vt. 728.

ARREST OF JUDGMENT. In Practice. The act of a court by which the judges refuse to give judgment, because upon the face of the record it appears that the plaintiff is not entitled to it.

A motion for arrest of judgment must be grounded on some objection arising on the face of the record itself; and no defect in the evidence or irregularity at the trial can be urged in this stage of the proceedings. But any want of sufficient certainty in the indictment, as in the statement of time or place (where material), of the person against whom the offence was committed, or of the facts and circumstances constituting the offence, or otherwise, which is not aided by the verdict, is a ground for arresting the judgment. In criminal cases, an arrest of judgment is founded on exceptions to the indictment. In civil cases whatever is alleged in arrest of judgment must be such matter as would on demurrer have been sufficient to overturn the action or plea. In the applicability of the rule there is no difference between civil and criminal cases; 60 Penn. 367. Although the defendant himself omits to make any motion in arrest of judgment, the court, if on a review of the case it is satisfied that the defendant has not been found guilty of any offence in law, will of itself arrest the judgment; 1 East, 146. Where a statute upon which an indictment is founded was repealed after the finding of the indictment, but before plea pleaded, the court arrested the judgment; 18 Q. B. 761; Dearsl. 3. See also 8 Ad. & E. 496; 1 Russ. & R. 429; 11 Pick. 350; 21 id. 373; 6 Cush. 465; 12 id. 501. If the judgment is arrested, all the proceedings are set aside, and judgment of acquittal is given; but this will be no bar to a new indictment; Comyns, Dig. Indictment, N.

ARRESTANDIS BONIS NE DISSIPENTUR. In English Law. A writ for him whose cattle or goods, being taken during a controversy, are likely to be wasted and consumed.

ARRESTEE. In Scotch Law. He in whose hands a debt, or property in his possession, has been arrested by a regular arrestment.

If, in contempt of the arrestment, he make payment of the sum or deliver the goods arrested to the common debtor, he is not only liable criminally for breach of the arrestment, but he must pay the debt again to the arrester; Erskine, Inst. 3. 6. 6.

ARRESTER. In Scotch Law. One who sues out and obtains an arrestment of his debtor's goods or movable obligations. Erskine, Inst. 3. 6. 1.

ARRESTMENT. In Scotch Law. Securing a criminal's person till trial, or that of a debtor till he give security judicio sisti. The order of a judge, by which he who is debtor in a movable obligation to the arrester's debtor is prohibited to make payment or delivery till the debt due to the arrester be paid or secured. Erskine, Inst. 3. 6. 1; 1. 2. 12.

Where arrestment proceeds on a depending action, it may be loosed by the common debtor's giving security to the arrester for his debt, in the event it shall be found due; Erskine, Inst. 3. 6. 7.

ARRET (Fr.). A judgment, sentence, or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction.

The term is derived from the French law, and is used in Canada and Louisiana.

Saisie arrêt is an attachment of property in the hands of a third person. La. Code Pract. art. 209; 2 Low. C. 77; 5 id. 198, 218.

ARRETTED (arrectatus, i. e. ad rectum vocatus).

Convened before a judge and charged with a crime.

Ad rectum malefactorem is, according to Bracton, to have a malefactor forthcoming to be put on his trial.

Imputed, or laid to one's charge; as, no folly may be arretted to any one under age. Bracton, l. 3, tr. 2, c. 10; Cunningham, Dict.

ARRHÆ. Money or other valuable things given by the buyer to the seller, for the purpose of evidencing the contract; earnest.

There are two kinds of arrhæ: one kind given when a contract has only been proposed; the other when a sale has actually taken place. Those which are given when a bargain has been merely proposed, before it has been concluded, form the matter of the contract, by which he who gives the arrhæ consents and agrees to lose them, and to transfer the title to them in the opposite party, in case he should refuse to complete the proposed bargain; and the receiver of arrhæ is obliged on his part to return double the amount to the giver of them in case he should fail to complete his part of the contract; Pothier, Contr. de Vente, n. 498. After the contract of sale has been completed, the purchaser usually gives arrhæ as evidence that the contract has been perfected. Arrhæ are therefore defined quod ante pretium datur, et fidem facit contractus, facti totiusque pecuniæ solvendæ. Id. n. 506; Cod. 4. 45. 2.

ARRIAGE AND CARRIAGE. Services of an indefinite amount formerly exacted from tenants under the Scotch law. Bell, Dict.

ARRIER BAN. A second summons to join the lord, addressed to those who had neglected the first. A summons of the inferiors or vassals of the lord. Spelman, Gloss.

To be distinguished from *ariban*num.

ARRIERE FIEF (Fr.). An inferior fee granted out of a superior.

ARRIVE. To come to a particular place; to reach a particular or certain place. See cases in Leake, Contr., and in Abb. Dict.; 1 Brock. 411; 2 Cush. 439; 8 B. & C. 119.

ARROGATION. The adoption of a person sui juris. 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 119; Dig. 1. 7. 5; Inst. 1. 11. 3.

ARSEIR IN LE MAIN. (Burning in the hand.) The punishment inflicted on those who received the benefit of clergy. Termes de la Ley.

ARSON (Lat. ardere, to burn). The malicious burning of the house of another. Coke, 3d Inst. 66; Bishop, Cr. L. § 415; 4 Bla. Com. 220; 2 Pick. 320; 10 Cush. 479; 7 Gratt. 619; 9 Ala. 175; 7 Blackf. 168; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 4th ed. 218; 51 Cal. 319; 12 Bush, 243.

The house, or some part of it, however small, must be consumed by fire; 9 C. & P. 45; 16 Mass. 105; 5 Ired. 350. The question of burning is one of fact for the jury; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 398; 5 Cush. 427.

It must be another's house; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 389; but aliter under the N. H. statute; 51 N. H. 176; but if a man set fire to his own house with a view to burn his neighbor's, and does so, it is, at least, a great misdemeanor; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 568; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 1027; 5 Russ. & R. Cr. Cas. 487; W. Jones, 351; 2 Pick. 325; 34 Me. 428; 2 Nott & M'C. 36; 8 Gratt. 624; 5 B. & Ad. 27. See 1 Park. Cr. Cas. 560; 2 Johns. 105; 7 Blackf. 168.

The house of another must be burned, to constitute arson at common law; but the term "house" comprehends not only the very mansion-house, but all out-houses which are parcel thereof, though not contiguous to it, nor under the same roof, such as the barn, stable, cow-house, sheep-house, dairy-house, mill-house, and the like, being within the curtilage, or same common fence, as the mansion itself; 1 C. & K. 533; 14 M. & W. 181; 4 C. & P. 245; 20 Conn. 245; 16 Johns. 203; 18 id. 115; 3 Ired. 570; 3 Rich. 242; 5 Whart. 427; 4 Leigh, 683; 4 Call. 109. And it has also been said that the burning of a barn, though no part of the mansion, if it has corn or hay in it, is felony at common law; 1 Hale, P. C. 567; 4 C. & P. 245; 5 W. & S. 385; contra, 81 Ill. 565. In Massachusetts, the statute refers to the dwelling-house strictly; 16 Pick. 161; 10 Cush. 478. And see 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 19, 99. Where a prisoner set fire to his cell, in order to effect an escape, held, not arson; 18 Johns. 115; but see 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 829; 8 Call, 109; 49 Ala. 30. The burning must have been both malicious and wilful; Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 272; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 1019, 1031; 1 Bishop, Cr. L. § 259; 28 Miss. 100. And generally, if the act is proved to have been done wilfully, it may be inferred to have been done maliciously, unless the contrary is proved; 1 Russ. & R. Cr. Cas. 26. On a charge of arson for setting fire to a mill, an intent to injure or defraud the mill-owners will be conclusively inferred from the wilful act of firing; 1 Russ. & R. Cr. Cas. 207; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 263; 2 B. & C. 264. But this doctrine can only arise where the act is wilful; and therefore, if the fire appears to be the result of accident, the party who is the cause of it will not be liable.

It is a felony at common law, and originally punishable with death; Coke, 3d Inst. 66; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 1015; 5 W. & S. 385; but this is otherwise, to a considerable extent, by statute; 8 Rich. So. C. 276; 4 Dev. 305; 4 Call, 109; 5 Cranch, C. C. 73. If homicide result, the act is murder; 1 Green, N. J. 361; 1 Bishop, Cr. Law, 361.

It is not an indictable offence at common law to burn one's own house to defraud insurers; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 843; otherwise in some states by statute; 51 N. H. 176; 19 N. Y. 537; 32 Cal. 160.

ARSURA. The trial of money by heating it after it was coined. Now obsolete.

ART. A principle put in practice and applied to some art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter. 4 Mas. 1; see act of Cong. July 8, 1870.

Copper-plate printing on the back of a bank-note is an art for which a patent may be granted; 4 Wash. C. C. 9; see, also, 1 Fisher, 133; as to "lost arts," 10 How. 477.

ART AND PART. In Scotch Law. The offence committed by one who aids and assists the commission of a crime, but who is not the principal or chief actor in its actual commission. An accessary. A principal in the second degree. Paterson, Comp.

A person may be guilty, art and part, either by giving advice or counsel to commit the crime; or by giving warrant or mandate to commit it; or by actually assisting the criminal in the execution.

In the more atrocious crimes, it seems agreed that the adviser is equally punishable with the criminal, and that, in the slighter offences, the circumstances arising from the adviser's lesser age, the jocular or careless manner of giving the advice, etc., may be received as pleas for softening the punishment.

One who gives a mandate to commit a crime, as he is the first spring of the action, seems more guilty than the person employed as the instrument in executing it.

Assistance may be given to the committer of a crime, not only in the actual execution, but previous to it, by furnishing him, with a criminal intent, with poison, arms, or other means of perpetrating it. That sort of assistance which is not given until after the criminal act, and which is commonly called abetting, though it be itself criminal, does not infer art and part of the principal crime; Erskine, Inst. 4. 4. 10.

ARTICLES (Lat. articulus, artus, a joint). Divisions of a written or printed document or agreement.

A specification of distinct matters agreed upon or established by authority or requiring judicial action.

The fundamental idea of an article is that of an object comprising some integral part of a complex whole. See Worcester, Dict. The term may be applied, for example, to a single complete question in a series of interrogatories; the statement of the undertakings and liabilities of the various parties to an agreement in any given event, where several contingencies are provided for in the same agreement; a statement of a variety of powers secured to a branch of government by a constitution; a statement of particular regulations in reference to one general subject of legislation in a system of laws; and in many other instances resembling these in principle. It is also used in the plural of the subject made up of these separate and related articles, as, articles of agreement, articles of war, the different divisions generally having, however, some relation to each other, though not necessarily a dependence upon each other.

In Chancery Practice. A formal written statement of objections to the credibility of witnesses in a cause in chancery, filed by a party to the proceedings after the depositions have been taken and published.

The object of articles is to enable the party filing them to introduce evidence to discredit the witnesses to whom the objections apply, where it is too late to do so in any other manner; 1 Daniell, Ch. Pr. 957; and to apprize the party whose witnesses are objected to of the nature of the objections, that he may be prepared to meet them; 1 Daniell, Ch. Pr. 958.

Upon filing the articles, a special order is obtained to take evidence; 2 Dick. Ch. 532; which is sparingly to be granted; 1 Beam. Ord. 187.

The interrogatories must be so shaped as not to call for evidence which applies directly to facts in issue in the case; 2 Sumn. 316, 605; 3 Johns. Ch. 558; 10 Ves. Ch. 49. The objections can be taken only to the credit and not to the competency of the witnesses, 3 Atk. 643; 3 Johns. Ch. 558; and the court are to hear all the evidence read and judge of its value; 2 Ves. Ch. 219; see, generally, 1 Daniell, Ch. Pr. 959 et seq.; 10 Ves. Ch. 49; 19 id. 127; 2 Ves. & B. 267; 1 Sim. & S. 467.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A complaint in the form of a libel exhibited to an ecclesiastical court.

In Scotch Law. Matters; business. Bell, Dict.

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT. A written memorandum of the terms of an agreement.

They may relate either to real or personal estate, or both, and if in proper form will create an equitable estate or trust such that a specific performance may be had in equity.

The instrument should contain a clear and explicit statement of the names of the parties, with their additions for purposes of distinction, as well as a designation as parties of the first, second, etc., part; the subject-matter of the contract, including the time, place, and more important details of the manner of performance; the promises to be performed by each party; the date, which should be truly stated. It should be signed by the parties or their agents. When signed by an agent, the proper form is, A B, by his agent [or attorney], C D.

ARTICLES APPROBATORY. In Scotch Law. That part of the proceedings which corresponds to the answer to the charge in an English bill in chancery; Paterson, Comp.

ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION. The title of the compact which was made by the thirteen original states of the United States of America.

The full title was "Articles of Confederation and perpetual union between the states of New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia." It was adopted and went into force on the first day of March, 1781, and remained as the supreme law until the first Wednesday of March, 1789; 5 Wheat. 420.

The accompanying analysis of this important instrument is copied from Judge Story's Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, book 2, c. 3.

The style of the confederacy was, by the first article, declared to be, "The United States of America." The second article declared that each state retained its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right which was not by this confederation expressly delegated to the United States, in congress assembled. The third article declared that the states severally entered into a firm league of friendship with each other, for their common defence, the security of their liberties, and their mutual and general welfare; binding themselves to assist each other against all force offered to or attacks made upon them, or any of them, on account of religion, sovereignty, trade, or any other pretence whatever. The fourth article declared that the free inhabitants of each of the states (vagabonds and fugitives from justice excepted) should be entitled to all the privileges of free citizens in the several states; that the people of each state should have free ingress and regress to and from any other state, and should enjoy all the privileges of trade and commerce, subject to the same duties and restrictions as the inhabitants; that fugitives from justice should, upon the demand of the executive of the state from which they fled, be delivered up; and that full faith and credit should be given, in each of the states, to the records, acts, and judicial proceedings of the courts and magistrates of every other state.

Having thus provided for the security and intercourse of the states, the next article (5th) provided for the organization of a general congress, declaring that delegates should be chosen in such manner as the legislature of each state should direct; to meet in congress on the first Monday in every year, with a power, reserved to each state, to recall any or all of the delegates, and to send others in their stead. No state was to be represented in congress by less than two nor more than seven members. No delegate was eligible for more than three in any term of six years; and no delegate was capable of holding office of emolument under the United States. Each state was to maintain its own delegates, and, in determining questions in congress, was to have one vote. Freedom of speech and debate in congress was not to be impeached or questioned in any other place; and the members were to be protected from arrest and imprisonment during the time of their going to and from and attendance on congress, except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace.

By subsequent articles, congress was invested with the sole and exclusive right and power of determining on peace and war, unless in case of an invasion of a state by enemies, or an imminent danger of an invasion by Indians; of sending and receiving ambassadors; entering into treaties and alliances, under certain limitations as to treaties of commerce; of establishing rules for deciding all cases of capture on land and water, and for the division and appropriation of prizes taken by the land or naval forces, in the service of the United States; of granting letters of marque and reprisal in times of peace; of appointing courts for the trial of piracies and felonies committed on the high seas; and of establishing courts for receiving and finally determining appeals in all cases of captures.

Congress was also invested with power to decide in the last resort, on appeal, all disputes and differences between two or more states concerning boundary, jurisdiction, or any other cause whatsoever; and the mode of exercising that authority was specially prescribed. And all controversies concerning the private right of soil, claimed under different grants of two or more states before the settlement of their jurisdiction, were to be finally determined in the same manner, upon the petition of either of the grantees. But no state was to be deprived of territory for the benefit of the United States.

Congress was also invested with the sole and exclusive right and power of regulating the alloy and value of coin struck by their own authority, or that of the United States; of fixing the standard of weights and measures throughout the United States; of regulating the trade and managing all affairs with the Indians, not members of any of the states, provided that the legislative right of any state within its own limits should not be infringed or violated; of establishing and regulating post-offices from one state to another, and exacting postage to defray the expenses; of appointing all officers of the land forces in the service of the United States, except regimental officers; of appointing all officers of the naval forces, and commissioning all officers whatsoever in the service of the United States; and of making rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, and directing their operations.

Congress was also invested with authority to appoint a committee of the states to sit in the recess of congress, and to consist of one delegate from each state, and other committees and civil officers, to manage the general affairs under their direction; to appoint one of their number to preside, but no person was to serve in the office of president more than one year in the term of three years; to ascertain the necessary sums for the public service, and to appropriate the same for defraying the public expenses; to borrow money and emit bills on credit of the United States; to build and equip a navy; to agree upon the number of land forces, and make requisitions upon each state for its quota, in proportion to the number of white inhabitants in such state. The legislatures of each state were to appoint the regimental officers, raise the men, and clothe, arm, and equip them at the expense of the United States.

Congress was also invested with power to adjourn for any time not exceeding six months, and to any place within the United States; and provision was made for the publication of its journal, and for entering the yeas and nays thereon when desired by any delegate.

Such were the powers confided in congress. But even these were greatly restricted in their exercise; for it was expressly provided that congress should never engage in a war; nor grant letters of marque or reprisal in time of peace; nor enter into any treaties or alliances; nor coin money or regulate the value thereof; nor ascertain the sums or expenses necessary for the defence and welfare of the United States; nor emit bills; nor borrow money on the credit of the United States; nor appropriate money; nor agree upon the number of vessels of war to be built, or purchased, or the number of land or sea forces to be raised; nor appoint a commander-in-chief of the army or navy; unless nine states should assent to the same. And no question on any other point, except for adjourning from day to day, was to be determined, except by vote of the majority of the states.

The committee of the states, or any nine of them, were authorized in the recess of congress to exercise such powers as congress, with the assent of nine states, should think it expedient to vest them with, except powers for the exercise of which, by the articles of confederation, the assent of nine states was required, which could not be thus delegated.

It was further provided that all bills of credit, moneys borrowed, and debts contracted by or under the authority of congress before the confederation, should be a charge against the United States; that when land forces were raised by any state for the common defence, all officers of or under the rank of colonel should be appointed by the legislature of the state, or in such manner as the state should direct; and all vacancies should be filled up in the same manner; that all charges of war, and all other expenses for the common defence or general welfare, should be defrayed out of a common treasury, which should be supplied by the several states, in proportion to the value of the land within each state granted or surveyed, and the buildings and improvements thereon, to be estimated according to the mode prescribed by congress; and the taxes for that proportion were to be laid and levied by the legislatures of the states within the time agreed upon by congress.

Certain prohibitions were laid upon the exercise of powers by the respective states. No state, without the consent of the United States, could send an embassy to, or receive en embassy from, or enter into any treaty with, any king, prince, or state; nor could any person holding any office under the United States, or any of them, accept any present, emolument, office, or title from any foreign king, prince, or state; nor could congress itself grant any title of nobility. No two states could enter into any treaty, confederation, or alliance with each other, without the consent of congress. No state could lay any imposts or duties which might interfere with any proposed treaties. No vessels of war were to be kept up by any state in time of peace, except deemed necessary by congress for its defence or trade; nor any body of forces, except as should be deemed requisite by congress to garrison its forts and necessary for its defence. But every state was required always to keep up a well-regulated and disciplined militia, sufficiently armed and accoutred, and to be provided with suitable field-pieces, and tents, and arms, and ammunition, and camp equipage. No state could engage in war without the consent of congress, unless actually invaded by enemies or in danger of invasion by the Indians. Nor could any state grant commissions to any ships of war, nor letters of marque and reprisal, except after a declaration of war by congress, unless such state were infested by pirates, and then subject to the determination of congress. No state could prevent the removal of any property imported into any state to any other state, of which the owner was an inhabitant. And no imposition, duties, or restriction could be laid by any state on the property of the United States or of either of them.

There was also provision made for the admission of Canada into the Union, and of other colonies, with the assent of nine states. And it was finally declared that every state should abide by the determinations of congress on all questions submitted to it by the confederation; that the articles should be inviolably observed by every state; that the union should be perpetual; and that no alterations should be made in any of the articles, unless agreed to by congress and confirmed by the legislatures of every state.

ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT. A written articulate allegation of the causes for impeachment.

They are called by Blackstone a kind of bills of indictment, and perform the same office which an indictment does in a common criminal case. They do not usually pursue the strict form and accuracy of an indictment, but are sometimes quite general in the form of the allegations. Wooddeson, Lect. 605; Comyns. Dig. Parliament (L. 21); Story, Const. § 807 et seq.; Com. Dig. Parliament, L. 21; Foster, Cr. L. 389. They should, however, contain so much certainty as to enable a party to put himself on the proper defence, and in case of an acquittal to avail himself of it as a bar to another impeachment. Additional articles may perhaps be exhibited at any stage of the proceedings; Rawle, Const. 216.

The answer to articles of impeachment need not observe great strictness of form; and it may contain arguments as well as facts. It is usual to give a full and particular answer to each article of the accusation; Story, Const. § 810; Jeff. Man. § 53.

ARTICLES IMPROBATORY. In Scotch Law Articulate averments setting forth the facts relied upon. Bell, Dict.

That part of the proceedings which corresponds to the charge in our English bill in chancery to set aside a deed. Paterson, Comp. The answer is called articles approbatory.

ARTICLES OF PARTNERSHIP. A written agreement by which the parties enter into a partnership upon the conditions therein mentioned.

These are to be distinguished from agreements to enter into a partnership at a future time. By articles of partnership a partnership is actually established; while an agreement for a partnership is merely a contract, which may be taken advantage of in a manner similar to other contracts. Where an agreement to enter into a partnership is broken, an action lies at law to recover damages; and equity, in some cases, to prevent frauds or manifestly mischievous consequences, will enforce specific performance; Story, Partn. § 109; 3 Atk. 383; 1 Swanst. 513, n.; Lind. Partn. *914; 17 Beav. 294; but not when the partnership may be immediately dissolved; 9 Ves. Ch. 360. Specific performance was decreed in 40 Miss. 483; 5 Munf. 492; and refused in 4 Md. 60. See 8 Beav. 129; 30 id. 376.

The instrument should contain the names of the contracting parties severally set out; the agreement that the parties do by the instrument enter into a partnership, expressed in such terms as to distinguish it from a covenant to enter into partnership at a subsequent time; the date, and necessary stipulations, some of the more common of which follow.

The commencement of the partnership should be expressly provided for. The date of the articles is the time, when no other time is fixed by them; 5 B. & C. 108; Lindl. Part. 831; if not dated, parol evidence is admissible to show that they were not intended to take effect at the date of their execution; 17 C. B. 625.

The duration of the partnership should be stated. It may be for life, for a limited period of time, or for a limited number of adventures. When a term is fixed, it endures until that period has elapsed; when no term or limitation is fixed, the partnership may be dissolved at the will of either partner; 17 Ves. 298; 3 Ross. L. C. Com. Law, 611; 51 Ind. 478; 4 Col. 567; 76 N. Y. 373; Lindl. Partn. *220. The duration will not be presumed to be beyond the life of all the partners; 1 Swanst. 521; but provision may be made for the succession of the executors or administrators or a child or children of a deceased partner to his place and rights; 2 How. 560; 8 Am. L. Rev. 641; 12 La. Ann. 626; 9 Ves. Ch. 500. Where a provision is made for a succession by appointment, and the partner dies without appointing, his executors or administrators may continue the partnership or not, at their option; 1 M'Cl. & Y. 579; Colly. Ch. 157. A continuance of the partnership beyond the period fixed for its termination, in the absence of circumstances showing intent, will be implied to be upon the basis of the old articles; 5 Mas. 176, 185; 15 Ves. Ch. 218; 1 Moll. Ch. 466; but it will be considered as at will, and not as renewed for a further definite period; 17 Ves. 307.

The nature of the business and the place of carrying it on should be very carefully and exactly specified. Courts of equity will grant an injunction when one or more of the partners attempt, against the wishes of one or more of them, to extend such business beyond the provision contained in the articles; Story, Partn. § 193; Lindl. Partn. *600, *830; 32 N. H. 9; 4 Johns. Ch. 573.

The name of the firm should be ascertained. The members of the partnership are required to use the name thus agreed upon, and a departure from it will make them individually liable to third persons or to their partners, in particular cases; Lindl. Partn. *832; 2 Jac. & W. 266; 9 Ad. & E. 814; 11 id. 839; Story, Partn. §§ 102, 136, 142, 202.

The management of the business, or of some particular branch of it, is frequently intrusted by stipulation to one partner, and such partner will be protected in his rights by equity; Story, Partn. §§ 172, 182, 193, 202; and see La. Civ. Code, art. 2838–2840; Pothier, Société, n. 71; Dig. 14, 1, 1, 13; Pothier, Pand. 14, 1, 4; or it may be to a majority of the partners, and should be where they are numerous. See PARTNERS.

The manner of furnishing capital and stock should be provided for. When a partner is required to furnish his proportion of the stock at stated periods, or pay by instalments, he will, where there are no stipulations to the contrary, be considered a debtor to the firm; Story, Part. § 203; 1 Swanst. 89. As to the fulfilment of some conditions precedent by a partner, such as the payment of so much capital, etc., see Lindl. Partn. *834; 1 Wms. Saund. 320, a. Sometimes a provision is inserted that real estate and fixtures belonging to the firm shall be considered, as between the partners, not as partnership but as several property. In cases of bankruptcy, this property will be treated as the separate property of the partners; Collyer, Partn. 141, 595, 600; 5 Ves. 189; 3 Madd. 68.

The apportionment of profits and losses should be provided for. The law distributes these equally, in the absence of controlling circumstances, without regard to the capital furnished by each; Watson, Partn. 59; Story, Partn. 24; 3 Kent, 28; 6 Wend. 263. But see 7 Bligh, 432; 5 Wils. & S. 16.

Periodical accounts of the property of the partnership may be stipulated for. These, when settled, are at least primâ facie evidence of the facts they contain; 7 Sim. 239. It is proper to stipulate that an account settled shall be conclusive; Lindl. Partn. *839.

The expulsion of a partner for gross misconduct, bankruptcy, or other specified causes may be provided for; and the provision will govern, when the case occurs; see 10 Hare, 493; L. R. 9 Ex. 190.

A settlement of the affairs of the partnership should always be provided for. It is generally accomplished in one of the three following ways: first, by turning all the assets into cash, and, after paying all the liabilities of the partnership, dividing such money in proportion to the several interests of the parties; or, second, by providing that one or more of the partners shall be entitled to purchase the shares of the others at a valuation; 20 Beav. 442; or, third, that all the property of the partnership shall be appraised, and that after paying the partnership debts it shall be divided in the proper proportions. The first of these modes is adopted by courts of equity in the absence of express stipulations; Lindl. Partn. *847; Story, Partn. § 207; 8 Sim. 529; but see 6 Madd. 146; 3 Hare, 581.

Submission of disputes to arbitration is provided for frequently, but such a clause is nugatory, as no action will lie for a breach; Story, Partn. § 215; and (except in England, under Com. L. Proc. Act, 1854) it is no defence to an action relative to the matter to be referred. See Lindl. Partn. *868 et seq.

The article should be executed by the parties, but need not be under seal. See PARTIES; PARTNERS; PARTNERSHIP.

ARTICLES OF THE PEACE. A complaint made before a court of competent jurisdiction by one who has just cause to fear that an injury to his person or property is about to be committed or caused by the party complained of, alleging the causes of his belief, and asking the protection of the court.

The object of articles is to compel the party complained of to find sureties of the peace. This will be granted when the articles are on oath; 1 Str. 527; 12 Mod. 243; 12 Ad. & E. 599; unless the articles on their face are false; 2 Burr. 806; 3 id. 1922; or are offered under suspicious circumstances; 2 Str. 835; 1 W. Blackst. 233. Their truth cannot be controverted by affidavit or otherwise; but exception may be taken to their sufficiency, or affidavits for reduction of the amount of bail tendered; 2 Str. 1202; 13 East, 171.

ARTICLES OF ROUP. In Scotch Law. The conditions under which property is offered for sale at auction. Paterson, Comp.

ARTICLES OF SET. In Scotch Law. An agreement for a lease. Paterson, Comp.

ARTICLES OF WAR. The code of laws established for the government of the army.

The term is used in this sense both in England and the United States. The term also includes the code established for the government of the navy. See Rev. Stat. U. S. (1878) § 1342, as to the army, and § 1624, as to the navy; and 22 Geo. II. c. 33; 19 Geo. III. c. 17; 37 Geo. III. cc. 70, 71; 47 Geo. III. c. 71; MARTIAL LAW.

ARTICULATE ADJUDICATION. In Scotch Law. Separate adjudication for each of several claims of a creditor.

It is so made in order that a mistake in accumulating one debt need not affect the proceedings on other claims which are correctly accumulated.

ARTIFICIAL. Having its existence in the given manner by virtue of or in consideration only of the law.

Artificial person. A body, company, or corporation considered in law as an individual.

ARURA. Days' work at ploughing.

AS (Lat.). A pound.

It was composed of twelve ounces. The parts were reckoned (as may be seen in the law, Servum de hæredibus, Inst. lib. xiii. Pandect) as follows: uncia, 1 ounce; sextans, 2 ounces; triens, 3 ounces; quadrans, 4 ounces; quincunx, 5 ounces; semis, 6 ounces; septunx, 7 ounces; bes, 8 ounces; dodrans, 9 ounces; dextans, 10 ounces; deunx, 11 ounces.

The whole of a thing; solidum quid.

Thus, as signified the whole of an inheritance: so that an heir ex asse was an heir of the whole inheritance. An heir ex triente, ex semisse, ex besse, ex deunce, was an heir of one-third, one-half, two-thirds, or eleven-twelfths.

ASCENDANTS (Lat. ascendere, to ascend, to go up to, to climb up to). Those from whom a person is descended, or from whom he derives his birth, however remote they may be.

Every one has two ascendants at the first degree, his father and mother; four at the second degree, his paternal grandfather and grandmother, and his maternal grandfather and grandmother; eight at the third. Thus, in going up we ascend by various lines, which fork at every generation. By this progress sixteen ascendants are found at the fourth degree; thirty-two, at the fifth; sixty-four, at the sixth; one hundred and twenty-eight, at the seventh, and so on. By this progressive increase, a person has at the twenty-fifth generation thirty-three million five hundred and fifty-four thousand four hundred and thirty-two ascendants. But, as many of the ascendants of a person have descended from the same ancestor, the lines which were forked reunite to the first common ancestor, from whom the other descends; and this multiplication, thus frequently interrupted by the common ancestors, may be reduced to a few persons.

ASCRIPTITIUS. One enrolled; foreigners who have been enrolled. Among the Romans, ascriptitii were foreigners who had been naturalized, and who had in general the same rights as natives. Nov. 22, c. 17; Cod. 11. 47. Ascriptitii is the plural.

ASPHYXY. In Medical Jurisprudence. Suspended animation produced by non-conversion of the venous blood of the lungs into arterial; swooning; fainting.

This term applies to the situation of persons who have been asphyxiated by submersion or drowning; by breathing mephitic gas; by the effect of lightning; by the effect of cold; by heat; by suspension or strangulation. In a legal point of view, it is always proper to ascertain whether the person who has thus been deprived of his senses is the victim of another, whether the injury has been caused by accident, or whether it is the act of the sufferer himself.

ASPORTATION (Lat. asportatio). The act of carrying a thing away; the removing a thing from one place to another.

ASSASSINATION. Murder committed for hire, without provocation or cause of resentment given to the murderer by the person upon whom the crime is committed. Erskine, Inst. b. 4, t. 4, n. 45.

A murder committed treacherously, with advantage of time, place, or other circumstances.

ASSAULT. An unlawful offer or attempt with force or violence to do a corporeal hurt to another.

Force unlawfully directed or applied to the person of another under such circumstances as to cause a well-founded apprehension of immediate peril.

Aggravated assault is one committed with the intention of committing some additional crime. Simple assault is one committed with no intention to do any other injury.

Assault is generally coupled with battery, and for the excellent practical reason that they generally go together; but the assault is rather the initiation or offer to commit the act of which the battery is the consummation. An assault is included in every battery; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 62, § 1.

Where a person is only assaulted, still the form of the declaration is the same as where there has been a battery, "that the defendant assaulted, and beat, bruised, and wounded the plaintiff;" 1 Saund. 6th ed. 14 a. The word "ill-treated" is frequently inserted; and if the assaulting and ill-treating are justified in the plea, although the beating, bruising, and wounding are not, yet it is held that the plea amounts to a justification of the battery; 7 Taunt. 689; 1 J. B. Moore, 420. So where the plaintiff declared, in trespass, for assaulting him, seizing and laying hold of him, and imprisoning him, and the defendant pleaded a justification under a writ of capias, it was held, that the plea admitted a battery; 3 M. & W. 28. But where in trespass for assaulting the plaintiff, and throwing water upon him, and also wetting and damaging his clothes, the defendant pleaded a justification as to assaulting the plaintiff and wetting and damaging his clothes, it was held, that, though the declaration alleged a battery, yet the matter justified by the plea did not amount to a battery; 8 Ad. & E. 602; 3 Nev. & P. 564.

Any act causing a well-founded apprehension of immediate peril from a force already partially or fully put in motion is an assault; 4 C. & P. 349; 9 id. 483, 626; 110 Mass. 407; 1 Ired. 125, 375; 11 id. 475; 1 S. & R. 347; 3 Strobh. 137; 9 Ala. 79; 2 Wash. C. C. 435; unless justifiable. But if justifiable, then it is not necessarily either a battery or an assault. Whether the act, therefore, in any particular case is an assault and battery, or a gentle imposition of hands, or application of force, depends upon the question whether there was justifiable cause. If, therefore, the evidence fails to show the act to have been unjustifiable, or leaves that question in doubt, the criminal act is not proved, and the party charged is entitled to an acquittal; 2 Metc. Mass. 24, 25; 1 Gray, 63, 64.

If a master takes indecent liberties with a female scholar, without her consent, though she does not resist, it is an assault; R. & R. Cr. Cas. 130; 6 Cox, Cr. Cas. 64; 9 C. & P. 722. So, if a medical practitioner unnecessarily strips a female patient naked, under the pretence that he cannot otherwise judge of her illness, it is an assault, if he assisted to take off her clothes; 1 Moody, 19; 1 Lew. 11. Where a medical man had connection with a girl fourteen years of age, under the pretence that he was thereby treating her medically for the complaint for which he was attending her, she making no resistance solely from the bonâ fide belief that such was the case, it was held that he was properly convicted of an assault; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 580; 4 Cox, Cr. Cas. 220; Templ. & M. 218. But an attempt to commit the misdemeanor of having carnal knowledge of a girl between ten and twelve years old, is not an assault, by reason of the consent of the girl; 8 C. & P. 574, 589; 9 id. 213; 2 Mood. 123; 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 145. And see 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 377; 2 C. & K. 957; 3 Cox, Cr. Cas. 266. One is guilty of assault and battery who delivers to another a thing to be eaten, knowing that it contains a foreign substance and concealing the fact, if the other, in ignorance, eats it and is injured; 114 Mass. 203; but see 2 Mood. & R. 531; 2 C. & K. 912;

1 Cox, Cr. Cas. 281. An unlawful imprisonment is also an assault; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 62, § 1. A negligent attack may be an assault; Whart. Cr. L. § 603. See Steph. Dig. Cr. L. § 241.

ASSAY. The proof or trial of the purity or fineness of metals,—particularly the precious metals, gold and silver.

By this proof the amount of pure metal in any homogeneous mass is ascertained. In the case of gold, the base metals, such as copper or tin, are removed by a method called cupellation, which is conducted in an assay-furnace, in a cupel, or little cup composed of calcined bones. To the other metals lead is added,—this metal possessing the properties of oxidizing and vitrifying under the action of heat, of promoting, at the same time, the oxidation of any of the base metals which may be present, and of drawing such metals with it into the pores of the cupel, and thus leaving behind the gold only, together with any amount of silver which may be present. The silver is separated from the gold by another process, founded on the property possessed by nitric acid of dissolving silver without acting upon gold.

The assay of silver is generally made by a method called the humid assay. The silver is dissolved in nitric acid, and a solution of common salt in water is added, by which the silver is precipitated in the form of a white powder, which is an insoluble chloride. It has been ascertained that one hundred parts, by weight, of pure salt will convert into chloride of silver just one hundred and eighty-four and one-fourth parts of pure silver. From this theorem the fineness of the specimen operated upon is deduced from the quantity of salt used to convert into chloride a given amount of silver.

Assays at the mint are for two purposes. 1. To determine the value of the deposits of gold and of silver. 2. To ascertain whether the ingots prepared for coinage are of the legal standard of fineness. The standard gold of the United States is so constituted that in one thousand parts, by weight, nine hundred shall be of pure gold and one hundred of an alloy composed of silver and copper. The standard silver of the United States is composed of nine hundred parts of pure silver and one hundred of copper. See ANNUAL ASSAY.

ASSAY OFFICE. An establishment, or department, in which the manipulations attending the assay of bullion and coins are conducted. See ASSAY.

Assay offices are established (R. S. (1878) § 3495 et seq.) at New York, Boise City, Idaho, and Charlotte, North Carolina. Sec. 3853 provides that the business of the United States assay office at New York shall be in all respects similar to that of the mints, except that bars only, and not coin, shall be manufactured therein; and no metals shall be purchased for minor coinage. All bullion intended by the depositor to be converted into coins of the United States, and silver bullion purchased for coinage, when assayed, parted, and refined, and its net value certified, shall be transferred to the mint at Philadelphia, under such directions as shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the expense of the contingent fund of the mint, and shall be there coined, and the proceeds returned to the assay office.

Sec. 3558 provides that the business of the mint of the United States at Denver, while conducted as an assay office, that of the United States assay office at Boise City, and that of any other assay offices hereafter established, shall be confined to the receipt of gold and silver bullion, for melting and assaying, to be returned to depositors of the same, in bars, with the weight and fineness stamped thereon.

The assay office is also subject to the laws and regulations applied to the mint. R. S. (1878) § 3562.

ASSECURARE (Lat.). To assure; to make secure by pledges, or any solemn interposition of faith. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowel.

ASSECURATION. In European Law. Assurance; insurance of a vessel, freight, or cargo. Opposition to the decree of Grenoble. Ferriere.

ASSECURATOR. An insurer.

ASSEDATION. In Scotch Law. An old term, used indiscriminately to signify a lease or feu-right. Bell's Dict.; Erskine, Inst. lib. 2, tit. 6, § 20.

ASSEMBLY. The meeting of a number of persons in the same place.

Political assemblies are those required by the constitution and laws: for example, the general assembly, which includes the senate and house of representatives. The meeting of the electors of the president and vice-president of the United States may also be called an assembly.

Popular assemblies are those where the people meet to deliberate upon their rights: these are guaranteed by the constitution. U. S. Const. Amend. art. 1.

Unlawful assembly is the meeting of three or more persons to do an unlawful act, although they may not carry their purpose into execution.

It differs from a riot or rout, because in each of the latter cases there is some act done besides the simple meeting; see 1 Ired. 30; 9 C. & P. 91, 431; 5 id. 154; 1 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 535; 2 id. §§ 1256, 1259.

ASSENT. Approval of something done. An undertaking to do something in compliance with a request.

In strictness, assent is to be distinguished from consent, which denotes a willingness that something about to be done, be done; acceptance, compliance with, or receipt of, something offered; ratification, rendering valid something done without authority; and approval, an expression of satisfaction with some act done for the benefit of another beside the party approving. But in practice the term is often used in the sense of acceptance and approval. Thus, an offer is said to be assented to, although properly an offer and acceptance complete an agreement. It is apprehended that this confusion has arisen from the fact that a request, assent, and concurrence of the party requesting complete a contract as fully as an offer and acceptance. Thus, it is said there must be a request on one side, and assent on the other, in every contract; 5 Bingh. N. C. 75; and this assent becomes a promise enforceable by the party requesting, when he has done any thing to entitle him to the right. Assent thus becomes in reality (so far as it is assent merely, and not acceptance) an offer made in response to a request. Assent and approval, as applied to acts of parliament and of congress, have become confounded, from the fact that the bills of parliament were originally requests from parliament to the king; see 1 Bla. Com. 183.

Express assent is that which is openly declared. Implied assent is that which is presumed by law.

Unless express dissent is shown, acceptance of what it is for a person's benefit to take, is presumed, as in the case of a conveyance of land; 2 Ventr. 201; 3 Mod. 296; 3 Lev. 284; 3 B. & Ald. 31; 1 Binn. 502; 5 S. & R. 523; 14 id. 296; 12 Mass. 461; 2 Hayw. 234; 4 Day, 395; 20 Johns. 184; 15 Wend. 656; 4 Halst. 161; 6 Vt. 411; as to the effect of assent (or acceptance) of the grantee upon the delivery of a deed by a person other than the grantor, see 9 Mass. 307; 8 Metc. Mass. 436; 9 Ill. 176; 5 N. H. 71; 4 Day, 66; 20 Johns. 187; 2 Ired. Eq. 557; 5 B. & C. 671; 1 Ohio, pt. 2, 50; 2 Washb. R. P. 579; or in case of a devise which draws after it no charge or risk of loss; 17 Mass. 73; 3 Munf. 345; 4 id. 332; 8 Watts, 9. See 1 Wash. C. C. 70.

Assent must be to the same thing done or offered in the same sense; 1 Sumn. C. C. 218; 3 Johns. 534; 7 id. 470; 18 Ala. 605; 3 Cal. 147; 4 Wheat. 225; 5 M. & W. 575; it must comprehend the whole of the proposition, must be exactly equal to its extent and provisions, and must not qualify them by any new matter; 5 M. & W. 535; 4 id. 155; 4 Whart. 369; 3 Wend. 459; 11 N. Y. 441; 1 Metc. Mass. 93; 1 Parsons, Contr. 400.

In general, when an assignment is made to one for the benefit of creditors, the assent of the assignee will be presumed; 1 Binn. 502, 518; 6 W. & S. 339; 8 Leigh, 272, 281. But see 24 Wend. 280.

ASSESS. To rate or fix the proportion which every person has to pay any particular tax.

To tax.

To adjust the shares of a contribution by several towards a common beneficial object according to the benefit received.

To fix the value of; to fix the amount of.

ASSESSMENT. Determining the value of a man's property or occupation for the purpose of levying a tax.

Determining the share of a tax to be paid by each individual.

Laying a tax.

Adjusting the shares of a contribution by several towards a common beneficial object according to the benefit received.

The term is used in this latter sense in New York, distinguishing some kinds of local taxation, whereby a peculiar benefit arises to the parties, from general taxation; 11 Johns. 77; 3 Wend. 263; 4 Hill, 76; 4 N. Y. 419.

Of Damages. Fixing the amount of damages to which the prevailing party in a suit is entitled.

It may be done by the court through its proper officer, the clerk or prothonotary, where the assessment is a mere matter of calculation, but must be by a jury in other cases. See DAMAGES.

In Insurance. An apportionment made in general average upon the various articles and interests at risk, according to their value at the time and place of being in safety, for contribution for damage and sacrifices purposely made, and expenses incurred for escape from impending common peril; 2 Phillips, Ins. c. xv.

It is also made upon premium-notes given by the members of mutual fire-insurance companies, constituting their capital, and being a substitute for the investment of the paid-up stock of a stock company; the liability to such assessments being regulated by the charter and the by-laws; May, Ins. § 549; 14 Barb. 374; 21 id. 605; 12 N. Y. 477; 9 Cush. 140; 3 Gray, 208, 210; 6 id. 77, 288; 13 Minn. 135; 36 N. H. 252; 15 Abb. Pr. 66. The right to assess is strictly construed, the notes being merely conditional promises to pay; 40 Mo. 39; 19 Iowa, 502; 23 Barb. 656; May, Ins. § 557.

ASSESSORS. Those appointed to make assessments.

In Civil and Scotch Law. Persons skilled in law, selected to advise the judges of the inferior courts. Bell, Dict.; Dig. 1. 22; Cod. 1. 51.

ASSETS (Fr. assez, enough).

All the stock in trade, cash, and all available property belonging to a merchant or company.

The property in the hands of an heir, executor, administrator, or trustee, which is legally or equitably chargeable with the obligations which such heir, executor, administrator, or other trustee is, as such, required to discharge.

Assets enter mains. Assets in hand. Such property as at once comes to the executor or other trustee, for the purpose of satisfying claims against him as such. Termes de la Ley.

Equitable assets. Such as can be reached only by the aid of a court of equity, and which are to be divided, pari passu, among all the creditors; 2 Fonblanque, 401 et seq.; Willis, Trust. 118.

Legal assets. Such as constitute the fund for the payment of debts according to their legal priority.

Assets per descent. That portion of the ancestor's estate which descends to the heir, and which is sufficient to charge him, as far as it goes, with the specialty debts of his ancestors; 2 Williams, Ex. 1011.

Personal assets. Goods and personal chattels to which the executor or administrator is entitled.

Real assets. Such as descend to the heir, as, an estate in fee simple.

In the United States, generally, by statute, all the property of the deceased, real and personal, is liable for his debts, and, in equity, is to be applied as follows, when no statute prescribes a different order of application, exhausting all the assets of each class before proceeding to the next: First, the personal estate not specifically bequeathed; second, real estate devised or ordered to be sold for the payment of debts; third, real estate descended but not charged with debts; fourth, real estate devised, charged generally with the payment of debts; fifth, general pecuniary legacies pro rata; sixth, real estate devised, not charged with debts; 4 Kent, 421; 2 W. & T. Lead. Cas. 72.

With regard to the distinction between realty and personalty in this respect, growing crops go to the administrator; 7 Mass. 84; 6 N. Y. 597; so do nurseries, though not trees in general; 1 Metc. Mass. 423; 4 Cush. 380; as do bricks in a kiln; 22 Pick. 110; so do buildings held as personal property by consent of the land-owner; 9 Gill & J. 171; so do chattels real, as interests for years and mortgages; and hence the administrator must bring the action if the mortgagor die before foreclosing; 3 A. K. Marsh. 249; so does rent, provided the intestate dies before it is due. Fixtures go to the heir; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 99; 11 H. & G. 114; 2 Pet. 137; 6 Me. 167; 20 Wend. 628; 9 Conn. 67. And see FIXTURES as to what are fixtures. In copyrights and patents the administrator has right enough to get them extended and beyond the customary time; 4 How. 646, 712. The wife's paraphernalia he cannot take from her, in England, for the benefit of the children and heirs, but he may for that of creditors. In the United States, generally, the wearing-apparel of widows and minors is retained by them, and is not assets. So among things reserved is the widow's quarantine, i e. forty days of food and clothing; 5 N. H. 495; 10 Pick. 430. In Pennsylvania, a statute gives the widow and children $300 for their support in preference even to creditors.

Where the assets consist of two or more funds, and at law a part of the creditors can resort to either fund, but the others can resort to one only, courts of equity exercise the authority to marshal (as it is called) the assets, and by compelling the more favored creditors to exhaust first the fund upon which they have the exclusive claim, or, if they have been satisfied without the observance of this rule, by permitting the others to stand in their place, thus enable such others to receive more complete satisfaction; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 558 et seq.; Adams, Eq. 263, 590; Williams, Exec. 1457; 4 Johns. Ch. 17; 1 P. Will. 679; 1 Ves. Ch. 312; 5 Cranch, 35; 1 Johns. Ch. 412; 19 Ga. 513; 1 Wisc. 43. See MARSHALLING OF ASSETS. See, generally, Williams, Ex.; Toller, Ex.; 2 Bla. Com. 510, 511; 3 Viner, Abr. 141; 11 id. 239; Gordon, Decedents; Ram, Assets.

ASSEVERATION. The proof which a man gives of the truth of what he says, by appealing to his conscience as a witness.

It differs from an oath in this, that by the latter he appeals to God as a witness of the truth of what he says, and invokes him, as the avenger of falsehood and perfidy, to punish him if he speak not the truth. See AFFIRMATION; OATH.

ASSIGN. To make or set over to another; Cowel; 2 Bla. Com. 326; 5 Johns. 391.

To appoint; to select; to allot; 3 Bla. Com. 58.

To set forth; to point out; as, to assign errors; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 19.

ASSIGNATION. In Scotch Law. Assignment, which see.

ASSIGNEE. One to whom an assignment has been made.

Assignee in fact is one to whom an assignment has been made in fact by the party having the right.

Assignee in law is one in whom the law vests the right: as, an executor or administrator. See ASSIGNMENT.

ASSIGNMENT (Law Lat. assignatio, from assigno,—ad and signum,—to mark for; to appoint to one; to appropriate to).

In Contracts. A transfer or making over to another of the whole of any property, real or personal, in possession or in action, or of any estate or right therein.

A transfer by writing, as distinguished from one by delivery.

The transfer of the interest one has in lands and tenements, and more particularly applied to the unexpired residue of a term or estate for life or years; Cruise, Dig. tit. xxxii. (Deed) c. vii. § 15; 2 Woodd. Lect. 170, 171; 1 Steph. Com. 485. The deed by which the transfer is made is also called an assignment; Comyns, Dig.; Bacon, Abr.; Viner, Abr.; Nelson, Abr.; La. Civ. Code, art. 2612; Angell, Assign.; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 78–85; 4 Cruise, Dig. 160.

What may be assigned. Every demand connected with a right of property, real or personal, is assignable. Every estate and interest in lands and tenements may be assigned, as also every present and certain estate or interest in incorporeal hereditaments, even though the interest be future, including a term of years to commence at a subsequent period; for the interest is vested in præsenti, though only to take effect in futuro; Perkins, s. 91; Coke, Litt. 46 b; rent to grow due (but not that in arrear, 8 Cow. 206); a right of entry where the breach of the condition ipso facto terminates the estate; 2 G. & J. 173; 4 Pick. 1; a right to betterments; 9 Me. 62; the right to cut trees, which have been sold on the grantor's land; Hob. 173; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 27; Cruise, Dig. tit. 1, § 45, n.; 7 N. H. 522; 6 Me. 81, 200; 18 Pick. 569; 1 Metc. Mass. 313; 4 id. 580; 9 Leigh, 548; 11 Ad. & E. 34; a right in lands which may be perfected by occupation; 4 Yerg. 1; 1 Cooke, 67. But no right of entry or re-entry can be assigned; 2 Yerg. 84; Littleton, § 347; 2 Johns. 1; 1 Cranch, 423–430; 1 Dev. & B. 319; nor a naked power; though it is otherwise where it is coupled with an interest; 2 Mod. 317.

To make an assignment valid at law, the subject of it must have an existence, actual or potential, at the time of the assignment; 7 Ohio St. 432. But courts of equity will support an assignment not only of interests in action and contingency, but of things which have no present, actual, or potential existence, but rest in mere possibility only; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 630–639; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 527; as an heir's possibility of inheritance; 4 Sneed, 258. The assignment of personal property is chiefly interesting in regard to choses in action and as to its effect in cases of insolvency and bankruptcy. Assignments by debtors for the benefit of creditors are regulated by statute in nearly all the states of the United States. See collection of statutes in Moses, Insolv. Laws. A chose in action cannot be transferred at common law; 1 Fonbl. Eq. b. 1, c. 4, § 2, n. 9; 10 Coke, 48; Coke, Litt. 266 a; Chitty, Bills, 6; Comyns, Dig. Chancery (2 H); 3 Cow. 623; 2 Johns. 1; 15 Mass. 388; 1 Cranch, 367; 5 Wisc. 17; 5 Halst. 20. But the assignee may sue in the assignor's name, and the assignment will be considered valid in equity. See infra.

In equity, as well as law, some choses in action are not assignable: for example, an officer's pay or commission; 2 Anstr. 533; 1 Ball and B. Ch. 387; 1 Swanst. 74; 3 Term, 681; 2 Beav. 544; Turn. & R. 459; see 7 Metc. Mass. 335; 13 Mass. 290; 15 Ves. Ch. 139; or the salary of a judge; 10 Humphr. 342; or claims for fishing or other bounties from the government; or rights of action for fraud or tort; as a right of action for assault; or in trover; 12 Wend. 297 (aliter of a right of action in replevin; 24 Barb. 382); and it seems that all rights of action which would survive to the personal representatives, may be assigned; 22 Barb. 110; 7 How. 492; 34 Penn. 299; 44 N. H. 424; so if a right of action against a common carrier for not delivering goods; 44 N. H. 424. A cause of action for malicious prosecution is not assignable even after verdict; 22 Cal. 174; 1 Pet. 193, 213; 6 Cal. 456; 3 E. D. Smith, 246; 22 Barb. 110; 26 id. 635; 2 N. Y. 293; 3 Litt. 41; 9 S. & R. 244; 6 Madd. 59; 2 M. & K. 592; or any rights pendente lite. Nor can personal trusts be assigned; as the right of a master in his apprentice; 11 B. Monr. 60; 8 Mass. 299; 8 N. H. 472, or the duties of a testamentary guardian; 12 N. H. 437; 1 Hill, N. Y. 375; nor a contract for the performance of personal services; 4 Litt. 9.

The assignment of bills of exchange and promissory notes by general or special endorsement constitutes an exception to the law of transfer of choses in action. When negotiable (i. e., made payable to order), they were made transferable by the statute of 3 & 4 Anne; they may then be transferred by endorsement; the holder can sue in his own name, and the equitable defences which might have existed between the promisor and the original promisee are cut off; Chitty, Bills, Perkins ed. 1854, 8, 11, 225, 229, n. (3) and cases cited; 11 Barb. 637, 639; Burrill, Ass. 2d ed. 3, nn. 1, 2; 26 Miss. 577; Hard. 562.

The most extensive class of assignments are the general assignments in trust made by insolvent and other debtors for the discharge of their debts. In most of the states of the United States these are regulated by state statutes (q. v.); 3 Sumn. 345; 10 Paige, Ch. 445; 1 N. Y. 101; 20 Ga. 44.

Independently of bankrupt and insolvent laws, priorities and preferences in favor of particular creditors are allowed. Such preference is not generally considered unequitable, nor is a stipulation that the creditors taking under it shall release and discharge the debtor from all further claims; 4 Mass. 206; 41 Me. 277; 9 Ind. 88; 4 Wash. C. C. 232; 13 S. & R. 132; 4 Zabr. 162; 2 Cal. 107; 16 Ill. 435; 17 Ga. 430; 2 Paine, 180; 15 Johns. 571; 11 Wend. 187; 7 Md. 88, 381; 29 Ala. 266; 5 N. H. 113; 7 Pet. 608; 11 Wheat. 78; 8 Conn. 505; 26 Miss. 423; 6 Fla. 62; 6 R. I. 328; 1 Am. L. Cas. 71.

How made. It used to be held that the instrument of assignment must be of as high a character and nature as the instrument transferred; but now a parol (usually written) assignment may transfer a deed, if the deed be at the same time delivered; 1 Dev. 354; 2 Jones, 224; 13 Mass. 304; 15 id. 481; 26 Me. 234, 448; 17 Johns. 284, 292; 19 id. 342; 1 E. D. Smith, 414; 5 Ad. & E. 107; 4 Taunt. 326; 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 332, 348; 2 id. 6; 1 Madd. Ch. 53; 2 Rose. Bank. 271; 1 Harr. & J. 114, 274; 2 Ohio, 56, 221; 11 Tex. 273; 26 Ala. N. s. 292. See 5 Halst. 156. When the transfer of personal chattels is made by an instrument as formal as that required in the assignment of an interest in lands, it is commonly called a bill of sale (which see); 2 Stephen, Com. 104. See as to the distinction, 5 W. & S. 36. In most cases, however, personal chattels are transferred by mere note or memorandum, or, as in the case of negotiable paper, by mere endorsement; 3 E. D. Smith, 555; 6 Cal. 247; 28 Miss. 56; 15 Ark. 491.

The proper technical and operative words in assignment are "assign, transfer, and set over;" but "give, grant, bargain, and sell," or any other words which show the intent of the parties to make a complete transfer, will work an assignment; Watkins, Conv., Preston ed. b. 2, c. ix.

No consideration is necessary to support the assignment of a term; 1 Mod. 263; 3 Munf. 556; 2 E. D. Smith, 469. Now, by the statute of frauds, all assignments of chatels real must be made by deed or note in writing, signed by the assigning party or his agent thereunto lawfully authorized by writing; 1 B. & P. 270. If a tenant assigns the whole or a part of an estate for a part of the time, it is a sub-lease, and not an assignment; 1 Gray, 325; 2 Paige, Ch. 68; 2 Ohio, 369; 1 Washb. R. P. 327.

Effect of. During the continuance of the assignment, the assignee is liable on all covenants running with the land, but may rid himself of such continuing liability by transfer to a mere beggar; 2 H. Blackst. 133; 5 Coke, 16; 3 Burr. 1271; 1 B. & P. 21; 2 Bridgman, Eq. Dig. 138; 1 Vern. Ch. 87; 2 id. 103; 8 Ves. Ch. 95; 1 Schoales & L. 310; 1 Ball & B. 238; Dougl. 56, 183; (but a conveyance to an irresponsible person to avoid paying a ground-rent accruing on the land conveyed held not to release the original covenantor; 54 Penn. 30.) By the assignment of a right all its accessories pass with it: for example, the collateral security, or a lien on property, which the assignor of a bond had, will pass with it when assigned; 1 Stockt. 592; 5 Litt. 248; 3 Bibb, 291; 4 B. Monr. 529; 2 Dana, 98: 1 Penn. 454, 280; 5 Watts, 529; 9 Cow. 747; 2 Yerg. 84. So, also, what belongs to the thing by the right of accession is assigned with it; 7 Johns. Cas. 90; 6 Pick. 360; 31 N. H. 562.

The assignee of a chose in action in a court of law must bring the action in the name of the assignor in whose place he stands; and every thing which might have been shown in defence against the assignor may be used against the assignee; 18 Eng. L. & Eq. 82; 42 Me. 221; 6 Ga. 119; 15 Barb. 506; 2 Johns. Ch. 441; 9 Cow. 34; 3 N. H. 82, 539; 2 Wash. Va. 233; 4 Rand. 266; 5 Mass. 201, 214; 6 Pick. 316; 10 Cush. 92; 28 Miss. 488; 28 id. 56; 13 Ill. 486; 1 Stockt. 146; 1 Dutch. 506; 3 Day, 364; 7 Conn. 399; 4 Litt. 435; 9 Ala. 60; Harp. 17; 2 Cranch, 342; 1 Wheat. 286; 7 Pet. 608; 2 Penn. 361, 463; 1 Bay, 173; 1 M'Cord, 219; 5 Mas. 215; 1 Paine, 525; 3 McLean, 147; 3 Hayw. 199; 1 Humphr. 155; 11 Md. 251. But in a court of equity the assignee may sue in his own name, but he can only go into equity when his remedy at law fails; Freem. Ch. 145; 1 Ves. Ch. 331, 409; 3 Mer. 86; 2 Vern. 692; 1 Younge & C. 481; 1 Pick. 485–493; 4 Mass. 508, 511; 4 Rand. 392; 30 Me. 419; 32 id. 203, 342; 2 Johns. Ch. 441; 8 Wheat. 268. Such an assignment is considered as a declaration of trust; 10 Humphr. 342; 3 P. Will. 199; 2 id. 603; 1 Ves. Ch. 411; 5 Pet. 597; 1 Wheat. 235; 5 id. 277; see 5 Paige, Ch. 539; 6 id. 583; 6 Cranch, 335; but all the equitable defences exist; 3 Yeates, 327; 1 Binn. 429; 8 Wheat. 268.

A valid assignment of a policy of insurance in the broadest legal sense, by consent of the underwriters, by statute, or otherwise, vests in the assignee all the rights of the assignor, legal and equitable, including that of action; but the instrument, not being negotiable in its character, is assignable only in equity, and not even so, if it has, as it sometimes has, a condition to the contrary; 3 Md. 244, 341; 8 Cush. 393; 10 id. 350; 15 Barb. 413; 28 id. 116; 17 N. Y. 391; 25 Ala. N. S. 353; 30 N. H. 231; 3 Sneed, 565; 42 Me. 221; 26 Conn. 165; 31 Penn. 438; 18 Eng. L. & Eq. 427; 22 id. 590. In marine policies, custom seems to have established a rule different from that of the common law, and to have made the policies transferable with the subject matter of insurance; May, Ins. § 377.

A debtor making an assignment for the benefit of his creditors may legally choose his own trustees, and the title passes out of him to them; 21 Barb. 65; 1 Binn. 514; 18 Ark. 85, 123; 24 Conn. 180. The assent of creditors will ordinarily be presumed; 29 Ala. N. S. 112; 4 Mass. 183, 206; 5 id. 158: 8 Pick. 113; 2 Conn. 633; 9 S. & R. 244; 8 Me. 411. In some states the statutes provide that the assignment shall be for the benefit of all creditors equally.

Assignments are peculiarly the objects of equity jurisdiction; 2 Bligh, 171, 189; 1 Ventr. 128; 9 B. & C. 300; 7 Wheat. 556; 11 id. 78; 4 Johns. Cas. 529, 205, 119, 129; and bona fide assignments will in most cases be upheld in equity courts; 8 Me. 17; Paine, 525; 1 Wash. C. C. 424; 14 S. & R. 137; T. U. P. Charlt. 280; 12 Johns. 343; 22 Barb. 550; but champerty and maintenance, and the purchase of lawsuits, are inquired into and restrained in equity as in law, and fraud will defeat an assignment. By some of the state statutes regulating assignments, the assignee may bring an action in his own name in a court of law, but the equities in defence are not excluded; see 6 Ohio, 271; 6 Yerg. 572; 3 Dana, 142; 2 Pet. 239; 1 Miss. 69.

ASSIGNMENT OF DOWER. The act by which the share of a widow in her deceased husband's real estate is ascertained and set apart to her.

The assignment may be made in pais by the heir or his guardian, or the devisee or other persons seised of the lands subject to dower; 2 Penning. 521; 19 N. H. 240; 23 Pick. 80, 88; 4 Ala. N. S. 160; 4 Me. 67; 2 Ind. 388; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 51; or it may be made after a course of judicial proceedings, where a voluntary assignment is refused. In this case the assignment will be made by the sheriff, who will set off her share by metes and bounds; 2 Bla. Com. 136; 1 Washb. R. P. 229. The assignment should be made within forty days after the death of the husband, during which time the widow shall remain in her husband's mansion-house. See 20 Ala. N. S. 662; 7 T. B. Monr. 337; 5 Conn. 462; 1 Washb. R. P. 222, n., 227. The share of the widow is usually one-third of all the real estate of which the husband has been seised during coverture; and no writing or livery is necessary in a valid assignment, the dowress being in, according to the view of the law, of the seisin of her husband. The remedy of the widow, when the heir or guardian refuses to assign dower, is by a writ of dower unde nihil habet; 4 Kent, 63. If the guardian of a minor heir assign more than he ought, the heir on coming of age may have the writ of admeasurement of dower; 2 Ind. 336; 1 Pick. 314; Coke, Litt. 34, 35; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 148; Finch, 314; Stat. Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I.), c. 7; 1 Washb. R. P. 222–250; 1 Kent, 63, 69; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1743.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS. In Practice. The statement of the case of the plaintiff in error, on a writ of error, setting forth the errors complained of.

It corresponds with the declaration in an ordinary action; 2 Tidd, Pr. 1168; 3 Steph. Com. 644. All the errors of which the plaintiff complains should be set forth and assigned in distinct terms, so that the defendant may plead to them; 18 Ala. 186; 15 Conn. 83; 4 Miss. 77.

ASSIGNOR. One who makes an assignment; one who transfers property to another.

In general, the assignor can limit the operation of his assignment, and impose whatever condition he may think proper; but when he makes a general assignment in trust for the use of his creditors, he can impose no condition whatever which will deprive them of any right; 14 Pick. Mass. 123; 2 id. 129; 15 Johns. N. Y. 151; 20 id. 442; 7 Cow. N. Y. 735; 5 id. 547; nor any condition forbidden by law, as giving preference when the law forbids it.

ASSIGNS. Assignees; those to whom property shall have been transferred. Now seldom used except in the phrase, in deeds, "heirs, administrators, and assigns;" 8 R. I. 36.

ASSISA (Lat. assidere). A kind of jury or inquest. Assisa vertitur in juratum. The assize has been turned into a jury.

A writ: as, an assize of novel disseisin, assize of common pasture.

An ordinance: as, assisa panis. Spelman, Gloss.; Littleton, § 234; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 402.

A fixed specific time, sum, or quantity. A tribute; tax fixed by law; a fine. Spelman, Gloss.

Assisa ultimæ præsentationis. Assize of darrein presentment.

Assisa venalium. Statutes regulating the sale of certain articles. Spelman, Gloss.

ASSISORS. In Scotch Law. Jurors.

ASSIZE (Lat. assidere, to sit by or near, through the Fr. assisa, a session).

In English Law. A writ directed to the sheriff for the recovery of immovable property, corporeal or incorporeal. Cowel; Littleton, § 234.

The action or proceedings in court based upon such a writ. Magna Charta, c. 12; Stat. 13 Edw. I. (Westm. 2) c. 25; 3 Bla. Com. 57, 252; Sellon, Pract. Introd. xii.

Such actions were to be tried by special courts, of which the judicial officers were justices of assize. See COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS. This form of remedy is said to have been introduced by the parliament of Northampton (or Nottingham, A. D. 1176), for the purpose of trying titles to land in a more certain and expeditious manner before commissioners appointed by the crown than before the suitors in the county court or the king's justiciars in the Aula Regis. The action is properly a mixed action, whereby the plaintiff recovers his land and damages for the injury sustained by the disseisin. The value of the action as a means for the recovery of land led to its general adoption for that purpose, those who had suffered injury not really amounting to a disseisin alleging a disseisin to entitle themselves to the remedy. The scope of the remedy was also extended so as to allow the recovery of incorporeal hereditaments, as franchises, estovers, etc. It gave place to the action of ejectment, and is now abolished, having been previously almost, if not quite, entirely disused. Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, § 36. Stearns, Real Act. 187.

A jury summoned by virtue of a writ of assize.

Such juries were said to be either magna (grand), consisting of sixteen members and serving to determine the right of property, or parva (petit), consisting of twelve and serving to determine the right to possession. Mirror of Just. lib. 2.

This sense is said by Littleton and Blackstone to be the original meaning of the word; Littleton, § 234; 3 Bla. Com. 185. Coke explains it as denoting originally a session of justices; and this explanation is sanctioned by the etymology of the word. Coke, Litt. 158 b. It seems, however, to have been early used in all the senses here given. The recognitors of assize (the jurors) had the power of deciding, upon their own knowledge, without the examination of witnesses, where the issue was joined on the very point of the assize; but collateral matters were tried either by a jury or by the recognitors acting as a jury, in which latter case it was said to be turned into a jury (assisa vertitur in juratum). Booth, Real Act. 213; Stearns, Real Act. 187; 3 Bla. Com. 402. The term is no longer used, in England, to denote a jury.

The verdict or judgment of the jurors or recognitors of assize; 3 Bla. Com. 57, 59.

A court composed of an assembly of knights and other substantial men, with the baron or justice, in a certain place, at an appointed time. Grand Coutum. cc. 24, 25.

An ordinance or statute. Littleton, § 234; Reg. Orig. 239. Any thing reduced to a certainty in respect to number, quantity, quality, weight, measure, etc. 2 Bla. Com. 42; Cowel; Spelman, Gloss. Assisa. See the articles immediately following.

ASSIZE OF DARREIN PRESENTMENT. A writ of assize which formerly lay when a man or his ancestors under whom he claimed presented a clerk to a benefice, who was instituted, and afterwards upon the next avoidance, a stranger presented a clerk and thereby disturbed the real patron. 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 245; Stat. 13 Edw. I. (Westm. 2) c. 5. It has given way to the remedy by quare impedit.

ASSIZE OF FRESH FORCE. A writ of assize which lay where the disseisin had been committed within forty days. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 7.

ASSIZE OF MORT D'ANCESTOR. A writ of assize which lay to recover possession of lands against an abator or his alienee.

It lay where the ancestor from whom the claimant derived title died seised. Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.; 3 Bla. Com. 185.

ASSIZE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN. A writ of assize which lay where the claimant had been lately disseised. The action must have been brought subsequent to the next preceding session of the eyre or circuit of justices, which took place once in seven years. Coke, Litt. 158; Booth, Real Act. 210.

ASSIZE OF NUISANCE. A writ of assize which lay where a nuisance had been committed to the complainant's freehold.

The complainant alleged some particular fact done which worked an injury to his freehold (ad nocumentum liberi tenementi sui), and, if successful, recovered judgment for the abatement of the nuisance and also for damages. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 183; 3 Bla. Com. 221; 9 Coke, 55.

ASSIZE OF UTRUM. A writ of assize which lay for a parson to recover lands which his predecessor had improperly allowed the church to be deprived of. 3 Bla. Com. 257.

ASSIZES. Sessions of the justices or commissioners of assize.

These assizes are held twice in each year in each of the various shires of England, with some exceptions, by virtue of several commissions, for the trial of matters of fact in issue in both civil and criminal cases. They still retain the ancient name in popular language, though the commission of assize is no longer issued. 3 Stephen, Com. 424, n. See ASSIZE; NISI PRIUS; COMMISSION OF ASSIZE; COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS.

ASSIZES DE JERUSALEM. A code of feudal law prepared at a general assembly of lords after the conquest of Jerusalem, A. D. 1099.

It was compiled principally from the laws and customs of France. It was reduced to form by Jean d'Iblin, Comte de Japhe et Ascalon, about the year 1290. 1 Fournel, Hist. des Av. 49; 2 Dupin, Prof. des Av. 674–680; Stephen, Pl. App. xi.

ASSOCIATE. An officer in each of the superior courts of common law in England whose duty it was to keep the records of his court, to attend its nisi prius sittings, and to enter the verdict, make up the postea, and deliver the record to the party entitled thereto. Abbott, Law Dict.

A person associated with the judges and clerk of assize in the commission of general jail delivery; Mozley & W. Dict.

The term is frequently used of the judges of appellate courts, other than the presiding judge or chief justice.

ASSOCIATION (Lat. ad, to, and sociare—from socius, a companion).

The act of a number of persons in uniting together for some purpose.

The persons so joining.

In English Law. A writ directing certain persons (usually the clerk and his subordinate officers) to associate themselves with the justices and sergeants for the purpose of taking the assizes. 3 Bla. Com. 59.

ASSOIL (spelled also assoile, assoilyie). To set free; to deliver from excommunication. Stat. 1 Hen. IV. c. 7; Cowel.

ASSUMPSIT (Lat. assumere, to assume, to undertake; assumpsit, he has undertaken).

In Contracts. An undertaking, either express or implied, to perform a parol agreement. 1 Lilly, Reg. 132.

Express assumpsit is an undertaking made orally, by writing not under seal, or by matter of record, to perform an act or to pay a sum of money to another.

Implied assumpsit is an undertaking presumed in law to have been made by a party, from his conduct, although he has not made any express promise.

The law presumes such an undertaking to have been made, on the ground that everybody is supposed to have undertaken to do what is, in point of law, just and right; 2 Burr. 1008; L. J. 11 C. P. 100; 8 C. B. 545; Leake, Contr. 75. Such an undertaking is never implied where the party has made an express promise; 2 Term, 100; 10 Mass. 192; 20 Am. Jur. 7; nor ordinarily against the express declaration of the party to be charged; 1 Me. 125; 13 Pick. 165; nor will it be implied unless there be a request or assent by the defendant shown; 20 N. H. 490; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 107; though such request or assent may be inferred from the nature of the transaction;

1 Dowl. & L. 984; 15 Conn. 52; 28 Vt. 401; 2 Dutch. 49; or from the silent acquiescence of the defendant; 22 Am. Jur. 2–11; 14 Johns. 378; 2 Blatchf. 343; or even contrary to fact on the ground of legal obligation; 1 H. Blackst. 90; 3 Campb. 298; 6 Mod. 171; 14 Mass. 227; 10 Pick. 156; 4 Me. 258; 20 Am. Jur. 9; 22 id. 2; 13 Johns. 480.

In Practice. A form of action which lies for the recovery of damages for the non-performance of a parol or simple contract; 7 Term, 351; 3 Johns. Cas. 60.

It differs from debt, since the amount claimed need not be liquidated (see DEBT), and from covenant, since it does not require a contract under seal to support it. See COVENANT. See 4 Coke, 91; 4 Burr. 1008; 14 Pick. 428; 2 Metc. 181. Assumpsit is one of the class of actions called actions upon the case, and in the older books is called action upon the case upon assumpsit. Comyns, Dig.

Special assumpsit is an action of assumpsit brought upon an express contract or promise.

General assumpsit is an action of assumpsit brought upon the promise or contract implied by law in certain cases. See 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 14.

The action should be brought by the party from whom the consideration moved; 1 Ventr. 318; 3 B. & P. 149, n.; 14 East, 582; 4 B. & C. 664; 17 Mass. 404, 575; 3 Pick. 83, 92; 8 Johns. 58; 13 id. 497; 1 Pet. C. C. 169; 22 Am. Jur. 1–19; or by the person for whose benefit it was paid; 15 Me. 285, 443; 1 Rich. So. C. 268; 5 Blackf. 179; 17 Ala. 333; against the party who made the undertaking; suing the principal to recall money paid to the agent. See 4 Burr. 1984; 1 Sumn. 277, 317. It lies for a corporation, 2 Lev. 252; 1 Campb. 466; and against it, in the United States; 7 Cranch, 297; 12 Wheat. 68; 17 N. Y. 449; 30 Mo. 452; 9 Tex. 69; 8 Pick. 178; 14 Johns. 118; 2 Bay, 109; 1 Ark. 180; 3 Halst. 182; 3 S. & R. 117; but not in England formerly (because a corporation could not contract by parol), unless by express authority of some legislative act, or in actions on negotiable paper; 1 Chitty, Pl. *119; 4 Bingh. 77; but now corporations are liable in many cases on contracts not sealed, and generally in executed contracts, up to the extent of the benefit received; 2 Lev. 252; 6 A. & E. 846; L. R. 10 C. P. 409; Brice, Ultra Vires, 577.

Assumpsit will lie in favor of a third party on a contract made in his favor in most of the United States; 93 U. S. 143; 85 Penn. 235 (but see 3 id. 330); 20 N. Y. 258 (but see 69 N. Y. 280); 85 Ill. 279; 43 Wis. 319. Contra, 107 Mass. 39; 15 N. H. 129. See discussion in 15 Am. L. Rev. 231, and 4 N. J. L. Journ. 197.

A promise or undertaking on the part of the defendant, either expressly made by him or implied by the law from his actions, constitutes the gist of the action. A sufficient consideration for the promise must be averred and shown, 21 Am. Jur. 258, 283; though it may be implied by the law, 7 Johns. 29, 321; 14 Pick. Mass. 210; 21 Am. Jur. 258, 283; as in case of negotiable promissory notes and bills, where a consideration is presumed to exist till its absence is shown; 6 Vt. 165; Story, Prom. Notes.

The action lies for—

Money had and received to the plaintiff's use, including all cases where one has money, or that which the parties have agreed to treat as money; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 117; 2 N. H. 333; 6 Cow. 297; 8 Gill & J. 333; in his hands which in equity and good conscience he is bound to pay over; including bank-notes; 13 East, 20, 130; 17 Mass. 560; 7 Cow. 662; 32 Ala. 523; promissory notes; 9 Pick. 293; 16 Me. 285; 7 Johns. 132; 11 N. And in many other cases, as, for instance, for a breach of promise of marriage; 2 Mass. 73; 2 Overt. 233; to recover the purchase-money for land sold; 14 Johns. 162, 210; 20 id. 338; 3 M'Cord, 421; and, specially, upon wagers; 2 Chitty, Pl. 114; feigned issues, 2 Chitty, Pl. 116; upon foreign judgments; Dougl. 1; 11 East, 124; 3 Term, 493; 8 Mass. 273; 5 Johns. 132; but not on a judgment obtained in a sister state; 1 Bibb, 361; 19 Johns. 162; 11 Me. 94; 14 Vt. 92; 2 Rawle, 431; and see 2 Brev. The action may be brought for a sum specified in the promise of the defendant, or for the definite amount of money ascertained by computation to be due, or for as much as the services, etc., were worth (called a quantum meruit), or for the value of the goods, etc. (called a quantum valebant).

The form of the action, whether general or special, depends upon the nature of the undertaking of the parties, whether it be express or implied, and upon other circumstances. In many cases where there has been an express agreement between the parties, the plaintiff may neglect the special contract and sue in general assumpsit. He may do this: first, where the contract is executed; Fitzg. 303; 2 Dougl. 651; 4 B. & P. 355; 1 Bingh. 34; 5 B. & C. 628; 18 Johns. 451; 19 Pick. Mass. 496; 11 Wheat. 237; 3 T. B. Monr. 405; 7 Vt. 228; 5 Harr. & G. 45; 3 M'Cord, 421; 18 Ga. 364; and is for the payment of money; 2 Munf. 344; 6 id. 506; 1 J. J. Marsh. 394; 3 T. B. Monr. 405; 1 Bibb, 395; 4 Gray, 292; though if a time be fixed for its payment, not until the expiration of that time; 1 Stark. 229: second, where the contract, though only partially executed, has been abandoned by mutual consent; 7 Term, 181; 2 East, 145; 12 Johns. 274; 16 Wend. 632; 12 id. 334; 15 id. 87; 16 Me. 283; 11 Rich. So. C. 42; 7 Cal. 150; see 29 Penn. 82; or extinguished and rescinded by some act of the defendant; 11 Me. 317; 2 Blackf. 167; 2 Speers, 148; 20 N. H. 457; see 4 Cranch, 239: third, where that which the plaintiff has done has been performed under a special agreement, but not in the time or manner agreed, but yet has been beneficial to the defendant and has been accepted and enjoyed by him; 1 Bingh. 34; 13 Johns. 94; 4 Cow. 564; 14 Mass. 282; 1 Sandf. 206; 5 Gill & J. 240; 8 Yerg. 411; 12 Vt. 625; 23 Mo. 228; 3 Ind. 59, 72; 5 Mich. 449; 3 Iowa, 90; 3 Wisc. 323. See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 104; 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 14, 15; 31 Penn 218.

A surety who has paid money for his principal may recover upon the common counts, though he holds a special agreement of indemnity from the principal; 1 Pick. 118. But in general, except as herein stated, if there be a special agreement, special assumpsit must be brought thereon; 14 B. Monr. 177; 22 Barb. 239; 2 Wisc. 34; 14 Tex. 414.

The declaration should state the contract in terms, in case of a special assumpsit; but, in general, assumpsit contains only a general recital of a consideration, promise, and breach. Several of the common counts are frequently used to describe the same cause of action. Damages should be laid in a sufficient amount to cover the real amount of the claims; see 4 Pick. 194; 2 Cons. So. C. 339; 4 Munf. 95; 5 id. 23; 2 N. H. 289; 1 Ill. 286; 4 Johns. 280; 6 Cow. 151; 1 Hall, 201; 5 S. & R. 519; 11 id. 27; 6 Conn. 176; 9 id. 508; 2 Bibb, 429.

Non assumpsit is the usual plea under which the defendant may give in evidence most matters of defence. Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 G, 1). Where there are several defendants, they cannot plead the general issue severally; 6 Mass. 444; nor the same plea in bar severally; 13 Mass. 152. The plea of not guilty is defective, but is cured by verdict; 8 S. & R. 541; 4 Call, 451. See, generally, Bacon, Abr.; Comyns, Dig., Action upon the case upon assumpsit; Dane, Abr.; Viner, Abr.; 1 Chitty, Pl.; Lawes, Assump.; 1 Greenl. Ev.; Bouvier, Inst. ASSURED. A person who has been insured by some insurance company, or underwriter, against losses or perils mentioned in the policy of insurance.

The party whom the underwriters agree to indemnify in case of loss; 1 Phill. Ins. sect. 2. H. 9; 12 Md. 315, 348.

Ch. 21; 2 Cow. 431, 433, n.; 5 Mas. 18; 13 Vt. 362; 17 Ill. 541. To render a witness competent, there must be superadded a belief that there will be a punishment for swearing falsely, either in this world or the next; 14 Mass. 184; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 370. See 7 Conn. 66; 18 Johns. 98; 17 Wend. 460; 2 W. & S. 262; 26 Penn. 274; 10 Ohio, 121. ATTACHMENT. Taking into the custody of the law the person or property of one already before the court, or of one whom it is sought to bring before it.

A writ for the accomplishment of this purpose. This is the more common sense of the word.

Of Persons. A writ issued by a court of record, commanding the sheriff to bring before it a person who has been guilty of contempt of court, either in neglect or abuse of its process or of subordinate powers; 3 Bla. Com. 280; 4 id. 283; or disregard of its authority in refusing to do what is enjoined; 1 Term, 266; Comp. 394; or by openly insulting the court; Saunders, Pl. Cr. 73 b; 4 Bla. Com. 283; 3 id. 17. It is to some extent in the nature of a criminal process; Stra. 441. See 5 Halst. 63; 1 Cow. 121, n.; 1 Term, 266; Cowp. 594; Willes, 292.

Of Property. A writ issued at the institution or during the progress of an action, commanding the sheriff or other proper officer to attach the property, rights, credits, or effects of the defendant to satisfy the demands of the plaintiff.

In General.

The orignal design of this writ was to secure the appearance of one who had disregarded the original summons, by taking possession of his property as a pledge. 3 Bla. Com. 280.

By an extension of this principle, in the New England states, property attached remains in the custody of the law after an appearance, until final judgment in the suit. See 7 Mass. 127.

In some states attachments are distinguished as foreign and domestic,—the former issued against a non-resident of the state, the latter against a resident. Where this distinction is preserved, the foreign attachment enures solely to the benefit of the party suing it out; while the avails of the domestic attachment may be shared by other creditors, who come into court and present their claims for that purpose.

It is a distinct characteristic of the whole system of remedy by attachment, that it is—except in some states where it is authorized in chancery—a special remedy at law, belonging exclusively to a court of law, and to be resorted to and pursued in conformity with the terms of the law conferring it; and where from any cause the remedy by attachment is not full and complete, a court of equity has no power to pass any order to aid or perfect it; Drake, Att. § 4.

In the New England states the attachment of the defendant's property, rights, and credits is an incident of the summons in all actions ex contractu. Elsewhere throughout the country the writ issues only upon cause shown by affidavit. And in most of the states its issue must be preceded by the execution by or on behalf of the plaintiff of a cautionary bond to pay the defendant all damage he may sustain by reason of the attachment. The grounds upon which the writ may be obtained vary in the different states. Wherever an affidavit is required as the basis of the attachment, it must verify the plaintiff's cause of action, and also the existence of some one or more of the grounds of attachment prescribed by the local statute as authorizing the issue of the writ.

The remedy by attachment is allowed in general only to a creditor. In some states, under special statutory provisions, damages arising ex delicto may be sued for by attachment; but the almost universal rule is otherwise. The claim of an attaching creditor, however, need not be so certain as to fall within the technical definition of a debt, or as to be susceptible of liquidation without the intervention of a jury. It is sufficient if the demand arise on contract, and that the contract furnish a standard by which the amount due could be so clearly ascertained as to enable the plaintiff to aver it in his affidavit, or the jury by their verdict to find it; 3 Caines, 323; 2 Wash. C. C. 382; 8 Gill, 192; 1 Leigh, 285; 11 Ala. 941; 4 Mart. La. 517; 2 Ark. 415; 3 Ind. 374; 3 Mich. 277.

In some states an attachment may, under peculiar circumstances, issue upon a debt not yet due and payable; but in such cases the debt must possess an actual character to become due in futuro, and not be merely possible and dependent on a contingency, which may never happen; 15 Ala. 455; 13 La. 62.

Corporations, like natural persons, may be proceeded against by attachment; 9 N. H. 394; 15 S. & R. 173; 1 Rob. Va. 573; 5 Ga. 531; 14 La. 415; 4 Humphr. 369; 9 Mo. 421.

Representative persons, such as heirs, executors, administrators, trustees, and others, claiming merely by right of representation, are not liable to be proceeded against, as such, by attachment; 1 Johns. Cas. 372; 9 Wend. 465; 4 Day, 87; 3 Halst. 179; 3 Green, N. J. 183; 2 Dall. 73, 97; 1 Harp. 125; 23 Ala. 369; 1 Mart. La. 202, 380; 1 Cra. 352, 469.

The levy of an attachment does not change the estate of the defendant in the property attached; 1 Pick. 485; 3 McLean, 354; 1 Rob. La. 443; 32 Me. 233; 6 Humphr. 151; 1 Swan. 208; 3 B. Monr. 579. Nor does the attaching plaintiff acquire any property thereby; 1 Pick. 485; 3 Brev. So. C. 23; 2 S. & R. 221; 2 Harr. & J. 96; 9 N. H. 488; 2 Penning. 997. Nor can he acquire through his attachment any higher or better rights to the property attached than the defendant had when the attachment was levied, unless he can show some fraud or collusion by which his rights are impaired; 31 Me. 177.

The levy of an attachment constitutes a lien on the property or credits attached; 1 M'Cord, 480; 8 Miss. 658; 18 id. 348; 16 Pick. 264; 10 Metc. Mass. 320; 10 Johns. 129; 3 Ark. 509; 17 Conn. 278; 14 Penn. 326; 12 Leigh, 406; 10 Gratt. 284; 12 Ala. 433; 2 La. Ann. 311; 11 Humphr. 569; Cooke, Tenn. 254; 1 Swan, 208; 1 Ind. 296; 7 Ill. 468; 23 Me. 60; 14 N. H. 509; 1 Zabr. 214; 21 Vt. 599, 620; 1 Day, 117. But, as the whole office of an attachment is to seize and hold property until it can be subjected to execution, this lien is of no value unless the plaintiff obtain judgment against the defendant and proceed to subject the property to execution.

Where two or more separate attachments are levied simultaneously on the same property, they will be entitled each to an aliquot part of the proceeds of the property; 18 Mass. 529; 19 Pick. 544; 2 Cush. 111; 1 Cow. 215; 3 Monr. 201. Where several attachments are levied successively on the same property, a junior attaching creditor may impeach a senior attachment, or judgment thereon, for fraud; 7 N. H. 594; 24 id. 384; 4 Rich.

So. C. 561; 6 Gratt. 96; 3 Ga. 140; 4 Abb. Pr. 393; 3 Mich. 531; but not on account of irregularities; 3 M'Cord, 201, 345; 4 Rich. So. C. 561; 2 Bail. 209; 9 Mo. 393; 5 Pick. 503; 13 Barb. 412; 9 La. An. 8.

By the levy of an attachment upon personalty the officer acquires a special property therein, which continues so long as he remains liable therefor, either to have it forthcoming to satisfy the plaintiff's demand, or to return it to the owner upon the attachment being dissolved, but no longer; 6 Johns. 195; 12 id. 403; 15 Mass. 310; 1 N. H. 289; 36 Me. 322; 28 Vt. 546. For any violation of his possession, while his liability for the property continues, he may maintain trover, trespass, and replevin; 9 Mass. 104; 16 id. 465; 1 Pick. 232, 389; 5 Vt. 181; 10 id. 165; 23 N. H. 46; 2 Me. 270.

As it would often subject an officer to great inconvenience and trouble to keep attached property in his possession, he is allowed in the New England states to deliver it over, during the pendency of the suit, to some responsible person, who will give an accountable receipt for it, and who is usually styled a receipter or bailee, and whose possession is regarded as that of the officer, and, therefore, as not discharging the lien of the attachment. This practice is not authorized by statute, but has been so long in vogue in the states where it prevails as to have become a part of their systems, and to have given rise to a large mass of judicial decisions; Drake on Att. § 344.

In many states provisions exist, authorizing the defendant to retain possession of the attached property by executing a bond with sureties for the delivery thereof, either to satisfy the execution which the plaintiff may obtain in the cause, or when and where the court may direct. This bond, like the bailment of attached property, does not discharge the lien of the attachment; 20 Miss. 622; 12 Ala. 138; 6 Ala. N. S. 45; 7 Mo. 411; 7 Ill. 468; 10 Pet. 400; 10 Humphr. 434. Property thus bonded cannot be seized under another attachment, or under a junior execution; 6 Ala. N. S. 45; 7 B. Monr. 651; 4 La. 304.

Provisions also exist in many states for the dissolution of an attachment by the defendant's giving bond and security for the payment of such judgment as the plaintiff may recover. This is, in effect, merely Special Bail. From the time it is given, the cause ceases to be one of attachment, and proceeds as if it had been instituted by summons; 2 Bibb, 221; 7 Ill. 468; 3 M'Cord, 347; 19 Ga. 436.

An attachment is dissolved by a final judgment for the defendant; 4 Mass. 99; 23 Pick. 465; 2 Aik. 299. It may be dissolved, on motion, on account of defects in the plaintiff's proceedings, apparent on their face; but not for defects which are not so apparent; 17 Miss. 516. Every such motion must precede a plea to the merits; 2 Dev. & B. 502; Harp. 38, 156; 7 Mart. La. 368; 4 Jones, No. C. 241; 26 Ala. N. S. 670. The death of the defendant pendente lite is held in some states to dissolve the attachment; 10 Metc. Mass. 320; 4 S. & R. 557; 7 Mo. 421; 5 Cranch, 507. And so the civil death of a corporation; 8 W. & S. 207; 11 Ala. N. S. 472. Not so, however, the bankruptcy of the defendant; 21 Vt. 599; 23 Me. 60; 14 N. H. 509; 10 Metc. Mass. 320; 1 Zabr. 214; 18 Miss. 348.

In those states where under a summons property may be attached if the plaintiff so directs, the defendant has no means of defeating the attachment except by defeating the action; but in some states, where an attachment does not issue except upon stated grounds, provision is made for the defendant's contesting the validity of the alleged grounds; while in other states it is held that he may do so, as a matter of right, without statutory authority; 3 Caines, 257; 7 Barb. N. Y. 656; 12 id. 265; 1 Dall. 165; 1 Yeates, 277; 1 Green, N. J. 131, 250; 3 Harr. N. J. 287; 3 Harr. & M'H. 535; 2 Nott & M'C. 130; 3 Sneed, 536; Hard. 65; 6 Blackf. 232; 1 Ill. App. 25.

As by custom of London.

This writ reached the effects of the defendant in the hands of third persons. Its effect is simply to arrest the payment of a debt due the defendant, to him, and to compel its payment to the plaintiff, or else to reach personal property in the hands of a third person. It is known in England and in most of the states of the United States as garnishment, or the garnishee process; but in some, as the trustee process and factorizing, with the same characteristics. As affects the garnishees, it is in reality a suit by the defendant in the plaintiff's name; 22 Ala. N. S. 831; Hempst. 662.

Garnishment is an effectual attachment of the defendant's effects in the garnishee's hands; 6 Cranch. 187; 8 Mass. 436; 14 N. H. 129; Busb. 3; 5 Ala. N. S. 514; 21 Miss. 284; 6 Ark. 391; 4 McLean, 535. It is essentially a legal remedy; and through it equities cannot be settled between the defendant and the garnishee; 5 Ala. N. S. 442; 19 id. 135; 13 Vt. 129; 15 Ill. 89. The plaintiff, through it, acquires no greater rights against the garnishee than the defendant has, except in cases of fraud; and he can hold the garnishee only so long as he has, in the attachment suit, a right to enforce his claim against the defendant; 3 Ala. 132; 1 Litt. 274. No judgment can be rendered against the garnishee until judgment against the defendant shall have been recovered; 3 Ala. N. S. 114; 5 Mart. N. S. La. 307.

The basis of a garnishee's liability is either an indebtedness to the defendant, or the possession of personal property of the defendant capable of being seized and sold under execution; 7 Mass. 436; 3 Me. 47; 2 N. H. 93; 9 Vt. 295; 11 Ala. N. S. 273. The existence of such indebtedness, or the possession of such property, must be shown affirmatively, either by the garnishee's answer or by evidence aliunde; 9 Cush. 530; 1 Dutch. 625; 2 Iowa, 154; 9 Ind. 537; 21 Mo. 30. The demand of the defendant against the garnishee, which will justify a judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the garnishee, must be such as would sustain an action of debt, or indebitatus assumpsit; 27 Ala. N. S. 414.

A non-resident of the state in which the attachment is obtained cannot be held as garnishee, unless he have in that state property of the defendant's in his hands, or be bound to pay the defendant money, or to deliver him goods, at some particular place in that state; 10 Mass. 343; 21 Pick. 263; 6 N. H. 497; 6 Vt. 614; 4 Abb. Pract. 72; 2 Cranch. 622.

No person deriving his authority from the law, and obliged to execute it according to the rules of the law, can be charged as garnishee in respect of any money or property held by him in virtue of that authority; 8 Mass. 246. Hence it has been held that an administrator cannot, in respect of moneys in his hand as such, be charged as garnishee of a creditor of his intestate; 11 Me. 185; 2 Harr. Del. 349; 5 Ark. 55, 188; unless he have been, by a proper tribunal, adjudged and ordered to pay a certain sum to such creditor; 5 N. H. 374; 3 Harr. Del. 267; 10 Mo. 374. Nor is an executor chargeable as garnishee in respect of a legacy bequeathed by his testator; 7 Mass. 271; 1 Conn. 385; 3 N. H. 67; 2 Whart. 332; 4 Mass. 443. Nor is a guardian; 4 Metc. Mass. 486; 6 N. H. 399. Nor is a sheriff, in respect of money collected by him under process; 3 Mass. 289; 7 Gill and J. 421; 1 Bland, Ch. 443; 1 Murph. 47; 2 Speers, 34, 378; 2 Ala. N. S. 253; 1 Swan, 208; 9 Mo. 378; 3 Cal. 363; 4 Me. 532. Nor is a clerk of a court, in respect of money in his hands officially; 1 Dall. 354; 2 Hayw. 171; 3 Ired. 365; 7 Humphr. 132; 7 Gill & J. 421; 3 Hill, So. C. 12; Bail. Eq. 360. Nor is a trustee of an insolvent, or an assignee of a bankrupt; 5 Mass. 183; 7 Gill & J. 421. Nor is a government disbursing officer; 7 Mass. 259; 3 Penn. 368; 7 T. B. Monr. 439; 3 Sneed, 379; 4 How. 20.

A debt not due may be attached in the hands of the garnishee, but he cannot be required to pay the same until it becomes due; 6 Me. 263; 1 Yeates, 255; 4 Mass. 235; 1 Harr. & J. 536; 3 Murph. 256; 1 Ala. N. S. 396; 17 Ark. 492.

In most of the states, the garnishee responds to the proceedings against him by a sworn answer to interrogatories propounded to him; which in some states is held to be conclusive as to his liability, but generally may be controverted and disproved, though in the absence of contradictory evidence always taken to be true. In order to charge the garnishee upon his answer alone, there must be in it a clear admission of a debt due to, or the possession of money or other attachable property of, the defendant; 2 Miles, 243; 22 Ga. 52; 2 Al. 9; 6 La. An. 122; 19 Miss. 348; 7 Humphr. 112; 3 Wisc. 300; 2 Greene, 125; 12 Ill. 358; 2 Cranch, 543; 9 Cush. 530; 1 Dutch. 625; 9 Ind. 537; 21 Mo. 30.

Whatever defence the garnishee could set up against an action by the defendant for the debt in respect of which it is sought to charge the garnishee, he may set up in bar of a judgment against him as a garnishee. If his debt to the defendant be barred by the statute of limitation, he may take advantage of the statute; 2 Humphr. 137; 10 Mo. 557; 9 Pick. 144. He may set up a failure of consideration; Wright, 724; 2 Cons. So. C. 456; 1 Murph. 468; 7 Watts, 12; and may plead a set-off against the defendant; 7 Pick. 166; 25 N. H. 369; 19 Vt. 644.

If by a court having jurisdiction a judgment be rendered against a garnishee, and he satisfy the same under execution, it is a full defence to an action by the defendant against him for the property or debt in respect of which he was charged as garnishee; though the judgment may have been irregular, and reversible on error; 3 B. Monr. 502; 4 Zabr. 674; 12 Ill. 358; 1 Iowa, 86; 2 Ala. 180.

An attachment plaintiff may be sued for a malicious attachment; and the action will be governed by the principles of the common law applicable to actions for malicious prosecution; 3 Call, 446; 17 Mass. 190; 9 Conn. 309; 1 Penning. 631; 4 W. & S. 201; 9 Ohio, 103; 4 Humphr. 169; 3 Hawks, 545; 9 Rob. La. 418; 14 Tex. 662.

See Drake, Attachm.

ATTACHMENT OF PRIVILEGE. In English Law. A process by which a man, by virtue of his privilege, calls another to litigate in that court to which he himself belongs; and who has the privilege to answer there.

A writ issued to apprehend a person in a privileged place. Termes de la Ley.

ATTAINDER. That extinction of civil rights and capacities which takes place whenever a person who has committed treason or felony receives sentence of death for his crime. 1 Stephen, Com. 408; 1 Bishop, Cr. L. § 641.

Attainder by confession is either by pleading guilty at the bar before the judges, and not putting one's self on one's trial by a jury, or before the coroner in sanctuary, when, in ancient times, the offender was obliged to abjure the realm.

Attainder by verdict is when the prisoner at the bar pleads not guilty to the indictment, and is pronounced guilty by the verdict of the jury.

Attainder by process or outlawry is when the party flies, and is subsequently outlawed. Coke, Litt. 391.

The effect of attainder upon a felon is, in general terms, that all his estate, real and personal, is forfeited; that his blood is corrupted, and so nothing passes by inheritance to, from, or through him; 1 Wms. Saund. 361, n.; 6 Coke, 63 a. 68 b; 2 Rob. Eccl. 547; 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 598; that he cannot sue in a court of justice; Coke, Litt. 130 a. See 2 Gabbett, Cr. Law; 1 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 641.

In England, by statute 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, attainder upon conviction, with consequent corruption of blood, forfeiture, or escheat, is abolished.

In the United States, the doctrine of attainder is now scarcely known, although during and shortly after the Revolution acts of attainder were passed by several of the states. The passage of such bills is expressly forbidden by the constitution.

As to the Confiscation Act of July 17, 1862, which imposed the penalty of confiscation of property as a punishment for treason and rebellion, see 9 Wall. 339.

ATTAINT. Attainted, stained, or blackened.

A writ which lies to inquire whether a jury of twelve men gave a false verdict. Bracton, l. 4, tr. 1, c. 134; Fleta, l. 5, c. 22, § 8.

This latter was a trial by jury of twenty-four men empanelled to try the goodness of a former verdict. 3 Bla. Com. 351; 3 Gilbert, Ev. Lofft. ed. 1146. See ASSIZE.

ATTEMPT (Lat. ad, to, tentare, to strive, to stretch).

In Criminal Law. An endeavor to accomplish a crime carried beyond mere preparation, but falling short of execution of the ultimate design in any part of it. 5 Cush. 367.

An intent to do a particular criminal thing combined with an act which falls short of the thing intended. 1 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 728; 14 Ga. 55; 14 Ala. N. s. 411; 56 Barb. 126; 49 Miss. 685.

To constitute an attempt, there must be an intent to commit some act which would be indictable, if done, either from its own character or that of its natural and probable consequences; 3 Harr. Del. 571; 18 Ala. N. s. 532; 1 Park. Cr. Cas. 327; 9 Humphr. 455; 9 C. & P. 518; 8 id. 541; 1 Crawf. & D. 156, 186; 1 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 731; an act apparently adapted to produce the result intended; Whart. Cr. L. § 182; 11 Ala. 57; 12 Pick. 173; 5 Cush. 365; 18 Ohio, 32; 65 N. C. 334; 32 Ind. 220; 4 Wash. C. C. 733; 2 Va. Cas. 356; 6 C. & P. 403; 9 id. 79, 483; 1 Leach, 19 (though some cases require a complete adaptation; 1 Bishop, Cr. L. 749); an act immediately and directly tending to the execution of the principal crime, and committed by the prisoner under such circumstances that he has the power of carrying his intention into execution; 1 F. & F. 511; including solicitations of another; 2 East, 5; 4 Hill, N. Y. 133; 7 Conn. 216, 266; 3 Pick. 26; 2 Dall. 384; but mere solicitation, not directed to the procurement of some specific crime, is not an attempt; Whart. Cr. L. 179; and the crime intended must be at least a misdemeanor; 1 Crawf. & D. 149; 1 C. & M. 661, n.; 1 Dall. 39. An abandoned attempt, there being no outside cause prompting the abandonment, is not indictable; Whart. Cr. L. § 137.

In England an indictment has been upheld upon a criminal intent coupled with an act (procuring dies for counterfeiting) which fell short of an attempt under their statute; 33 E. L. & E. 533. See 1 Bishop, Cr. L. § 724.

ATTENDANT. One who owes a duty or service to another, or in some sort depends upon him. Termes de la Ley.

ATTENDANT TERMS. Long leases or mortgages so arranged as to protect the title of the owner.

Thus, to raise a portion for younger children, it was quite common to make a mortgage to trustees. The powers of these trustees were generally to take possession of the estate, or to sell a part of the term if the portions were not duly paid. If the deed did not become ipso facto void, upon payment of the portion, a release was necessary from the trustees to discharge the mortgage. If this was not given, the term became an outstanding satisfied term. The purchaser from the heir then procured an assignment of the term to trustees for his benefit, which then became a satisfied term to attend the inheritance, or an attendant term. These terms were held attendant by the courts, also, without any assignment, and operated to defeat intermediate alienations to some extent. There were other ways of creating outstanding terms besides the method by mortgage; but the effect and general operation of all these were essentially the same. By reason of the want of notice, by means of registration, of the making of charges, mortgages, and conveyances of lands, this mode of protecting an innocent purchaser by means of an outstanding term to attend the inheritance came to be very general prior to the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, § 2, which abolished all such terms as soon as satisfied. 1 Washb. R. P. 311; 4 Kent, 86-93.

ATTENTAT. Any thing whatsoever wrongfully innovated or attempted in the suit by the judge a quo, pending an appeal. Used in the civil and canon law; 1 Add. Eccl. 22, note; Ayliffe, Parerg. 100.

ATTERMINARE (Lat.). To put off to a succeeding term; to prolong the time of payment of a debt. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 4; Cowel; Blount.

ATTERMINING. The granting a time or term for the payment of a debt.

ATTERMOIEMENT. In Canon Law. A making terms; a composition, as with creditors; 7 Low. C. 272, 306.

ATTESTATION (Lat. ad, to, testari, to witness).

The act of witnessing an instrument in writing, at the request of the party making the same, and subscribing it as a witness; 3 P. Will. 254; 2 Ves. Ch. 454; 1 Ves. & B. 362; 3 A. K. Marsh. 146; 17 Pick. 373.

Deeds, at common law, do not require attestation in order to be valid; 1 Wood, Conv. 239; 2 Bla. Com. 307; 3 Dane, Abr. 354; Cheves, 273; 12 Metc. 157; and there are several states where it is not necessary; 1 S. & R. 73; 1 Hayw. 205; 13 Ala. 321; 12 Metc. 157. In Alabama, Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana, New Jersey, and New York, attestation or acknowledgment before a proper officer is required. Where there are statutory regulations on the subject, they must be complied with. In Mississippi and Maryland one witness is sufficient; 17 Miss. 325; in Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Ohio, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Vermont, two are required; 8 Conn. 289; 2 A. K. Marsh. 429; 13 N. H. 38; 6 Wheat. 527; 1 McLean, 520; 5 Ohio, 119; M'Mull. 373; 8 Minn. 525; 11 Minn. 443; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 275, n.; 4 Kent, 457. The requisites are not the same in all cases as against the grantor and as against purchasers: 2 A. K. Marsh. 529. See 3 N. H. 38; 13 id. 38.

The attesting witness need not see the grantor write his name: if he sign in the presence of the grantor, and at his request, it is sufficient; 2 B. & P. 217. Wills must be attested by competent or credible witnesses; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 691; 9 Pick. 350; 1 Burr. 414; 4 Burn. Eccl. Law, 116; who must subscribe their names attesting in the presence of the testator; 7 Harr. & J. 61; 3 Harr. & M'H. 457; 1 Leigh, 6; 1 Maule & S. 294; 2 Curt. Eccl. 320; 3 id. 118; Carth. 79; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 678. And see 13 Gray, 103; 12 Cush. 342; 1 Ves. Ch. 11; 2 Washb. R. P. 682. In the attestation of wills conveying land, three witnesses are requisite in Connecticut, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Mexico, South Carolina, and Vermont; two are sufficient in Alabama, Arkansas, Rhode Island, California, Colorado, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Arizona, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, Utah, and Washington. No subscribing witnesses are required in Pennsylvania, except in the case of wills making a gift to a charity.

ATTESTATION CLAUSE. That clause wherein the witnesses certify that the instrument has been executed before them, and the manner of the execution of the same.

The usual attestation clause to a will is in the following formula, to wit: "Signed, sealed, published, and declared by the above-named A B, as and for his last will and testament, in the presence of us, who have hereunto subscribed our names as the witnesses thereto, in the presence of the said testator and of each other." That of deeds is generally in these words: "Sealed and delivered in the presence of us."

ATTESTING WITNESS. One who, upon being required by the parties to an instrument, signs his name to it to prove it, and for the purpose of identification; 3 Campb. 232; 115 Mass. 599.

ATTORN. To turn over; to transfer to another money or goods; to assign to some particular use or service. Kennet, Paroch. Antiq. 283.

Used of a lord's transferring the homage and service of his tenant to a new lord. Bract. 81, 82; 1 Sullivan, Lect. 227.

To transfer services or homage.

Used of the part taken by the tenant in a transfer of lands; 2 Bla. Com. 288; Littleton, § 551. Now used of assent to such a transfer; 1 Washb. R. P. 28. The lord could not alien his land without the consent of the tenant, nor could the tenant assign without the consent of his lord; 2 Bla. Com. 27; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 137; 1 Washb. R. P. 28, n. Attornment is abolished by various statutes; 1 Washb. R. P. 336.

ATTORNEY. One put in the place, turn, or stead of another, to manage his affairs; one who manages the affairs of another by direction of his principal. Spelman, Gloss.; Termes de la Ley.

One who acts for another by virtue of an appointment by the latter. Attorneys are of various kinds.

Attorney in fact. A person to whom the authority of another, who is called the constituent, is by him lawfully delegated.

This term is employed to designate persons who act under a special agency, or a special letter of attorney, so that they are appointed in factum, for the deed, or special act to be performed; but in a more extended sense it includes all other agents employed in any business, or to do any act or acts in pais for another. Bacon, Abr. Attorney; Story, Ag. § 25.

All persons who are capable of acting for themselves, and even those who are disqualified from acting in their own capacity, if they have sufficient understanding, as infants of a proper age, and femes coverts, may act as attorneys of others; Coke, Litt. 52 a; 1 Esp. 142; 2 id. 511.

Attorney-at-law. An officer in a court of justice, who is employed by a party in a cause to manage the same for him.

Appearance by an attorney has been allowed in England from the time of the earliest records of the courts of that country. They are mentioned in Glanville, Bracton, Fleta, and Britton; and a case turning upon the party's right to appear by attorney is reported; Y. B. 17 Edw. III., p. 8, case 23. In France such appearances were first allowed by letters patent of Philip le Bel, A. D. 1290; 1 Fournel, Hist. des avocats, 42, 43, 92, 93; 2 Loizel. Coutumes, 14, 15. It results from the nature of their functions, and of their duties, as well to the court as to the client, that no one can, even by consent, be the attorney of both the litigating parties in the same controversy; Farr. 47. The name of attorney is given to those officers who practise in courts of common law; solicitors, in courts of equity; and proctors, in courts of admiralty and in the English ecclesiastical courts.

As a general rule the eligibility of persons to hold the position of attorney-at-law is settled by local legislation or by rule of court. Excepting where permitted by special statute, women cannot act as attorneys-at-law in the various states; 55 Ill. 535; 16 Wall. 130; but any woman of good standing at the bar of the supreme court of any state or territory or of the Dist. of C. for three years, and of good moral character, may become a member of the bar of the supreme court of the U. S.; Act Feb. 15, 1879. In North Carolina, un-naturalized foreigners cannot be licensed as attorneys; 3 Hawks, 355; Weeks, Att. at Law, 79, note. The business of attorneys is to carry on the practical and formal parts of the suit; 1 Kent, 307. See, as to their powers, 2 Supp. to Ves. Jr. 241, 254; 3 Chitty, Bla. Com. 23, 338; Bacon, Abr. Attorney; 3 Penn. 74; 3 Wils. 374; 16 S. & R. 368; 14 id. 307; 7 Cranch, 452; 1 Penn. 264. In general, the agreement of an attorney-at-law, within the scope of his employment, binds his client; 1 Salk. 86; as, to amend the record, 1 Binn. 75; to refer a cause, 1 Dall. 164; 6 Binn. 101; 7 Cranch, 436; 3 Taunt. 486; not to sue out a writ of error, 1 H. Blackst. 21, 23; 2 Saund. 71 a, b; 1 Term, 388; to strike off a non pros., 1 Binn. 469; to waive a judgment by default, 1 Archb. Pr. 26. But the act must be within the scope of his authority. He cannot, for example, without special authority, purchase lands for the client at sheriff's sale; 2 S. & R. 21; 11 Johns. 464.

In the absence of fraud, the client is concluded by the acts, and even by the omissions, of his attorney; 23 Tex. 109; 14 Minn. 333; 22 Cal. 200; Weeks, Att. at Law, 375.

In general, he has all the powers exercised by the forms and usages of the court in which the suit is pending; Weeks, Att. at Law, 374.

The principal duties of an attorney are—to be true to the court and to his client; to manage the business of his client with care, skill, and integrity; 4 Burr. 2061; 1 B. & Ald. 202; 2 Wils. 325; 1 Bingh. 347; to keep his client informed as to the state of his business; to keep his secrets confided to him as such.

And he is privileged from disclosing such secrets when called as a witness; 29 Vt. 701; 4 Mich. 414; 16 N. Y. 180; 21 Ga. 201; 40 E. L. & Eq. 353; 38 Me. 581. See CLIENT; CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATION. For a violation of his duties an action will, in general, lie; 3 Cal. 308; 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 145, 146; and in some cases he may be punished by attachment. Official misconduct may be inquired into in a summary manner, and the name of the offender stricken from the roll; 18 B. Monr. 472; 13 Wall. 333; 17 Am. Dec. 194. Consult 4 Wall. 333.

ATTORNEY'S CERTIFICATE. In English Law. A certificate of the commissioners of stamps that the attorney therein named has paid the annual duty. This must be renewed yearly; and the penalty for practising without such certificate is fifty pounds; Stat. 37 Geo. III. c. 90, §§ 26, 28, 30. See also 7 & 8 Vict. c. 73, §§ 21–26; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 63.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL. In English Law. A great officer, under the king, made by letters patent, whose office is to exhibit informations and prosecute for the crown in matters criminal; to file bills in the exchequer in any matter concerning the king's revenue. Others may bring bills against the king's attorney; 3 Bla. Comm. 27; Termes de la Ley.

In American Law. In each state there is an attorney-general, or similar officer, who appears for the people, as in England the attorney-general appears for the crown.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES. An officer appointed by the president.

His duties are to prosecute and conduct all suits in the supreme court in which the United States shall be concerned, and give his advice upon questions of law when required by the president, or when requested by the heads of any of the departments, touching matters that concern their departments; Act of 24th Sept. 1789.

ATTORNMENT. See ATTORN.

AU BESOIN (Fr. in case of need. "Au besoin chez Messieurs —— à ——." "In case of need, apply to Messrs. —— at ——").

A phrase used in the direction of a bill of exchange, pointing out the person to whom application may be made for payment in case of failure or refusal of the drawee to pay; Story, Bills, § 65.

AUBAINE. See DROIT D'AUBAINE.

AUCTION. A public sale of property to the highest bidder.

The manner of conducting an auction is immaterial, whether it be by public outcry or by any other manner. The essential part is the selection of a purchaser from a number of bidders. In a case where a woman continued silent during the whole time of the sale, but when any one bid she gave him a glass of brandy, and, when the sale broke up, the person who received the last glass of brandy was taken into a private room and he was declared to be the purchaser, this was adjudged to be an auction; 1 Dowl. Bailm. 115.

Auctions are generally conducted by a person licensed for that purpose. Bidders may be employed by the owner, if it be done bonâ fide and to prevent a sacrifice of the property under a given price; 1 Hall, 655; 11 Paige, Ch. 431; 3 Stor. 622; but where bidding is fictitious, and by combination with the owner to mislead the judgment and inflame the zeal of others, it would be a fraudulent and void sale; 8 How. 134; 3 Stor. 611; 11 Ill. 254; 2 Dev. 126; 3 Metc. Mass. 384; 3 Gilm. 529. And see 6 J. B. Moore, 316; 3 B. & B. 116; 3 Bingh. 368; 15 M. & W. 367; 13 La. 287; 28 N. H. 360; Ired. Eq. 278, 490; 14 Penn. 446. Unfair conduct on the part of the purchaser will avoid the sale; 6 J. B. Moore, 216; 3 B. & B. 116; 3 Stor. 623; 20 Mo. 290; 2 Dev. 126. See 3 Gilm. 529; 11 Paige, Ch. 431; 7 Ala. N. S. 189. Error in description of real estate sold will avoid the sale if it be material; 4 Bingh. N. C. 463; 8 C. & P. 469; 1 Y. & C. 658; 3 Jones & L. 506; but an immaterial variation merely gives a case for deduction from the amount of purchase-money; 2 Kent, 437; 6 Johns. 38; 11 id. 525; 2 Bay, 11; 3 Cranch, 270. A bid may be retracted before acceptance has been signified; 3 Term, 148; 4 Bingh. 653. See 13 Price, Exch. 103. Sales at auction are within the Statute of Frauds; 2 B. & C. 945; 7 East, 558; Hilliard, Sales, 479. Consult 2 Kent, 536; 1 Parsons, Contr. 415; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 976; 18 Hun, 470.

AUCTIONARIUS (Lat.). A seller; a regrator; a retailer; one who bought and sold; an auctioneer, in the modern sense. Spelman, Gloss. One who buys poor, old, worn-out things to sell again at a greater price. Du Cange.

AUCTIONEER. A person authorized by law to sell the goods of others at public sale; one who conducts a public sale or auction; 5 Mass. 505; 19 Pick. 482. He is the agent of the seller; 3 Term, 148; 2 Rich. 464; 1 Parsons, Contr. 418; and of the buyer, for some purposes at least; 4 Ad. & E. 792; 7 East, 558; 2 Taunt. 38; 3 Ves. & B. 57; 4 Johns. Ch. 659; 16 Wend. 28; 4 Me. 1, 258; 6 Leigh, 16; 2 Kent, 539. He has a special property in the goods, and may bring an action for the price; 1 H. Blackst. 81; 7 Taunt. 237; 19 Ark. 566; 5 S. & R. 19; 1 Ril. So. C. 287; 16 Johns. 1; 1 E. D. Sm. 590; see 5 M. & W. 645; 3 C. & P. 352; 5 B. & Ad. 568; and has a lien upon them for the charges of the sale, his commission, and the auction-duty; 15 Mo. 184; 2 Kent, 536. He must obtain the best price he fairly can, and is responsible for damages arising from a failure to pursue the regular course of business, or from a want of skill; 3 B. & Ald. 616; Cowp. 395; 2 Wils. 325; and where he sells goods as the property of one not the owner, is liable for their value to the real owner; 7 Taunt. 237; 5 Esp. 103; 20 Wend. 21; 22 id. 285; 5 Mo. 323. And see 2 Harr. Del. 179.

AUCTOR. In Roman Law. An auctioneer.

In auction sales, a spear was fixed upright in the forum, beside which the seller took his stand; hence goods thus sold were said to be sold sub hasta (under the spear). The catalogue of goods was on tablets called auctionaria.

AUDIENCE (Lat. audire, to hear). A hearing.

It is usual for the executive of a country to whom a minister has been sent, to give such minister an audience. And after a minister has been recalled, an audience of leave usually takes place.

AUDIENCE COURT. In English Law. A court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, and held by him in his palace for the transaction of matters of form only, as the confirmation of bishops, elections, consecrations, and the like. This court has the same authority with the court of arches, but is of inferior dignity and antiquity. The dean of the arches is the official auditor of the audience. The archbishop of York has also his audience court. Termes de la Ley.

AUDITA QUERELA (Lat.).

In Practice. A form of action which lies for a defendant to recall or prevent an execution, on account of some matter occurring after judgment amounting to a discharge, and which could not have been, and cannot be, taken advantage of otherwise. 12 Mass. 268.

It is a regular suit, in which the parties appear and plead; 17 Johns. 484; 12 Vt. 56, 435; 30 id. 420; 8 Miss. 103; 12 Wall. 305; and in which damages may be recovered if execution was issued improperly; Brooke, Abr. Damages, 38; but the writ must be allowed in open court, and is not of itself a supersedeas; 2 Johns. 227; 9 Phila. 125.

It is a remedial process, equitable in its nature, based upon facts, and not upon the erroneous judgments or acts of the court; 2 Wms. Saund. 148, n.; 10 Mass. 103; 14 id. 448; 17 id. 159; 1 Aik. 363; 24 Vt. 211; 2 Johns. Cas. 227; 1 Overt. T. 425. And see 7 Gray, 206.

It lies where an execution against A has been taken out on a judgment acknowledged by B without authority, in A's name; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 233; and see Cro. Eliz. 233; and generally for any matters which work a discharge occurring after judgment entered; Cro. Car. 443; 2 Root, 178; 10 Pick. 439; 25 Me. 304; see 5 Coke, 86 b; and for matters occurring before judgment which the defendant could not plead through want of notice or through collusion or fraud of the plaintiff; 4 Mass. 485; 5 Rand. 639; 2 Johns. Cas. 258; 1 W. N. C. 304.

It may be brought after the day on which judgment might have been entered, although it has not been; 1 Rolle, Abr. 306, 431, pl. 10; 1 Mod. 111; either before or after execution has issued; Kirb. 187.

It does not lie for matter which might have been, or which may be, taken advantage of by a writ of error; 1 Vt. 433; in answer to a scire facias of the plaintiff; 1 Salk. 264; nor where there is or has been a remedy by plea or otherwise; T. Raym. 89; 12 Mass. 270; 13 id. 453; 11 Cush. 35; 6 Vt. 243; 12 Wall. 305; see 17 Mass. 158; nor where there has been an agreement to accept a smaller sum in payment of a larger debt, while any part of the agreement continues executory; 48 Penn. 477; nor to show that a confessed judgment was to be collateral security only; 9 Phila. 125; nor against the commonwealth; 8 Phila. 237.

In modern practice it is usual to grant the same relief upon motion which might be obtained by audita querela; 4 Johns. 191; 11 S. & R. 274; and in some of the states the remedy by motion has entirely superseded the ancient remedy; 5 Rand. 639; 2 Hill, So. C. 298; 6 Humphr. 210; 18 Ala. 778; 18 B. Monr. 256; 3 Mo. 129; while in others audita querela is of frequent use as a remedy recognized by statute; 17 Vt. 118; 7 Gray, 206; 9 Allen, 572.

They have authority to hear testimony; 4 Pick. 283; 5 Metc. Mass. 373; 5 Vt. 363; 2 Bland, Ch. 45; 17 Conn. 1; in their discretion, 27 N. H. 244, in some states, to examine witnesses under oath; 6 N. H. 508; 11 id. 501; 1 Bland, Ch. 463; to examine books; 19 Pick. 81; 17 Conn. 1; see 14 Vt. 214; and other vouchers of accounts; 11 Metc. Mass. 297.

The auditor's report must state a special account; 4 Yeates, 514; 2 Root, 12; 4 Wash. C. C. 42; giving items allowed and disallowed; 5 Vt. 70; 1 Ark. 355; 15 Tex. 7; but it is sufficient if it refer to the account; 2 South. 791; but see 27 Vt. 673; and are to report exceptions to their decision of questions taken before them to the court; 2 South. 791; 5 Vt. 546; 5 Binn. 433; and exceptions must be taken before them; 4 Cranch, 308; 5 Vt. 546; 7 Pet. 625; 1 Miss. 43; 15 Tex. 7; 22 Barb. 39; unless apparent on the face of the report; 5 Cranch, 313. I. 338; 15 Tex. 7; 40 Me. 337; unless impeached for fraud, misconduct, or very evident error; 5 Penn. 413; 71 id. 25; 40 Me. 337; but subject to any examination of the principles of law in which they proceeded; 2 Day, 116. In others it is held prima facie correct; 12 Mass. 412; 6 Gray, 376; 1 La. Ann. 380; 14 N. H. 427; 21 id. 188; and evidence may be introduced to show its incorrectness; 1 La. H. 198; or may be rectified by the court; 1 Smedes & M. 543; or accepted if the party in favor of whom the wrong decision was made remits the item.

Where the report is referred back to the auditor, the whole case is reopened, and all parties are bound to take notice; 76 Penn. 30.

Where two or more are appointed, all must act; 20 Conn. 331; unless the parties consent that a part act for all; 1 Tyl. 407.

AUGMENTATION. The increase arising to the crown's revenues from the suppression of monasteries and religious houses and the appropriation of their lands and revenues.

A court erected by Henry VIII., which was invested with the power of determining suits and controversies relating to monasteries and abbey lands.

The court was dissolved in the reign of Mary; but the office of augmentations remained long after. Cowel.

A share of the great tithes temporarily granted to the vicars by the appropriators, and made perpetual by statute 29 Car. II. c. 8.

The word is used in a similar sense in the Canadian law.

AULA REGIA (called frequently Aula Regis). The king's hall or palace.

In English Law. A court established in England by William the Conqueror in his own hall.

It was the "great universal" court of the kingdom; from the dismemberment of which are derived the present four superior courts in England, viz.: the High Court of Chancery, and the three superior courts of common law, to wit, the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer. It was composed of the king's great officers of state resident in his palace and usually attendant on his person; such as the lord high constable and lord marescal (who chiefly presided in matters of honor and of arms), the lord high steward and lord great chamberlain, the steward of the household, the lord chancellor (whose peculiar duty it was to keep the king's seal, and examine all such writs, grants, and letters as were to pass under that authority), and the lord high treasurer, who was the principal adviser in all matters relating to the revenue. These high officers were assisted by certain persons learned in the laws, who were called the king's justiciars or justices, and by the greater barons of parliament, all of whom had a seat in the aula regia, and formed a kind of court of appeal, or rather of advice in matters of great moment and difficulty. These, in their several departments, transacted all secular business, both civil and criminal, and all matters of the revenue; and over all presided one special magistrate, called the chief justiciar, or capitalis justiciarius totius Angliæ, who was also the principal minister of state, the second man in the kingdom, and, by virtue of his office, guardian of the realm in the king's absence. This court was bound to follow the king's household in all his expeditions; on which account the trial of common causes in it was found very burdensome to the people, and accordingly the 11th chapter of Magna Charta enacted that "communia placita non sequantur curiam regis, sed teneantur in aliquo certo loco," which certain place was established in Westminster Hall (where the aula regis originally sat, when the king resided in that city), and there it has ever since continued, under the name of Court of Common Pleas, or Common Bench. It was under the reign of Edward I. that the other several officers of the chief justiciar were subdivided and broken into distinct courts of judicature. A court of chivalry, to regulate the king's domestic servants, and an august tribunal for the trial of delinquent peers, were erected; while the barons reserved to themselves in parliament the right of reviewing the sentences of the other courts in the last resort; but the distribution of common justice between man and man was arranged by giving to the court of chancery jurisdiction to issue all original writs under the great seal to other courts; the exchequer to manage the king's revenue, the common pleas to determine all causes between private subjects, and the court of king's bench retaining all the jurisdiction not cantoned out to the other courts, and particularly the sole cognizance of pleas of the crown, or criminal causes. 3 Steph. Com. 397–400, 405; 3 Bla. Com. 38–40; Bracton, l. 3. tr. 1, c. 7; Fleta, Abr. 2, cc. 2, 3; Gilbert, Hist. C. Pleas, Introd. 18; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 48.

This word is frequently used in composition: as, auter droit, auter vie, auter action, etc. See AUTER ACTION PENDANT.

AUTHENTIC ACT. In Civil Law. Nov. 73, c. 2: Cod. 7. 52, 6. 4. 21; Dig. 22. 4.

An act which has been executed before a notary public or other officer authorized to execute such functions, in presence of two witnesses, free, male, and aged at least fourteen years; or of three witnesses, if the party be blind. La. Civ. Code, art. 2231. If the party does not know how to sign, the notary must cause him to affix his mark to the instrument. La. Civ. Code, art. 2231. The authentic act is full proof of the agreement contained in it, against the contracting parties and their heirs or assigns, unless it be declared and proved to be a forgery. Id. art. 2233. See Merlin, Répert.

AUTHENTICATION. In Practice. A proper or legal attestation.

Acts done with a view of causing an instrument to be known and identified.

Under the constitution of the United States, congress has power to provide a method of authenticating copies of the records of a state with a view to their production as evidence in other states. For the various statutes on the subject, see FOREIGN JUDGMENT; RECORDS.

AUTHENTICS. A collection of the Novels of Justinian, made by an unknown person.

They are entire, and are distinguished by their name from the epitome made by Julian. See 1 Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 72.

AUTHOR (Lat. auctor, from augere, to increase, to produce).

One who produces, by his own intellectual labor applied to the materials of his composition, an arrangement or compilation new in itself; 2 Blatchf. 39.

When a person has conceived the design of a work, and has employed others to execute it, the creation of the work may be so far due to his mind as to make him the author; 7 C. B. N. S. 268; but he is not an author who merely suggests the subject, and has no share in the design or execution of the work; 17 C. B. 432; Drone, Copyright, 236. See COPYRIGHT.

AUTHORITIES. Enactments and opinions relied upon as establishing or declaring the rule of law which is to be applied in any case.

The opinion of a court, or of counsel, or of a text-writer upon any question, is usually fortified by a citation of authorities. In respect to their general relative weight, authorities are entitled to precedence in the order in which they are here treated.

The authority of the constitution and of the statutes and municipal ordinances are paramount; and if there is any conflict among these the constitution controls, and courts declare a statute or ordinance which conflicts with the former to be so far forth of no authority. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; STATUTES.

The decisions of courts of justice upon similar cases are the authorities to which most frequent resort is to be had; and although in theory these are subordinate to the first class, in practice they do continually explain, enlarge, or limit the provisions of enactments, and thus in effect largely modify them. The word authorities is frequently used in a restricted sense to designate citations of this class.

An authority may be of any degree of weight, from that of absolute conclusiveness down to the faintest presumption. As to the considerations which affect the weight of an adjudged case as an authority, see PRECEDENT; OPINION.

The opinions of legal writers. Of the vast number of treatises and commentaries which we have, comparatively few are esteemed as authorities. A very large number are in reality but little more than digests of the adjudged cases arranged in treatise form, and find their chief utility as manuals of reference. Hence it has been remarked that when we find an opinion in a text-writer upon any particular point, we must consider it not merely as the opinion of the author, but as the supposed result of the authorities to which he refers; and if on examination of those authorities they are found not to establish it, his opinion is disregarded; 3 B. & P. 301. Where, however, the writer declares his own opinion as founded upon principle, the learning and ability of the writer, together with the extent to which the reasons he assigns, commend themselves to the reader, determine the weight of his opinion. A distinction has been made between writers who have and who have not held judicial station; Ram, Judgments, 98. But this, though it may be borne in mind in estimating the learning and ability of an author, is not a just test of his authority. See 3 Term, 64, 241.

The opinions of writers on moral science, and the codes and laws of ancient and foreign nations, are resorted to in the absence of more immediate authority, by way of ascertaining those principles which have commended themselves to legislators and philosophers in all ages. See CODE. Lord Coke's saying that common opinion is good authority in law, Coke, Litt. 186 a, is not understood as referring to a mere speculative opinion in the community as to what the law upon a particular subject is; but to an opinion which has been frequently acted upon, and for a great length of time, by those whose duty it is to administer the law, and upon which course of action important individual rights have been acquired or depend; 3 Barb. Ch. 528, 577. As to the mode of citing authorities, see ABBREVIATIONS.

AUTHORITY. In Contracts. The lawful delegation of power by one person to another.

Authority coupled with an interest is an authority given to an agent for a valuable consideration, or which forms part of a security.

Express authority is that given explicitly, either in writing or verbally.

General authority is that which authorizes the agent to do every thing connected with a particular business. Story, Ag. § 17.

It empowers him to bind his employer by all acts within the scope of his employment; and it cannot be limited by any private order or direction not known to the party dealing with him. Paley, Ag. 199, 200, 201.

Limited authority is that where the agent is bound by precise instructions.

Special authority is that which is confined to an individual transaction; Story, Ag. § 19; 15 East, 400, 408; 6 Cow. 354.

Such an authority does not bind the employer, unless it is strictly pursued; for it is the business of the party dealing with the agent to examine his authority; and therefore, if there be any qualification or express restriction annexed to it, it must be observed; otherwise, the principal is discharged. Paley, Ag. 202.

Naked authority is that where the principal delegates the power to the agent wholly for the benefit of the former.

A naked authority may be revoked; an authority coupled with an interest is irrevocable.

Unlimited authority is that where the agent is left to pursue his own discretion.

Delegation of. An authority may be delegated by deed for any purpose whatever; for whenever an authority by parol would be sufficient, one by deed will be equally so. When the authority is to do something which must be performed through the medium of a deed, then the authority must also be by deed, and executed with all the forms necessary to render the instrument perfect; unless, indeed, the principal be present, and verbally or impliedly authorize the agent to fix his name to the deed; as, if a man be authorized to convey a tract of land, the letter of attorney must be by deed; Whart. Ag. § 48; Paley, Ag. Lloyd ed. 157; Story, Ag. §§ 48, 51; 65 N. C. 688; 5 Binn. 613; 14 S. & R. 331; 2 Pick. 345; 5 Mass. 11; 1 Wend. 424; 12 id. 525; 67 Ill. 161; 11 Ohio, 223. But a written authority is not required to authorize an agent to sign an unsealed paper, or a contract in writing not under seal, even where a statute makes it necessary that the contract, in order to bind the party, shall be in writing, unless the statute positively requires that the authority shall also be in writing; Paley, Ag. Lloyd ed. 161; 2 Kent, 613, 614; Story, Ag. § 50; 1 Chitty, Com. Law, 213; 6 Ves. Ch. 250; 8 Ired. 74.

For most purposes, the authority may be either in writing not under seal, or verbally, or by the mere employment of the agent; or it may be implied from the conduct of the employer in sanctioning the credit given to a person acting in his name; Paley, Ag. 2, 161. The exigencies of commercial affairs render such an appointment indispensable; Story, Ag. § 47; Dig. 3. 3. 1. 1; Pothier, Pand. 3. 3. n. 3; Domat, 1. 15, § 1. art. 5; 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 5, 194, 195; 7 Term, 350. The authority given must have been possessed by the person who delegates it, or it will be void; and it must be of a thing lawful, and be otherwise capable of being delegated, or it will not justify the person to whom it is given; Dig. 102; Keilw. 83; 5 Coke, 80.

An authority is to be so construed as to include not only all the necessary and proper means of executing it with effect, but also all the various means which are justified or allowed by the usages of trade; Story, Ag. §§ 58, 60; 6 S. & R. 146; 10 Wend. 218; 11 Ill. 177.

Exercise of. An agent who has bare power or authority from another to do an act must execute it himself, and cannot delegate his authority to a sub-agent; for the confidence being personal, it cannot be assigned to a stranger; Story, Ag. § 13; 2 Kent, 633. But the principal may, in direct terms, authorize his agent to delegate the whole or any portion of his authority to another. Or the power to appoint a sub-agent may be implied, either from the terms of the original authority, from the ordinary custom of trade, or from the fact that it is indispensable in order to accomplish the end; Paley, Ag. Dunlop ed. 175; Story, Ag. § 14; 9 Ves. Ch. 234, 251, 252. See DELEGATION.

When the authority is particular, it must, in general, be strictly pursued, or it will be void, unless the variance be merely circumstantial; Coke, Litt. 49 b, 181 b, 303 b; 6 Term, 591; 2 H. Blackst. 623. As if it be to do an act upon condition, and the agent does it absolutely, it is void; and vice versa. If a person do less than the authority committed to him, the act is void; but if he does that which he is authorized, and more, it is good for that which is warranted, and void for the rest. Both of these rules, however, may have many exceptions and limitations; Paley, Ag. 178, 179. An authority given by the act of the principal to two or more persons cannot be executed by one, though one die or refuse; Paley, Ag. 177; Coke, Litt. 112 b, 181 b; it being in such case construed strictly, and understood to be joint and not several; Story, Ag. § 42; 3 Pick. 232; 2 id. 345; 6 id. 198; 12 Mass. 185; 6 Johns. 39; 23 Wend. 324; 10 Vt. 532; 12 N. H. 226; 9 W. & S. 56. And an authority given to three jointly and severally is not, in general, well executed by two; but it must be done by one, or by all; Coke, Litt. 181 b; Bacon, Abr. Authority, C; 1 B. & P. 229, 234; 3 Term, 592. These rules apply to an authority of a private nature, saving in commercial transactions, which form an exception. Where, however, the authority is of a public nature, it may be executed by a majority; 24 Pick. 13; 9 Watts, 466; 9 S. & R. 99.

As to the form to be observed in the execution of an authority, where an agent is authorized to make a contract for his principal in writing, it must, in general, be personally signed by him; Story, Ag. § 146; 1 Y. & J. 387; 9 Mer. 235, 251, 252. It is a rule that an act done under a power of attorney must be done in the name of the person who gives the power, and not merely in the attorney's name, though the latter be described as attorney in the instrument; Story, Ag. § 147; 11 Mass. 27, 29; 12 id. 173, 175; 16 Pick. 347, 350; 22 id. 158, 161; 8 Metc. 442; 7 Wend. 68; 10 id. 87, 271; 9 N. H. 263, 269, 270. But it matters not in what words this is done, if it sufficiently appear to be in the name of the principal. "For A B" (the principal), "C D" (the attorney), has been held to be sufficient; Story, Ag. § 153; 6 B. Monr. 612; 3 Blackf. 55; 7 Cush. 215. The strict rule of law in this respect applies, however, only to sealed instruments; and the rule is further modified, even in such cases, where the seal is not essential to the validity of the instrument; Story, Ag. §§ 148, 154; 8 Pick. 56; 17 Pet. 161. An authority must be executed within the period to which it is limited; 4 Campb. 279; Russell, Fact. & Brok. 315.

Destruction of. In general, an authority is revocable from its nature, unless it is given for a valuable consideration, or is part of a security, or coupled with an interest; Story, Ag. §§ 476, 477; 2 Kent, 643; 2 Mas. 244, 342. It may generally be revoked at any moment before the actual exercise of it; 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 223; Story, Ag. §§ 463, 465; and although the agent is appointed under seal, it has been held that his authority may be revoked by parol; Story, Ag. § 463. The revocation may be express, as by the direct countermand of the principal, or it may be implied. See AGENCY.

The authority may be renounced by the agent before any part of it is executed, or when it is in part executed; but in either case, if the agency is founded on a valuable consideration, the agent, by renouncing it, makes himself liable for the damages which his principal may sustain thereby; Story, Ag. § 478; Story, Bailm. § 202. If by the express terms of the commission the authority of the agent be limited to a certain period, it will manifestly cease so soon as that period has expired. The authority of the agent is ipso facto determined by the completion of the purpose for which it was given.

In Governmental Law. The right and power which an officer has, in the exercise of a public function, to compel obedience to his lawful commands. A judge, for example, has authority to enforce obedience to his lawful orders.

AUTOCRACY. A government where the power of the monarch is unlimited by law.

AUTONOMY (Greek, αὐτονομία). The state of independence.

The autonomos was he who lived according to his own laws,—who was free. The term was chiefly used of communities or states, and meant those which were independent of others. It was introduced into the English language by the divines of the seventeenth century, when it and its translation—self-government—were chiefly used in a theological sense. Gradually its translation received a political meaning, in which it is now employed almost exclusively. Of late the word autonomy has been revived in diplomatic language in Europe, meaning independence, the negation of a state of political influence from without or foreign powers. See Lieber, Civ. Lib.

AUTER ACTION PENDANT (L. Fr. another action pending).

In Pleading. A plea that another action is already pending.

This plea may be made either at law or in equity; 1 Chitty, Pl. 393; Story, Eq. Pl. § 736.

The second suit must be for the same cause; 2 Dick. 611; 5 Cal. 48; 8 id. 207; 2 Dutch. 461; 18 Ga. 604; 25 Penn. 314; 26 Vt. 673; 4 Blackf. 156; but a writ of error may abate a suit on the judgment; 2 Johns. Cas. 312; and if in equity, for the same purpose; 2 M. & C. Ch. 602; see 1 Conn. 154; and in the same right; Story, Ex. Pl. § 739. The criterion by which to decide whether two suits are for the same cause of action is, whether the evidence, properly admissible in the one, will support the other; 5 Cr. C. C. 393. See 13 Wall. 679.

The suits must be such that the same judgment may be rendered in both; 17 Pick. 510; 19 id. 523. They must be between the same parties; 26 Ala. N. S. 720; 13 B. Monr. 197; 18 Vt. 138; in person or interest; 21 N. H. 570; 1 Grant, Cas. 359; 2 Bail. 362; 2 J. J. Marsh. 281. The parties need not be precisely the same; 5 Wisc. 151.

A suit for labor is not abated by a subsequent proceeding in rem to enforce a lien; 4 Ill. 201. See 1 B. Monr. 257. A suit in trespass is temporarily barred by a previous proceeding in rem to enforce a forfeiture under laws of U. S.; 3 Wheat. 314.

The prior action must have been in a domestic court; 3 Atk. 589; 4 Ves. Ch. 357; 1 S. & S. 491; 9 Johns. 221; 12 id. 9; 2 Curt. C. C. 559; 22 Conn. 485; 8 Tex. 351; 13 Ill. 486; see 10 Pick. 470; 3 M'Cord, 338; 44 Penn. 326; 9 Dana, 422; but a foreign attachment against the same subject-matter may be shown; 5 Johns. 101; 9 id. 221; 7 Ala. N. S. 151; 1 Penn. 442; 5 Litt. 349; see 8 Mass. 456; 7 Vt. 124; 1 Hall, 137; and of the same character; 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 62; 10 Ala. N. S. 887; Story, Eq. Pl. 736; thus a suit at law is no bar to one in equity; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 428; unless there be concurrent jurisdiction; 22 Law Rep. 74; but the plaintiff may elect, and equity will enjoin him from proceeding at law if he elect to proceed in equity; Story, Eq. Pl. § 742; but he will not be required to elect in such case, unless the suit at law is for the same cause, and the remedy at law is co-extensive, and equally beneficial with the remedy in equity; 22 N. H. 29. A suit in the circuit court having jurisdiction will abate a suit in the state court, if in the same state; 12 Johns. 99; and so will a suit in a state court abate one in a U. S. circuit court; 4 McLean, 233; but not unless jurisdiction is shown; 1 Curt. C. C. 494; 3 McLean, 221; 3 Sumn. 165; and not unless the suit is pending for the same cause, and between the same parties, in the same state in which the circuit court is sitting; 93 U. S. 548; 4 Dill. 524.

The pendency of another suit for the same equitable relief, in another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, is a bar to a motion for an injunction; 27 Penn. 380; and such pendency may be pleaded in abatement of an action at common law for the same cause; 76 Penn. 481.

In general, the plea must be in abatement; 1 Grant, Cas. 359; 20 Ill. 637; 5 Wisc. 151; 3 McLean, 221; but in a penal action at the suit of a common informer, the priority of a former suit for the same penalty in the name of a third person may be pleaded in bar, because the party who first sued is entitled to the penalty; 1 Chitty, Pl. 443; 1 Penn. 442; 2 J. J. Marsh. 281.

It must be pleaded in abatement of the subsequent action in order of time; 1 Wheat. 215; 20 Ill. 637; 5 Wisc. 151; 1 Hempst. 708; 3 Gilm. 498; 17 Pick. 510; 19 id. 13; 21 Wend. 339.

It must show an action pending or judgment obtained at the time of the plea; 2 Dutch. 461; 11 Tex. 259; 1 Mich. 254; but it is sufficient to show it pending when the second suit was commenced; 5 Mass. 79; 1 id. 495; 2 N. H. 36; 3 Rawle, 320; for the rule where both suits are commenced at the same time, see 9 N. H. 545; 8 Conn. 71; 3 Wend. 258; 4 Halst. 58; 7 Vt. 124; and the plaintiff cannot avoid such a plea by discontinuing the first action subsequently to the plea; 1 Salk. 329; 2 Ld. Raym. 1014; 5 Mass. 174; 3 Dana, 157; contra; 1 Johns. Cas. 397; 26 Vt. 673; 15 Ga. 270; 62 Penn. 112. And a prior suit discontinued before plea pleaded in the subsequent one will not abate such suit; 13 B. Monr. 197; 7 Ala. N. S. 601. It may be pleaded in abatement of the action in the inferior court, and must aver appearance, or at least service of process; 1 Vern. 318. Suing out a writ is said to be sufficient at common law; 1 Hempst. 218; 7 Ala. N. S. 601. See LIS PENDENS.

It must be shown that the court entertaining the first suit has jurisdiction; 17 Ala. N. S. 430; 22 N. H. 21; 1 Curt. C. C. 494.

It must be proved by the defendant by record evidence; 1 Hempst. 213; 22 N. H. 21; 2 id. 361; 17 Ala. 469; 5 Mass. 174; 1 Cr. C. C. 288. It is said that if the first suit be so defective that no recovery can be had, it will not abate the second; 15 Ga. 270; 5 Tex. 127; 20 Conn. 510; 1 Root, Conn. 353; 21 Vt. 362; 3 Penn. 434; 8 Mass. 456. See 5 Blackf. 84.

A prior indictment pending does not abate a second for the same offence; 5 Ind. 533; 3 Cush. 279; Thach. Cr. Cas. 513. See 1 Hawks, 78.

When a defendant is arrested pending a former suit or action in which he was held to bail, he will not, in general, be held to bail if the second suit be for the same cause of action; Graham, Pr. 98; Troubat & H. Pr. 44; 4 Yeates, 206. Pendency of one attachment will abate a second in the same county; 15 Miss. 333.

But under special circumstances, in the discretion of the court, a second arrest will be allowed; 2 Miles, 99, 100, 141; 14 Johns. 347.

AUTREFOIS ACQUIT (Fr. formerly acquitted.)

In Criminal Pleading. A plea made by a defendannt indicted for a crime or misdemeanor, that he has formerly been tried and acquitted of the same offence.

To be a bar, the acquittal must have been on trial; 5 Rand. 669; 11 N. H. 156; 4 Blackf. 156; 6 Mo. 645; 5 Harr. Del. 488; 14 Tex. 260; see 1 Hayw. 241; 14 Ohio, 295; and by verdict of a jury on a valid indictment; 4 Bla. Com. 335; 1 Johns. 66; 1 Va. Cas. 312; 6 Ala. 341; 4 Mo. 376; 26 Penn. 513; 6 Md. 400. In Pennsylvania and some other states, the discharge of a jury, even in a capital case, before verdict, except in case of absolute necessity, will support the plea; 3 Rawle, 498; 80 No. C. 377; but the prisoner's consent to the discharge of a previous jury is a sufficient answer; 15 Penn. 468. In the United States courts and in many states, the separation of the jury when it takes place in the exercise of a sound discretion is no bar to a second trial; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 499.

There must be an acquittal of the offence charged in law and in fact; 1 Va. Cas. 188, 288; 5 Rand. 669; 13 Mass. 457; 2 id. 172; 29 Penn. 323; 6 Cal. 543; but an acquittal is conclusive; 6 Humphr. 410; 3 Cush. 212; 16 Conn. 54; 7 Ga. 422; 8 Blackf. 533; 3 Brev. 421; 6 Mo. 644; 7 Ark. 169; 1 Bail. 651; 2 Halst. 172; 11 Miss. 751; 3 Tex. 118; 1 Denio, 207. See 1 N. H. 257.

The court, however, must have been competent, having jurisdiction and the proceedings regular; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 438.

The constitution of the United States, Amend. art. 5, provides that no person shall be subject for the same offence to be put twice in jeopardy of life or limb. As to whether this means more than the common-law provision, see 5 How. 410; 9 Wheat. 579; 2 Gall. 364; 2 Sumn. 19; 2 McLean, 114; 4 Wash. C. C. 408; 9 Mass. 494; 2 Pick. 521; 2 Johns. Cas. 301; 18 Johns. 187; 5 Litt. 240; 1 Miss. 184; 4 Halst. 256. See 6 S. & R. 577; 1 Hayw. 241; 13 Yerg. 532; 16 Ala. 188; Whart. Crim. Pl. § 490.

Proceedings by state tribunals are no bar to court-martial instituted by the military authorities of the United States; 3 Opin. Atty.-Genl. 750; 6 id. 413; but a judgment of conviction by a military court, established by law in an insurgent state, is a bar to a subsequent prosecution by a state court for the same offence; 97 U. S. 509.

The plea must set out the former record, and show the identity of the offence and of the person by proper averments; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 36; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 462; 16 Ark. 568; 24 Conn. 57; 6 Dana, 295; 5 Rand. 669; 17 Pick. 400.

The true test by which the question, whether a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict is a sufficient bar in any particular case, may be tried is, whether the evidence necessary to support the second indictment would have been sufficient to procure a legal conviction upon the first; 2 Leach, 708; 1 B. & B. 473; 3 B. & C. 502; 2 Conn. 54; 12 Pick. 504; 13 La. Ann. 243. Thus, if a prisoner indicted for burglariously breaking and entering a house and stealing therein certain goods of A is acquitted, he cannot plead this acquittal in bar of a subsequent indictment for burglariously breaking and entering the same house and stealing other goods of B. Per Buller, J., 2 Leach, 718, 719.

The plea in the celebrated case of Regina v. Bird, 5 Cox, Cr. Cas. 12; Templ. & M. 438; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 224; is of peculiar value as a precedent. See Train & H. Prec. Ind. 481.

AUTREFOIS ATTAINT (Fr. formerly attainted). In Criminal Pleading. A plea that the defendant has been attainted for one felony, and cannot, therefore, be criminally prosecuted for another; 4 Bla. Com. 336; 12 Mod. 109; R. & R. 268. This is not a good plea in bar in the United States, or in England in modern law; 1 Bishop, Cr. L. § 692; 3 Chitty, Cr. L. 464; Stat. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, § 4. See Mart. & Y. 122; 10 Ala. 475; 1 Bay, 334.

AUTREFOIS CONVICT (Fr. formerly convicted). In Criminal Pleading. A plea made by a defendant indicted for a crime or misdemeanor, that he has formerly been tried and convicted of the same.

This plea is substantially the same in form as the plea of autrefois acquit, and is grounded on the same principle, viz.: that no man's life or liberty shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offence; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 435; 1 Bishop, Cr. Law, §§ 651–680; 1 Green, N. J. 362; 1 McLean, 429; 7 Ala. 610; 2 Swan, 493; 43 Wisc. 395.

A plea of autrefois convict, which shows that the judgment on the former indictment has been reversed for error in the judgment, is not a good bar to another indictment for the same offence; Cooley's Const. Lim. 326–328; otherwise, if the reversal were not for insufficiency in the indictment nor for error at the trial, but for matter subsequent, and dehors both the conviction and the judgment; 25 N. Y. 407; 26 id. 167. A prior conviction by judgment before a justice of the peace, and a performance of the sentence pursuant to the judgment, constitute a bar to an indictment for the same offence, although the complaint on which the justice proceeded was so defective that his judgment might have been reversed for error; 3 Metc. Mass. 328; 8 id. 532. See AUTREFOIS ACQUIT.

AUXILIUM (Lat.). An aid; tribute or services paid by the tenant to his lord. Auxilium ad filium militem faciendum, vel ad filiam maritandam. (An aid for making the lord's son a knight, or for marrying his daughter.) Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 62.

AUXILIUM CURIÆ. An order of the court summoning one party, at the suit and request of another, to appear and warrant something. Kennett, Par. Ant. 477.

AUXILIUM REGIS. A subsidy paid to the king. Spelman.

AUXILIUM VICE COMITI. An ancient duty paid to sheriffs. Cowel; Whishaw.

AVAIL OF MARRIAGE. In Scotch Law. A certain sum due by the heir of a deceased ward vassal, when the heir became of marriageable age. Erskine, Inst. l. 2, t. 5, § 18.

AVAL. In Canadian Law. An act of suretyship or guarantee on a promissory note. 1 Low. C. 221; 9 id. 369.

AVARIA, AVARIE. Average; the loss and damage suffered in the course of a navigation. Pothier, Marit. Louage, 105.

AVENTURE. A mischance causing the death of a man, as by drowning, or being killed suddenly without felony. Coke, Litt. 391; Whishaw.

AVER. To assert. See AVERMENT.

To make or prove true; to verify.

The defendant will offer to aver. Cowel; Coke, Litt. 362 b.

Cattle of any kind. Cowel, Averia; Kelham.

Aver et tenir. To have and to hold.

Aver corn. A rent reserved to religious houses, to be paid in corn. Corn drawn by the tenant's cattle. Cowel.

Aver-land. Land ploughed by the tenant for the proper use of the lord of the soil. Blount.

Aver-penny. Money paid to the king's averages to be free therefrom. Termes de la Ley.

Aver-silver. A rent formerly so called. Cowel.

AVERAGE. In Insurance. Is general, particular, or petty.

GENERAL AVERAGE (also called gross) consists of expense purposely incurred, sacrifice made, or damage sustained for the common safety of the vessel, freight, and cargo, or the two of them, at risk, and is to be contributed for by the several interests in the proportion of their respective values exposed to the common danger, and ultimately surviving, including the amount of expense, sacrifice, or damage so incurred in the contributory value; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1269 et seq.; and see Code de Com. tit. xi.; Aluzet, Trait. des Av. cxx.; 2 Curt. C. C. 59; 9 Cush. 415; 73 Penn. 98; 9 Wall. 203; Bailey, Gen. Av.; 2 Parsons, Mar. Law, ch. xi.; Stevens, Av.; Benecke, Av.; Pothier, Av.; Lex Rhodia, Dig. 14. 2. 1.

Indemnity for general average loss is usually stipulated for in policies against the risks in navigation, subject, however, to divers modifications and conditions; 2 Phillips, Ins. §§ 1275, 1279, 1408, 1409. Under maritime policies in the ordinary form, underwriters are liable for the contributions made by the insured subject for loss by jettison of cargo, sacrifice of cables, anchors, sails, spars, and boats, expense of temporary repairs, voluntary stranding, compromise with pirates, delay for the purpose of refitting; 2 Phillips, Ins. c. xv. sect. ii.; 1 Pars. Ship. & Adm. 351.

Average particular (also called partial loss) is a loss on the ship, cargo, or freight, to be borne by the owner of the subject on which it happens, and is so called in distinction from general average; and, if not total, it is also called a partial loss; 2 Phillips, Ins. c. xvi.; Stevens, pt. 1, c. 2; Arnould, Mar. Ins. 953; Code de Com. l. 2, t. 11, a. 403; Pothier, Ass. 115; Benecke & S. Av. Phill. ed. 341.

It is insured against in marine policies in the usual forms on ship, cargo, or freight, when the action of peril is extraordinary, and the damage is not mere wear or tear; and, on the ship, covers loss by sails split or blown away, masts sprung, cables parted, spars carried away, planks started, change of shape by strain, loss of boat, breaking of sheathing or upper works or timbers, damage by lightning or fire, by collision or stranding, or in defence against pirates or enemies, or by hostile or piratical plunder; 2 Phillips, Ins. c. xvi.; 21 Pick. 456; 11 id. 90; 7 id. 159; 7 C. & P. 597; 3 id. 323; 1 Conn. 239; 9 Mart. 276; 18 La. 77; 5 Ohio, 306; 6 id. 70, 456; 3 Cranch, 218; 1 Cow. 265; 4 id. 222; 5 id. 63; 4 Wend. 255; 11 Johns. 315.

Particular average on freight may be by loss of the ship, or the cargo, so that full freight cannot be earned; but not if the goods, though damaged, could have been carried on to the port of destination; 2 Phillips, Ins. c. xvi. sect. iii.; 9 id. 21; 15 Mass. 341; 23 Pick. 405; 2 McLean, 423; 1 Story, 342; 2 Gill, 410; 12 Johns. 107; 18 id. 205, 208; 1 Binn. 547.

Particular average on goods is usually adjusted at the port of delivery on the basis of the value at which they are insured, viz.: the value at the place of shipment, unless it is otherwise stipulated in the policy; 2 Phillips, Ins. §§ 145, 146; 2 Wash. C. C. 136; 2 Burr. 1167; 2 East, 58; 12 id. 639; 3 B. & P. 308; 3 Johns. Ch. 217; 4 Wend. 45; 1 Caines, 543; 1 Hall, 619; 20 Penn. 312; 36 E. L. & Eq. 198. See SALVAGE; LOSS.

A particular average on profits is, by the English custom, adjusted upon the basis of the profits which would have been realized at the port of destination. In the United States the adjustment is usually at the same rate as on the goods the profits on which are the subject of the insurance; 2 Phillips, Ins. §§ 1773, 1774; 2 Johns. Cas. 36; 3 Day, 108; 1 Johns. 433; 3 Pet. 222; 1 Sumn. 451; 8 Miss. 63; 1 S. & R. 115; 6 R. I. 47.

PETTY AVERAGE consists of small charges which were formerly assessed upon the cargo, viz.: pilotage, towage, light-money, beaconage, anchorage, bridge-toll, quarantine, pier-money. Le Guidon, c. 5, a. 13; Weyt. de A. 3, 4; Weskett, art. Petty Av.; 2 Phillips, Ins. § 1269, n. 1.

AVERIA (Lat.). Cattle; working cattle. Averia carucæ (draft-cattle) are exempt from distress; 3 Bla. Com. 9; 4 Term, 566.

AVERIIS CAPTIS IN WITHERNAM. In English Law. A writ which lies in favor of a man whose cattle have been unlawfully taken by another, and driven out of the country where they were taken, so that they cannot be replevied.

It issues against the wrong-doer to take his cattle for the plaintiff's use. Reg. Brev. 82.

AVERMENT. In Pleading. A positive statement of facts, as opposed to an argumentative or inferential one. Cowp. 683; Bacon, Abr. Pleas, B.

Averments were formerly said to be general and particular; but only particular averments are found in modern pleading. 1 Chitty, Pl. 277.

Particular averments are the assertions of particular facts.

There must be an averment of every substantive material fact on which the party relies, so that it may be replied to by the opposite party.

Negative averments are those in which a negative is asserted.

Generally, under the rules of pleading, the party asserting the affirmative must prove it; but an averment of illegitimacy, 2 Selwyn, Nisi P. 709, or criminal neglect of duty, must be proven; 2 Gall. 498; 19 Johns. 345; 1 Mass. 54; 10 East, 211; 3 Campb. 10; 3 B. & P. 302; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 80; 8 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3089.

Immaterial and impertinent averments (which are synonymous, 5 D. and R. 209) are those which need not be made, and, if made, need not be proved. The allegation of deceit in the seller of goods in action on the warranty is such an averment; 2 East, 446; 17 Johns. 92.

Unnecessary averments are statements of matters which need not be alleged, but which, if alleged, must be proved. Carth. 200.

Averments must contain not only matter, but form. General averments are always of the same form. The most common form of making particular averments is in express and direct words, for example: And the party avers, or in fact saith, or although, or because, or with this that, or being, etc. But they need not be in these words; for any words which necessarily imply the matter intended to be averred are sufficient.

See, in general, 3 Viner, Abr. 357; Bacon, Abr. Pleas, B, 4; Comyns, Dig. Pleader, C, 50, C, 67, 68, 69, 70; 1 Wms. Saund. 235 a, n. 8; 3 id. 352, n. 3; 1 Chitty, Pl. 308; Archbold, Civ. Pl. 163; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2835–40.

AVERSIO (Lat.). An averting; a turning away. A sale in gross or in bulk.

Letting a house altogether, instead of in chambers; 4 Kent, 517.

Aversio periculi. A turning away of peril. Used of a contract of insurance; 3 Kent, 263.

AVERUM (Lat.). Goods; property. A beast of burden. Spelman, Gloss.

AVET. In Scotch Law. To abet or assist. Tomlin, Dict.

AVIATICUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A grandson.

AVIZANDUM. In Scotch Law. To make avizandum with a process is to take it from the public court to the private consideration of the judge. Bell, Dict.

AVOIDANCE. A making void, useless, or empty

In Ecclesiastical Law. It exists when a benefice becomes vacant for want of an incumbent.

In Pleading. Repelling or excluding the conclusions or implications arising from the admission of the truth of the allegations of the opposite party. See CONFESSION and AVOIDANCE.

AVOIRDUPOIS. The name of a weight.

This kind of weight is so named in distinction from the Troy weight. One pound avoirdupois contains seven thousand grains Troy; that is, fourteen ounces, eleven pennyweights, and sixteen grains Troy; a pound avoirdupois contains sixteen ounces; and an ounce sixteen drachms. Thirty-two cubic feet of pure spring-water, at the temperature of fifty-six degrees of Fahrenheit's thermometer, make a ton of two thousand pounds avoirdupois, or two thousand two hundred and forty pounds net weight. Dane, Abr. c. 211, art. 12, § 6. The avoirdupois ounce is less than the Troy ounce in the proportion of 72 to 79; though the pound is greater. Encyc. Amer. Avoirdupois. For the derivation of this phrase, see Barrington, Stat. 206. See the Report of Secretary of State of the United States to the Senate, February 22, 1821, pp. 44, 72, 76, 79, 81, 87, for a learned exposition of the whole subject.

AVOUCHER. See VOUCHER.

AVOW. In Practice. To acknowledge the commission of an act and claim that it was done with right; 3 Bla. Com. 150.

To make an avowry. For example, when replevin is brought for a thing distrained, and the party taking claims that he had a right to make the distress, he is said to avow. See Fleta, l. 1, c. 4, § 4; Cunningham, Dict.; AVOWRY; JUSTIFICATION.

AVOWANT. One who makes an avowry.

AVOWEE. In Ecclesiastical Law. An advocate of a church benefice.

AVOWRY. In Pleading. The answer of the defendant in an action of replevin brought to recover property taken in distress, in which he acknowledges the taking, and, setting forth the cause thereof, claims a right in himself or his wife to do so. Lawes, Pl. 35; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3571.

A justification is made where the defendant shows that the plaintiff had no property by showing either that it was the defendant's or some third person's, or where he shows that he took it by a right which was sufficient at the time of taking though not subsisting at the time of answer. The avowry admits the property to have been the plaintiff's, and shows a right which had then accrued, and still subsists, to make such caption. See Gilbert, Distr. 176–178; 2 W. Jones, 25.

An avowry is sometimes said to be in the nature of an action or of a declaration, so that privity of estate is necessary; Coke, Litt. 320 a; 1 S. & R. 170. There is no general issue upon an avowry: and it cannot be traversed cumulatively; 5 S. & R. 377. Alienation cannot be replied to it without notice; for the tenure is deemed to exist for the purposes of an avowry till notice be given of the alienation; Hamm. Part. 131.

The object of an avowry is to secure the return of the property, that it may remain as a pledge; see 2 W. Jones, 25; and to this extent it makes the defendant a plaintiff. It may be made for rents, services, tolls; 3 Dev. 478; for cattle taken, damage feasant, and for heriots, and for such rights wherever they exist. See Gilbert, Distr. 176 et seq.; 1 Chitty, Plead. 436; Comyns, Dig. Pleader, 3 K.

AVOWTHRIR. In English Law. An adulterer with whom a married woman continues in adultery. Termes de la Ley.

AVOWTRY. In English Law. The crime of adultery.

AVULSION (Lat. avellere, to tear away). The removal of a considerable quantity of soil from the land of one man, and its deposit upon or annexation to the land of another, suddenly and by the perceptible action of water; 2 Washb. R. P. 452.

In such case the property belongs to the first owner. Bracton, 221; Hargrave, Tract. de jure mar.; Schultes, Aq. Rights, 115–138.

AVUNCULUS. In Civil Law. A mother's brother; 2 Bla. Com. 230.

AWAIT. To lay in wait; to waylay.

AWARD (Law Latin, awarda, awardum, Old French, agarda, from à garder, to keep, preserve, to be guarded, or kept: so called because it is imposed on the parties to be observed or kept by them. Spelman, Gloss.).

The judgment or decision of arbitrators, or referees, on a matter submitted to them.

The writing containing such judgment; Cowel; Termes de la Ley; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 137; Billings, Aw. 119; Watson, Arb. 174; Russell, Arb. 234; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2402 et seq.

Requisites of. To be conclusive, the award should be consonant with and follow the submission, and affect only the parties to the submission; otherwise, it is an assumption of power, and not binding; Lutw. 530 (Onyons v. Cheese); Strange, 903; 1 Ch. Cas. 186; Rep. temp. Finch, 141; 24 E. L. & Eq. 346; 8 Beav. 361; 5 B. & Ad. 295; 13 Johns. 27, 268; 11 id. 133; 17 Vt. 9; 3 N. It must be final and certain; 1 Burr. 275; 5 Ad. & E. 147; 2 S. & S. 130; 2 Vern. 514; 2 Bulstr. 260; 3 S. & R. 340; 2 Penn. 206: 1 id. 395; 9 Johns. 43; 13 id. 187; 22 Wend. 125; 23 Barb. 187; 4 Cush. 317, 396; 1 Gray, 418; 13 Vt. 53; 40 Me. 194; 2 Green, N. An award reserving the determination of future disputes; 6 Md. 135; an award directing a bond without naming a penalty; 5 Coke, 77; Rolle, Abr. Arbitration, 2, 4; an award that one shall give security for the performance of some act or payment of money, without specifying the kind of security, are invalid; Viner, Abr. Arbit. 2, 12; Bacon, Abr. Arbit. E, 11; and cases above.

It must be possible to be performed, and must not direct any thing to be done which is contrary to law; 1 Ch. Cas. 87; 5 Taunt. 454; 12 Mod. 585; 2 B. & Ald. 528; Kirb. 253; 1 Dall. 364; 4 id. 298; 4 Gill & J. 298. It will be void if it direct a party to pay a sum of money at a day past, or direct him to commit a trespass, felony, or an act which would subject him to an action; 2 Chitt. 594; 1 M. & W. 572; or if it be of things nugatory and offering no advantage to either of the parties; 6 J. B. Moore, 713.

It must be without palpable or apparent mistake; 2 Gall. 61; 3 B. & P. 371; 1 Dall. 487; 6 Metc. 131. For if the arbitrator acknowledges that he made a mistake, or if an error (in computation, for instance) is apparent on the face of the award, it will not be good; 4 Zabr. 647; 2 Stockt. 45; 2 Dutch. 130; 32 N. H. 289; 11 Cush. 549; 18 Barb. 344; 2 Johns. Ch. 399; 27 Vt. 241; 8 Md. 208; 4 Cal. 345; 5 id. 430; for, although an arbitrator may decide contrary to law, yet if the award attempts to follow the law, but fails to do so from the mistake of the arbitrator, it will be void; 3 Md. 359; 15 Ill. 421; 26 Vt. 416, 630; 4 N. J. 647; 17 How. 344.

An award may be in part good and in part void, in which case it will be enforced so far as valid, if the good part is separable from the bad; 10 Mod. 204; 12 id. 587; Cro. Jac. 664; 2 Leon. 304; 3 Lev. 413; Godb. 164; 8 Taunt. 697; 1 Wend. 326; 5 Cow. 197; 13 Johns. 264; 2 Caines, 235; 1 Me. 300; 13 id. 173; 18 id. 255; 42 id. 83; 7 Mhss. 399; 19 Pick. 300; 11 Cush. 37; 6 Green, N. J. 247; 1 Dutch. 281; 1 Rand. 449; 1 Hen. & M. 67; Hard. 318; 5 Dana, 492; 26 Vt. 345; 2 Swan, 213; 2 Cal. 74; 4 Ind. 248; 6 Harr. & J. 10; 5 Wheat. 394.

As to form, the award should, in general, follow the terms of the submission, which frequently provides the time and manner of making and publishing the award. It may be by parol (oral or written), or by deed; 3 Bulstr. 311; 20 Vt. 189. It should be signed by all the arbitrators in the presence of each other. See ARBITRATOR.

An award will be sustained by a liberal construction, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; 2 N. H. 126; 2 Pick. 534; 4 Wisc. 181; 8 Md. 208; 8 Ind. 310; 17 Ill. 477; 29 Penn. 251; Reed, Aw. 170.

Effect of. An award is a final and conclusive judgment between the parties on all the matters referred by the submission. It transfers property as much as the verdict of a jury, and will prevent the operation of the statute of limitations; 3 Bla. Com. 16; 1 Freem. Ch. 410; 4 Ohio, 310; 5 Cow. 383; 15 S. & R. 166; 1 Cam. & N. 93. A parol award following a parol submission will have the same effect as an agreement of the same form directly between the parties; 37 Me. 72; 15 Wend. 90; 27 Vt. 241; 16 Ill. 34; 5 Ind. 220; 1 Ala. 278; 6 Litt. 264; 2 Coxe, 369; 7 Cranch, 171.

The right of real property cannot thus pass by mere award; but no doubt an arbitrator may award a conveyance or release of land and require deeds, and it will be a breach of agreement and arbitration bond to refuse compliance; and a court of equity will sometimes enforce this specifically; 1 Ld. Raym. 115; 3 East, 15; 6 Pick. 148; 4 Dall. 120; 16 Vt. 450, 592; 15 Johns. 197; 5 Wend. 268; 2 Caines, 320; 4 Rawle, 411, 430; 7 Watts, 311; 11 Conn. 240; 18 Me. 251; 28 Ala. N. s. 475.

Arbitrament and award may be regularly pleaded at common law or equity to an action concerning the same subject-matter, and will bar the action; Watson, Arb. 256; 12 N.Y. 9; 41 Me. 355. To an action on the award at common law, in general, nothing can be pleaded dehors the award; not even fraud; 23 Barb. 187; 28 Vt. 81, 776; contra, 9 Cush. 560. Where an action has been referred under rule of court and the reference fails, the action proceeds.

Enforcement of. An award may be enforced by an action at law, which is the only remedy for disobedience when the submission is not made a rule of court, and no statute provides a special mode of enforcement; 6 Ves. 815; 17 id. 232; 19 id. 431; 1 Swanst. 40; 2 Chitt. 316; 5 East, 266; 5 B. & Ald. 507; 4 B. & C. 103; 1 D. & R. 106; 3 C. B. 745. Assumpsit lies when the submission is not under seal; 33 N. H. 27; and debt on an award of money and on an arbitration bond; 18 Ill. 437; covenant where the submission is by deed for breach of any part of the award, and case for the non-performance of the duty awarded. Equity will enforce specific performance when all remedy fails at common law; Comyns, Dig. Chancery, 2 K; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1458; 2 Hare, 198; 4 Johns. Ch. 405; 9 id. 405; 4 Ill. 453; 3 P. Wms. 137; 1 Atk. 62; 2 Vern. 24; 1 Brown, P. C. 411. But see 1 T. & R. 187; 5 Ves. 846.

An award under a rule of court may be enforced by the court issuing execution upon it as if it were a verdict of a jury, or by attachment for contempt; 7 East, 607; 1 Stra. 593. By the various state statutes regulating arbitrations, awards, where submission is made before a magistrate, may be enforced and judgment rendered thereon.

Amendment and setting aside. A court has no power to alter or amend an award; 1 Dutch. 150; 5 Cal. 179; 12 N. Y. 9; 41 Me. 355; but may recommit to the referee in some cases; 11 Tex. 18; 39 Me. 105; 26 Vt. 361. See the statutes of the different states, and stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, § 77; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125.

An award will not be disturbed except for very cogent reasons. It will be set aside for misconduct, corruption, or irregularity of the arbitrator, which has or may have injured one of the parties; 2 Eng. L. & Eq. 184; 5 B. & Ad. 488; 1 Hill & D. 109; 13 Gratt. 535; 14 Tex. 56; 28 Penn. 514; 29 Vt. 72; for error in fact, or in attempting to follow the law, apparent on the face of the award; see supra; ARBITRATOR; for uncertainty or inconsistency; for an exceeding his authority by the arbitrator; 22 Pick. 417; 4 Denio, 191; when it is not final and conclusive, without reserve; when it is a nullity; when a party or witness has been at fault, or has made a mistake; or when the arbitrator acknowledges that he has made a mistake or error in his decision.

Equity has jurisdiction to set aside an award, on any of the enumerated grounds, when the submission cannot be made a rule of a common-law court.

In general, in awards under statutory provisions, as well as in those under rules of court, questions of law may be reserved for the opinion of the court, and facts and evidence reported for their opinion and decision.

AWAY-GOING CROP. A crop sown before the expiration of a tenancy, which cannot ripen until after its expiration, to which, however, the tenant is entitled. Broom, Max. 306. See EMBLEMENTS.

AWM. An ancient measure used in measuring Rhenish wines. Termes de la Ley. Its value varied in the different cities. Spelled also Aume. Cowel.

AYANT CAUSE. In French Law. This term, which is used in Louisiana, signifies one to whom a right has been assigned, either by will, gift, sale, exchange, or the like; an assignee. An ayant cause differs from an heir who acquires the right by inheritance. 8 Toullier, n. 245.

BACK-BOND. A bond of indemnification given to a surety.

In Scotch Law. A declaration of trust; a defeasance; a bond given by one who is apparently absolute owner, so as to reduce his right to that of a trustee or holder of a bond and disposition in security. Paterson, Comp.

BACK-WATER. That water in a stream which, in consequence of some obstruction below, is detained or checked in its course, or re-flows.

The term is usually employed to designate the water which is turned back, by a dam erected in the stream below, upon the wheel of a mill above, so as to retard its revolution.

Every riparian proprietor is entitled to the benefit of the water in its natural state. Another such proprietor has no right to alter the level of the water, either where it enters or where it leaves his property. If he claims either to throw the water back above, or to diminish the quantity which is to descend below, he must, in order to maintain his claim, either prove an actual grant or license from the proprietors affected by his operations, or an uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years. If he cannot maintain his claim in either of these ways, he is liable to an action on the case for damages in favor of the injured party, or to a suit in equity for an injunction to restrain his unlawful use of the water; 1 Sim. & S. 190, 203; 1 B. & Ad. 258, 874; 9 Coke, 59; 1 Wils. 178; 6 East, 203; 5 Gray, 460; 2 id. 137; 7 Pick. 198; 11 Metc. Mass. 517; 25 Penn. 519; 1 Rawle, 218; 7 W. & S. 9; 4 Day, 244; 24 Conn. 15; 7 Cow. 266; 2 Johns. An action on the case to recover damages for flowing land is local, and must, therefore, be brought in the county where the land lies; 25 N. H. 525; 23 Wend. N. Y. 484; 2 East, 497.

In Massachusetts and some other of the states, acts have been passed giving to the owners of mills the right to flow the adjoining lands, if necessary to the working of their mills, subject only to such damages as shall be ascertained by the particular process prescribed, which process is substituted for all other judicial remedies; Angell, Wat. Cour. c. ix.; 12 Pick. 467; 23 id. 216; 4 Cush. 245; 4 Gray, 581; 5 Ired. 333; 11 Ala. 472; 39 Me. 246; 42 id. 150; 8 Wisc. 603. These statutes, however, confer no authority to flow back upon existing mills; 22 Pick. 312; 23 id. 216. See DAMAGES; INUNDATION; WATERCOURSE.

BACKADATION. A consideration given to keep back the delivery of stock when the price is lower for time than for ready money. Wharton, Dict. 2d Lond. ed.; Lewis, Stocks, etc. Sometimes called Backwardation.

BACKBEREND (Sax.). Bearing upon the back or about the person.

Applied to a thief taken with the stolen property in his immediate possession. Bracton, l. 3, tr. 2, c. 32. Used with handhabend, having in the hand.

BACKING. Indorsement. Indorsement by a magistrate.

Backing a warrant becomes necessary when it is desired to serve it in a county other than that in which it was first issued. In such a case the indorsement of a magistrate of the new county authorizes its service there as fully as if first issued in that county. The custom prevails in England, Scotland, and some of the United States. See 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 590, § 5; 2 Rob. Mag. Assist. 572.

BACKSIDE. A yard at the back part of or behind a house, and belonging thereto.

The term was formerly much used both in conveyances and in pleading, but is now of infrequent occurrence except in conveyances which repeat an ancient description. Chitty, Pract. 177; 2 Ld. Raym. 1399.

BACKWARDATION. See BACKADATION.

BADGE. A mark or sign worn by some persons, or placed upon certain things, for the purpose of designation.

Some public officers, as watchmen, policemen, and the like, are required to wear badges that they may be readily known. It is used figuratively when we say, possession of personal property by the seller is a badge of fraud.

BADGE OF FRAUD. A term used relatively to the law of fraudulent conveyances made to hinder and defraud creditors. It is defined as a fact tending to throw suspicion upon a transaction, and calling for an explanation. Bump, Fr. Conv. 31.

When such a fact appears, its effect is to require more persuasive proof of the payment of the consideration and the good faith of the parties than would ordinarily be required; 11 Ala. 207. It is not fraud of itself, but evidence to establish a fraudulent intent; 5 Fla. 305; 13 Wis. 495.

The following have been held to be badges of fraud: indebtedness on the part of the grantor; 23 How. 477; 29 Iowa, 161; 7 Cow. 301;

25 Penn. 509; 26 Ark. 20; the expectation of a suit; 17 Iowa, 498; 42 Tex. 116; 28 Md. 565; 62 Penn. 62; 24 Wis. 410; false recitals in the deed; 18 Vt. 460; 26 N. Y. 378; inadequacy of consideration; 54 Ill. 269; 14 Johns. 493; 27 Miss. 167; 10 N. J. Eq. 323; 24 Ind. 228; 52 N. Y. 274; 23 Tex. 77; 65 Penn. 456; 70 Me. 258; 23 N. J. Eq. 14; 59 Mo. 537; 8 Wall. 362; 34 Miss. 576; 12 Wend. 41; false statement of the consideration; 7 Cr. 34; 26 N. Y. 378; 64 N. C. 374; 8 Dana, 103; secrecy; 4 Barb. 571; 5 Fla. 9; 20 How. 448; 42 Mo. 551; 21 Barb. 85; concealment of the deed, not recording it and leaving it in the hands of the grantor; 14 Johns. 493; 44 Penn. 43; 12 Blatch. 256; 17 B. Monr. 779; 30 Mich.; a secret trust between the grantor and grantee; 3 Coke, 80; 7 Watts, 434; 16 N. J. Eq. 299; retention of possession of land by the grantor; 7 Cow. 301; 23 How. 477; 42 Mo. 551; 31 Me. 93; 6 Wall. 78; 17 Cal. 327; 51 Ga. 18; and in general anything in the transaction out of the usual course of such transactions; 13 La. An. 595; Bump, Fr. Conv. 50.

BAGGAGE. Such articles of apparel, ornament, etc., as are in daily use by travellers, for convenience, comfort, or recreation. "It includes whatever the passenger takes with him for his personal use or convenience according to the habits or wants of the particular class to which he belongs, either with reference to the immediate necessities or ultimate purpose of the journey;" per Cockburn, C. J., in L. R. 6 Q. B. 612.

It was formerly held that carriers are not liable, as common carriers, for baggage unless a distinct price was paid for its carriage; 1 Salk. 2821; and see 3 H. & C. 135; but the rule is now otherwise in England and America; L. R. 6 Q. B. 612; 19 Wend. 281; 26 id. 591; 19 Ill. 556; 6 Ohio, 358.

This term has been held to include jewelry carried as baggage, and which formed a part of female attire, the plaintiff being on a journey with his family; 4 Bingh. 218; 3 Penn. 451. A watch, carried in one's trunk, is proper baggage; 10 Ohio, 145; 1 Newb. 494; but see 9 Humphr. 621; 18 Mass. 275; the surgical instruments of an army surgeon; 12 Wall. 262; valuable laces carried by a foreign woman of rank, for which the jury found in $10,000 damages; 100 U. S. 24; one revolver, but not two; 56 Ill. 212; an opera glass; 33 Ind. 379; bedding of a poor man moving with his family; 35 Vt. 604. But not money, even to a reasonable amount; 6 Hill, N. Y. 586; 22 Ill. 278; contra, 98 Mass. 371; nor samples of merchandise; 13 C. B. (N. S.) 818; 98 Mass. 83; 6 Hill, N. Y. 586; nor jewelry bought for presents; 4 Bosw. 225; nor a feather bed not intended for use on the journey; 106 Mass. 146; nor a lawyer's papers and bank notes to be used by him in conducting a case; 19 C. B. (N. S.) 321. Books for reading or amusement; 6 Ind. 242; a harness-maker's tools, valued at ten dollars; and a rifle; 10 How. Pr. 330; 14 Penn. 129; are considered baggage.

But if a carrier know that merchandise is included among baggage, and do not object, he is liable to the same extent as for other goods taken in the due course of his business; 3 E. D. Smith, 571; 8 Exch. 30; but he must have actual knowledge; 13 C. B. (N. S.) 818; L. R. 6 Q. B. 612; 73 Ill. 348; 41 Miss. 671; 52 N. Y. 429. And see COMMON CARRIERS.

BAIL (Fr. bailler, to deliver).

In Practice. Those persons who become sureties for the appearance of the defendant in court.

To deliver the defendant to persons who, in the manner prescribed by law, become securities for his appearance in court.

To become bail for another.

The word is used both as a substantive and a verb, though more frequently as a substantive, and in civil cases, at least, in the first sense given above. In its more ancient signification, the word includes the delivery of property, real or personal, by one person to another. Bail in actions was first introduced in favor of defendants, to mitigate the hardships imposed upon them while in the custody of the sheriff under arrest, the security thus offered standing to the sheriff in the place of the body of the defendant. Taking bail was made compulsory upon the sheriffs by the statute 23 Hen. VI. c. 9, and the privilege of the defendant was rendered more valuable and secure by successive statutes, until by statute 12 Geo. I. c. 29, made perpetual by 21 Geo. II. c. 3, and 19 Geo. III. c. 70, it was provided that arrests should not be made unless the plaintiff make affidavit as to the amount due, and this amount be endorsed on the writ; and for this sum and no more the sheriff might require bail.

In the King's Bench, bail above and below were both exacted as a condition of releasing the defendant from the custody in which he was held from the time of his arrest till his final discharge in the suit. In the Common Bench, however, the origin of bail above seems to have been different, as the capias on which bail might be demanded was of effect only to bring the defendant to court, and after appearance he was theoretically in attendance, but not in custody. The failure to file such bail as the emergency requires, although no arrest may have been made, is, in general, equivalent to a default.

In some of the states the defendant when arrested gives bail by bond to the sheriff, conditioned to appear and answer to the plaintiff and abide the judgment and not to avoid, which thus answers the purpose of bail above and below; 1 Me. 336; 1 N. H. 172; 2 id. 360; 2 Mass. 494; 13 id. 94; 2 N. & M'C. 569; 2 Hill, So. C. 336; 4 Dev. 40; 18 Ga. 314. And see 2 South. 811. In criminal law the term is used frequently in the second sense given, and is allowed except in cases where the defendant is charged with the commission of the more heinous crimes.

Bail above. Sureties who bind themselves either to satisfy the plaintiff his debt and costs, or to surrender the defendant into custody, provided judgment be against him in the action and he fail to do so; Sellon, Pract. 137.

Bail to the action. Bail above.

Bail below. Sureties who bind themselves to the sheriff to secure the defendant's appearance, or his putting in bail to the action on the return-day of the writ. It may be demanded by the sheriff whenever he has arrested a defendant on a bailable process, as a prerequisite to releasing the defendant.

Civil bail. That taken in civil actions.

Common bail. Fictitious sureties formally entered in the proper office of the court.

It is a kind of bail above, similar in form to special bail, but having fictitious persons, John Doe and Richard Roe, as sureties. Filing common bail is tantamount to entering an appearance.

Special bail. Responsible sureties who undertake as bail above.

Requisites of. A person to become bail must, in England, be a freeholder or housekeeper; 2 Chitt. Bail, 96; 5 Taunt. 174; Lofft, 148; must be subject to process of the court, and not privileged from arrest either temporarily or permanently; 4 Taunt. 249; 1 D. & R. 127; 15 Johns. 535; 20 id. 129; Kirb. 209; see 3 Rich. So. C. 49; must be competent to enter into a contract, excluding infants, married women, etc.; must be able to pay the amount for which he becomes responsible, but the property may be real or personal if held in his own right; 2 Chitt. Bail, 97; 11 Price, 158; and liable to ordinary legal process; 4 Burr. 2526. And see 1 Chitt. 286, n.

Persons not excepted to as appearance bail cannot be objected to as bail above; 1 Hen. & M. 22; and bail, if of sufficient ability, should not be refused on account of the personal character or opinions of the party proposed; 4 Q. B. 468; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 236.

When it may be given or required. In civil actions the defendant may give bail in all cases where he has been arrested; 7 Johns. 137; and bail below, even, may be demanded in some cases where no arrest is made; 1 Harr. & J. 538; 2 M'Cord, 250.

Bail above is required under some restrictions in many of the states in all actions for considerable amounts; 2 M'Cord, 385; either common; 2 Yeates, 429; 1 Spenc. 494; 13 Ill. 551; which may be filed by the plaintiff, and judgment taken by default against the defendant if he neglects to file proper bail, after a certain period; 8 Johns. 359; 4 Cow. 61; 2 South. 684; 4 Wash. C. C. 127; or special, which is to be filed of course in some species of action and may be demanded in others; 1 M'Cord, 472; 17 Mass. 176; 1 Yeates, 280; 13 Johns. 305, 425; 1 Wend. 303; 4 H. & M'H. 155; 2 Brev. 218; but in many cases only upon special cause shown; Coxe, 277; 3 Halst. 311; 2 Caines, 47; 1 Browne, Penn. 297; 3 Binn. 283; 4 Rand. 152.

The existence of a debt and the amount due; 8 S. & R. 61; 2 Whart. 499; 1 Mo. 346; 1 Leigh, 476; 1 Penning. 46; 1 Blackf. 112; 2 Johns. Cas. 105; 3 Ga. 128; 10 Mo. 273; in an action for debt, and, in some forms of action, other circumstances must be shown by affidavit to prevent a discharge on common bail; 5 Halst. 331; 7 Cow. 518; 1 Barb. 247; 1 Blackf. 112; 8 Leigh, 411; 16 Ohio, 304; 13 Ga. 357; see 1 Pet. C. C. 352; 2 Wash. C. C. 198; 4 id. 325. It is a general rule that a defendant who has been once held to bail in a civil case cannot be held a second time for the same cause of action; Tidd. Pr. 184; 6 Ves. Ch. 594; 4 Yeates, 206; 2 Rich. So. C. 336; but this rule does not apply where the second holding is in another state; 14 Johns. 346; 2 Cow. 626; 3 N. H. 43; 2 Dall. C. C. 330; 4 M'Cord, 485. See 1 Halst. 131. And see also 1 Dall. 188; 2 Wash. C. C. 157; 1 Pet. C. C. 404; 3 Conn. 523; 3 Gill & J. 54; as to the effect of a discharge in insolvency.

In criminal cases the defendant may in general claim to be set at liberty upon giving bail, except when charged with the commission of a capital offence; 4 Bla. Com. 297; 6 Mo. 640; 1 M'Mull. 456; 3 Strobh. 272; 18 Ala. 390; 9 Dana, 38; 9 Ark. 222; and even in capital offences a defendant may be bailed in the discretion of the court, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions to the contrary; 6 Gratt. 705; 11 Leigh, 665; 19 Ohio, 139; 8 Barb. 158; 19 Ala. N. S. 561; 1 Cal. 9; 30 Miss. 673; 16 Mass. 423; 8 B. Monr. 3.

For any crime or offence against the United States, not punishable by death, any justice or judge of the United States, or commissioner of a circuit court to take bail, or any chancellor, judge of the supreme or superior court, or first judge of any court of common pleas, or mayor of any city of any state, or any justice of the peace or magistrate of any state, where the offender may be found, may take bail; Act Sept. 24, 1789, § 33, Mar. 2, 1793, § 4; and, after commitment by a justice of the supreme or judge of district court of the United States, any judge of the supreme or superior court of any state (there being no judge of the United States in the district to take such bail) may admit the person to bail if he offer it.

When the punishment by the laws of the United States is death, bail can be taken only by the supreme or circuit court, or by a judge of the district court of the United States.

As to the principle on which bail is granted or refused in cases of capital offences in the Queen's Bench, see 1 E. & B. 1, 8; Dearsl. Cr. Cas. 51, 60.

The proceedings attendant on giving bail are substantially the same in England and all the states of the United States. An application is made to the proper officer, 4 Rand. 498, and the bond or the names of the bail proposed filed in the proper office, and notice is given to the opposite party, who must except within a limited time, or the bail justify and are approved. If exception is taken, notice is given, a hearing takes place, the bail must justify, and will then be approved unless the other party oppose successfully; in which case other bail must be added or substituted. A formal application is, in many cases, dispensed with, but a notification is given at the time of filing to the opposite party, and, unless exceptions are made and notice given within a limited time, the bail justify and are approved. If the sum in which the defendant is held is too large, he may apply for mitigation of bail.

The bail are said to enter into a recognizance when the obligation is one of record, which it is when government or the defendant is the obligee; when the sheriff is the obligee, it is called a bail bond. See BAIL BOND; RECOGNIZANCE.

Mitigation of excessive bail may be obtained by simple application to the court; 13 Johns. 425; 1 Wend. 107; 3 Yeates, 83; and in other modes; 17 Mass. 116; 1 N. H. 374. Exacting excessive bail is against the constitution of the United States, and was a misdemeanor at common law; U. S. Const. Amend. art. 8; 1 Brev. 14.

The liability of bail is limited by the bond; 9 Pet. 329; 2 Va. Cas. 334; 5 Watts, 539; 2 N. J. 533; by the ac etiam; 1 Cow. 601; see 5 Conn. 588; 5 Watts, 539; by the amount for which judgment is rendered; 2 Speers, 664; and special circumstances in some cases; 1 N. & M'C. 64; 1 M'Cord, 128; 4 id. 315; 2 Hill, So. C. 336. And see BAIL BOND; RECOGNIZANCE.

The powers of the bail over the defendant are very extensive. As they are supposed to have the custody of the defendant, they may, when armed with the bail piece, arrest him, though out of the jurisdiction of the court where they became bail, and in a different state; 1 Baldw. 578; 3 Conn. 84, 421; 8 Pick. 138; 7 Johns. 145; may take him while attending court as a suitor, or at any time, even on Sunday; 4 Yeates, 123; 4 Conn. 170; may break open a door if necessary; 7 Johns. 145; 4 Conn. 166; may command the assistance of the sheriff and his officers, 8 Pick. 138; and may depute their power to others; 3 Harr. 568.

To refuse or delay to bail any person is an offence against the liberty of the subject, both at common law and by statute, but does not entitle the person refused to an action unless malice be shown; 4 Q. B. 468; 13 id. 240; 1 N. H. 374.

In Canadian Law. A lease. See Merlin, Répert. Bail.

Bail emphyteotique. A lease for years, with a right to prolong indefinitely; 5 Low. C. 381. It is equivalent to an alienation; 6 Low. C. 58.

BAIL BOND. In Practice. A specialty by which the defendant and other persons become bound to the sheriff in a penal sum proportioned to the damages claimed in the action, and which is conditioned for the due appearance of such defendant to answer to the legal process therein described, and by which the sheriff has been commanded to arrest him.

The defendant usually binds himself as principal with two sureties; but sometimes the bail alone, bind themselves as principals, and sometimes also one surety is accepted by the sheriff. The bail bond may be said to stand in the place of the defendant so far as the sheriff is concerned, and, if properly taken, furnishes the sheriff a complete answer to the requirement of the writ, directing him to take and produce the body of the defendant. A bail bond is given to the sheriff, and can be taken only where he has custody of the defendant on process other than final, and is thus distinguished from recognizance, which see.

The sheriff can take the bond only when he has custody of the defendant's body on process other than final.

When a bail bond, with sufficient securities and properly prepared, is tendered to the sheriff, he must take it and discharge the defendant; Stat. 23 Hen. VI. c. 10, § 5.

The requisites of a bail bond are that it should be under seal; 1 Term, 418; 7 id. 109; 2 Hayw. 16; 3 T. B. Monr. 80; 6 Rand. 101; should be to the sheriff by the name of the office; 1 Term, 422; 4 M'Cord, 175; 1 Ill. 51; 4 Bibb, 505; 4 Gray, 300; conditioned in such manner that performance is possible; 3 Lev. 74; 3 Campb. 181; 1 South. 319; for a proper amount, 2 Va. Cas. 334; 2 Penning. 707; for the defendant's appearance at the place and day named in the writ; 1 Term, 418; 1 Ala. 289; 4 Me. 10; 4 Halst. 97; 2 Munf. 448; 2 Brev. 394; see BAIL; and should describe the action in which the defendant is arrested with sufficient accuracy to distinguish it; Hard. 501; 10 Mass. 20; 5 id. 542; 9 Watts, 43; but need not disclose the nature of the suit; 6 Term, 702. The sureties must be two or more in number to relieve the sheriff; 2 Bingh. 227; 9 Mass. 482; 12 id. 129; 1 Wend. N. Y. 108; see 5 Rich. So. C. 347; and he may insist upon three, or even more, subject to statutory provisions on the subject; 5 M. & S. 223; but the bond will be binding if only one be taken; 2 Metc. Mass. 490; 8 Johns. 358; 2 Ov. 178; 2 Pick. 284; 1 Troub. & Hal. Pr. § 311.

Putting in bail to the action; 5 Burr, 2683, and waiver of his right to such bail by the plaintiff; 5 S. & R. 419; 11 id. 9; 7 Ohio, 210; 4 Johns. 185; 6 Rand. 165; 2 Day, 199; or a surrender of the person of the defendant, constitute a performance or excuse from the performance of the condition of the bond; 5 Term, 754; 7 id. 123; 1 East, 387; 1 B. & P. 326; 1 Baldw. 148; 1 Johns. negligence of the plaintiff; 2 East, 305; 2 B. & P. 558; 6 Term, 363; or from irregularities in proceeding against the defendant; 2 Tidd, Pr. 1132; 3 Bla. Com. 292; 3 Yeates, 389; 4 Yerg. 181; 1 Green, N. J. 209; 1 Harr. Del. 134.

In those states in which the bail bond is conditioned to abide the judgment of the court as well as to appear, some of the acts above mentioned will not constitute performance. See RECOGNIZANCE. The plaintiff may demand from the sheriff an assignment of the bail bond, and may sue on it for his own benefit; Stat. 4 Anne, c. 16, § 20; Watson, Sher. 99; 1 Sellon, Pract. 126, 174; 6 S. & R. 545; 2 Jones, No. C. 353; see 3 M'Cord, 274; 1 Bibb, 434; 3 Munf. 121; unless he has waived his right so to do; 1 Caines, 55; or has had all the advantages he would have gained by entry of special bail; 4 Binn. 344; 2 S. & R. 284; 5 id. 50. See 1 P. A. Browne, 238, 250.

The remedy is by scire facias in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Vermont; 15 Pick. 332; 2 N. H. 359; 2 Hayw. 223; 9 Yerg. 223; 2 Brev. 84, 318; 21 Vt. 409; 22 id. 249; 6 Tex. 337.

BAIL COURT (now called the Practice Court). In English Law. A court auxiliary to the court of Queen's Bench at Westminster, wherein points connected more particularly with pleading and practice are argued and determined.

It hears and determines ordinary matters, and disposes of common motions; Holthouse, Law Dict.; Wharton, Law Dict. 2d Lond. ed.

BAIL PIECE. A certificate given by a judge or the clerk of a court, or other person authorized to keep the record, in which it is certified that the bail became bail for the defendant in a certain sum and in a particular case. It was the practice, formerly, to write these certificates upon small pieces of parchment, in the following form:—

In the court of ———, of the Term of ———, in the year of our Lord ——,

City and County of ———, ss.

Thennis Thew is delivered to bail, upon the taking of his body, to Jacobus Vanzant, of the city of ——, merchant, and to John Doe, of the same city, yeoman.

SMITH, JR. { At the suit of Attor'y for Deft. { PHILIP CARSWELL.

Taken and acknowledged the — day of —, A. D. ——, before me. D. H.

See 3 Bla. Com. App.; 1 Sellon, Pr. 189.

BAILABLE ACTION. An action in which the defendant is entitled to be discharged from arrest only upon giving bond to answer.

BAILABLE PROCESS. Process under which the sheriff is directed to arrest the defendant and is required by law to discharge him upon his tendering suitable bail as security for his appearance. A capias ad respondendum is bailable; not so a capias ad satisfaciendum.

BAILEE. Contracts. One to whom goods are bailed; the party to whom personal property is delivered under a contract of bailment.

His duties are to act in good faith, and perform his undertaking, in respect to the property intrusted to him, with the diligence and care required by the nature of his engagement.

When the bailee alone receives benefit from the bailment, as where he borrows goods or chattels for use, he is bound to exercise extraordinary care and diligence in preserving them from loss or injury; Story, Bailm. § 237; 37 N. Y. 234; 37 Ill. 250; 27 Mo. 549; but he is not an insurer; 9 C. & P. 383; see 44 Barb. 442.

When the bailment is mutually beneficial to the parties, as where goods or chattels are hired or pledged to secure a debt, the bailee is bound to exercise ordinary diligence and care in preserving the property; Edwards, Bailm. § 234 et seq.; 42 Ala. 145; 58 Me. 275; 3 Brewst. 9; 6 Cal. 643.

When the bailee receives no benefit from the bailment, as where he accepts goods, chattels, or money to keep without recompense, or undertakes gratuitously the performance of some commission in regard to them, he is answerable only for the use of the ordinary care which he bestows upon his own property of a similar nature; Edwards, Bailm. § 43 et seq. See 17 Mass. 479; 14 S. & R. 275; it has been held that such a bailee would be liable only for gross neglect or fraud; 40 Miss. 472; 23 Ark. 61; 57 Penn. 247; 7 Cow. 278. The case must have relation to the nature of the property bailed; 2 Stra. 1099; 1 Mas. 132; 1 Sneed, 248.

These differing degrees of negligence have been doubted. See BAILMENT.

The bailee is bound to redeliver or return the property, according to the nature of his engagement, as soon as the purpose for which it was bailed shall have been accomplished. Nothing will excuse the bailee from delivery to his bailor, except by showing that the property was taken from him by law, or by one having a paramount title, or that the bailor's title had terminated; 36 N. Y. 47, 403; 18 Vt. 186; 35 Barb. 191.

He cannot dispute his bailor's title; Edwards, Bailm. § 73.

The bailee has a special property in the goods or chattels intrusted to him, sufficient to enable him to defend them by suit against all persons but the rightful owner. The depositary and mandatary acting gratuitously, and the finder of lost property, have this right; Edwards, Bailm. § 245; 12 Johns. 147.

A bailee with a mere naked authority, having a right to remuneration for his trouble, but coupled with no other interest, may support trespass for any injury amounting to a trespass done while he was in the actual possession of the thing; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3608; Edwards, Bailm. 37; 13 Wend. 63; 35 Me. 55; 46 N. Y. 291.

A bailee for work, labor, and services, such as a mechanic or artisan who receives chattels or materials to be repaired or manufactured, has a lien upon the property for his services; 6 Denio, 628; 10 Wend. 318; 15 Mass. 242. Other bailees, inn-keepers, common carriers, and warehousemen, also, have a lien for their charges.

BAILIE. In Scotch Law. An officer appointed to give infeftment.

In certain cases it is the duty of the sheriff, as king's bailie, to act: generally, any one may be made bailie by filling in his name in the precept of sasine.

A magistrate possessing a limited criminal and civil jurisdiction. Bell, Dict.

BAILIFF. A person to whom some authority, care, guardianship, or jurisdiction is delivered, committed, or intrusted. Spelman, Gloss.

A sheriff's officer or deputy. 1 Bla. Com. 344.

A magistrate, who formerly administered justice in the parliaments or courts of France, answering to the English sheriffs as mentioned by Bracton.

There are still bailiffs of particular towns in England; as, the bailiff of Dover Castle, etc.; otherwise, bailiffs are now only officers or stewards, etc.; as, bailiffs of liberties, appointed by every lord within his liberty, to serve writs, etc.; bailiffs errant or itinerant, appointed to go about the country for the same purpose; sheriff's bailiffs, sheriff's officers to execute writs; these are also called bound bailiffs, because they are usually bound in a bond to the sheriff for the due execution of their office; bailiffs of court-baron, to summon the court, etc.; bailiffs of husbandry, appointed by private persons to collect their rents and manage their estates; water bailiffs, officers in port towns for searching ships, gathering tolls, etc. Bacon, Abr.

In account render. A person who has by delivery the custody and administration of lands or goods for the benefit of the owner or bailor, and is liable to render an account thereof. Coke, Litt. 271; 2 Leonh. 245; Story, Eq. Jur. § 446.

The word is derived from the old French bailler, to deliver, and originally implied the delivery of real estate, as of land, woods, a house, a part of the fish in a pond; Ow. 20; 3 Leon. 194; Keilw. 114 a, b; 37 Edw. III. c. 7; 10 Hen. VII. c. 30; but was afterwards extended to goods and chattels. Every bailiff is a receiver, but every receiver is not a bailiff. Hence it is a good plea that the defendant never was receiver, but as bailiff. 18 Edw. III. 16. See Croke, Eliz. 82, 83; 2 And. 62, 63; 96, 97; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 134 F; 8 Coke, 48 a, b.

From a bailiff are required administration, care, management, skill. He is, therefore, entitled to allowance for the expense of administration, and for all things done in his office according to his own judgment without the special direction of his principal, and also for casual things done in the common course of business; 1 Rolle, Abr. 125, §§ 1, 7; Coke, Litt. 89 a; Comyns, Dig. E, 12; Brooke, Abr. Acc. 18; but not for things foreign to his office; Brooke, Abr. Acc. 26, 88; Plowd. 282 b, 14; Comyns, Dig. Acc. E, 13; Coke, Litt. 172. Whereas a mere receiver, or a receiver who is not also a bailiff, is not entitled to allowance for any expenses; Brooke, Abr. Acc. 18; 1 Rolle, Abr. 119; Comyns, Dig. E, 13; 1 Dall. 340.

A bailiff may appear and plead for his principal in an assize; "and his plea commences" thus: "J. S., bailiff of T. N., comes," etc., not "T. N., by his bailiff J. S., comes," etc. Coke, 2d Inst. 415; Keilw. 117 b. As to what matters he may plead, see Coke, 2d Inst. 414.

BAILIWICK. The jurisdiction of a sheriff or bailiff. 1 Bla. Com. 344.

A liberty or exclusive jurisdiction which was exempted from the sheriff of the county, and over which the lord appointed a bailiff, with such powers within his precinct as the under-sheriff exercised under the sheriff of the county. Whishaw, Lex.

BAILLEW DE FONDS. In Canadian Law. The unpaid vendor of real estate.

His claim is subordinate to that of a subsequent hypothecary creditor claiming under a conveyance of prior registration; 1 Low. C. 1, 6; but is preferred to that of the physician for services during the last sickness; 9 Low. C. 497. See 7 Low. C. 468; 9 id. 182; 10 id. 379.

BAILMENT (Fr. bailler, to put into the hands of; to deliver).

A delivery of something of a personal nature by one party to another, to be held according to the purpose or object of the delivery, and to be returned or delivered over when that purpose is accomplished. Prof. Joel Parker, MS. Lect. Dane Law School, 1851.

The right to hold may terminate, and a duty of restoration may arise, before the accomplishment of the purpose; but that does not necessarily enter into the definition, because such duty of restoration was not the original purpose of the delivery, but arises upon a subsequent contingency. The party delivering the thing is called the bailor; the party receiving it, the bailee.

Various attempts have been made to give a precise definition of this term, upon some of which there have been elaborate criticisms, see Story, Bailm. 4th ed. § 2, n. 1, exemplifying the maxim, "Omnis definitio in lege periculosa est;" but the one above given is concise, and sufficient for a general definition.

Some of these definitions are here given as illustrating the elements considered necessary to a bailment by the different authors cited.

A delivery of a thing in trust for some special object or purpose, and upon a contract, express or implied, to conform to the object or purpose of the trust. Story, Bailm. § 2. See Merlin, Répert. Bail.

A delivery of goods in trust upon a contract, either expressed or implied, that the trust shall be faithfully executed on the part of the bailee. 2 Bla. Com. 451. See id. 395.

A delivery of goods in trust upon a contract, expressed or implied, that the trust shall be duly executed, and the goods restored by the bailee as soon as the purposes of the bailment shall be answered. 2 Kent, 559.

A delivery of goods on a condition, express or implied, that they shall be restored by the bailee to the bailor, or according to his directions, as soon as the purpose for which they are bailed shall be answered. Jones, Bailm. 1.

A delivery of goods in trust on a contract, either expressed or implied, that the trust shall be duly executed, and the goods redelivered as soon as the time or use for which they were bailed shall have elapsed or be performed. Jones, Bailm. 117.

According to Story, the contract does not necessarily imply an undertaking to redeliver the goods; and the first definition of Jones here given would seem to allow of a similar conclusion. On the other hand, Blackstone, although his definition does not include the return, speaks of it in all his examples of bailments as a duty of the bailee; and Kent says that the application of the term to cases in which no return or delivery or redelivery to the owner or his agent is contemplated, is extending the definition of the term beyond its ordinary acceptation in the English law. A consignment to a factor would be a bailment for sale, according to Story; while according to Kent it would not be included under the term bailment.

Sir William Jones has divided bailments into five sorts, namely: depositum, or deposit; mandatum, or commission without recompense; commodatum, or loan for use without pay; pignori acceptum, or pawn; locatum, or hiring, which is always with reward. This last is subdivided into locatio rei, or hiring, by which the hirer gains a temporary use of the thing; locatio operis faciendi, when something is to be done to the thing delivered; locatio operis mercium vehendarum, when the thing is merely to be carried from one place to another. Jones, Bailm. 36. See these several titles.

A better general division, however, for practical purposes, is into three kinds. First, those bailments which are for the benefit of the bailor, or of some person whom he represents. Second, those for the benefit of the bailee, or some person represented by him. Third, those which are for the benefit of both parties.

There are three degrees of care and diligence required of the bailee, and three degrees of the negligence for which he is responsible, according to the purpose and object of the bailment, as shown in those three classes; and the class serves to designate the degree of care, and of the negligence for which he is responsible. Thus, in the first class the bailee is required to exercise only slight care, and is responsible, of course, only for gross neglect. In the second he is required to exercise great care, and is responsible even for slight neglect. In the third he is required to exercise ordinary care, and is responsible for ordinary neglect. See BAILEE.

There is a supplementary class, founded upon the policy of the law, in which the bailee is responsible for loss without any neglect on his part, being as it were, with certain exceptions, an insurer of the safety of the thing bailed. Prof. Joel Parker, MS. Lect. Dane Law School, 1851.

It has been held in some cases that there are, properly speaking, no degrees of negligence (though the above distinctions have been generally maintained in the cases (Edwards, Bailm. § 61); 2 Q. B. 646; 11 M. & W. 113; 16 How. 474; 24 N. Y. 207, 181; L. R. 1 C. P. 612; see a discussion in 5 Am. L. Rev. 38, and Edwards, Bailm. § 6 et seq.

When a person receives the goods of another to keep without recompense, and he acts in good faith, keeping them as his own, he is not answerable for their loss or injury. As he derives no benefit from the bailment, he is responsible only for bad faith or gross negligence; Edwards, Bailm. § 43 et seq.; 14 S. & R. 275; 99 Mass. 605; 62 Penn. 47; 15 id. 176; 2 Ad. & E. 256; 81 Penn. 95; 28 Ohio, 388; 17 Mass. 479; 11 Mart. La. 462; 38 Me. 55; 3 Mas. C. C. n.; 2 C. B. 877; 4 N. & M. 170; 2 Ld. Raym. 913. See Story, Bailm. § 64; 6 C. Rob. Adm. 316; 97 U. S. 92. But this obligation may be enlarged or decreased by a special acceptance; 2 Kent, 565; Story, Bailm. § 33; Willes, 118; 2 Ld. Raym. 910; 3 Hill, N. Y. 9; 7 id. 533; 17 Barb. 515; and a spontaneous offer on the part of the bailee increases the amount of care required of him; 2 Kent, 565. Knowledge by the bailee of the character of the goods; Jones, Bailm. 38; and by the bailor of the manner in which the bailee will keep them; 38 Me. 55; are important circumstances.

A bank (National or otherwise) accustomed to keep securities, whether authorized to do so by its charter or not, is liable for their loss by gross carelessness; 100 U. S. 699; 79 Penn. 106; 26 Iowa, 562; 69 Mass. 605; 58 Ga. 369; 17 Mass. 479; see 60 N. Y. 278; contra, 50 Vt. 389. A National Bank has power under the act of congress to receive such deposits; 100 U. S. 699.

So when a person receives an article and undertakes gratuitously some commission in respect to it, as to carry it from one place to another, he is only liable for its injury or loss through his gross negligence. It is enough if he keep or carry it as he does his own property; 6 C. Rob. Adm. 141; 3 Mas. 132; 6 N. H. 587; 1 Cons. So. C. 117; Edwards, Bailm. § 76 et seq., and cases above.

As to the amount of skill such bailee must possess and exercise, see 2 Kent, 509; Story, Bailm. §§ 174–178; 11 M. & W. 113; 5 Term, 143; 2 Ad. & E. 256; 8 B. Monr. 415; 4 Johns. 84; 11 Wend. 25; 7 Mart. 460; 20 id. 77; 3 Fla. 27; 11 M. & W. 113; and more skill may be required in cases of voluntary offers or special undertakings; 2 Kent, 573.

The borrower, on the other hand, who receives the entire benefit of the bailment, must use extraordinary diligence in taking care of the thing borrowed, and is responsible for even the slightest neglect; Edwards, Bailm. § 135, 5; 7 La. 253; 27 N. Y. 234; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; 27 Mo. 549; 5 Dana, 173.

He must apply it only to the very purpose for which it was borrowed; 2 Ld. Raym. 915; Story, Bailm. §§ 232, 233; cannot permit any other person to use it; 1 Mod. 210; 5 Ind. 546; 16 Johns. 76; cannot keep it beyond the time limited; 5 Mass. 104; and cannot keep it as a pledge for demands otherwise arising against the bailor; 2 Kent, 574. See 9 C. & P. 383; 32 Iowa, 161.

In the third class of bailments under the division here adopted, the benefits derived from the contract are reciprocal: it is advantageous to both parties. In the case of a pledge given on a loan of money or to secure the payment of a debt, the one party gains a credit and the other security by the contract. And in a bailment for hire, one party acquires the use of the thing bailed and the other the price paid therefor: the advantage is mutual. So in a bailment for labor and services, as when one person delivers materials to another to be manufactured, the bailee is paid for his services and the owner receives back his property enhanced in value by the process of manufacture. In these and like cases the parties stand upon an equal footing: there is a perfect mutuality between them. And therefore the bailee can only be held responsible for the use of ordinary care and common prudence in the preservation of the property bailed; Edwards, Bailm. 384; 13 Johns. 211; 9 Wend. 60; 5 Bingh. 217. See HIRE; PLEDGE.

The depositary or mandatary has a right to the possession as against everybody but the true owner; Story, Bailm. § 93; 6 Whart. 418; 12 Ired. 74; 4 E. L. & Eq. 438; see 12 Penn. 229; but is excused if he delivers it to the person who gave it to him, supposing him the true owner; 17 Ala. 216; and may maintain an action against a wrong-doer; 3 Atk. 44; 1 Wils. 8; 2 Bulstr. 311; 1 B. & Ald. 59; 2 B. & Ad. 817. A borrower has no property in the thing borrowed, but may protect his possession by an action against the wrong-doer; 2 Bingh. 173; 7 Cow. 752. As to the property in case of a pledge, see PLEDGE.

In bailments for storage, for hire, the bailee acquires a right to defend the property as against third parties and strangers, and is answerable for loss or injury occasioned through his failure to exercise ordinary care. See TRESPASS; TROVER.

As to the lien of warehousemen and wharfingers for their charges on the goods stored with them, see LIEN, and Edwards, Bailm. § 350, 360.

The hire of things for use transfers a special property in them for the use agreed upon. The price paid is the consideration for the use: so that the hirer becomes the temporary proprietor of the things bailed, and has the right to detain them from the general owner for the term or use stipulated for. It is a contract of letting for hire, analogous to a lease of real estate for a given term. Edwards, Bailm. § 325. See HIRE.

In a general sense, the hire of labor and services is the essence of every species of bailment in which a compensation is to be paid for care and attention or labor bestowed upon the things bailed. The contracts of warehousemen, carriers, forwarding and commission merchants, factors, and other agents who receive goods to deliver, carry, keep, forward, or sell, are all of this nature, and involve a hiring of services. In a more limited sense, a bailment for labor and services is a contract by which materials are delivered to an artisan, mechanic, or manufacturer to be made or wrought into some new form. The title to the property here remains in the party delivering the goods, and the workman acquires a lien upon them for his services bestowed upon the property. Cloth delivered to a tailor to be made up into a garment, a gem or plate delivered to a jeweller to be set or engraved, a watch to be repaired, may be taken as illustrations of the contract. The owner, who does not part with his title, may come and take his property after the work has been done; but the workman has his lien upon it for his reasonable compensation.

The duties and liabilities of common carriers and innkeepers, under the contract implied by law, are regulated upon principles of public policy, and are usually considered by themselves; 5 Bingh. 217; 3 Hill, 488. See those titles.

Consult Jones, Edwards, Schouler, Story on Bailments; 2 Kent; Parsons, Contracts; note to Cogas v. Bernard, Sm. Lead. Cas.

As to warehouse receipts, see that title.

BAILOR. He who bails a thing to another.

The bailor must act with good faith towards the bailee; Story, Bailm. §§ 74, 76, 77; permit him to enjoy the thing bailed according to contract; and in some bailments, as hiring, warrant the title and possession of the thing hired, and, probably, keep it in suitable order and repair for the purpose of the bailment; Story, Bailm. §§ 388–392.

BAIR-MAN. In Scotch Law. A poor insolvent debtor.

BALANCE. The amount which remains due by one of two persons, who have been dealing together, to the other, after the settlement of their accounts.

In the case of mutual debts, the balance only can be recovered by the assignee of an insolvent or the executor of a deceased person. But this mutuality must have existed at the time of the assignment by the insolvent, or at the death of the testator.

The term general balance is sometimes used to signify the difference which is due to a party claiming a lien on goods in his hands for work or labor done, or money expended in relation to those and other goods of the debtor; 3 B. & P. 485; 3 Esp. 268.

BALANCE SHEET. A statement made by merchants and others to show the true state of a particular business. A balance sheet should exhibit all the balances of debits and credits, also the value of merchandise, and the result of the whole.

BALDIO. In Spanish Law. Vacant land having no particular owner, and usually abandoned to the public for the purposes of pasture. The word is supposed to be derived from the Arabic Balt, signifying a thing of little value. For the legislation on the subject, see Escriche, Dicc. Raz.

BALIUS. In Civil Law. A teacher; one who has the care of youth; a tutor; a guardian; Du Cange, Bajultis; Spelman, Gloss.

A proclamation of silence made by a crier in court before the meeting of champions in combat; Cowel. A statute, edict, or command; a fine, or penalty.

An open field; the outskirts of a village; a territory endowed with certain privileges.

A summons: as, arriere ban; Spelman, Gloss.

In French Law. The right of announcing the time of mowing, reaping, and gathering the vintage, exercised by certain seignorial lords; Guyot, Rép. Univ.

BANALITY. In Canadian Law. The right by virtue of which a lord subjects his vassals to grind at his mill, bake at his oven, etc. Used also of the region within which this right applied; Guyot, Rép. Univ. It prevents the erection of a mill within the seignorial limits; 1 Low. C. 31; whether steam or water; 3 Low. C. 1.

The meeting of all the judges, or such as may form a quorum, as distinguished from sittings at Nisi Prius: as, the court sit in banc. Cowel. In England, under 33 Vict. c. 6, § 4, any of the superior courts may hold sittings in banc in two divisions at the same time, and may be assisted by the judges of the other courts. Mozeley & Wh. Law Dict. See BANK.

Bank le Roy. The king's bench. Finch, 198.

In Commercial Law. A place for the deposit of money.

An institution, generally incorporated, authorized to receive deposits of money, to lend money, and to issue promissory notes,—usually known by the name of bank notes,—or to perform some one or more of these functions.

It was the custom of the early money-changers to transact their business in public places, at the doors of churches, at markets, and, among the Jews, in the temple (Mark xi. 15). They used tables or benches for their convenience in counting and assorting their coins. The table so used was called banche, and the traders themselves, bankers or benchers. In times still more ancient, their benches were called cambii, and they themselves were called cambiators. Du Cange, Cambii.

Banks are said to be of three kinds, viz.: of deposit, of discount, and of circulation: they generally perform all these operations. See NATIONAL BANKS.

BANK ACCOUNT. A fund which merchants, traders, and others have deposited into the common cash of some bank, to be drawn out by checks from time to time as the owner or depositor may require.

The statement of the amount deposited and drawn, which is kept in duplicate, one in the depositor's bank book and the other in the books of the bank.

BANK NOTE. A promissory note, payable on demand to the bearer, made and issued by a person or persons acting as bankers and authorized by law to issue such notes. The definition is confined to notes issued by incorporated banks in 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1664. Bank bills and bank notes are equivalent terms, even in criminal cases; 4 Gray, 416. The power thus to issue is not inherent or essential in banking business, and is not necessarily implied from the conference of a general power to do banking business. It must be distinctly, and in terms conferred in the incoporating act, or it will not be enjoyed. Morse, Banking, c. viii.; 11 Op. Att.-Gen. 334.

For many purposes they are not looked upon as common promissory notes, and as such mere evidences of debt, or security for money. In the ordinary transactions of business they are recognized by general consent as cash. The business of issuing them being regulated by law, a certain credit attaches to them, that renders them a convenient substitute for money; 2 Hill, N. Y. 241; 1 id. 13.

The practice is, therefore, to use them as money; and they are a good tender, unless objected to; 9 Pick. 542; 19 Johns. 322; 8 Ohio, 169; 11 Me. 475; 5 Yerg. 199; 6 Ala. N. S. 226. See 3 Halst. 172; 4 N. H. 296; 4 Dev. & B. 435. They pass under the word "money" in a will, and, generally speaking, they are treated as cash; 19 Johns. 115; 7 id. 476; 6 Hill, N. Y. 340; but see 29 Ind. 495, as to their receipt by a sheriff in payment of an execution. When payment is made in bank notes, they are treated as cash and receipts are given as for cash; 1 Ohio, 189, 524; 15 Pick. 177; 5 G. & J. 158; 3 Hawks, 328; 5 J. J. Marsh. 643; 12 Johns. 200; 9 id. 120; 19 id. 144; 1 Johns. Ch. 231; 1 Schoales & L. 318, 319; 11 Ves. Ch. 662; 1 Roper, Leg. 3. It has been held that the payment of a debt in bank notes discharges the debt; 1 W. & S. 92; 11 Ala. 280; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1676; 1 Gratt. 359. See 13 Wend. 101; 11 Vt. 516; 9 N. H. 365; 2 Hill, So. C. 509; but not when the payer knew the bank was insolvent. The weight of authority is against the doctrine of the extinguishment of a debt by the delivery of bank notes which are not paid, when duly presented, in reasonable time. But it is undoubtedly the duty of the person receiving them to present them for payment as soon as possible; 11 Wend. N. Y. 9; 13 id. 101; 11 Vt. 516; 9 N. H. 365; 10 Wheat. 333; 6 Mass. 182; 18 Barb. 545; 10 Ohio St. 188; 22 Me. 88; 7 Wis. 185; 6 B. & C. 373.

Bank notes are governed by the rules applicable to other negotiable paper. They are assignable by delivery; Rep. temp. Hardw. 53; 9 East, 48; 4 id. 510; Dougl. 236. The holder of a note is entitled to payment, and cannot be affected by the fraud of a former holder, unless he is proved privy to the fraud; 1 Burr. 452; 4 Rawle, 185; 13 East, 135; 10 Cush. 488; 2 Dan. Neg. Instr. § 1680; 32 Conn. 278. The bonâ fide holder who has received them for value is protected in their possession even against a real owner from whom they have been stolen. Payment in forged bank notes is a nullity; 7 Leigh, 617; 2 Hawks, 326; 3 id. 568; 3 Penn. 330; 5 Conn. 71; but the taker of such must give prompt notice that they are counterfeit, and offer to return them; 11 Ill. 137. But where the bank itself receives notes purporting to be its own, and they are forged, it is otherwise; 10 Wheat. 333. See 6 B. & C. 373. If a note be cut in two for transmission by mail, and one half be lost, the bonâ fide holder of the other half can recover the whole amount of the note; 6 Wend. 378; 6 Munf. 166; 4 Rand. 186.

At common law, as choses in action, bank notes could not be taken on execution; Hardw. Cases, 53; 1 Archb. Pr. 258; 9 Cro. Eliz. 746. The statute laws of the several states, or custom, have modified the common law in this respect, and in many of them they can be taken on execution; 4 N. H. 198. This is the case in New York; but they are not to be sold; 10 Barb. 157, 596. Consult Story, Bills; Story, Notes; Parsons, Notes and Bills; Byles, Bills; 2 Dan. Neg. Instr.; note to Miller & Race, Sm. Lead. Cas.

BANKABLE. In Mercantile Law. Bank notes, checks, and other securities for money received as cash by the banks in the place where the word is used.

In the United States, the notes issued by the national banks have taken the place of those formerly issued by banks incorporated under state laws. The circulation of these notes being secured by United States bonds, deposited with the treasurer of the United States, they are received as bankable money in all the states without regard to the locality of the bank issuing them. See Act June 3, 1864, U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5133; 8 Wall. 538.

BANKER'S NOTE. A promissory note given by a private banker or banking institution, not incorporate, but resembling a bank note in all other respects; 6 Mod. 29; 3 Chitty, Comm. Law, 590; 1 Leigh, N. P. 338.

BANKRUPT. A trader who secretes himself or does certain other acts tending to defraud his creditors. 2 Bla. Com. 471.

A person who has done or suffered to be done some act which is by law declared to be an act of bankruptcy.

A broken-up or ruined trader. 3 Stor. 453.

As formerly employed in the English law, the bankrupt must have been a trader; but this distinction has been abolished by the Bankruptcy Act of 1869. Traders and non-traders are, however, in some respects even put on a different footing in certain matters appertaining to bankruptcy. Mozley & W. Law Dict. As used in American law, the distinction between a bankrupt and an insolvent is not generally regarded. Act of Congress of March 2, 1867, and Act of June 22, 1874 (both now repealed). As to the technical distinction between bankrupts and insolvents, see 5 Hill, N. Y. 329-371; 4 N. Y. 283; 2 Kent, 390-394. See INSOLVENCY.

BANKRUPT LAWS. Laws relating to bankruptcy.

The English Bankrupt Laws, which originated with the statute 34 & 35 Henry VIII. c. 4, were first mainly directed against the criminal frauds of traders. The bankrupt was treated as a criminal offender; and, formerly, the not duly surrendering his property under a commission of bankruptcy, when summoned, was a capital felony. The bankrupt laws are now, and have for some time past been, regarded as a connected system of civil legislation, having the double object of enforcing a complete discovery and equitable distribution of the property of an insolvent trader, and of conferring on the trader the reciprocal advantage of security of person and a discharge from all claims of his creditors. By the General Bankrupt Act (6 Geo. IV. c. 16) the former statutes were consolidated and many important alterations introduced. A subsequent statute, 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 56, changed the mode of proceeding by constituting a Court of Bankruptcy, and removing the jurisdiction of bankrupt cases in the first instance from the Court of Chancery to that of Bankruptcy, reserving only an appeal from that court to the lord chancellor as to matters of law and equity and questions of evidence; and other important alterations were introduced. This statute was followed by the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 29, and by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, which further modified the law and the organization of the courts. The numerous statutes relating to bankruptcy were again consolidated by the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act (1849); and this was amended in a few particulars by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 77, and by the Bankruptcy Act, 1854. A further amendment of the law of bankruptcy, known as the "Bankrupt Act, 1861," 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, abolished the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and transferred its jurisdiction to the Court of Bankruptcy. By this act, non-traders were made subject to the law of bankruptcy. By the "Bankruptcy Amendment Act, 1868," 31 & 32 Vict. c. 104, further changes were made. This has been followed by the "Bankruptcy Act, 1869," 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, which comprises all the statute law relating to bankrupts, except the provisions for the punishment of fraudulent debtors, which are contained in the Debtors' Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62. Robson, Bank.

By the Scotch system, as modified in 1783, the management of the estate is given to the creditors upon sequestration, and it is only where they require the aid of the court, or an appeal is taken from their determinations, that resort is had to judicial proceedings. By recent amendments of the law (1856), the remedy is extended to apply to every class of debtors. There is also a remedy given the debtor to obtain a discharge from liability of the person upon relinquishing his property; 2 Bell, Com. 283. By the Debtors' Act, 1880, 43 & 44 Vict. c. 34, imprisonment for debt is abolished, with the exception of taxes, assessments, etc., and sums decreed for aliment.

The French Bankrupt Law (law of 1838) declares that all traders who stop payment are in a state of insolvency. Traders are required immediately to register the fact that they have stopped payment in the Tribunal of Commerce, and file their balance sheet; and a decree of insolvency is declared by the tribunal upon the trader's declaration or on application of creditors. Prior voluntary conveyances and mortgages, pledges, etc., for antecedent debts are void, and all subsequent deeds to those having notice are voidable. The former French law (Code of 1807) is still important, as being the basis of the system in many other continental nations. See INSOLVENCY.

Bankrupt laws were passed in the United States in 1800, 1841, and 1867, but repealed after a brief existence, the last act by Act of Congress, June 7, 1878, the repeal to take effect on September 1, 1878, and not to affect pending cases.

BANKRUPTCY. The state or condition of a bankrupt. See INSOLVENCY.

BANLIEUCA. A certain space surrounding towns or cities, distinguished by peculiar privileges. Spelman, Gloss. It is the same as the French banlieue.

BANLIEU. In Canadian Law. See BANLEUCA.

BANNERET. A degree of honor next after a baron's, when conferred by the king; otherwise, it ranks after a baronet. 1 Bla. Com. 403.

BANNITUS. One outlawed or banished. Calvinus, Lex.

BANNUM. A ban.

BANS OF MATRIMONY. Public notice or proclamation of a matrimonial contract, and the intended celebration of the marriage of the parties in pursuance of such contract, to the end that persons objecting to the same may have an opportunity to declare such objections before the marriage is solemnized. Cowel; 1 Bla. Com. 439; Pothier, Du Mariage, p. 2, c. 2.

BAR. To Actions. A perpetual destruction of the action of the plaintiff.

It is the exceptio peremptoria of the ancient authors. Coke, Litt. 303 b; Stephen, Pl. App. xxviii. It is always a perpetual destruction of the particular action to which it is a bar, Doctrina Plac. xxiii. § 1, p. 129; and it is set up only by a plea to the action, or in chief. But it does not always operate as a permanent obstacle to the plaintiff's right of action. He may have good cause for an action, though not for the action which he has brought; so that, although that particular action, or any one like it in nature and based on the same allegations, is forever barred by a well-pleaded bar, and a decision thereon in the defendant's favor, yet where the plaintiff's difficulty really is that he has misconceived his action, and advantage thereof be taken under the general issue (which is in bar), he may still bring his proper action for the same cause; Gould, Pl. c. v. § 137; 6 Coke, 7, 8. Nor is final judgment on a demurrer, in such a case, a bar to the proper action, subsequently brought; Gould, Pl. c. ix. § 46. And where a plaintiff in one action fails on demurrer, from the omission of an essential allegation in his declaration, which allegation is supplied in the second suit, the judgment in the first is no bar to the second; for the merits shown in the second declaration were not decided in the first; Gould, Plead. c. ix. § 45; c. v. § 158.

Another instance of what is called a temporary bar is a plea (by executor, etc.) of plene administravit, which is a bar until it appears that more goods come into his hands, and then it ceases to be a bar to that suit, if true before its final determination, or to a new suit of the same nature; Doctrina Plac. c. xxiii. § 1, p. 130; 4 East, 508.

Where a person is bound in any action, real or personal, by judgment on demurrer, confession, or verdict, he is barred, that is, debarred, as to that or any other action of the like nature or degree, from the same thing forever. But the effect of such a bar is different in personal and real actions.

In personal actions, as in debt or account, trover, replevin, and for torts generally (and all personal actions), a recovery by the plaintiff is a perpetual bar to another action for the same matter. He has had one recovery; Doctr. Plac. c. lxviii. § 1, p. 412. So where a defendant has judgment against the plaintiff, it is a perpetual bar to another action of like nature for the same cause (like nature being here used to save the cases of misconceived action or an omitted averment, where, as above stated, the bar is not perpetual). And inasmuch as, in personal actions, all are of the same degree, a plaintiff against whom judgment has passed cannot, for the subject thereof, have an action of a higher nature: therefore he generally has in such actions no remedy (no manner of avoiding the bar of such a judgment) except by taking the proper steps to reverse the very judgment itself (by writ of error, or by appeal, as the case may be), and thus taking away the bar by taking away the judgment; 6 Coke, 7, 8. (For occasional exceptions to this rule, see authorities above cited.)

In real actions, if the plaintiff be barred as above by judgment on a verdict, demurrer, confession, etc., he may still have an action of a higher nature, and try the same right again; Lawes, Plead. 39, 40; Stearns, Real Act. See, generally, Bacon, Abr. Abatement, n.; Plea in bar; 3 East, 346–366.

In Practice. A particular part of the court-room.

As thus applied, and secondarily in various ways, it takes its name from the actual bar, or enclosing rail, which originally divided the bench from the rest of the room, as well as from that bar, or rail, which then divided, and now divides, the space including the bench, and the place which lawyers occupy in attending on and conducting trials, from the body of the court-room. Those who, as advocates or counsellors, appeared as speakers in court, were said to be "called to the bar," that is, called to appear in presence of the court, as barristers, or persons who stay or attend at the bar of court. Richardson, Dict. Barrister. By a natural transition, a secondary use of the word was applied to the persons who were so called, and the advocates were, as a class, called "the bar." And in this country, since attorneys, as well as counsellors, appear in court to conduct causes, the members of the legal profession, generally, are called the bar.

The court, in its strictest sense, sitting in full term.

Thus, a civil case of great consequence was not left to be tried at nisi prius, but was tried at the "bar of the court itself," at Westminster; 3 Bla. Com. 352. So a criminal trial for a capital offence was had "at bar," 4 id. 351; and in this sense the term at bar is still used. It is also used in this sense, with a shade of difference (as not distinguishing nisi prius from full term, but as applied to any term of the court), when a person indicted for crime is called "the prisoner at the bar," or is said to stand at the bar to plead to the indictment. See Merlin, Répert. Barreau; 1 Dupin, Prof. d'Av. 451.

In Contracts. An obstacle or opposition. Thus, relationship within the prohibited degrees, or the fact that a person is already married, is a bar to marriage.

BAR FEE. In English Law. A fee taken by the sheriff, time out of mind, for every prisoner who is acquitted; Bacon, Abr. Extortion. Abolished by stats. 14 Geo. III. c. 26, 55 Geo. III. c. 50; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 114.

BARBICANAGE. Money paid to support a barbican or watch-tower.

BARGAIN AND SALE. A contract or bargain by the owner of land, in consideration of money or its equivalent paid, to sell land to another person, called the bargainee, whereupon a use arises in favor of the latter, to whom the seisin is transferred by force of the statute of uses. 2 Washb. R. P. 128.

Upon principles of equity any agreement, supported by a valuable consideration, to the effect that an estate or interest in land should be conveyed, as it might be specially enforced in the court of chancery, was held to entitle the purchaser to the use or beneficial ownership according to the terms and intent of the agreement, without any legal conveyance; and accordingly the vendor was held to be or stand seised to the use of the purchaser. Such transaction, as creating a use executed by the statute, became technically known as a bargain and sale. As a bargain and sale thus would have been effectual to convey a legal estate under the statute by mere force of the agreement without any writing or formality, it was thought expedient to add some formal conditions to the operation of the statute upon it; and it was enacted by a statute of the same session of parliament, 27 H. VIII. c. 16, to the effect that no estate of freehold shall pass by reason only of a bargain and sale, unless made by writing indented, sealed, and enrolled in manner and place therein provided. This statute applied only to estates of freehold, and a use for a term of years might still be created within the statute of uses by mere bargain and sale without deed or enrolment. Leake, Land Laws, 108.

This is a very common form of conveyance in the United States. In consequence of the consideration paid, and the bargain made by the vendor, of which the conveyance was evidence, a use was raised at once in the bargainee. To this use the statute of uses transferred and annexed the seisin, whereby a complete estate became vested in the bargainee; 2 Washb. R. P. 128 et seq.

All things, for the most part, that may be granted by any deed may be granted by bargain and sale, and an estate may be created in fee, for life, or for years; 2 Coke, 54; Dy. 309.

There must have been a valuable consideration; 5 Ired. 30; 7 Vt. 522; 13 B. Monr. 30; 9 Ala. 410; 1 Harr. & J. 527; 1 W. & S. 395; 16 Johns. 515; 1 Cow. 622; Cro. Car. 529; 1 Cruise, Dig. 107; but its adequacy is immaterial; thus a rent of one peppercorn was held sufficient; 2 Mod. 249. See Leake, Land Laws, 109; the consideration need not be expressed; 10 Johns. 639. See Washb. R. P.; 1 Sandf. Ch. 259; 4 Denio, 201; 19 Wend. 339; 7 Vt. 522; 1 Penn. 486; 68 id. 460; 102 Mass. 533; 1 Mo. 553; 2 Ov. 261.

The proper and technical words to denote a bargain and sale are bargain and sell; but any other words that are sufficient to raise a use upon a valuable consideration are sufficient; 2 Wood, Conv. 15; as, for example, make over and grant; 3 Johns. 484; release and assign; 8 Barb. 463. See 2 Washb. R. P. 620; Shepp. Touchst. 222.

An estate in futuro may be conveyed by deed of bargain and sale; 9 Wend. 611; 4 H. & N. 277; 52 Me. 141; 34 N. H. 460; 102 Mass. 533; 10 Penn. 348; contra, 27 Pick. 376; 32 Me. 329; 2 Washb. R. P. *417; but not at common law; note to Doe v. Trunmar, 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 473, where the cases are discussed.

Consult Gilbert on Uses, Sugden's edition; Washburn, R. P.; Greenl. Cruise, Dig.

BARGAINEE. The grantee of an estate in a deed of bargain and sale. The person to whom property is tendered in a bargain.

BARGAINOR. The person who makes a bargain; he who is to deliver the property and receive the consideration.

BARO. A man, whether slave or free.

Si quis homicidium perpetraverit in barone libro seu serbo, if any one shall have perpetrated a murder upon any man, slave or free.

A freeman or freedman; a strong man; a hired soldier; a vassal; a feudal client.

Those who held of the king immediately were called barons of the king.

A man of dignity and rank; a knight.

A magnate in the church.

A judge in the exchequer (baro scaccarii).

The first-born child.

A husband.

The word is said by Spelman to have been used more frequently in its latter sense; Spelman, Gloss.

It is quite easy to trace the history of baro, from meaning simply man, to its various derived significations. Denoting a man, one who possessed the manly qualities of courage and strength would be desirable as a soldier, or might misuse them as a robber. One who possessed them in an eminent degree would be the man; and hence baro, in its sense of a title of dignity or honor, particularly applicable in a warlike age to the best soldier. See, generally, Bacon, Abr.; Comyns, Dig.; Spelman, Gloss., Baro.

BARON. A general title of nobility; 1 Bla. Com. 398; a particular title of nobility, next to that of viscount. A judge of the exchequer; Cowel; 1 Bla. Com. 44.

A husband.

In this sense it occurs in the phrase baron et feme (husband and wife); 1 Bla. Com. 432; and this is the only sense in which it is used in the American law, and even in this sense it is now but seldom found.

A freeman.

It has essentially the same meanings as Baro, which see.

BARON ET FEMME. Man and woman; husband and wife.

It is doubtful if the words had originally in this phrase more meaning than man and woman. The vulgar use of man and woman for husband and wife suggests the change of meaning which might naturally occur from man and woman to husband and wife. Spelman, Gloss.; 1 Bla. Com. 442.

BARONET. An English title of dignity. It is an hereditary dignity, descendible, but not a title of nobility. It is of very early use. Spelman, Gloss.; 1 Bla. Com. 403.

BARONS OF THE CINQUE PORTS. Members of parliament from these ports, viz.: Sandwich, Romney, Hastings, Hythe, and Dover; Winchelsea and Rye have been added.

BARONS OF THE EXCHEQUER. The judges of the exchequer. See EXCHEQUER.

BARONY. The dignity of a baron; a species of tenure; the territory or lands held by a baron; Spelman, Gloss.

BARRATOR. One who commits barratry.

BARRATRY (Fr. barat, baraterie, robbery, deceit, fraud).

In Criminal Law. The offence of frequently exciting and stirring up quarrels and suits, either at law or otherwise; 4 Bla. Com. 134; Coke, Litt. 368; 8 W. 36 b.

An indictment for this offence must charge the offender with being a common barrator; 1 Sid. 282; Train & H. Prec. 55; and the proof must show at least three instances of offending; 15 Mass. 227; 1 Cush. 2, 3; 1 Bail. 379.

An attorney is not liable to indictment for maintaining another in a groundless action; 1 Bail. 379. See 2 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 63; 2 id. §§ 57–61; Bacon, Abr.; 9 Cow. 587; 15 Mass. 229; 11 Pick. 432; 13 id. 362; 1 Bail. 379.

In Maritime Law and Insurance. An unlawful or fraudulent act, or very gross and culpable negligence, of the master or mariners of a vessel in violation of their duty as such, and directly prejudicial to the owner, and without his consent; Roccus, h. t.; Abbott, Ship. 167, n.; 2 Strange, 581; 2 Ld. Raym. 349; 7 Term, 505; 8 id. 320; 2 Caines, 67, 222; 2 id. 1; 1 Johns. 229; 13 id. 451; 2 Binn. 274; 8 Cranch, 139; 9 Allen, 217; 5 Day, 1; 3 Wheat. 163; 4 Dall. 294; 2 M. & S. 172; Cowp. 143; 8 East, 126; 5 B. & Ald. 597; 1 Campb. 434. It is said that the term implies an intentional injury; it does not embrace cases of negligence; 4 Daly, 1. It extends, in addition to grosser cases of barratry, to the following:—sailing out of a port without paying port dues, whereby the cargo is forfeited; 6 Term, 379; disregarding an embargo; 1 Term, 127; or a blockade; 6 Taunt. 375; and when a master was directed to make purchases, and went into an enemy's settlement to trade (though it could be done there to better advantage), whereby the ship was seized, it was held barratry; L. R. 1 Q. B. 162; even though he thought thereby to benefit the owner. When a master is entitled to use his discretion, his conduct will not constitute barratry, unless he goes against his better judgment; 1 Stark. 240. See L. R. 3 C. P. 476. The grossest barratries, as piratically or feloniously seizing or running away with the vessel or cargo, or voluntarily delivering the vessel into the hands of pirates, or mutiny, are capital offences by the laws of the United States; Act of Congress, April 30, 1790, 1; Story's Laws U. S. 84. Barratry is one of the risks usually insured against in marine insurance. See INSURABLE INTEREST.

BARREL. A measure of capacity, equal to thirty-six gallons.

BARREN MONEY. A debt which bears no interest.

BARRENNESS. The incapacity to produce a child.

This, when arising from impotence which existed at the time the relation was entered into, is a cause for dissolving a marriage; 1 Fodere, Méd. Lég. § 254.

BARRISTER. In English Law. A counsellor admitted to plead at the bar.

Inner barrister. A serjeant or king's counsel who pleads within the bar.

Outer barrister. One who pleads outer or without the bar.

Vacation barrister. A counsellor newly called to the bar, who is to attend for several long vacations the exercise of the house.

In the old books, barristers are called apprentices, apprentitii ad legem, being looked upon as learners, and not qualified until they obtain the degree of serjeant. Edmund Plowden, the author of the Commentaries, a volume of elaborate reports in the reigns of Edward VI., Mary, Philip and Mary, and Elizabeth, describes himself as an apprentice of the common law.

BARTER. A contract by which parties exchange goods for goods.

It differs from a sale in that a barter is always of goods for goods; a sale is of goods for money, or for money and goods. In a sale there is a fixed price; in a barter there is not.

There must be delivery of goods to complete the contract.

If an insurance be made upon returns from a country where trade is carried on by barter, the valuation of the goods in return shall be made on the cost of those given in barter, adding all charges; Weskett, Ins. 42. See 3 B. & Ald. 616; 3 Campb. 351; Cowp. 118; 1 Dougl. 24, n.; 4 B. & P. 151; Troplong, De l'Echange.

BARTON. In Old English Law. The demesne land of a manor; a farm distinct from the mansion.

BAS CHEVALIERS. Knights by tenure of a base military fee, as distinguished from bannerets, who were the chief or superior knights. Kennett, Paroch. Ant.; Blount.

BASE FEE. A fee which has a qualification annexed to it, and which must be determined whenever the annexed qualification requires.

A grant to A and his heirs, tenants of Dale, continues only while they are such tenants; 2 Bla. Com. 109.

The proprietor of such a fee has all the rights of the owner of a fee simple until his estate is determined. Plowd. 557; 1 Washb. R. P. 62; 1 Preston, Est. 431; Coke, Litt. 1 b.

BASE SERVICES. Such services as were unworthy to be performed by the nobler men, and were performed by the peasants and those of servile rank; 2 Bla. Com. 62; 1 Washb. R. P. 25.

BASILICA. An abridgment of the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian, translated into Greek and first published in the ninth century.

The emperor Basilius, finding the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian too long and obscure, resolved to abridge it, and under his auspices the work was commenced A. D. 867, and proceeded to the fortieth book, which, at his death, remained unfinished. His son and successor, Leo Philosophus, continued the work, and published it, in sixty books, about the year 880. Constantine Porphyro-genitus, younger brother of Leo, revised the work, rearranged it, and republished it, A. D. 947. From that time the laws of Justinian ceased to have any force in the eastern empire, and the Basilica were the foundation of the law observed there till Constantine XIII., the last of the Greek emperors, under whom, in 1453, Constantinople was taken by Mahomet the Turk, who put an end to the empire and its laws. Histoire de la Jurisprudence; Etienne, Intr. à l'Etude du Droit Romain, § 53. The Basilica were translated into Latin by J. Cujas (Cujacius), Professor of Law in the University of Bourges, and published at Lyons, 22d of January, 1566, in one folio volume.

BASTARD (bas or bast, abject, low, base, aerd, nature).

One born of an illicit connection, and before the lawful marriage of its parents.

One begotton and born out of lawful wedlock; 2 Kent, 208.

One born of an illicit union. La Civ. Code, art. 29, 199.

The second definition, which is substantially the same as Blackstone's, is open to the objection that it does not include with sufficient certainty those cases where children are born during wedlock but are not the children of the mother's husband.

The term is said to include those born of parties under disability to contract marriage, as slaves; 30 Tex. 115.

A child is a bastard if born before the marriage of his parents, but he is not a bastard if born after marriage, although begotten before; 1 Bla. Com. 455, 456; 8 East, 210, 211; 13 Ired. 502. By the civil law and statute law of many of the states, a subsequent marriage of the parents legitimates children born prior thereto. The rule prevails substantially in Alabama, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Vermont, and Virginia, with somewhat varying provisions in the different states; 2 Kent, 210. See HEIR.

A child is a bastard if born during coverture under such circumstances as to make it impossible that the husband of his mother can be his father; 6 Binn. 283; 1 P. A. Browne, App. xlvii.; 19 Mart. La. 548; Hard. 479; 6 How. 550; 8 East, 193; Stra. 940; 4 Term, 356; 2 M. & K. 349; but a strong moral impossibility, or such improbability as to be beyond a reasonable doubt, is held sufficient; 2 Brock. 256; 3 Paige, Ch. 139; 15 Ga. 160; 13 Ired. 502. As to who may be admitted to prove non-access, see 3 E. L. & Eq. 100; 2 Munf. 442; 15 Barb. 286; 15 N. H. 45; 29 Penn. 420. See 1 Burge, Col. Law, 57–92; 1 Bla. Com. 458; Gardner Peerage Case, Le Marchant's report; 5 C. & F. 163; 12 La. Ann. 853.

A child is a bastard if born beyond a competent time after the coverture has determined; Coke, Litt. 123 b, Hargrave & B. note; 2 Kent, 210.

The principal right which a bastard child has is that of maintenance from his parents; 1 Bla. Com. 458; La. Civ. Code, §§ 254–262 (though not from his father at common law; Schoul. Dom. Rel. *384); which may be secured by the public officers who would be charged with the support of the child, by a peculiar process, or in some cases by the mother; 2 Kent, 215. A bastard has no inheritable blood at common law; but he may take by devise if described by the name he has gained by reputation; 1 Ves. & B. 423; 1 Atk. 410; 3 Dana, 233; 4 Pick. 93; 4 Des. 434. See 5 Ves. Ch. 530. In many of the states, by statute, bastards can inherit from and transmit to their mothers real and personal estate under some modifications; 2 Kent, 213; Schoul. Dom. Rel. *381. See HEIR.

BASTARD EIGNE. Bastard elder.

By the old English law, when a man had a bastard son, and he afterwards married the mother, and by her had a legitimate son, the first was called a bastard eigné, or, as it is now spelled, aîné, and the second son was called puisné, or since born, or sometimes he was called muller puisné. See 2 Bla. Com. 248.

BASTARDA. A female bastard. Calvinus, Lex.

BASTARDY. The offence of begetting a bastard child. The condition of a bastard.

BASTARDY PROCESS. The statutory mode of proceeding against the putative father of a bastard to secure a proper maintenance for the bastard.

BASTON. In Old English Law. A staff or club.

In some old English statutes the servants or officers of the wardens of the fleet are so called, because they attended the king's courts with a red staff.

BATTEL. Trial by combat.

It was called also wager of battel or battaile, and could be claimed in appeals of felony. It was of frequent use in affairs of chivalry and honor, and in civil cases upon certain issues. Coke, Litt. § 294. It was not abolished in England till the enactment of stat. 59 Geo. III. c. 46. See 1 B. & Ald. 405; 3 Bla. Com. 339; 4 id. 347; APPEAL. This mode of trial was not peculiar to England. The emperor Otho, 983, held a diet at Verona, at which several sovereigns and great lords of Italy, Germany, and France were present. In order to put a stop to the frequent perjuries in judicial trials, this diet substituted in all cases, even in those which followed the course of the Roman law, proof by combat for proof by oath. Henrion de Pansey, Auth. Judic. Introd. c. 3. And for a detailed account of this mode of trial, see Herbert, Inns of Court, 119–145.

BATTERY. Any unlawful beating, or other wrongful physical violence or constraint, inflicted on a human being without his consent; 2 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 71; 17 Ala. 540; 9 N. H. 491.

It must be either wilfully committed, or proceed from want of due care; Stra. 596; Hob. 134; Plowd. 19; 3 Wend. 391. Hence an injury, be it never so small, done to the person of another in an angry, spiteful, rude, or insolent manner, 9 Pick. 1, as by spitting in his face, 6 Mod. 172, or on his body, 1

Swint. 597, or any way touching him in anger, 1 Russell, Cr. 751; 17 Tex. 515; or throwing water on him, 3 N. & P. 564, or violently jostling him, see 4 H. & N. 481, are batteries in the eye of the law, 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 263. See 1 Selwyn, N. P. 33. And any thing attached to the person partakes of its inviolability: if, therefore, A strikes a cane in the hands of B, it is a battery; 1 Dall. 114; 1 Penn. 380; 1 Hill, So. C. 46; 4 Denio, 453; 4 Wash. C. C. 534; 1 Baldw. 600. Whether striking a horse is striking the driver, see 43 Ind. 146.

A battery may be justified on various accounts.

As a salutary mode of correction. A parent may correct his child (though if done to excess, it is battery; 121 Mass. 66; 64 Ga. 281; 62 Ill. 354); a master his apprentice; 24 Edw. IV.; 4 Gray, 36; 2 Dev. & B. 365; a teacher his scholar, within reason; 45 Iowa, 248; 68 N. C. 322; 40 Barb. 541; a master, ordinarily, not his servant; 1 Ashm. 267; 6 Tex. App. 133; and a superior officer, one under his command; Keilw. 136; Buller, N. P. 19; Bee, Adm. 161; 1 Bay, 3; 14 Johns. 119; 15 Mass. 365. And see Cowp. 173; 15 Mass. 347; 3 C. & K. 142. As to guardian and ward, see 43 Tex. 167.

As a means of preserving the peace, in the exercise of an office, under process of court, and in aid of an authority at law. See ARREST.

As a necessary means of defence of the person against the plaintiff's assaults in the following instances: in defence of himself, his wife, 3 Salk. 46, his child, and his servant, Ow. 150 (but see 1 Salk. 407). So, likewise, the wife may justify a battery in defending her husband; Ld. Raym. 62; the child its parent; 3 Salk. 46; and the servant his master. In these situations, the party need not wait until a blow has been given; for then he might come too late, and be disabled from warding off a second stroke or from protecting the person assailed. Care, however, must be taken that the battery do not exceed the bounds of necessary defence and protection; for it is only permitted as a means to avert an impending evil which might otherwise overwhelm the party, and not as a punishment or retaliation for the injurious attempt; Stra. 593; 1 Cons. So. C. 34; 4 Vt. 629; 4 J. J. Marsh. 578; 2 Whart. Cr. Law, § 618 et seq. The degree of force necessary to repel an assault will naturally depend upon, and be proportioned to, the violence of the assailant; but with this limitation any degree is justifiable; 1 Ld. Raym. 177; 2 Salk. 642; 11 Humphr. 200; 4 Barb. 460; 2 N. Y. 193; 1 Ohio St. 66; 23 Ala. 17, 28; 14 B. Monr. 614; 18 id. 49; 16 Ill. 17; 5 Ga. 85.

A battery may likewise be justified in the necessary defence of one's property; 12 Vt. 437; 69 N. Y. 101. If the plaintiff is in the act of entering peaceably upon the defendant's land, or, having entered, is discovered, not committing violence, a request to depart is necessary in the first instance; 2 Salk. 641; 80 Ill. 92; see 121 Mass. 309; and if the plaintiff refuses, the defendant may then, and not till then, gently lay hands upon the plaintiff to remove him from the close, and for this purpose may use, if necessary, any degree of force short of striking the plaintiff, as by thrusting him off; Skinn. 28. If the plaintiff resists, the defendant may oppose force to force; 8 Term, 78; 2 Metc. Mass. 23; 1 C. & P. 6. But if the plaintiff is in the act of forcibly entering upon the land, or, having entered, is discovered subverting the soil, cutting down a tree, or the like, 2 Salk. 641, a previous request is unnecessary, and the defendant may immediately lay hands upon the plaintiff; 8 Term, 78. A man may justify a battery in defence of his personal property without a previous request, if another forcibly attempt to take away such property; 2 Salk. 641. As to the rights of railroad-superintendents over the station-houses of the company in this respect, see 7 Metc. Mass. 596; 12 id. 482; 4 Cush. 608; 6 Cox, Cr. Cas. 461.

BATTURE (Fr. shoals, shallows). An elevation of the bed of a river under the surface of the water; but it is sometimes used to signify the same elevation when it has risen above the surface. 6 Mart. La. 19, 216.

The term battures is applied principally to certain portions of the bed of the river Mississippi, which are left dry when the water is low, and are covered again, either in whole or in part, by the annual swells.

BAWDY-HOUSE. A house of ill-fame, kept for the resort and unlawful commerce of lewd people of both sexes. 5 Ired. 603.

It must be reputed of ill-fame; 17 Conn. 467; but see 4 Cranch, 338, 372; may be a single room; 1 Salk. 382; 2 Ld. Raym. 1197; 46 N. H. 61; 31 Conn. 172; and more than one woman must live or resort there; 5 Ired. 603. It need not be kept for lucre; 21 N. H. 345; 97 Mass. 225; 18 Vt. 70. Such a house is a common nuisance; 1 Russell, Crimes, 299; Bacon, Abr. Nuisances; and the keeper may be indicted, and, if a married woman, either alone or with her husband; 1 Metc. Mass. 151. One who assists in establishing such a house is guilty of an indictable misdemeanor; 2 B. Monr. 417; including a lessor who has knowledge; 3 Pick. 26; 6 Gill, 425; see 29 Mich. 269; 50 Mo. 535. A charge of keeping a bawdy-house is actionable, because it is an offence which is indictable at common law as a common nuisance; 13 Johns. 275; 5 M. & W. 249. The reputation of the house and its visitors is sufficient proof; 17 Fla. 183.

BAY. An enclosure, or other contrivance, to keep in the water for the supply of a mill, so that the water may be able to drive the wheels of such mill. Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 19.

BAYOU. A stream which is the outlet of a swamp near the sea. Applied to the creeks in the lowlands lying on the Gulf of Mexico.

BEACONAGE. Money paid for the maintenance of a beacon. Comyns, Dig. Navigation (H).

BEADLE (Sax. beodan, to bid). A church servant chosen by the vestry, whose business it is to attend the vestry, to give notice of its meetings, to execute its orders, to attend upon inquests, and to assist the constables.

BEARER. One who bears or carries a thing.

If a bill or note be made payable to bearer, it will pass by delivery only, without indorsement; and whoever fairly acquires a right to it may maintain an action against the drawer or acceptor.

It has been decided that the bearer of a bank note, payable to bearer, is not an assignee of a chose in action within the eleventh section of the judiciary act of 1789, c. 20, limiting the jurisdiction of the circuit court; 3 Mas. 308.

BEARERS. Such as bear down or oppress others; maintainers.

BEARING DATE. Words frequently used in pleading and conveyancing to introduce the date which has been put upon an instrument.

When in a declaration the plaintiff alleges that the defendant made his promissory note on such a day, he will not be considered as having alleged that it bore date on that day, so as to cause a variance between the declaration and the note produced bearing a different date; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 160; 2 Dowl. & L. 759.

BEASTS OF THE CHASE. Properly, the buck, doe, fox, martin, and roe, but in a common and legal sense extending likewise to all the beasts of the forest, which beside the others are reckoned to be the hind, hare, bear, and wolf, and, in a word, all wild beasts of venery or hunting. Coke, Litt. 233; 2 Bla. Com. 39.

BEASTS OF THE FOREST. See BEASTS OF THE CHASE.

BEASTS OF THE WARREN. Hares, coneys, and roes. Coke, Litt. 233; 2 Bla. Com. 39.

BEAUPLEADER (L. Fr. fair pleading). A writ of prohibition directed to the sheriff or other, directing him not to take a fine for beaupleader.

There was anciently a fine imposed called a fine for beaupleader, which is explained by Coke to have been originally imposed for bad pleading. Coke, 2d Inst. 123. It was set at the will of the judge of the court, and reduced to certainty by consent, and annually paid. Comyns, Dig. Prerogative (D, 52). The statute of Marlebridge (52 Hen. III.), c. 11, enacts, that neither in the circuit of justices, nor in counties, hundreds, or courts-baron, any fines shall be taken for fair pleading; namely, for not pleading fairly or aptly to the purpose. Upon this statute this writ was ordained, directed to the sheriff, bailiff, or him who shall demand the fine; and it is a prohibition or command not to do it: New Nat. Brev. 596; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 270 a; Hall, Hist. Comm. Law, c. 7. Mr. Reeve explains it as a fine paid for the privilege of a fair hearing; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 70. This latter view would perhaps derive some confirmation from the connection in point of time of this statute with Magna Charta, and the resemblance which the custom bore to the other customs against which the clause in the charter of nulli vendemus, etc., was directed. See Comyns, Dig. Prerogative (D, 51, 52); Cowel; Coke, 2d Inst. 122, 123; Crabb, Eng. Law, 150.

BED. The channel of a stream; the part between the banks worn by the regular flow of the water. See 13 How. 426.

The phrase, divorce from bed and board, contains a legal use of the word synonymous with its popular use.

BEDEL. In English Law. A crier or messenger of court, who summons men to appear and answer therein; Cowel. An inferior officer in a parish or liberty. See BEADLE.

BEDELARY. The jurisdiction of a bedel, as a bailiwick is the jurisdiction of a bailiff. Coke, Litt. 234 b; Cowel.

BEDEREPE. A service which certain tenants were anciently bound to perform, as to reap their landlord's corn at harvest. Said by Whishaw to be still in existence in some parts of England. Blount; Cowel; Whishaw.

BEES are animals feræ naturæ while unreclaimed; 3 Binn. 546; 13 Miss. 333. See Inst. 2. 1. 14; Dig. 41. 1. 5. 2; 7 Johns. 16; 2 Bla. Com. 392. If while so unreclaimed they take up their abode in a tree, they belong to the owner of the soil, but not so if reclaimed and they can be identified; 15 Wend. 550. See 1 Cow. 243; 2 Dev. 162.

BEGGAR. One who obtains his livelihood by asking alms. The laws of several of the states punish begging as an offence. See TRAMP.

BEHAVIOR. Manner of having, holding, or keeping one's self; carriage of one's self, with respect to propriety, morals, and the requirements of law. Surety to be of good behavior is a larger requirement than surety to keep the peace; Dalton, c. 122; 4 Burns, Just. 355.

BEHETRIA (Arabic, without nobility or lordship).

In Spanish Law. Lands situated in districts and manors in which the inhabitants had the right to select their own lords.

Behetrias were of two kinds: Behetrias de entre parientes, when the choice was restricted to a relation of the deceased lord; and Behetrias de mar a mar, when the choice was unrestricted.

The lord, when elected, enjoyed various privileges, called Yantar, Conducho, Martiniego, Marzadga, Infurcion, etc., which see. These contributions were intended for his maintenance, the construction of his dwelling, the support of his family and his followers, etc.; Escriche, Dicc. Raz.; Sempere y Guarinos, Vinculos y Mayorazgos, p. 67, etc. See also on this subject Fuero Viejo de Castilla, b. 1, tit. 8; Las Partidas, tit. 25, p. 4; El Ordenamiento de Acala in different laws in tit. 32. See likewise book 6, tit. 1, of the Novisima Recopilacion.

BEHOOF (Sax.). Use; service; profit; advantage. It occurs in conveyances.

BELIEF. Conviction of the mind, arising not from actual perception or knowledge, but by way of inference, or from evidence received or information derived from others.

Belief may evidently be stronger or weaker according to the weight of evidence adduced in favor of the proposition to which belief is granted or refused; 4 S. & R. 137; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 7–13. See 1 Stark. Ev. 41; 2 Powell, Mortg. 555; 1 Ves. Ch. 95; 12 id. 80; Dy. 53; 2 W. Blackst. 881; 8 Watts, 406; 38 Ind. 504.

BELLIGERENT. Actually at war.

Applied to nations; Wheaton, Int. Law, 380 et seq.; 1 Kent, 89. See WAR.

BELOW. Inferior; preliminary. The court below is the court from which a cause has been removed. See BAIL.

BENCH. A tribunal for the administration of justice.

The judges taken collectively, as distinguished from counsellors and advocates, who are called the bar.

The term, indicating originally the seat of the judges, came to denote the body of judges taken collectively, and also the tribunal itself. The jus banci, says Spelman, properly belongs to the king's judges, who administer justice in the last resort. The judges of the inferior courts, as of the barons, are deemed to judge piano pede, and are such as are called in the civil law pedanei judices, or by the Greeks χαμαιδικαστὰι, that is humi judicantes. The Grecks called the seats of their higher judges ἕδραι, and of their inferior judges βάθρα. The Romans used the word sella and tribunalia to designate the seats of their higher judges, and subsellia to designate those of the lower. See Spelman, Gloss., Bancus; 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 40, 4to ed.

"The court of common pleas in England was formerly called Bancus, the Bench, as distinguished from Bancus Regis, the King's Bench. It was also called Communis Bancus, the Common Bench; and this title is still retained by the reporters of the decisions in the court of Common Pleas. Mention is made in the Magna Charta 'de justiciariis nostris de Banco,' which all men know to be the justices of the court of Common Pleas, commonly called the Common Bench, or the Bench." Viner, Abr. Courts (n. 2).

BENCH WARRANT. An order issued by or from a bench, for the attachment or arrest of a person. It may issue either in case of a contempt, or where an indictment has been found.

BENCHER. A senior in the Inns of Court, intrusted with their government or direction.

The benchers have the absolute and irresponsible power of punishing a barrister guilty of misconduct, by either admonishing or rebuking him, by prohibiting him from dining in the hall, or even by expelling him from the bar, called disbarring. They might also refuse admission to a student, or reject his call to the bar. Wharton, Lex.

BENEFICE. An ecclesiastical preferment.

In its more extended sense, it includes any such preferment; in a more limited sense, it applies to rectories and vicarages only. See BENEFICIUM.

BENEFICIAL INTEREST. Profit, benefit, or advantage resulting from a contract, or the ownership of an estate as distinct from the legal ownership or control.

A cestui que trust has the beneficial interest in a trust estate while the trustee has the legal estate. If A makes a contract with B to pay C a sum of money, C has the beneficial interest in the contract.

BENEFICIARY. A term suggested by Judge Story as a substitute for cestui que trust, and adopted to some extent. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 321.

BENEFICIO PRIMO (more fully, beneficio primo ecclesiastico habendo). A writ directed from the king to the chancellor, commanding him to bestow the benefice which shall first fall in the king's gift, above or under a certain value, upon a particular and certain person. Reg. Orig. 307.

BENEFICIUM (Lat. beneficere). A portion of land or other immovable thing granted by a lord to his followers for their stipend or maintenance.

A general term applied to ecclesiastical livings. 4 Bla. Com. 107; Cowel.

In the early feudal times, grants were made to continue only during the pleasure of the grantor, which were called munera; but soon afterwards these grants were made for life, and then they assumed the name of beneficia. Dalrymple, Feud. Pr. 199. Pomponius Lætus, as cited by Hotoman, De Feudis, c. 2, says, "That it was an ancient custom, revived by the Emperor Constantine, to give lands and villas to those generals, prefects, and tribunes who had grown old in enlarging the empire, to supply their necessities as long as they lived, which they called parochial parishes, etc. But between (feuda) fiefs or feuds and (parochias) parishes there was this difference, that the latter were given to old men, veterans, etc., who, as they deserved well of the republic, were sustained the rest of their life (publico beneficio) by the public benefaction; or, if any war afterwards arose, they were called out not so much as soldiers as leaders (magistri militum). Feuds (feuda), on the other hand, were usually given to robust young men who could sustain the labors of war. In later times, the word parochia was appropriated exclusively to ecclesiastical persons, while the word beneficium (militare) continued to be used in reference to military fiefs or fees."

In Civil Law. Any favor or privilege.

BENEFICIUM CLERICALE. Benefit of clergy, which see.

BENEFICIUM COMPETENTIÆ. In Scotch Law. The privilege of retaining a competence belonging to the obligor in a gratuitous obligation. Such a claim constitutes a good defence in part to an action on the bond. Paterson, Comp.

In Civil Law. The right which an insolvent debtor had, among the Romans, on making cession of his property for the benefit of his creditors, to retain what was required for him to live honestly according to his condition. 7 Toullier, n. 358.

BENEFICIUM DIVISIONIS. In Scotch and Civil Law. A privilege whereby a co-surety may insist upon paying only his share of the debt along with the other sureties. In Scotch law this is lost if the cautioners (sureties) bind themselves "conjunctly and severally." Erskine, Inst. lib. 3, tit. 3, § 63.

BENEFICIUM ORDINIS. In Scotch and Civil Law. The privilege of the surety allowing him to require that the creditor shall take complete legal proceedings against the debtor to exhaust him before he calls upon the surety. 1 Bell, Com. 347.

BENEFIT OF CESSION. In Civil Law. The release of a debtor from future imprisonment for his debts, which the law operates in his favor upon the surrender of his property for the benefit of his creditors. Pothier, Procéd. Civ. 5ème part. c. 2, § 1.

This was something like a discharge under the insolvent laws, which releases the person of the debtor, but not the goods he may acquire afterwards. See BANKRUPT; CESSIO BONORUM; INSOLVENT.

BENEFIT OF CLERGY. In English Law. An exemption of the punishment of death which the laws impose on the commission of certain crimes, on the culprit demanding it. By modern statutes, benefit of clergy was rather a substitution of a more mild punishment for the punishment of death.

A clergyman was exempt from capital punishment toties quoties, as often as, from acquired habit, or otherwise, he repeated the same species of offence; the laity, provided they could read, were exempted only for a first offence; for a second, though of an entirely different nature, they were hanged. Among the laity, however, there was this distinction: peers and peeresses were discharged for their first fault without reading, or any punishment at all; commoners, if of the male sex and readers, were branded in the hand. Women commoners had no benefit of clergy. It occasionally happened, in offences committed jointly by a man and a woman, that the law of gavelkind was parodied—

"The woman to the bough,
The man to the plough."

Kelyng reports, "At the Lent Assizes for Winchester (18 Car. II.) the clerk appointed by the bishop to give clergy to the prisoners, being to give it to an old thief, I directed him to deal clearly with me, and not to say legit in case he could not read; and thereupon he delivered the book to him, and I perceived the prisoner never looked on the book at all; and yet the bishop's clerk, upon the demand of 'legit? or non legit?' answered, 'legit.' And thereupon I told him I doubted he was mistaken, and had the question again put to him; whereupon he answered again, something angrily, 'legit.' Then I bid the clerk of assizes not to record it, and I told the parson that he was not the judge whether the culprit could read or no, but a ministerial officer to make a true report to the court; and so I caused the prisoner to be brought near, and delivered him the book, when he confessed that he could not read. Whereupon I told the parson that he had unpreached more that day than he could preach up again in many days, and I fined him five marks." An instance of humanity is mentioned by Donne, of a culprit convicted of a non-clergyable offence prompting a convict for a clergyable one in reading his neck-verse. In the very curious collection of prolegomena to Coryat's Crudities are commendatory lines by Inigo Jones. The famous architect wrote,

"Whoever on this book with scorn would look,
May he at sessions crave, and want his book."

This section is taken from Ruins of Time exemplified in Hale's Pleas of the Crown, by Amos, p. 34. And see, further, 1 Salk. 61.

Benefit of clergy was afterwards granted, not only to the clergy, as was formerly the case, but to all persons. The benefit of clergy seems never to have been extended to the crime of high treason, nor to have embraced misdemeanors inferior to felony. It has been usually acknowledged as belonging to the common law of most of the United States; 1 Bishop, Cr. L. 938. See 1 Chitty, Cr. Law, 667–668; 4 Bla. Com. ch. 28; 1 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 936 et seq. But this privilege is now abolished in England, by stat. 7 and 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 6.

By the act of congress of April 30, 1790, it is provided, § 30, that the benefit of clergy shall not be used or allowed upon conviction of any crime for which, by any statute of the United States, the punishment is, or shall be declared to be, death.

BENEFIT OF DISCUSSION. In Civil Law. The right which a surety has to cause the property of the principal debtor to be applied in satisfaction of the obligation in the first instance. La Civ. Code, art. 3014–3020.

BENEFIT OF DIVISION. In Civil Law. The right of one of several joint sureties, when sued alone, to have the whole obligation apportioned amongst the solvent sureties, so that he need pay but his share. La Civ. Code, art. 3014–3020. See 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1414.

BENEFIT OF INVENTORY. In Civil Law. The privilege which the heir obtains of being liable for the charges and debts of the succession, only to the value of the effects of the succession, by causing an inventory of these effects within the time and manner prescribed by law. La Civ. Code, art. 1025; Pothier, des Success. c. 3, s. 3, a. 2. See also Paterson, Comp. as to the Scotch law upon this subject.

BENEVOLENCE. A voluntary gratuity given by the subjects to the king. Cowel.

Benevolences were first granted to Edward IV.; but under subsequent monarchs they became any thing but voluntary gifts, and in the Petition of Rights (3 Car. I.) it is made an article that no benevolence shall be extorted without the consent of parliament.

The illegal claim and collection of these benevolences was one of the prominently alleged causes of the rebellion of 1640. 1 Bla. Com. 140; 4 id. 436; Cowel.

BEQUEATH. To give personal property by will to another. 13 Barb. 106. The word may be construed devise, so as to pass real estate. Wigram, Wills, 11.

BEQUEST. A gift by will of personal property. See DEVISE.

BERCARIA. A sheep-fold. A tan-house or heath-house, where barks or rinds of trees are laid to tan. Domesday; Coke, Litt. 56.

BERCARIUS, BERCATOR. A shepherd.

BESAILE, BESAYLE. The great-grandfather, proavus. 1 Bla. Com. 186.

BEST EVIDENCE. Means the best evidence of which the nature of the case admits, not the highest or strongest evidence which the nature of the thing to be proved admits of: e. g. a copy of a deed is not the best evidence; the deed itself is better Gilbert, Ev. 15; Stark. Ev. 437; 2 Campb. 605; 3 id. 236; 1 Esp. 127; 1 Pet. 591; 7 id. 100.

The rule requiring the best evidence to be produced is to be understood of the best legal evidence; 2 S. & R. 34; 3 Bla. Com. 368, note 10, by Christian. It is relaxed in some cases, as, e. g., where the words or the act of the opposite party avow the fact to be proved. A tavern-keeper's sign avows his occupation; taking of tithes avows the clerical character. 2 S. & R. 440; 1 Saunders, Pl. 49. And see 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 82, 83; 1 Bishop, Cr. Prac. §§ 1080, 1081.

BETROTHMENT. A contract between a man and a woman, by which they agree that at a future time they will marry together.

The contract must be mutual; the promise of the one must be the consideration for the promise of the other. It must be obligatory on both parties at the same instant, so that each may have an action upon it, or it will bind neither; 1 Salk. 24; Carth. 467; 5 Mod. 411; 1 Freem. 95; 3 Kebl. 148; Coke, Litt. 79 a, b.

The parties must be able to contract. If either be married at the time of betrothment, the contract is void; but the married party cannot take advantage of his own wrong, and set up a marriage or previous engagement as an answer to the action for the breach of the contract, because this disability proceeds from the defendant's own act; 1 Ld. Raym. 387; 3 Inst. 89; 1 Sid. 112; 1 Bla. Com. 432.

The performance of this engagement, or completion of the marriage, must be accomplished within a reasonable time. Either party may, therefore, call upon the other to fulfil the engagement, and, in case of refusal or neglect to do so within a reasonable time after request made, may treat the betrothment as at an end, and bring action for the breach of the contract; 2 C. & P. 631. For a breach of the betrothment without a just cause, an action on the case may be maintained for the recovery of damages. It may be maintained by either party; Carth. 467; 1 Salk. 24.

BETTER EQUITY. The right which, in a court of equity, a second incumbrancer has who has taken securities against subsequent dealings to his prejudice, which a prior incumbrancer neglected to take although he had an opportunity. 1 Chanc. Prec. 470, n.; 4 Rawle, 144. See 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2462.

BETTERMENTS. Improvements made to an estate. It signifies such improvements as have been made to the estate which render it better than mere repairs. 11 Me. 482; 23 id. 110; 24 id. 192; 13 Ohio, 308; 10 Yerg. Tenn. 477; 13 Vt. 533; 17 id. 109. The term is also applied to denote the additional value which an estate acquires in consequence of some public improvement, as laying out or widening a street, etc.

BEYOND SEA. Out of the kingdom of England; out of the state; out of the United States.

The courts of Pennsylvania have decided that the phrase means "out of the United States;" 9 S. & R. 288; 2 Dall. 217. The same construction has been given to it in Missouri; 20 Mo. 530; so in North Carolina; 1 Dev. 16; 97 U. S. 638. Any place in Ireland is "beyond the sea," under 21 Jac. 1, c. 16; Show. 91. In Massachusetts, Maryland, Georgia, and South Carolina, it has been decided to mean out of the state; 1 Pick. 268; 1 Harr. & J. 350; 2 M'Cord, 331; 3 Bibb, 510; 3 Wheat. 541; 14 Pet. 141; 3 Cra. 173. See also 1 Johns. Cas. 76.

In the various statutes of limitation the term "out of the state" is now generally used.

BIAS. A particular influential power which sways the judgment; the inclination or propensity of the mind towards a particular object.

Justice requires that the judge should have no bias for or against any individual, and that his mind should be perfectly free to act as the law requires.

There is, however, one kind of bias which the courts suffer to influence them in their judgments: it is a bias favorable to a class of cases, or persons, as distinguished from an individual case or person. A few examples will explain this. A bias is felt on account of convenience; 1 Ves. Sen. 13, 14; 3 Atk. 524. It is also felt in favor of the heir at law, as when there is an heir on one side and a mere volunteer on the other; Willes, 570; 1 W. Bla. 256; Ambl. 645; 1 Ball & B. 309; 1 Wils. 310. On the other hand, the court leans against double portions for children; M'Clell. 356; 13 Price, 599; against double provisions, and double satisfactions; 3 Atk. 421; and against forfeitures; 3 Term, 172. As to jurors, see 2 Ga. 173; 12 Ga. 444. See, generally, 1 Burr. 419; 1 B. & P. 614; 3 id. 456; 2 Ves. Ch. 648; 1 Turn. & R. 350.

BICYCLE. It has been held in England that a bicycle is a carriage within the statute forbidding furious driving; L. R. 4 Q. B. D. 228. "In the absence of any legislative enactment forbidding them, riders of bicycles would seem to have the same rights on highways as those using any other vehicle; and the validity of any municipal ordinance prohibiting the use of bicycles in those parts of the streets would be very doubtful;" Cook, Highways, cited in 24 Alb. L. J. 282.

BID. An offer to pay a specified price for an article about to be sold at auction.

BIDDER. One who offers to pay a specified price for an article offered for sale at a public auction. 11 Ill. 254.

The bidder has a right to withdraw his bid at any time before it is accepted, which acceptance is generally manifested by knocking down the hammer; 3 Term, 148; Hard. 181; 3 Johns. Cas. 29; 6 Johns. 194; 8 id. 444; Sugden, Vend. 29; Babington, Auct. 30, 42; see 38 Me. 302; 2 Rich. So. C. 464; or the bid may be withdrawn by implication; 6 Penn. 486; 8 id. 408.

The bidder is required to act in good faith, and any combination between him and others, to prevent a fair competition, would avoid the sale made to himself; 3 B. & B. 116; 5 Rich. So. C. 541. But there is nothing illegal in two or more persons agreeing together to purchase a property at sheriff's sale, fixing a certain price which they are willing to give, and appointing one of their number to be the bidder; 6 W. & S. 122; 3 Gilm. 529; 11 Paige, Ch. 431; 15 How. 494; 3 Stor. 623.

In Pennsylvania the writ of mandamus will not lie to compel city authorities to award a contract to the lowest bidder, where, in the exercise of their discretion, they have decided that the faithful performance of the contract requires a judgment and skill which he does not possess, notwithstanding his pecuniary ability to furnish good security; 82 Penn. 343.

BIENS (Fr. goods). Property of every description, except estates of freehold and inheritance. Sugden, Vend. 495; Coke, Litt. 119 b; Dane, Abr.

In the French law, this term includes all kinds of property, real and personal. Biens are divided into biens meubles, movable property; and biens immeubles, immovable property. The distinction between movable and immovable property is recognized by them, and gives rise, in the civil as well as in the common law, to many important distinctions as to rights and remedies. Story, Confl. Laws, § 13, note 1.

BIGAMUS. In Civil Law. One who had been twice married, whether both wives were alive at the same time or not. One who had married a widow.

Especially used in ecclesiastical matters as a reason for denying benefit of the clergy. Termes de la Ley.

BIGAMY. The wilfully contracting a second marriage when the contracting party knows that the first is still subsisting.

The state of a man who has two wives, or of a woman who has two husbands, living at the same time.

When the man has more than two wives, or the woman more than two husbands, living at the same time, then the party is said to have committed polygamy; but the name of bigamy is more frequently given to this offence in legal proceedings. 1 Russell, Crimes, 187.

According to the canonists, bigamy is threefold, viz.: (vera, interpretativa, et similitudinaria) real, interpretative, and similitudinary. The first consisted in marrying two wives successively (virgins they may be), or in once marrying a widow; the second consisted, not in a repeated marriage, but in marrying (v. g. meretricem vel ab alio corruptam) a harlot; the third arose from two marriages, indeed, but the one metaphorical or spiritual, the other carnal. This last was confined to persons initiated in sacred orders, or under the vow of continence. Deferriere's Tract. Juris Canon. tit. xxi. See also Bacon, Abr. Marriage.

In England this crime is punishable by the stat. 1 Jac. I. c. 11, which maks the offence felony; but it exempts from punishment the party whose husband or wife shall continue to remain absent for seven years before the second marriage without being heard from, and persons who shall have been legally divorced. The statutory provisions in the United States against bigamy or polygamy are in general similar to, and copied from, the statute of 1 Jac. I. c. 11, excepting as to the punishment. The several exceptions to this statute are also nearly the same in the American statutes; but the punishment of the offence is different in many of the states; 2 Kent, 69.

If a woman, who has a husband living, marries another person, she is punishable, though her husband has voluntarily withdrawn from her and remained absent and unheard of for any term of time less than seven years, and though she honestly believes, at the time of her second marriage, that he is dead; 7 Metc. 472. See a discussion of this case by Mr. Bishop, in which he dissents from its ruling, in 4 So. L. J. (N. S.) 153. Also, 12 Am. L. Rev. 471. The same rule now obtains in England, after some conflict of opinion; 14 Cox, C. C. 45; but quære, if her belief were founded on positive evidence; Steph. Dig. Cr. Law, art. 34, n. 9. On the trial of a woman for bigamy whose first husband had been absent from her for more than seven years, the jury found that they had no evidence that at the time of her second marriage she knew that he was alive, but that she had the means of acquiring knowledge of that fact had she chosen to make use of them. It was held that upon this finding the conviction could not be supported; 1 Dearsl. & B. Cr. Cas. 98. If a man is prosecuted for bigamy, his first wife cannot be called to prove her marriage with the defendant; T. Raym. 1; 44 Ala. 24; 15 Low. Can. J. 21; nor it seems even to prove that the first marriage was invalid; 4 Up. Can. Q. B. 588; but see as to this last point, 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1709. When the first marriage is proved to the satisfaction of the court, the second husband is admissible as a witness for or against the defendant; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 397; 3 Ired. 346; 12 Minn. 476; 4 Up. Can. (Q. B.) 588; 103 U. S. 304.

It is no defence that polygamy is a religious belief; 1 Utah, 226; 98 U. S. 145.

Where the first marriage was made abroad, it must be shown to have been valid where made; 5 Mich. 349. Reputation and cohabitation are not sufficient to establish the fact of the first marriage; 1 Park. Cr. Cas. 378. The first marriage may be proved by admission of the prisoner; 103 U. S. 304; 46 Ind. 175. See 1 Park. Cr. Cas. 378. If the second marriage be in a foreign state, it is not bigamy; 2 Park. Cr. Cas. 195; except by statute; 36 E. L. & Eq. 614. The second marriage need not be a valid one; 1 C. & K. 144.

BILAN. A book in which bankers, merchants, and traders write a statement of all they owe and all that is due to them. A balance sheet. 3 Mart. La. N. S. 446. The term is used in Louisiana, and is derived from the French. 5 id. 158.

BILATERAL CONTRACT. A contract in which both the contracting parties are bound to fulfil obligations reciprocally towards each other. Leç. Elém. § 781. See CONTRACT.

BILINE. Collateral.

BILINGUIS. Using two languages.

A term formerly applied to juries half of one nation and half of another. Plowd. 2.

BILL (Lat. billa).

In Chancery Practice. A complaint in writing addressed to the chancellor, containing the names of the parties to the suit, both complainant and defendant, a statement of the facts on which the complainant relies, and the allegations which he makes, with an averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity, and a prayer for relief and proper process.

Its office in a chancery suit is the same as a declaration in an action at law, a libel in a court of admiralty, or an allegation in the spiritual courts.

A bill usually consists of nine parts, which contain—the address, which must be to the chancellor, court, or judge acting as such; the names of the plaintiffs and their descriptions, but the statement of the parties in this part of the bill merely is not sufficient; 2 Ves. & B. 327; the statement of the plaintiff's case, called the stating part, which should contain a distinct though general statement of every material fact to which the plaintiff means to offer evidence; 1 Brown, Ch. 94; 3 Swanst. 472; 3 P. Wms. 276; 2 Atk. 96; 1 Vern. 483; 11 Ves. Ch. 240; 2 Hare, 264; 6 Johns. 565; 1 Woodb. & M. 34; Story, Eq. Pl. § 265 a; a general charge of confederacy; the allegations of the defendant's pretences, and charges in evidence of them; the clause of jurisdiction, and an averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity; a prayer that the defendant may answer the interrogatories, usually called the interrogatory part; the prayer for relief; the prayer for process; 2 Madd. 166; 4 Halst. Ch. 143; 1 Midford, Eq. Pl. 41.

By the twenty-first of the Rules of Practice for the Courts of Equity of the United States, promulgated by the supreme court Jan. 1842, it is provided that the plaintiff in his bill shall be at liberty to omit, at his option, the part which is usually called the common confederacy clause of the bill, avowing a confederacy between the defendants to injure or defraud the plaintiff; also what is commonly called the charging part of the bill, setting forth the matters or excuses which the defendant is supposed to intend to set up by way of defence to the bill; also what is commonly called the jurisdiction clause of the bill, that the acts complained of are contrary to equity, and that the defendant is without any remedy at law. By the rule the 4th, 5th, and 6th parts of the bill as above stated are dispensed with. And see Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 29–34. And this seems to be now the more common practice, except where fraud and combination are to be specifically charged; 27 N. H. 506.

The bill must be signed by counsel, and the facts contained therein, so far as known to the complainant, must in some cases be supported by affidavit annexed to the bill; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. *392; these are cases where some preliminary relief is required; id. *312; 4 C. E. Green, 180; 24 Rule, Eq. U. S. S. C. A bill filed by a corporation need not be under seal; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 371; 4 Halst. Ch. 136.

Bills are said to be original; not original, or in the nature of original bills.

Original bills are those which do, and which do not, pray for relief.

Those which pray for relief are either bills praying the decree or order touching some right claimed by the party exhibiting the bill, in opposition to some right, real or supposed, claimed by the party against whom the bill is exhibited, or touching some wrong done in violation of the plaintiff's right, which is the most common kind of bill; Mitf. Eq. Pl. Jerem. ed. 34–37; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 305 et seq.

Those which do not pray for relief are either to perpetuate testimony; to examine witnesses de bene esse; or for discovery.

Bills not original are either supplemental; of revivor; or of revivor and supplement.

Those of revivor and supplement are either a cross bill; a bill of review; a bill to impeach a decree; to suspend the operation, or avoid the decree for subsequent matter; to carry a decree into effect; or partaking of the qualities of some one or all of them. See Mitf. Eq. Pl. 35–37; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 18–21.

For an account of these bills, consult the various articles which follow.

As a Contract. An obligation; a deed, whereby the obligor acknowledges himself to owe unto the obligee a certain sum of money or some other thing, in which, besides the names of the parties, are to be considered the sum or thing due, the time, place, and manner of payment or delivery thereof. It may be indented or poll, and with or without a penalty. West, Symb. §§ 100, 101.

This signification came to include all contracts evidenced by writing, whether specialties or parol, but is no longer in use except in phrases, such as bill payable, bill of lading.

In Legislation. A special act passed by the legislature in the exercise of a quasi judicial power. Thus, bills of attainder, bills of pains and penalties, are spoken of. See BILL OF ATTAINDER; BILL OF PAINS AND PENALTIES.

The draft of a law submitted to the consideration of a legislative body for its adoption; 26 Penn. 450. By the constitution of the United States, all bills for raising revenue must originate in the house of representatives; but the senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills. Every bill, before it becomes a law, must be approved by the president of the United States, or within ten days returned, with his objections, to the house in which it originated. Two-thirds of each house may then enact it into a law. These provisions are copied in the constitutions of most of the states; U. S. Const. art. 1, § 7. As to the mode of passing bills in congress, see Shepherd, Const. 94; 2 Story, Const. § 893 et seq.

In Mercantile Law. The creditor's written statement of his claim, specifying the items.

It differs from an account stated in this, that a bill is the creditor's statement; an account stated is a statement which has been assented to by both parties.

In England it has been held that a bill thus rendered is conclusive against the party making it out against an increase of charge on any of the items contained in it; and strong evidence as to items; 1 B. & P. 49. But in New York it has been held that merely presenting a bill, no payment or agreement as to the amount being shown, does not conclude the party from suing for a larger sum; 16 N. Y. 389.

BILL OF ADVENTURE. A writing signed by a merchant, ship-owner, or master to testify that goods shipped on board a certain vessel are at the venture of another person, he himself being answerable only for the produce.

BILL OF ADVOCATION. In Scotch Law.

A petition in writing, by which a party to a cause applies to the supreme court to call the action out of the inferior court to itself.

BILL TO CARRY A DECREE INTO EXECUTION. In Equity Practice. One which is filed when, from the neglect of parties or some other cause, it may become impossible to carry a decree into execution without the further decree of the court; Hinde, Ch. Pr. 68; Story, Eq. Pl. § 42*a*.

BILL OF CERTIORARI. In Equity Practice. One praying for a writ of certiorari to remove a cause from an inferior court of equity; Cooper, Eq. 44. Such a bill must state the proceedings in the inferior court, and the incompetency of such court by suggestion of the reason why justice is not likely to be done—as, distances of witnesses, lack of jurisdiction, etc.,—and must pray a writ of certiorari to remove the record and the cause to the superior court. Wyatt, Pr. Reg. 82; Harrison, Ch. Pr. 49; Story, Eq. Pl. § 298. It is rarely used in the United States.

BILL CHAMBER. In Scotch Law. A department of the court of session in which petitions for suspension, interdict, etc., are entertained. It is equivalent to sittings in chambers in the English and American practice. Paterson, Comp.

BILL OF CONFORMITY. In Equity Practice. One filed by an executor or administrator, who finds the affairs of the deceased so much involved that he cannot safely administer the estate except under the direction of a court of chancery. This bill is filed against the creditors, generally, for the purpose of having all their claims adjusted, and procuring a final decree settling the order of payment of the assets. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 440.

BILL OF COSTS. In Practice. A statement of the items which form the total amount of the costs of a suit or action. It must be taxed by the proper officer of the court, and is demandable as a matter of right before the payment of the costs. See COSTS; TAXING COSTS.

Consult, for the English rules, 7 C. B. 742; 8 id. 331; 6 Dowl. & L. 691; 13 Q. B. 308; 13 Lond. Jur. 680; 14 id. 14, 65.

BILL OF CREDIT. Paper issued by the authority of a state on the faith of the state, and designed to circulate as money; 11 Pet. 257.

Promissory notes or bills issued by a state government, exclusively, on the credit of the state, and intended to circulate through the community for its ordinary purposes as money, redeemable at a future day, and for the payment of which the faith of the state is pledged; 4 Kent, 408.

The constitution of the United States provides that no state shall emit bills of credit, or make any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts. U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10. This prohibition, it seems, does not apply to bills issued by a bank owned by the state but having a specific capital set apart; 2 M'Cord, 12; 4 Ark. 44; 11 Pet. 257; 13 How. 12; but see 4 Pet. 410; 2 Ill. 87; nor does it apply to notes issued by corporations or individuals which are not made legal tender; 4 Kent, 408, and notes. See 2 Pet. 318; 4 Dall. xxiii.; 3 Wall. Jr. 381; Story, Const. §§ 1362–1364. As to the power of usurping governments to bind the public faith for the redemption of notes issued by a revolutionary power, see 35 Ga. 330; 1 Abb. U. S. 261.

In Mercantile Law. A letter sent by an agent or other person to a merchant, desiring him to give credit to the bearer for goods or money. Comyns, Dig. Merchant, F, 3; 3 Burr. 1667; 13 Miss. 491; 4 Ark. 44; R. M. Charlt. 151.

BILL OF DEBT. An ancient term including promissory notes and bonds for the payment of money. Comyns, Dig. Merchant, F, 2.

BILL OF DISCOVERY. In Equity Practice. One which prays for the discovery of facts resting within the knowledge of the person against whom the bill is exhibited, or of deeds, writings, or other things in his custody or power. Hinde, Ch. Pr. 20; Blake, Chanc. Pract. 37.

It does not seek for relief in consequence of the discovery (and this constitutes its characteristic feature), though it may ask for a stay of proceedings till discovery is made; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1483; and such relief as does not require a hearing before the court, it is said, may be part of the prayer; Eden, Inj. 78; 19 Ves. Ch. 376; 4 Madd. 247; 5 id. 218; 1 Schoales & L. 316; 1 Sim. & S. 83.

It is commonly used in aid of the jurisdiction of a court of law, to enable the party who prosecutes or defends a suit at law to obtain a discovery of the facts which are material to such prosecution or defence; Hare, Discov. 119; 9 Paige, Ch. 580, 622, 637. A defendant in equity may obtain the same relief by a cross bill; Langd. Eq. Pl. § 128.

The plaintiff must be entitled to the discovery he seeks, and can only have a discovery of what is necessary for his own title, as of deeds he claims under, and not to pry into that of the defendant; 2 Ves. Ch. 445. See Mitford, Eq. Plead. 52; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 58; 1 Maddock, Ch. Pr. 196; Hare, Disc. passim; Wigram, Disc. passim.

There has been much controversy as to whether the defendant is entitled to discovery to aid him in preparing his answer; Langd. Eq. Pl. § 129 et seq.

The bill must show a present and vested title and interest in the plaintiff, and what that title and interest are; 8 Metc. 395; 1 Vern. 105; with reasonable certainty; 3 Ves. 343; must state a case which will constitute a just ground for a suit or a defence at law; 3 Johns. Ch. 47; 2 Paige, Ch. 601; 1 Brown, Ch. 96; 3 id. 155; 2 Anstr. 504; 13 Ves. Ch. 240; 3 M. & C. Ch. 407; must describe the deeds and acts with reasonable certainty; 3 Ves. Ch. 343; 17 Ala. N. s. 794; Story, Eq. Pl. § 320; must state that a suit is brought, or about to be, and the nature thereof must be given with reasonable certainty; 5 Madd. 18; 8 Ves. Ch. 398; must show that the defendant has some interest; 2 Atk. 394; 1 Ves. & B. 550; 3 Barb. Ch. 484; and, where the right arises from privity of estate, what that privity is; Mitford, Eq. Plead. Jerem. ed. 189; it must show that the matter is material, and how; 9 Paige, Ch. 188, 580, 622; 3 Rich. Eq. 148; and must set forth the particulars of the discovery sought; 2 Caines, Cas. 296; 1 Y. & J. 577. And see Story, Eq. Pl. § 17 et seq.

It will not lie in aid of a criminal prosecution, a mandamus, or suit for a penalty; 2 Ves. Ch. 398; 2 Paige, Ch. 399; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1494.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS. A written statement of objections to the decision of a court upon a point of law, made by a party to the cause, and properly certified by the judge or court who made the decision.

The object of a bill of exceptions is to put the decision objected to upon record for the information of the court having cognizance of the cause in error. Bills of exceptions were authorized by statute Westm. 2d (13 Edw. I.), c. 31, the principles of which have been adopted in all the states of the Union, though the statute has been held to be superseded in some, by their own statutes. It provides for compelling the judges to sign such bills, and for securing the insertion of the exceptions upon the record. They may be brought by either plaintiff or defendant. Bills of exceptions have been abolished in England by the "Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873," 36 and 37 Vict. c. 66.

Where it lies. In the trial of civil causes, wherever the court, in making a decision, is supposed by the counsel against whom the decision is made to have mistaken the law, such counsel may tender exceptions to the ruling, and require the judge to authenticate the bill; 3 Bla. Com. 372; 3 Cranch, 300; 7 Gill & J. 335; 24 Me. 420; 3 Jones, No. C. 185; 19 N. H. 372; including the receiving improper and the rejecting proper evidence; 1 Ill. 162; 9 Mo. 166; 6 Gray, 479; 17 Tex. 62; 41 Me. 149; and a failure to call the attention of the jury to material matter of evidence, after request; 2 Cow. 479; and including a refusal to charge the jury in a case proper for a charge; 4 Cranch, 60, 62; 2 Aik. 115; 2 Blatchf. 1; 5 Gray, 101; but not including a failure to charge the jury on points of law when not requested; 2 Pet. 15; 6 Wend. 274; 1 Halst. 132; 4 id. 153; 2 Blatchf. 1; 11 Cush. 123; 38 Me. 227; and including a refusal to order a special verdict in some cases; 1 Call, 105.

An exception cannot be taken to the decision of the court upon matters resting in its discretion; 34 Me. 300; 15 id. 345; 5 Vt. 28; 7 id. 92; 13 id. 459; 6 Wend. 277; 4 Pick. 302; 22 id. 394; 3 Ill. 78; 17 id. 339; 8 Miss. 164; 19 Vt. 457; 20 N. H. 121; 5 R. I. 138; nor, generally, in cases where there is a right of appeal; 4 Pick. 93; 10 id. 34; 13 Vt. 430; 1 Me. 291. See 19 Pick. 191; though the practice in some states is otherwise.

In criminal cases, at common law, judges are not required to authenticate exceptions; 1 Chitty, C. L. 622; 13 Johns. 90; 20 Barb. 567; 1 Va. Cas. 264; 2 Watts, 285; 2 Sumn. 19; 16 Ala. 187; but statutory provisions have been made in several states authorizing the taking of exceptions in criminal cases; Graham, Pr. 768, n.; 2 Va. Cas. 60; 1 Leigh, 598; 14 Pick. 370; 7 Metc. 467; 20 Barb. 567; 7 Ohio, 214; 2 Dutch. 463; 5 Mich. 36; 29 Penn. 429.

BILL OF EXCHANGE. A written order from one person to another, directing the person to whom it is addressed to pay to a third person a certain sum of money therein named. Byles, Bills, 1.

An open (that is unsealed) letter addressed by one person to another directing him, in effect, to pay, absolutely and at all events, a certain sum of money therein named, to a third person, or to any other to whom that third person may order it to be paid, or it may be payable to bearer or to the drawer himself. 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 26.

A bill of exchange may be negotiable or non-negotiable. If negotiable, it may be transferred either before or after acceptance.

The person making the bill, called the drawer, is said to draw upon the person to whom it is directed, and undertakes impliedly to pay the amount with certain costs if he refuse to comply with the command. The drawee is not liable on the bill till after acceptance, and then becomes liable as principal to the extent of the terms of the acceptance; while the drawer becomes liable to the payee and indorsees conditionally upon the failure of the acceptor to pay. The liabilities between indorsers and indorsees are subject to the same rules as those of indorsers and indorsees on promissory notes. Regularly, the drawee is the person to become acceptor; but other parties may accept, under special circumstances.

A foreign bill of exchange is one of which the drawer and drawee are residents of countries foreign to each other. In this respect the states of the United States are held foreign as to each other; 2 Pet. 589; 10 id. 572; 12 Pick. 483; 15 Wend. 527; 3 A. K. Marsh. 488; 1 Const. 400; 1 Hill, So. C. 44; 4 Leigh, 37; 15 Me. 136; 20 id. 139; 49 Ala. 242, 266; 8 Dana, 133; 9 N. H. 558; 4 Wash. C. C. 148. But see contra, 5 Johns. 384, and see 6 Mass. 162.

An inland bill is one of which the drawer and drawee are residents of the same state or country; 25 Miss. 143. As to whether a bill is considered as foreign or inland when made partly in one place and partly in another, see 5 Taunt. 529; 8 id. 679; Gow. 56; 1 Maule & S. 87. Defined by statute 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, § 7.

The distinction between inland and foreign bills becomes important with reference to the question whether protest and notice are to be given in case of non-acceptance. See 3 Kent, 95; PROTEST.

The parties to a bill of exchange are the drawer, the drawee, the acceptor, and the payee. Other persons connected with a bill in case of a transfer as parties to the transfer are the indorser, indorsee, and holder. See those titles. It sometimes happens that one or more of the apparent parties to a bill are fictitious persons. The rights of a bonâ fide holder are not thereby prejudiced where the payee and indorser are fictitious; 2 H. Blackst. 78; 3 Term, 174, 481; 1 Campb. 130; 19 Ves. Ch. 311; 40 N. H. 26; or even where the drawer and payee are both fictitious, 10

B. & C. 468; and all the various parties need not be different persons; 18 Ala. 76; 1 Story, 22. The qualifications of parties who are to be made liable by the making or transfer of bills are the same as in case of other contracts. See PARTIES.

The bill must be written; 1 Pardessus, 344; 2 Stra. 955.

It should be properly dated, both as to place and time of making; Beawes, Lex Merc. pl. 3; 2 Pardessus, n. 333; 1 B. & C. 398. But see 30 Vt. 11; 7 Cow. 337. If not dated, it will be considered as dated at the time it was made; 32 Ind. 375. Bills are sometimes ante- or post-dated for convenience; 8 S. & R. 425.

The superscription of the sum for which the bill is payable will aid an omission in the bill, but is not indispensable; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 951; 1 R. I. 398.

The time of payment should be expressed; but if no time is mentioned it is considered as payable on demand; 7 Term, 427; 2 B. & C. 157; 51 Me. 376; 3 Watts, 339.

The place of payment may be prescribed by the drawer; Beawes, Lex Merc. pl. 3; 8 C. B. 433; or by the acceptor on his acceptance; Chitty, Bills, 172; 3 Jur. 34; 7 Barb. 652; but is not as a general practice, in which last case the bill is considered as payable and to be presented at the usual place of business of the drawee, 11 Penn. 456, at his residence, where it was made, or to him personally anywhere; 10 B. & C. 4; M. & M. 381; 4 C. & P. 35.

Such an order or request to pay must be made as demands a right, and not as asks a favor; M. & M. 171; and it must be absolute, and not contingent; 8 Mod. 363; 4 Ves. Ch. 372; 1 R. & R. 193; 2 B. & Ald. 417; 5 Term, 482; 4 Wend. 275; 11 Mass. 14; 13 Ala. 205; 3 Halst. 262; 6 J. J. Marsh. 170; 1 Ohio, 272; 9 Miss. 393; 5 Ark. 401; 1 La. Ann. 48; 10 Tex. 155. Mere civility in the terms does not alter the legal effect of the instrument.

The word pay is not necessary; deliver is equally operative; 2 Ld. Raym. 1397; 8 Mod. 364; as well as other words; 9 C. B. 570; but they must be words requiring payment; 10 Ad. & E. 98: "il vous plaira de payer" is, in France, the proper language of a bill; Pailliet, Man. 841.

Each of the duplicate or triplicate (as the case may be) bills of a set of foreign exchange contains a provision that the particular bill is to be paid only if the others remain at the time unpaid; see 2 Pardessus, n. 342; and all the parts of the set constitute but one bill; 7 Johns. 42; 2 Dall. 134. A bill should designate the payee; 26 E. L. & Eq. 404; 36 id. 165; 11 Barb. 241; 13 Ga. 55; 30 Miss. 122; 16 Ill. 169; and see 1 E. D. Smith, 1; 8 Ind. 18; but when no payee is designated, the holder by indorsement may fill the blank with his own name; 2 Maule & S. 90; 4 Campb. 97; see 6 Ala. N. S. 86; and if payable to the bearer it is sufficient; 3 Burr. 1526.

To make it negotiable, it must be payable to the order of the payee or to the bearer, or must contain other equivalent and operative words of transfer; 1 Salk. 132; Ld. Raym. 1545; 6 Term, 123; 9 B. & C. 409; 1 D. & C. 275; 1 Dall. 194; 3 Caines, 137; 2 Gill, 348; 1 Harr. Del. 32; 3 Humphr. 612; 1 Ga. 236; 1 Ohio, 272; otherwise in some states of the United States by statute, and in Scotland; Va. Rev. Stat. 1849, c. 144, § 7; 10 B. Monr. 286; 1 Bell, Com. 401. See 83 Ill. 218. But in England and the United States negotiability is not essential to the validity of a bill; 3 Kent, 78; 6 Term, 123; 6 Taunt. 328; 9 Johns. 217; 10 Gill & J. 299; 31 Penn. 506; 9 Wall. 544; though it is otherwise in France; Code de Comm. art. 110, 188; 2 Pardessus, n. 339.

The sum for which the bill is drawn should be written in full in the body of the instrument, as the words in the body govern in case of doubt; 5 Bingh. N. C. 425; 8 Blackf. 144; 1 R. I. 398; the marginal figures are not a part of the contract, but a mere memorandum; 1 R. I. 398; 98 Mass. 12.

The amount must be fixed and certain, and not contingent; 2 Salk. 375; 2 Miles, 442. It must be payable in money, and not in merchandise; 7 Johns. 321, 461; 4 Cow. 452; 11 Me. 398; 6 N. H. 159; 7 Conn. 110; 1 N. & M'C. 254; 3 Ark. 72; 8 B. Monr. 168; see 7 Miss. 52; and is not negotiable if payable in bank bills or in currency or other substitutes for legal money of similar denominations; 2 McLean, 10; 3 id. 106; 3 Wend. 71; 7 Hill, N. Y. 359; 11 Vt. 268; 3 Humphr. 171; 6 id. 303; 7 Mo. 595; 5 Ark. 481; 13 id. 12; held otherwise in 15 Ohio, 118; 16 id. 5; 17 Miss. 457; 9 Mo. 697; 6 Ark. 255; 1 Tex. 13, 246, 503; 4 Ala. N. S. 88, 140.

It is not necessary, however, that the money should be current in the place of payment, or where the bill is drawn; it may be in the money of any country whatever; 27 Mich. 193; 23 Wend. 71. But it is necessary that the instrument should express the specific denomination of money when payable in the money of a foreign country, in order that the courts may be able to ascertain its equivalent value; otherwise it is not negotiable; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 58. As to bills payable in Confederate money, see 8 Wall. 12; 19 id. 548; 94 U. S. 434.

Value received is often inserted, but is not of any use in a negotiable bill; 2 McLean, 213; 3 Metc. Mass. 363; 15 Me. 131; 3 Rich. So. C. 413; 5 Wheat. 277; 4 Fla. 47; 31 Penn. 506.

A direction to place to the account of some one, drawer, drawee, or third person, is often added, but is unnecessary; Comyns, Dig. Merchant, F, 5; 1 B. & C. 398.

As per advice, inserted in a bill, deprives the drawee of authority to pay the bill until advised; Chitty, Bills, 162.

It should be subscribed by the drawer, though it is sufficient if his name appear in the body of the instrument; 2 Ld. Raym. 1375; 1 Stra. 609; 1 Iowa, 231; 27 Ala. N. s. 515; see 12 Barb. 27; and should be addressed to the drawee by the Christian name and surname, or by the full style of the firm; 2 Pardessus, n. 335; Beawes, Lex Merc. pl. 3; Chitty, Bills, 186.

Provision may be made by the drawer, and inserted as a part of the bill, for applying to another person, for a return without protest, or for limiting the damages for re-exchange, expense, etc., in case of the failure or refusal of the drawee to accept or to pay; Chitty, Bills, 188.

A bonâ fide holder of a bill negotiated before maturity merely as a security for an antecedent debt is not affected, without notice, by equities or defences between the original parties; 102 U. S. 14.

See INDORSEMENT; INDORSER; INDORSEE; ACCEPTANCE; PROTEST; DAMAGES.

BILL FOR FORECLOSURE. In Equity Practice. One which is filed by a mortgagee against the mortgagor, for the purpose of having the estate sold, thereby to obtain the sum mortgaged on the premises, with interest and costs. 1 Maddock, Ch. Pr. 528. See FORECLOSURE.

BILL OF GROSS ADVENTURE. In French Maritime Law. Any written instrument which contains a contract of bottomry, respondentia, or any other kind of maritime loan. There is no corresponding English term. Hall, Marit. Loans, 182, n. See BOTTOMRY; GROSS ADVENTURE; RESPONDENTIA.

BILL OF HEALTH. In Commercial Law. A certificate, properly authenticated, that a certain ship or vessel therein named comes from a place where no contagious distempers prevail, and that none of the crew at the time of her departure were infected with any such distemper.

It is generally found on board ships coming from the Levant, or from the coasts of Barbary where the plague prevails; 1 Marsh. Ins. 408; and is necessary whenever a ship sails from a suspected port, or where it is required at the port of destination; Holt, 167; 1 Bell, Comm. 5th ed. 553.

In Scotch Law. An application of a person in custody to be discharged on account of ill health. Where the health of a prisoner requires it, he may be indulged, under proper regulations, with such a degree of liberty as may be necessary to restore him; 2 Bell, Com. 5th ed. 549; Paterson, Comp. § 1129.

BILL IMPEACHING A DECREE FOR FRAUD. In Equity Practice. This must be an original bill, which may be filed without leave of court; 1 Sch. & L. 355; 2 id. 576; 1 Ves. Ch. 120; 3 Brown, Ch. 74; 1 T. & R. 178.

It must state the decree, the proceedings which led to it, and the ground on which it is impeached; Story, Eq. Pl. § 428.

The effect of the bill, if the prayer be granted, is to restore the parties to their former situation, whatever their rights; see Story, Eq. Pl. § 426 et seq.; Mitford, Eq. Pl. 84.

BILL OF INDICTMENT. In Practice. A written accusation of one or more persons of a crime or misdemeanor, lawfully presented to a grand jury. If twelve or more members of the jury are satisfied that the accused ought to be tried, the return is made, A true bill; but when no sufficient ground is shown for putting the accused on trial, a return is made, Not a true bill, or, Not found; anciently, Ignoramus. See TRUE BILL.

BILL OF INFORMATION. In Equity Practice. One which is instituted by the attorney-general or other proper officer in behalf of the state or of those whose rights are the objects of its care and protection.

If the suit immediately concerns the right of the state, the information is generally exhibited without a relator. If it does not immediately concern those rights, it is conducted at the instance and under the immediate direction of some person whose name is inserted in the information and is termed the relator. In case a relator is concerned, the officers of the state are not further concerned than as they are instructed and advised by those whose rights the state is called upon to protect and establish. Blake, Ch. Pl. 50. See Harrison, Ch. Pr. 151; Mitf. Eq. Pl. (by Tyler) 196; INFORMATION.

BILL OF INTERPLEADER. In Equity Practice. One in which the person exhibiting it claims no right in opposition to the rights claimed by the person against whom the bill is exhibited, but prays the decree of the court touching the rights of those persons, for the safety of the person exhibiting the bill. Cooper, Eq. Plead. 43; Mitford, Eq. Plead. 32; 24 Barb. 154; 19 Ga. 513.

A bill exhibited by a third person, who, not knowing to whom he ought of right to render a debt or duty or pay his rent, fears he may be hurt by some of the claimants, and therefore prays he may interplead, so that the court may judge to whom the thing belongs, and he be thereby safe on the payment; Pract. Reg. 78; Harrison, Ch. Pr. 45; Edwards, Inj. 393; 2 Paige, Ch. 199, 570; 6 Johns. Ch. 445; 3 Jones, No. C. 83.

A bill of the former character may, in general, be brought by one who has in his possession property to which two or more lay claim; 31 N. H. 354; 24 Barb. 154; 11 Ga. 103; 19 id. 513; 23 Conn. 544; 12 Gratt. 117; 15 Ark. 389; 18 Mo. 380.

Such a bill must contain the plaintiff's statement of his rights, negativing any interest in the thing in controversy; 3 Story, Eq. Jur. § 821; and see 3 Sandf. Ch. 571; but showing a clear title to maintain the bill; 3 Madd. 277; 5 id. 47; and also the claims of the opposing parties; 4 Paige, Ch. 384; 8 id. 339; 7 Hare, 57; must have annexed the affidavit of the plaintiff that there is no collusion between him and either of the parties; 31 N. H. 354; must contain an offer to bring money into court if any is due, the bill being demurrable, if there is failure, unless it is offered or else actually produced; Mitford, Eq. Pl. 49; Barton, Suit in Eq. 47, n. 1; must show that there are persons in being capable of interpleading and setting up opposite claims; 18 Ves. Ch. 377.

It should pray that the defendants set forth their several titles, and interplead, settle, and adjust their demands between themselves. It also generally prays an injunction to restrain the proceedings of the claimants, or either of them, at law; and in this case the bill should offer to bring the money into court; and the court will not, in general, act upon this part of the prayer unless the money be actually brought into court; 4 Paige, Ch. 384; 6 Johns. Ch. 445.

In the absence of statutes, such a bill does not ordinarily lie, except where there is privity of some sort between all the parties, and where the claim by all is of the same nature and character; 2 Ves. Ch. 304; 3 Anstr. 798; 7 Sim. 391; 3 Beav. 579; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 807–821; 24 Vt. 639; 2 Ind. 469.

The decree for interpleader may be obtained, after a hearing is reached, in the usual manner; 1 T. & R. 30; 1 Cox, Ch. 425; 4 Brown, Ch. 297; 2 Paige, Ch. 570; or without a hearing, if the defendants do not deny the statements of the bill; 16 Ves. Ch. 203; Story, Eq. Pl. § 297 a.

A bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader will lie in many cases by a party in interest to ascertain and establish his own rights, where there are other conflicting rights between third persons; Story, Eq. Pl. § 297 b; 2 Paige, Ch. 199; 3 Jones, No. C. 83. See INTERVENTIO.

BILL OF LADING. In Common Law. The written evidence of a contract for the carriage and delivery of goods sent by sea for a certain freight. Loughborough, J., 1 H. Blackst. 359. See Leggett, Bills of Lading.

A written acknowledgment of the receipt of certain goods and an agreement for a consideration to transport and to deliver the same at a specified place to a person therein named or his order. See Porter, Bills of Lading (a forthcoming book). See also 14 Wall. 596.

A memorandum or acknowledgment in writing, signed by the captain or master of a ship or other vessel, that he has received in good order on board of his ship or vessel, therein named, at the place therein mentioned, certain goods therein specified, which he promises to deliver in like good order (the dangers of the sea excepted) at the place therein appointed for the delivery of the same, to the consignee therein named, or to his assigns, he or they paying freight for the same; 1 Term, 745; Abb. Sh. 216; Code de Comm. art. 281.

A similar acknowledgment made by a carrier by land.

It should contain the name of the shipper or consignor; the name of the consignee; the names of the vessel and her master; the places of shipment and destination; the price of the freight, and, in the margin, the marks and numbers of the things shipped. Jacobsen, Sea Laws.

Though it is not necessary that the shipper should sign the bill of lading, yet if its terms restrict the carrier's common law liability, his assent thereto must be shown. This assent need not be express, it is sufficiently indicated by an acceptance of the bill of lading containing the restrictions; 36 Conn. 63; 1 Fed. Rep. 232; 16 Mich. 79; 21 Wisc. 152; 45 Iowa, 476.

It is usually made in three or more original parts, one of which is sent to the consignee with the goods, one or more others are sent to him by different conveyances, one is retained by the merchant or shipper, and one should be retained by the master. Abbott, Shipp. 217.

It is regarded as so much merchandise; 101 U. S. 557; At common law it is quasi negotiable; 44 Conn. 579; 1 T. R. 63; 1 Sm. L. C. 1048; and in many of the states is made so by statute.

It is also assignable by endorsement, whereby the assignee becomes entitled to the goods subject to the shipper's right of stoppage in transitu, in some cases, and to various liens. See LIENS; STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

But the assignee obtains by such assignment only the title of his assignor, and the negotiability is mostly the quality of transferability by endorsement and delivery which enables the rightful assignee to sue in his own name; 101 U. S. 557; 57 Ga. 110; 115 Mass. 224.

It is considered to partake of the character of a written contract, and also of that of a receipt. In so far as it admits the character, quality, or condition of the goods at the time they were received by the carrier, it is a mere receipt, and the carrier may explain or contradict it by parol; but as respects the agreement to carry and deliver, it is a contract, and must be construed according to its terms; 6 Mass. 422; 7 id. 297; 3 N. Y. 322; 9 id. 529; 25 Barb. 16; 5 Du. N. Y. 538; 1 Abb. Adm. 209, 397. See, also, The Delaware, 14 Wall. 596.

Under the Admiralty Law of the United States, contracts of affreightment, entered into with the master in good faith and within the apparent scope of his authority as master, bind the vessel to the merchandise for the performance of such contracts in respect to the property shipped on board, irrespective of the ownership of the vessel, and whether the master be the agent of the general or special owner; but bills of lading for property not shipped, and designed to be instruments of fraud, create no lien on the interest of the general owner, although the special owner was the perpetrator of the fraud; 18 How. 182. And see 19 How. 82; 2 West. L. Monthly, 456. Mr. Justice Clifford held that a vessel was liable in rem for the loss of goods caused by the explosion of the boiler of a lighter employed by the master in conveying goods to the vessel; 23 Bost. Law R. 277.

Under a "clean" bill of lading in the usual form (viz., one having no stipulation that the goods shipped are to be carried on deck), there is a contract implied that the goods shall be carried under the deck; and parol evidence to the contrary will not be received; 14 Wend. 26; 3 Gray, 97. But evidence of a well-known and long-established usage is admissible, and will justify the carriage of goods in that manner; Ware, Dist. Ct. 322, 327.

BILL TO MARSHAL ASSETS. See ASSETS.

BILL TO MARSHAL SECURITIES. See MARSHALLING SECURITIES.

BILL IN NATURE OF A BILL IN REVIEW. In Equity Practice. One which is brought by a person not bound by a decree, praying that the same may be examined and reversed; as where a decree is made against a person who has no interest at all in the matter in dispute, or had not an interest sufficient to render the decree against him binding upon some person claiming after him.

Relief may be obtained against error in the decree by a bill in the nature of a bill of review. This bill in its frame resembles a bill of review, except that, instead of praying that the former decree may be reviewed and reversed, it prays that the cause may be heard with respect to the new matter made the subject of the supplemental bill, at the same time that it is reheard upon the original bill, and that the plaintiff may have such relief as the nature of the case made by the supplemental bill may require; 1 Harrison, Ch. Pr. 145.

BILL IN NATURE OF A BILL OF REVIVOR. In Equity Practice. One which is filed when the death of a party, whose interest is not determined by his death, is attended with such a transmission of his interest that the title to it, as well as the person entitled, may be litigated in the court of chancery; as in the case of a devise of real estate, the suit is not permitted to be continued by bill of revivor. 1 Chanc. Cas. 123, 174; 3 Chanc. Rep. 39; Mosel. 44.

In such cases, an original bill, upon which the title may be litigated, must be filed, and this bill will have so far the effect of a bill of revivor that if the title of the representative by the act of the deceased party is established, the same benefit may be had of the proceedings upon the former bill as if the suit had been continued by bill of revivor. 1 Vern. 427; 2 id. 548, 672; 2 Brown, P. C. 529; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 83; Mitford, Eq. Pl. 71.

BILL IN NATURE OF A SUPPLEMENTAL BILL. In Equity Practice. One which is filed when the interest of the plaintiff or defendant, suing or defending, wholly determines, and the same property becomes vested in another person not claiming under him. Hinde, Ch. Pr. 71.

The principal difference between this and a supplemental bill seems to be that a supplemental bill is applicable to such cases only where the same parties or the same interests remain before the court; whereas an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill is properly applicable where new parties, with new interests arising from events occurring since the institution of the suit, are brought before the court; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 75; Story, Eq. Pl. § 345. For the exact distinction between a bill of review and a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, see 2 Phill. Ch. 705; 1 Macn. & G. 397; 1 Hall & T. 437.

BILL FOR A NEW TRIAL. In Equity Practice. One filed in a court of equity praying for an injunction after a judgment at law when there is any fact which renders it against conscience to execute such judgment, and of which the injured party could not avail himself in a court of law, or, if he could, was prevented by fraud or accident, unmixed with any fault or negligence of himself or his agents; Mitford, Eq. Pl. 131; 2 Story, Eq. Pl. § 887. Of late years, bills of this description are not countenanced; 1 Johns. Ch. 482; 6 id. 479.

BILL OBLIGATORY. A bond absolute for the payment of money. It is called, also a single bill, and differs from a promissory note only in having a seal; 2 S. & R. 115. See Read, Plead. 236; West, Symb.

BILL OF PAINS AND PENALTIES. A special act of the legislature which inflicts a punishment less than death upon persons supposed to be guilty of high offences, such as treason and felony, without any conviction in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings; 2 Woodd. Lect. 625. It differs from a bill of attainder in this, that the punishment inflicted by the latter is death. The clause in the constitution prohibiting bills of attainder includes bills of pains and penalties; Story, Const. § 1338; 4 Wall. 323; 35 Ga. 285. See 6 Cra. 138.

BILL OF PARCELS. An account containing in detail the names of the items which compose a parcel or package of goods. It is usually transmitted with the goods to the purchaser, in order that if any mistake have been made it may be corrected.

BILL OF PARTICULARS. In Practice. A detailed informal statement of a plaintiff's cause of action, or of the defendant's set-off. It is an account of the items of the claim, and shows the manner in which they arose.

The plaintiff is required, under statutory provisions, which vary widely in the different states, to file a bill of particulars, either in connection with his declaration; 2 Penning. 636; 3 Pick. 449; 1 Gray, 466; 4 Rand. 488; 11 Conn. 302; 4 Miss. 46; 1 Speers, 298; Dudl. 16; 2 Iowa, 595; or subsequently to it, upon request of the other party; 2 Bail. 416; 4 Dana, 219; 5 Ark.

197; 3 Ill. 217; 5 Blackf. 316; 3 McLean, 289; 1 Cal. 437; upon an order of the court, in some cases; 3 Johns. 248; 19 id. 268; 1 N. J. 436; in others, without such order.

He need not give particulars of matters which he does not seek to recover; 4 Exch. 486; nor of payments admitted; 4 Abb. Pr. 289. See 6 Dowl. & L. 656.

The plaintiff is concluded by the bill when filed; 9 Gill, 146.

The defendant, in giving notice or pleading set-off, must give a bill of particulars; failing to do which, he will be precluded from giving any evidence in support of it at the trial; 17 Wend. 20; 7 Blackf. 462; 8 Gratt. 557.

The bill must be as full and specific as the nature of the case admits in respect to all matters as to which the adverse party ought to have information; 16 M. & W. 772; but need not be as special as a count on a special contract. The object is to prevent surprise; 9 Pet. 541; 5 Wend. 51; 5 Ark. 197; 3 Green, 178. See 3 Pick. 449; 5 Penn. 41.

BILL PAYABLE. In Mercantile Law. A bill of exchange accepted, or a promissory note made, by a merchant, whereby he has engaged to pay money. It is so called as being payable by him. An account is usually kept of such bills in a book with that title, and also in the ledger. See Parsons, Notes and Bills.

BILL OF PEACE. In Equity Practice. One which is filed when a person has a right which may be controverted by various persons, at different times, and by different actions.

In such a case, the court will prevent a multiplicity of suits by directing an issue to determine the right, and ultimately grant an injunction; 1 Maddock, Chanc. Pract. 166; Blake, Chanc. Pract. 48; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 852–860; 2 Johns. Ch. 281; 3 Cranch, 426.

Such a bill may also be brought when the plaintiff, after repeated and satisfactory trials, has established his right at law, and is still in danger of new attempts to controvert it. In order to quiet the possession of the plaintiff, and to suppress future litigation, courts of equity, under such circumstances, will interfere, and grant a perpetual injunction; 2 Johns. Ch. 281; 3 id. 529; 3 Cranch, 462; Mitford, Eq. 143; Eden, Inj. 356. See a full discussion in 20 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 561.

BILL PENAL. In Contracts. A written obligation by which a debtor acknowledges himself indebted in a certain sum, and binds himself for the payment thereof, in a larger sum.

Bonds with conditions have superseded such bills in modern practice. Stephen, Plead. 265, n. They are sometimes called bills obligatory, and are properly so called; but every bill obligatory is not a bill penal. Comyns, Dig. Obligations, D; Croke, Car. 515. See 2 Ventr. 106, 198.

BILL TO PERPETUATE TESTIMONY. In Equity Practice. One which is brought to secure the testimony of witnesses with reference to some matter which is not in litigation, but is liable to become so.

It differs from a bill to take testimony de bene esse, inasmuch as the latter is sustainable only when there is a suit already depending; it is demurrable to if it contain a prayer for relief; 1 Dick. Ch. 98; 2 P. Will. 162; 2 Ves. Ch. 497; 3 Madd. 37. And see 1 Sch. & L. 316.

It must show the subject-matter touching which the plaintiff is desirous of giving evidence; Rep. temp. Finch, 391; 4 Madd. 8, 10; that the plaintiff has a positive interest in the subject-matter, which may be endangered if the testimony in support of it be lost, as a mere expectancy, however strong, is not sufficient; 6 Ves. Ch. 260; 1 Vern. 105; 15 Ves. Ch. 136; Mitford, Eq. Pl. 51; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 52; that the defendant has, or pretends to have, or that he claims, an interest to contest the title of the plaintiff in the subject-matter of the proposed testimony; Cooper, Pl. 56; Story, Eq. Pl. § 302; and some ground of necessity for perpetuating the evidence; Story, Eq. Pl. § 303; Mitford, Eq. Pl. 52, 148, n.; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 53.

The bill should describe the right in which it is brought with reasonable certainty, so as to point the proper interrogations on both sides to the true merits of the controversy; 1 Vern. 312; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 56; and should pray leave to examine the witnesses touching the matter stated, to the end that their testimony may be preserved and perpetuated; Mitford, Eq. Pl. 52.

BILL OF PRIVILEGE. In English Law. The form of proceeding against an attorney of the court, who is not liable to arrest. Brooke, Abr. Bille; 12 Mod. 163.

It is considered a privilege for the benefit of clients; 4 Burr. 2113; 2 Wils. 44; Dougl. 381; and is said to be confined to such as practise; 2 Maule & S. 605. But see 1 Bos. & P. 4; 2 Lutw. 1667. See, generally, 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 289, n.

BILL OF PROOF. In English Practice. The claim made by a third person to the subject-matter in dispute between the parties to a suit in the court of the mayor of London. 2 Chitty, Pract. 492; 1 Marsh. 233.

BILL TO QUIET POSSESSION AND TITLE. See BILL OF PEACE.

BILL QUIA TIMET. In Equity Practice. One which is filed when a person is entitled to property of a personal nature after another's death, and has reason to apprehend it may be destroyed by the present possessor; or when he is apprehensive of being subjected to a future inconvenience, probable or even possible, to happen or be occasioned by the neglect, inadvertence, or culpability of another.

Upon a proper case being made out, the court will, in one case, secure the property for the use of the party (which is the object of the bill), by compelling the person in possession of it to give a proper security against any subsequent disposition or wilful destruction; and, in the other case, they will quiet the party's apprehension of future inconvenience, by removing the causes which may lead to it; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 218; Blake, Ch. Pr. 37, 47; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 825, 851. See 9 Gratt. 398; 11 Ga. 570; 8 Tex. 337; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 157, 442; 4 Edw. Ch. 228; Bouvier, Inst.

BILL RECEIVABLE. In Mercantile Law. A promissory note, bill of exchange, or other written security for money payable at a future day, which a merchant holds. So called because the amounts for which they are given are receivable by the merchant. They are entered in a book so called, and are charged to an account in the ledger under the same title, to which account the cash, when received, is credited. See Parsons, Notes and Bills.

BILL OF REVIEW. In Equity Practice. One which is brought to have a decree of the court reviewed, altered, or reversed.

It is only brought after enrolment; 1 Ch. Cas. 54; 3 P. Will. 371; 5 Rich. Eq. 421; 1 Story, Eq. Pl. § 403; and is thus distinguished from a bill in the nature of a bill in review, or a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill in review; 5 Mas. 303; 2 Sandf. Ch. 70; Gilbert, For. Rom. c. 10, p. 182.

It must be brought either for error in point of law; 2 Johns. Ch. 488; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 89; or for some new matter of fact, relevant to the case, discovered since publication passed in the cause, and which could not, with reasonable diligence, have been discovered before; 7 Fed. Rep. 533; 22 Wall. 60; 95 U. S. 99; 2 Johns. Ch. 488; see 3 Johns. 124; 1 Hempst. 118; 27 Vt. 638; 25 Miss. 207. It cannot be filed without leave of court; 6 Rich. Eq. 364; which is not granted as of course; 1 Jones, Eq. 10.

BILL OF REVIVOR. In Equity Practice. One which is brought to continue a suit which has abated before its final consummation, as, for example, by death, or marriage of a female plaintiff.

It must be brought by the proper representatives of the person deceased, with reference to the property which is the subject-matter; 4 Sim. 318; 2 Paige, Ch. 358; Story, Eq. Pl. § 354 et seq.

BILL OF REVIVOR AND SUPPLEMENT. In Equity Practice. One which is a compound of a supplemental bill and bill of revivor, and not only continues the suit, which has abated by the death of the plaintiff, or the like, but supplies any defects in the original bill arising from subsequent events, so as to entitle the party to relief on the whole merits of his case. 5 Johns. Ch. 334; Mitford, Eq. Pl. 32, 74.

BILL OF RIGHTS. A formal and public declaration of popular rights and liberties. The English Bill of Rights is a statute passed in 1689, affirming and asserting certain rights of the British people. See Hallam, Hist. In the United States, such bills have been incorporated with the constitutions of many of the states. See 1 Bla. Com. 128.

BILL OF SALE. In Contracts. A written agreement under seal, by which one person transfers his right to or interest in goods and personal chattels to another.

It is in frequent use in the transfer of personal property, especially that of which immediate possession is not or cannot be given.

In England a bill of sale of a ship at sea or out of the country is called a grand bill of sale; but no distinction is recognized in this country between grand and ordinary bills of sale; 4 Mass. 661. The effect of a bill of sale is to transfer the property in the thing sold.

By the maritime law, the transfer of a ship must generally be evidenced by a bill of sale; 1 Mas. 306; and by act of congress, every sale or transfer of a registered ship to a citizen of the United States must be accompanied by a bill of sale, setting forth, at length, the certificate of registry; Act Jan. 14, 1793, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 276. And this bill of sale is not valid except between the parties or those having actual notice, unless recorded; Rev. Stat. § 4192.

A contract to sell, accompanied by delivery of possession, is, however, sufficient; 16 Mass. 336; 8 Pick. 86; 16 id. 401; 7 Johns. 308. See 4 Johns. 54; 4 Mas. 515; 1 Wash. C. C. 226; 16 Pet. 215.

BILL OF SIGHT. A written description of goods, supposed to be inaccurate, but made as nearly exact as possible, furnished by an importer or his agent to the proper officer of the customs, to procure a landing and inspection of the goods. It is allowed by an English statute where the merchant is ignorant of the real quantity and quality of goods consigned to him, so as to be unable to make a proper entry of them. The entry must be perfected within three days after landing the goods. Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 52, § 24.

BILL, SINGLE. In Contracts. A written unconditional promise by one or more persons to pay to another person or other persons, therein named, a sum of money at a time therein specified. It is usually under seal, and may then be called a bill obligatory; 2 S. & R. 115. It has no condition attached, and is not given in a penal sum; Comyns, Dig. Obligation, C. See 3 Hawks, 10, 465.

BILL OF SUFFERANCE. In English Law. A license granted to a merchant, permitting him to trade from one English port to another without paying customs.

BILL TO SUSPEND A DECREE. In Equity Practice. One brought to avoid or suspend a decree under special circumstances. See 1 Ch. Cas. 3, 61; 2 id. 8; Mitford, Eq. Pl. 85, 86.

BILL TO TAKE TESTIMONY DE BENE ESSE. In Equity Practice. One which is brought to take the testimony of witnesses to a fact material to the prosecution of a suit at law which is actually commenced, where there is good cause to fear that the testimony may otherwise be lost before the time of trial. See 1 S. & S. 83; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1813, n.

It lies, in general, where witnesses are aged or infirm; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 57; Ambl. 65; 18 Ves. Ch. 56, 261; propose to leave the country; 2 Dick. 454; Story, Eq. Pl. § 308; or there is but a single witness to a fact; 1 P. Wms. 97; 2 Dick. 648.

BILLA VERA (Lat.). A true bill.

In Practice. The form of words indorsed on a bill of indictment, when proceedings were conducted in Latin, to indicate the opinion of the grand jury that the person therein accused ought to be tried. See TRUE BILL.

BILLA CASSETUR (Lat. that the bill be quashed or made void). A plea in abatement concluded, when the pleadings were in Latin, quod billa cassetur (that the bill be quashed). 3 Bla. Com. 303; Graham, Pr. 611.

BILLA EXCAMBII. A bill of exchange.

BILLA EXONERATIONIS. A bill of lading.

BILLET DE CHANGE. In French Law. A contract to furnish a bill of exchange. A contract to pay the value of a bill of exchange already furnished. Guyot, Répert. Univ.

Where a person intends to furnish a bill of exchange (lettre de change), and is not quite prepared to do so, he gives a billet de change, which is a contract to furnish a lettre de change at a future time. Guyot, Répert. Univ.; Story, Bills, § 2.

BINDING OUT. A term applied to the contract of apprenticeship.

The contract must be by deed, to which the infant, as well as the parent or guardian, must be a party, or the infant will not be bound; 8 East, 25; 3 B. & Ald. 584; 8 Johns. 328; 2 Yerg. 546; 4 Leigh, 493; 4 Blackf. 437; 12 N. H. 438. See also 18 Conn. 337; 13 Barb. 286; 10 S. & R. 416; 1 Mass. 172; 1 Vt. 69; 1 Ashm. 267; 1 Mas. 78.

BINDING OVER. The act by which a magistrate or court hold to bail a party accused of a crime or misdemeanor.

The binding over may be to appear at a court having jurisdiction of the offence charged, to answer, or to be of good behavior, or to keep the peace.

BIPARTITE. Of two parts. This term is used in conveyancing; as, this indenture bipartite, between A, of the one part, and B, of the other part.

BIRRETUM, BIRRETUS. A cap or coif used formerly in England by judges and sergeants at law. Spelman, Gloss.; Cunningham, Law Dict.

BIRTH. The act of being wholly brought into the world.

The conditions of live birth are not satisfied when a part only of the body is born. The whole body must be brought into the world and detached from that of the mother, and after this event the child must be alive; 5 C. & P. 329; 7 id. 814. The circulating system must also be changed, and the child must have an independent circulation; 5 C. & P. 539; 9 id. 154.

But it is not necessary that there should have been a separation of the umbilical cord. That may still connect the child with its mother, and yet the killing of it will constitute murder; 7 C. & P. 814; 9 id. 25. See 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 478; 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 438; GESTATION; LIFE.

BISAILE. See BESAILE.

BISHOP. An ecclesiastical officer, who is the chief of the clergy of his diocese, and is the archbishop's assistant. No such officer is recognized by law in the United States.

BISHOP'S COURT. In English Law. An ecclesiastical court held in the cathedral of each diocese, the judge of which is the bishop's chancellor.

BISHOPRIC. In Ecclesiastical Law. The extent of country over which a bishop has jurisdiction; a see; a diocese.

BISSEXTILE. The day which is added every fourth year to the month of February, in order to make the year agree with the course of the sun.

By statute 21 Hen. III., the 28th and 29th of February count together as one day. This statute is in force in some of the U. S.; 43 Ind. 35; 4 Penn. 515. See 10 Cent. L. J. 158.

It is called bissextile, because in the Roman calendar it was fixed on the sixth day before the calends of March (which answers to the twenty-fourth day of February), and this day was counted twice: the first was called bissextus prior, and the other bissextus posterior; but the latter was properly called bissextile or intercalary day.

BLACK ACRE. A term used by the old writers to distinguish one parcel of land from another, to avoid ambiguity, as well as the inconvenience of a full description.

It is a mere name of convenience, adopted, as "A" and "B" are, to distinguish persons or things under similar circumstances.

BLACK ACT. In English Law. The act of parliament 9 Geo. II. c. 22.

This act was passed for the punishment of certain marauders who committed great outrages disguised and with faces blackened. It was repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 11. See 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 245.

BLACK BOOK OF THE ADMIRALTY. An ancient book compiled in the reign of Edward III. It has always been deemed of the highest authority in matters concerning the admiralty. It contains the laws of Oleron, at large; a view of the crimes and offences cognizable in the admiralty; ordinances and commentaries on matters of prize and maritime torts, injuries, and contracts; 2 Gall. 404. It is said by Selden to be not more ancient than the reign of Henry VI; Selden, de Laud. Leg. Ang. c. 32. By other writers it is said to have been composed earlier. It has been republished (1871) by the British government, with an introduction by Sir Travers Twiss.

BLACK BOOK OF THE EXCHEQUER. The name of a book kept in the English exchequer, containing a collection of treaties, conventions, charters, etc.

BLACK MAIL. Rents reserved, payable in work, grain, and the like.

Such rents were called black mail (reditus nigri) in distinction from white rents (blanche firmes), which were rents paid in silver.

A yearly payment made for security and protection to those bands of marauders who infested the borders of England and Scotland about the middle of the sixteenth century and laid the inhabitants under contribution. Hume, Hist. Eng. vol. i. 473; vol. ii. App. No. 8; Cowel.

In common parlance, the term is equivalent to, and synonymous with, extortion—the exaction of money, either for the performance of a duty, the prevention of an injury, or the exercise of an influence. It supposes the service to be unlawful, and the payment involuntary. Not unfrequently it is extorted by threats, or by operating upon the fears or the credulity, or by promises to conceal, or offers to expose the weaknesses, the follies, or the crimes of the victim; 17 Abb. Pr. 226.

BLACK RENTS. Rents reserved in work, grain, or baser money than silver. Whishaw.

BLADA. Growing crops of grain. Spelman, Gloss. Any annual crop. Cowel. Used of crops, either growing or gathered. Reg. Orig. 94 b; Coke, 2d Inst. 81.

BLANCH HOLDING. In Scotch Law. A tenure by which land is held.

The duty is generally a trifling one, as a peppercorn. It may happen, however, that the duty is of greater value; and then the distinction received in practice is founded on the nature of the duty. Stair, Inst. sec. iii. lib. 3, § 33. See Paterson, Comp. 15; 2 Bla. Com. 42.

BLANCHE FIRME. A rent reserved, payable in silver.

BLANK. A space left in a writing, to be filled up with one or more words to complete the sense.

When a blank is left in a written agreement which need not have been reduced to writing, and would have been equally binding whether written or unwritten, it is presumed, in an action for the non-performance of the contract, parol evidence might be admitted to explain the blank. And where a written instrument which was made professedly to record a fact is produced as evidence of that fact which it purports to record, and a blank appears in a material part, the omission may be supplied by other proof; 1 Phil. Ev. 475; 1 Wils. 215; 7 Vt. 522; 6 id. 411. Hence a blank left in an award for a name was allowed to be supplied by parol proof; 2 Dall. 180. But where a creditor signs a deed of composition, leaving the amount of his debt in blank, he binds himself to all existing debts; 1 B. & Ald.

It is said that a blank may be filled by consent of the parties and the instrument remain valid; Cro. Eliz. 626; 1 Ventr. 185; 11 M. & W. 468; 1 Me. 34; 5 Mass. 538; 19 Johns. 396; though not, it is said, where the blank is in a part material to the operation of the instrument as an instrument of the character which it purports to be; 6 M. & W. 200; 2 Dev. 379; 1 Yerg. 69; 2 N. & M'C. 125; 1 Ohio, 365; 6 Gill & J. 250; 2 Brock. 64; at least, without a new execution; 2 Parsons, Cont. 229. But see 17 S. & R. 438; 22 Penn. 12; 7 Cow. 484; 22 Wend. 348; 2 Ala. 517; 2 Dana, 142; 4 M'Cord, 239; 2 Wash. Va. 164; 9 Cra. 28; 4 Bingh. 123. If a blank is left in a policy of insurance for the name of the place of destination of a ship, it will avoid the policy; Molloy, b. 2, c. 7, s. 14; Park. Ins. 22; Weskett, Ins. 42. See cases in note to 10 Am. Rep. 268.

A transfer of shares by deed executed in blank, as to the name of the purchaser, or the number of the shares, is void in England, though sanctioned by the usage of the stock exchange; 4 D. & J. 559; 2 H. & C. 175. But the rule is otherwise in New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Connecticut; 20 Wend. 91; 22 id. 348; 50 Penn. 67 (but see 38 Penn. 98); 103 Mass. 306; 30 Conn. 274. See the subject discussed in Lewis on Stocks, 50 et seq. As to blanks in notes, 33 Am. Rep. 130.

BLANK BAR. See COMMON BAR.

BLANK INDORSEMENT. An indorsement which does not mention the name of the person in whose favor it is made.

Such an indorsement is generally effected by writing the indorser's name merely on the back of the bill; Chitty, Bills, 170. A note so indorsed is transferable by delivery merely, so long as the indorsement continues blank; and its negotiability cannot be restricted by subsequent special indorsements; 1 Esp. 180; Peake, 225; 15 Penn. 268. See 3 Campb. 239; 1 Parsons, Contr. 212; INDORSEMENT.

BLASPHEMY. In Criminal Law. To attribute to God that which is contrary to his nature, and does not belong to him, and to deny what does. A false reflection uttered with a malicious design of reviling God. Emlyn's Pref. to vol. 8, St. Tr.; 20 Pick. 244.

In general blasphemy may be described as consisting in speaking evil of the Deity with an impious purpose to derogate from the divine majesty, and to alienate the minds of others from the love and reverence of God. It is purposely using words concerning God calculated and designed to impair and destroy the reverence, respect, and confidence due to him as the intelligent creator, governor, and judge of the world. It embraces the idea of detraction, when used towards the Supreme Being; as "calumny" usually carries the same idea when applied to an individual.

It is a wilful and malicious attempt to lessen men's reverence of God by denying his existence, or his attributes as an intelligent creator, governor, and judge of men, and to prevent their having confidence in him as such; 20 Pick. 211, 212, per Shaw, C. J.

The offence of publishing a blasphemous libel, and the crime of blasphemy, are in many respects technically distinct, and may be differently charged: yet the same act may, and often does, constitute both. The latter consists in blaspheming the holy name of God, by denying, cursing, or contumeliously reproaching God, his creation, government, or final judging of the world; and this may be done by language orally uttered, which would not be a libel. But it is not the less blasphemy if the same thing be done by language written, printed, and published; although when done in this form it also constitutes the offence of libel; 20 Pick. 213, per Shaw, C. J.; Heard, Lib. & Sl. § 336.

In most of the United States, statutes have been enacted against this offence; but these statutes are not understood in all cases to have abrogated the common law; the rule being that where the statute does not vary the class and character of an offence, but only authorizes a particular mode of proceeding and of punishment, the sanction is cumulative and the common law is not taken away. And it has been decided that neither these statutes nor the common-law doctrine is repugnant to the constitutions of those states in which the question has arisen; Heard, Lib. & Sl. § 343; 20 Pick. 206; 11 S. & R. 394; 8 Johns. 290; 4 Sandf. 156; 2 Harr. Del. 553; 2 How. 127.

In England, all blasphemies against God, the Christian religion, the Holy Scriptures, and malicious revilings of the established church, are punishable by indictment; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 3; 1 Russell, Cr. 217; 5 Jur. 529. See 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 79; 1 B. & C. 26; 2 Lew. 237.

In France, before the 25th of September, 1791, it was a blasphemy, also, to speak against the holy virgin and the saints, to deny one's faith, to speak with impiety of holy things, and to swear by things sacred; Merlin, Répert. The law relating to blasphemy in that country was totally repealed by the code of 25th of September, 1791; and its present penal code, art. 262, enacts that any person who, by words or gestures shall commit any outrage upon objects of public worship, in the places designed or actually employed for the performance of its rites, or shall assault or insult the ministers of such worship in the exercise of their functions, shall be fined from sixteen to five hundred francs, and be imprisoned for a period not less than fifteen days nor more than six months.

The civil law forbade the crime of blasphemy; such, for example, as to swear by the hair of the head of God; and it punished its violation with death. Si enim contra homines factæ blasphemiæ impunitæ non relinquuntur, multo magis qui ipsum Deum blasphemant, digni sunt supplicia sustinere (For if slander against men is not left unpunished, much more do those deserve punishment who blaspheme God). Nov. 77. 1. § 1.

In Spain it is blasphemy not only to speak against God and his government, but to utter injuries against the Virgin Mary and the saints. Senen Vilanova y Mañes, Materia Criminal, forense, Observ. 11, cap. 3, n. 1. See CHRISTIANITY.

BLIND. The condition of one who is deprived of the faculty of seeing.

Persons who are blind may enter into contracts and make wills like others; Carth. 53; Barnes, 19, 23; 3 Leigh, 32. When an attesting witness becomes blind, his handwriting may be proved as if he were dead; 1 Starkie, Ev. 341. But before proving his handwriting the witness must be produced, if within the jurisdiction of the court, and examined; 1 Ld. Raym. 734; 1 Mood. & R. 258; 2 id. 262.

It is not negligence for a blind man to travel along a highway; 52 N. H. 244. See as to negligence by persons of defective senses, 8 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 513.

BLOCKADE. In International Law. The actual investment of a port or place by a hostile force fully competent, under ordinary circumstances, to cut off all communication therewith, so arranged or disposed as to be able to apply its force to every point of practicable access or approach to the port or place so invested.

National sovereignty confers the right of declaring war; and the right which nations at war have of destroying or capturing each other's citizens, subjects, or goods, imposes on neutral nations the obligation not to interfere with the exercise of this right within the rules prescribed by the law of nations. A declaration of a siege or blockade is an act of sovereignty; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 146; but a direct declaration by the sovereign authority of the besieging belligerent is not always requisite; particularly when the blockade is on a distant station; for its officers may have power, either expressly or by implication, to institute such siege or blockade; 6 C. Rob. Adm. 367.

In case of civil war, the government may blockade its own ports; Wheaton, Int. Law, 365; 3 Binn. 252; 3 Wheat. 365; 7 id. 306; 4 Cr. 272; 2 Black, 635; 3 Scott, 225; 24 Bost. L. Rep. 276, 335.

The Act of Congress of July 13, 1861, prohibiting all commercial intercourse between the loyal and the revolted states, was a mere municipal regulation, though familiarly called a blockade; 3 Ware, 276.

To be sufficient, the blockade must be effective and made known. By the convention of the Baltic powers of 1780, and again in 1801, and by the ordinance of congress of 1781, it is required that there should be a number of vessels stationed near enough to the port to make the entry apparently dangerous. The government of the United States has uniformly insisted that the blockade should be made effective by the presence of a competent force stationed and present at or near the entrance of the port; 1 Kent, 145, and the authorities by him cited. And see 1 C. Rob. Adm. 80; 4 id. 66; 1 Act. Prize Cas. 64–5; and Lord Erskine's speech, 8th March, 1808, on the orders in council, 10 Cobbett, Parl. Deb. 949, 950. But "it is not an accidental absence of the blockading force, nor the circumstance of being blown off by wind (if the suspension and the reason of the suspension are known), that will be sufficient in law to remove a blockade;" 1 C. Rob. Adm. 86, 154. But negligence or remissness on the part of the cruisers stationed to maintain the blockade may excuse persons, under certain circumstances, for violating the blockade; 3 C. Rob. Adm. 156; 1 Act. Prize Cas. 59.

To involve a neutral in the consequences of violating the blockade, it is indispensable that he should have due notice of it. This information may be communicated to him in two ways: either actually, by a formal notice from the blockading power, or constructively, by notice to his government, or by the notoriety of the fact; 2 Black, 635; 6 C. Rob. Adm. 367; 2 id. 110, 111, n.; id. 128; 1 Act. Prize Cas. 61. Formal notice is not required; any authentic information is sufficient; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 334; 5 id. 77–81, 286–289; Edw. Adm. 203: 3 Phill. Int. Law, 397; 24 Bost. L. Rep. 276; it is a settled rule that a vessel in a blockaded port is presumed to have notice of a blockade as soon as it begins; 2 Black, 630.

A violation may be either by going into the place blockaded, or by coming out of it with a cargo laden after the commencement of the blockade. Also placing himself so near a blockaded port as to be in a condition to slip in without observation, is a violation of the blockade, and raises the presumption of a criminal intent; 6 C. Rob. Adm. 30, 101, 182; 7 Johns. 47; 1 Edw. Adm. 202; 4 Cra. 185; 3 Wall. 83. The sailing for a blockaded port, knowing it to be blockaded, is, it seems, such an act as may charge the party with a breach of the blockade; 5 Cranch, 335; 9 id. 440, 446; 1 Kent, 150; 3 Wall. 514; 3 Phill. Int. Law, 397; 24 Bost. L. Rep. 276. See 4 Cranch, 185; 6 id. 29; 10 Moore, P. C. 58. A neutral vessel in distress may enter a blockaded port; 7 Wall. 354.

When the ship has contracted guilt by a breach of the blockade, she may be taken at any time before the end of her voyage; but the penalty travels no further than the end of her return voyage; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 128; 3 id. 147; 6 Wall. 582. When taken, the ship is confiscated; and the cargo is always, prima facie, implicated in the guilt of the owner or master of the ship; and the burden of rebutting the presumption that the vessel was going in for the benefit of the cargo, and with the direction of the owners, rests with them; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 67, 130; 3 id. 173; 4 id. 93; 1 Edw. Adm. 39. See, generally, 2 Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law, 314; Chitty, Com. BLOOD. Relationship; stock; family. 1 Roper, Leg. 103; 1 Belt, Suppl. Ves. 365. Kindred. Bacon, Max. Reg. 18.

Brothers and sisters are said to be of the whole blood if they have the same father and mother, and of the half-blood if they have only one parent in common. 5 Whart. 477.

BLOODWIT. An amercement for bloodshed. Cowel. The privilege of taking such amercements. Skene.

A privilege or exemption from paying a fine or amercement assessed for bloodshed. Cowel; Kennett, Paroch. Ant.; Termes de la Ley.

BOARDER. One who, being an inhabitant of a place, makes a special contract with another person for food with or without lodging; 7 Cush. 424; 36 Iowa, 651. To be distinguished from a guest of an innkeeper; Story, Bailm. § 477; 26 Vt. 343; 26 Ala. N. S. 371; 7 Cush. 417. See Edwards, Bailments, § 456.

In a boarding house, the guest is under an express contract, at a certain rate, for a certain period of time; but in an inn there is no express engagement; the guest, being on his way, is entertained from day to day according to his business, upon an implied contract; 2 E. D. Smith, 148; 24 How. Pr. 62; 1 Lansing, 484.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS. A county board, under a system existing in some of the northern states, to whom the fiscal affairs of the county are intrusted—composed of delegates representing the several organized towns or townships of the county.

This system originated in the state of New York, and has been adopted in Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa. The board, when convened, forms a deliberative body, usually acting under parliamentary rules. It performs the same duties and exercises like authority as the COUNTY COMMISSIONERS or BOARD OF CIVIL AUTHORITY in other states. See, generally, Haines's Township Laws of Mich., and Haines's Town Laws of Ill. & Wisc.

BOAT. A boat does not pass by the sale of a ship and appurtenances; Molloy, b. 2, c. 1, § 8; Beawes, Lex Merc. 56; 2 Root, 71; Park, Ins. 8th ed. 126. But see 17 Mass. 405; 2 Marsh. 727. Insurance on a ship covers her boats; 24 Pick. 172; 1 Mann. & R. 392; 1 Parsons, Marit. Law, 72, n.

BOC (Sax.). A writing; a book. Used of the land-bocs, or evidences of title among the Saxons, corresponding to modern deeds. These bocs were destroyed by William the Conqueror. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 22; 1 Washb. R. P. 17, 21.

BOC HORDE. A place where books, evidences, or writings are kept. Cowel. These were generally in monasteries. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 22.

BOC LAND. Allodial lands held by written evidence of title.

Such lands might be granted upon such terms as the owner should see fit, by greater or less estate, to take effect presently, or at a future time, or on the happening of any event. In this respect they differed essentially from feuds. 1 Washb. R. P. 17; 4 Kent, 441.

BODY. A person. Used of a natural body, or of an artificial one created by law, as a corporation.

A collection of laws; that is, the embodiment of the laws in one connected statement or collection.

In practice, when the sheriff returns cepi corpus to a capias, the plaintiff may obtain a rule, before special bail has been entered, to bring in the body; and this must be done either by committing the defendant or entering special bail. See DEAD BODY.

BODY CORPORATE. A corporation. This is an early and undoubtedly correct term to apply to a corporation. Coke, Litt. 250 a; Ayliffe, Par. 196; Angell, Corp. § 6.

BONA (Lat. bonus). Goods; personal property; chattels, real or personal; real property.

Bona et catalla (goods and chattels) includes all kinds of property which a man may possess. In the Roman law it signified every kind of property, real, personal, and mixed; but chiefly it was applied to real estate, chattels being distinguished by the words effects, movables, etc. Bona were, however, divided into bona mobilia and bona immobilia. It is taken in the civil law in nearly the sense of biens in the French law.

BONA CONFISCATA. Goods confiscated or forfeited to the imperial fisc or treasury. 1 Bla. Com. 299.

BONA FIDES. Good faith, honesty, as distinguished from mala fides (bad faith).

Bonâ fide. In good faith.

A purchaser bonâ fide is one who actually purchases in good faith; 2 Kent, 512. The law requires all persons in their transactions to act with good faith; and a contract where one of the parties has not acted bonâ fide is void at the pleasure of the innocent party; 8 Johns. 446; 12 id. 330; 2 Johns. Ch. 35. If a contract be made with good faith, subsequent fraudulent acts will not vitiate it; although such acts may raise a presumption of antecedent fraud, and thus become a means of proving the want of good faith in making the contract; 2 Miles, 229. And see, also, Roberts, Fraud. Conv. 33, 34; Inst. 2. 6; Dig. 41. 3. 10. 44; id. 41. 1. 48; Code, 7. 31; 9 Co. 11; Lane, 47; Plowd. 473; 9 Pick. 265; 12 id. 545; 8 Conn. 336; 10 id. 30; 3 Watts, 25; 5 Wend. 20, 566; 42 Ga. 250.

BONA FORISFACTA. Forfeited goods. 1 Bla. Com. 299.

BONA GESTURA. Good behavior.

BONA GRATIA. Voluntarily; by mutual consent. Used of a divorce obtained by the agreement of both parties.

BONA MOBILIA. In Civil Law. Movables. Those things which move themselves or can be transported from one place to another; which are not intended to make a permanent part of a farm, heritage, or building.

BONA NOTABILIA. Chattels or goods of sufficient value to be accounted for.

Where a decedent leaves goods of sufficient amount (bona notabilia) in different dioceses, administration is granted by the metropolitan, to prevent the confusion arising from the appointment of many different administrators; 2 Bla. Com. 509; Rolle, Abr. 908; Williams, Ex. The value necessary to constitute property bona notabilia has varied at different periods, but was finally established at £5, in 1603.

BONA PATRIA. In Scotch Law. An assize or jury of countrymen or good neighbors. Bell, Dict.

BONA PERITURA. Perishable goods.

An executor, administrator, or trustee is bound to use due diligence in disposing of perishable goods, such as fattened cattle, grain, fruit, or any other article which may be worse for keeping; Bacon, Abr. Executors; 1 Rolle, Abr. 910; 5 Co. 9; Cro. Eliz. 518; 3 Munf. 288; 1 Beatt. Ch. 5, 14; Dane, Abr. Index.

BONA VACANTIA. Goods to which no one claims a property, as shipwrecks, treasure trove, etc.; vacant goods.

These bona vacantia belonged, under the common law, to the finder, except in certain instances, when they were the property of the king. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 298, n.

BONA WAVIATA. Goods waived or thrown away by a thief in his fright for fear of being apprehended. By common law such goods belonged to the sovereign. 1 Bla. Com. 296.

BOND. An obligation in writing and under seal. 2 S. & R. 502; 11 Ala. 19; 1 Harp. 434; 1 Blackf. 241; 6 Vt. 40; 1 Baldw. 129.

It may be single—simplex obligatio—as where the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a certain sum of money to another at a day named, or it may be conditional (which is the kind more generally used), that if the obligor does some particular act, the obligation shall be void, or else shall remain in full force, as payment of rent, performance of covenants in a deed, or repayment of a principal sum of money borrowed of the obligee with interest, which principal sum is usually one-half of the penal sum specified in the bond.

There must be proper parties; and no person can take the benefit of a bond except the parties named therein; Hob. 9; 14 Barb. 59; except, perhaps, in some cases of bonds given for the performance of their duties by certain classes of public officers; 4 Wend. 414; 8 Md. 287; 4 Ohio, N. S. 418; 7 Cal. 551; 1 Grant, Cas. 359; 3 Ind. 431. A man cannot be bound to himself even in connection with others; 5 Cow. 688. See 3 Jones, Eq. No. C. 311. If the bond run to several persons jointly, all must join in suit for a breach, though it be conditioned for the performance of different things for the benefit of each; 2 N. Y. 388.

The instrument must be in writing and sealed; 1 Baldw. 129; 6 Vt. 40; but a sealing sufficient where the bond is made is held sufficient though it might be an insufficient sealing if it had been made where it is sued on; 2 Caines, 362. The signature and seal may be in any part of the instrument; 7 Wend. 345.

It must be delivered by the party whose bond it is, to the other; 13 Md. 1; 5 Gray, 440; 11 Ga. 286. See 37 N. H. 306; Bacon, Abr. Obligations, C. But the delivery and acceptance may be by attorney; 10 Ind. 1. The date is not considered of the substance of a deed; and therefore a bond which either has no date or an impossible one is still good, provided the real day of its being dated or given, that is, delivered, can be proved; 2 Bla. Com. 304; Comyns, Dig. Fait, B, 3; 3 Call. 309. There is a presumption that a deed was executed on the day of its date; Steph. Dig. Ev. Art. 87; 5 Denio, 290.

The condition is a vital part of a conditional bond, and generally limits and determines the amount to be paid in case of a breach, 7 Cow. 224; but interest and costs may be added; 12 Johns. 350; 2 Johns. Cas. 340; 1 E. D. Sm. 250; 1 Hempst. 271. The recovery against a surety in a bond for the payment of money is not limited to the penalty, but may exceed it so far as necessary to include interest from the time of the breach. So far as interest is payable by the terms of the contract, and until default made, it is limited by the penalty; but after breach it is recoverable, not on the ground of contract, but as damages, which the law gives for its violation; 18 N. Y. 35. The omission from a statutory bond of a clause which does not affect the rights of the parties, and imposes no harder terms upon the obligors, does not invalidate it; 53 Penn. 198. And see CONDITION.

On the forfeiture of the bond, or its becoming single, the whole penalty was formerly recoverable at law; but here the courts of equity interfered, and would not permit a man to take more than in conscience he ought, viz.: his principal, interest, and expenses in case the forfeiture accrued by non-payment of money borrowed, the damages sustained upon non-performance of covenants, and the like. And the like practice having gained some footing in the courts of law, the statute 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, at length enacted, in the same spirit of equity, that, in case of a bond conditioned for the payment of money, the payment or tender of the principal sum due with interest and costs, even though the bond were forfeited and a suit commenced thereon, should be a full satisfaction and discharge. 2 Bla. Com. 340.

If in a bond the obligor binds himself, without adding his heirs, executors, and administrators, the executors and administrators are bound, but not the heir; Sheppard, Touchst. 369; for the law will not imply the obligation upon the heir; Coke, Litt. 209 a.

If a bond lie dormant for twenty years, it cannot afterwards be recovered; for the law raises a presumption of its having been paid, and the defendant may plead solvit ad diem to an action upon it; 1 Burr. 434; 4 id. 1963. And in some cases, under particular circumstances, even a less time may found a presumption; 1 Term, 271; Cowp. 109. The statute as to the presumption of payment after twenty years is in the nature of a statute of limitations. It is available as a bar to an action to recover on the instrument, but not where the party asks affirmative relief based upon the fact of payment; 12 N. Y. 409; 14 id. 477.

RAILWAY AID BONDS are issued by municipal corporations to aid in the construction of railways. The power to subscribe to the stock of railways, and to issue bonds in pursuance thereof, does not belong to towns, cities, or counties, without special authority of the legislature, and the power of the latter to confer such authority, where the state constitution is silent, has been a much-contested question. The weight of the very numerous decisions is in favor of the power, although in several of the states the constitutions, or amendments thereof, prohibit or restrict the right of municipal corporations to invest in the stock of railway or similar corporations; 21 Penn. 147; 47 id. 189; 20 Wall. 655, 660; 92 Ill. 111; 111 Mass. 454, 460; 99 U. S. 86; 13 Centr. L. J. 297; Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 104, 105; Pierce, Railroads, 87–109; and articles in 20 Am. L. Reg. 737; 26 id. 209, 608.

BONDAGE. A term which has not obtained a juridical use distinct from the vernacular, in which it is either taken as a synonym with slavery, or as applicable to any kind of personal servitude which is involuntary in its continuation.

The propriety of making it a distinct juridical term depends upon the sense given to the word slavery. If slave be understood to mean, exclusively, a natural person who, in law, is known as an object in respect to which legal persons may have rights of possession or property, as in respect to domestic animals and inanimate things, it is evident that any one who is regarded as a legal person, capable of rights and obligations in other relations, while bound by law to render service to another, is not a slave in the same sense of the word. Such a one stands in a legal relation, being under an obligation correlative to the right of the person who is by law entitled to his service, and, though not an object of property, nor possessed or owned as a chattel or thing, he is a person bound to the other, and may be called a bondman, in distinction from a slave as above understood. A greater or less number of rights may be attributed to persons bound to render service. Bondage may subsist under many forms. Where the rights attributed are such as can be exhibited in very limited spheres of action only, or are very imperfectly protected, it may be difficult to see wherein the condition, though nominally that of a legal person, differs from chattel slavery. Still, the two conditions have been plainly distinguishable under many legal systems, and even as existing at the same time under one source of law. The Hebrews may have held persons of other nations as slaves of that chattel condition which anciently was recognized by the laws of all Asiatic and European nations; but they held persons of their own nation in bondage only as legal persons capable of rights, while under an obligation to serve. Cobb's Hist. Sketch, ch. 1. When the serfdom of feudal times was first established, the two conditions were coexistent in every part of Europe (ibid. ch. 7), though afterwards the bondage of serfdom was for a long period the only form known there until the revival of chattel slavery, by the introduction of negro slaves into European commerce, in the sixteenth century. Every villein under the English law was clearly a legal person capable of some legal rights, whatever might be the nature of his services. Co. Litt. 123 b; Coke, 2d Inst. 4, 45. But at the first recognition of negro slavery in the jurisprudence of England and her colonies, the slave was clearly a natural person, known to the law as an object of possession or property for others, having no legal personality, who therefore, in many legal respects, resembled a thing or chattel. It is true that the moral responsibility of the slave and the duty of others to treat him as an accountable human being and not as a domestic animal were always more or less clearly recognized in the criminal jurisprudence. There has always been in his condition a mingling of the qualities of person and of thing, which has led to many legal contradictions. But while no rights or obligations, in relations between him and other natural persons such as might be judicially enforced by or against him, were attributed to him, there was a propriety in distinguishing the condition as chattel slavery, even though the term itself implies that there is an essential distinction between such a person and natural things, of which it seems absurd to say that they are either free or not free. The phrases instar rerum, tanquam bona, are aptly used by older writers. The bondage of the villein could not be thus characterized; and there is no historical connection between the principles which determined the existence of the one and those which sanctioned the other. The law of English villenage furnished no rules applicable to negro slavery in America. 5 Rand. 690, 693; 2 Hill, Ch. So. C. 390; 9 Ga. 561; 1 Hurd, Law of Freedom and Bondage, c. 4, 5. Slavery in the colonies was entirely distinct from the condition of those white persons who were held to service for years, which was involuntary in its continuance, though founded in most instances on contract. These persons had legal rights, not only in respect to the community at large, but also in respect to the person to whom they owed service.

In the American slaveholding states before the Civil War, the moral personality of those held in the customary slavery was recognized by jurisprudence and statute to an extent which makes it difficult to say whether, there, slaves were by law regarded as things and not legal persons (though subject to the laws which regulate the title and transfer of property), or whether they were still things and property in the same sense and degree in which they were so formerly. Compare laws and authorities in Cobb's Law of Negro Slavery, ch. iv., v.

The Emancipation Proclamation of January 1, 1863, and the subsequent amendments to the constitution of the United States, have rendered the views entertained by jurists on the subject purely speculative, as slavery has ceased to exist within the borders of the republic.

The Emancipation Proclamation was issued by President Lincoln as commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States during the existence of armed rebellion, and by its terms purported to be nothing more than "a fit and necessary war measure for suppressing said rebellion." By virtue of this power, it was therein ordered and declared that all persons held as slaves within certain designated states, and parts of states, were and henceforward should be free, and that the executive government of the United States, including the military and naval authorities thereof, should recognize and maintain the freedom of said persons. The proclamation was not meant to apply to those states or parts of states not in rebellion.

The constitutionality of this measure has been a subject of some doubt, the prevailing opinion being that it could be supported as a war measure alone, and apply where the slaveholding territory was actually subdued by the military power of the United States; 16 Wall. 68. In South Carolina, it has been held that slavery was not abolished by the Emancipation Proclamation, and the same view was sustained in Texas; 13 S. C. Eq. 366; 31 Tex. 504. In Louisiana; 20 La. Ann. 199; and Alabama; 43 Ala. 592; the opposite view is held, but see 44 Ala. 70, while in Mississippi the question of the time when slavery was abolished is left open; 43 Miss. 102.

The provisions of Amendment XIII. to the constitution, proclaimed Dec. 18, 1865, may fairly be considered as the definite settlement of the question of slavery in the United States. It declares, "1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to its jurisdiction. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

BONIS NON AMOVENDIS. A writ addressed to the sheriff, when a writ of error has been brought, commanding that the person against whom judgment has been obtained be not suffered to remove his goods till the error be tried and determined. Reg. Orig. 131.

BONO ET MALO. A special writ of jail delivery, which formerly issued of course for each particular prisoner. 4 Bla. Com. 270.

BONUS. A premium paid to a grantor or vendor.

A consideration given for what is received. Extraordinary profit accruing in the operation of a stock company or private corporation. 10 Ves. Ch. 185; 7 Sim. 634; 2 Spence, Eq. Jur. 569.

An additional premium paid for the use of money beyond the legal interest. 2 Parsons, Contr. 391.

In its original sense of good, the word was formely much used. Thus, a jury was to be composed of twelve good men (boni homines), 3 Bla. Com. 349; bonus judex (a good judge). Coke, Litt. 246.

BOOK. A general name given to every literary composition which is printed, but appropriately to a printed composition bound in a volume. See COPYRIGHT.

BOOK-LAND. In English Law. Land, also called charter-land, which was held by deed under certain rents and fee services, and differed in nothing from free socage land. 2 Bla. Com. 90. See 2 Spelman, English Works, 233. tit. Of Ancient Deeds and Charters; BOC-LAND.

BOOK OF ACTS. The records of a surrogate's court.

BOOK OF ADJOURNAL. In Scotch Law. The records of the court of justiciary.

BOOK OF RATES. An account or enumeration of the duties or tariffs authorized by parliament. 1 Bla. Com. 316; Jacob, Law Dict.

BOOK OF RESPONSES. In Scotch Law. An account which the director of the Chancery keeps particularly to note a seizure when he gives an order to the sheriff in that part to give it to an heir whose service has been returned to him. Wharton, Lex.

BOOKS. Merchants, traders, and other persons who are desirous of understanding their affairs, and of explaining them when necessary, keep a day-book, a journal, a ledger, a letter-book, an invoice-book, a cash-book, a bill-book, a bank-book, and a check-book. See these several articles.

It is a cause for refusing a discharge under the insolvent laws, in some of the states, that merchants have not kept suitable books.

BOOKS OF SCIENCE. In Evidence. Scientific books, even of received authority, are not admissible in evidence before a jury; 5 C. & P. 73; 1 Gray, 337; 117 Mass. 122; s. c. 19 Am. Rep. 401; 3 Bosw. 18; 2 Carl. 617; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 440, a. Counsel may read such books to the jury in their argument; 46 Conn. 330 (two judges dissenting); contra, 1 Gray, 337; 50 N. H. 159; 44 Cal. 65; 5 Bradw. 481. In 20 Tex. 398 and 1 Chand. 178, it was held that the admission of such evidence was in the discretion of the court. See also 24 Alb. L. J. 266, 284, 357.

The law of England may be proved by printed books of statutes, reports, and text writers, as well as by the sworn testimony of experts; so held, in a learned opinion by Lowell, J., in the U. S. C. C., 2 Low. 142. A scientific witness may testify to the written foreign law, with or without the text of the law before him; 11 Cl. & F. 85, 114; 8 Q. B. 208. It has been said that foreign law must always be proved by an expert; 2 Phil. Ev. 428; but see Westl. Pr. Int. Law, § 414.

BOON-DAYS. Certain days in the year on which copyhold tenants were bound to perform certain services for the lord. Called, also, due-days. Whishaw.

BOOTY. The capture of personal property by a public enemy on land, in contradistinction to prize, which is a capture of such property by such an enemy on the sea.

After booty has been in complete possession of the enemy for twenty-four hours, it becomes absolutely his, without any right of postliminy in favor of the original owner, particularly when it has passed bonâ fide into the hands of a neutral. 1 Kent, 110. The right to the booty, Pothier says, belongs to the sovereign; but sometimes the right of the sovereign, or of the public, is transferred to the soldiers, to encourage them. Pothier, Droit de Propriété, p. 1, c. 2, a. 1, § 2; 2 Burl. Nat. & Pol. Law, pt. 4, c. 7, n. 12.

BORDAGE. A species of base tenure by which bordlands were held. The tenants were called bordarii. These bordarii would seem to have been those tenants of a less servile condition, who had a cottage and land assigned to them on condition of supplying their lord with poultry, eggs, and such small matters for his table. Whishaw; Cowel.

BORDLANDS. The demesnes which the lords keep in their hands for the maintenance of their board or table. Cowel.

BORDLODE. The rent or quantity of food which the bordarii paid for their lands. Cowel.

BORG (Sax.). Suretyship.

Borgbriche (violation of a pledge or suretyship) was a fine imposed on the borg for property stolen within its limits.

A tithing in which each one became a surety for the others for their good behavior. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowel; 1 Bla. Com. 115.

BOROUGH. A town; a town of note or importance. Cowel. An ancient town. Littleton, § 164. A town which sends burgesses to parliament, whether corporate or not. 1 Bla. Com. 115; Whishaw.

A corporate town that is not a city. 1 M. & G. 1; Cowel. In its more modern English acceptation, it denotes a town or city organized for purposes of government. 3 Steph. Com. 191; 1 id. 116.

It is impossible to reconcile the meanings of this word given by the various authors cited, except upon the supposition of a change of requirements necessary to constitute a borough at different periods. The only essential circumstance which underlies all the meanings given would seem to be that of a number of citizens bound together for purposes of joint action, varying in the different boroughs, but being either for representation or for municipal government.

In American Law. In Pennsylvania, the term denotes a part of a township having a charter for municipal purposes; and the same is true of Connecticut. 23 Conn. 128; see also 18 Ohio St. 496; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 41, n.

In Scotch Law. A corporation erected by charter from the crown. Bell, Dict.

BOROUGH COURTS. In English Law. Private courts of limited jurisdiction held in particular districts by prescription, charter, or act of parliament, for the prosecution of petty suits. 19 Geo. III. c. 70; 3 Will. IV. c. 74; 3 Bla. Com. 80.

BOROUGH ENGLISH. A custom prevalent in some parts of England, by which the youngest son inherits the estate in preference to his older brothers. 1 Bla. Com. 75.

The custom is said by Blackstone to have been derived from the Saxons, and to have been so called in distinction from the Norman rule of descent; 2 Bla. Com. 83. A reason for the custom is found in the fact that the elder children were usually provided for during the life of the parent as they grew up, and removed, while the younger son usually remained. See, also, Bacon Abr.; Comyns, Dig. Borough English; Termes de la Ley; Cowel. The custom applies to socage lands; 2 Bla. Com. 83.

BORROWER. He to whom a thing is lent at his request.

In general he has the right to use the thing borrowed, himself, during the time and for the purpose intended between the parties. He is bound to take extraordinary care of the thing borrowed; to use it according to the intention of the lender; to restore it in proper condition at the proper time. See BAILMENT; Story, Bailm. § 268; 2 Kent, 446–449; 1 Bouvier, Inst. 1078–1090.

BOSCAGE. That food which wood and trees yield to cattle.

To be quit of boscage is to be discharged of paying any duty of wind-fall wood in forest. Whishaw; Manwood, For. Laws.

BOSCUS. Wood growing; wood; both high wood or trees, and underwood or coppice. The high wood is properly called saltus. Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.; Coke, Litt. 5 a.

BOTE. A recompense or compensation. The common word to boot comes from this word. Cowel. The term is applied as well to making repairs in houses, bridges, etc., as to making a recompense for slaying a man or stealing property. House bote, materials which may be taken to repair a house; hedge bote, to repair hedges; brig bote, to repair bridges; man bote, compensation to be paid by a murderer. Bote is known to the English law also under the name of Estover. 1 Washb. R. P. 99; 2 Bla. Com. 35.

BOTTOMRY. In Maritime Law. A contract in the nature of a mortgage, by which the owner of a ship, or the master, as his agent, borrows money for the use of the ship, and for a specified voyage, or for a definite period, pledges the ship (or the keel or bottom of the ship, pars pro toto) as a security for its repayment, with maritime or extraordinary interest on account of the marine risks to be borne by the lender; it being stipulated that if the ship be lost in the course of the specified voyage, or during the limited time, by any of the perils enumerated in the contract, the lender shall also lose his money. 2 Hagg. Adm. 48, 53; 2 Sumn. 157; Abbott, Shipp. 117–131.

Bottomry differs materially from an ordinary loan. Upon a simple loan the money is wholly at the risk of the borrower, and must be repaid at all events. But in bottomry, the money, to the extent of the enumerated perils, is at the risk of the lender during the voyage on which it is loaned, or for the period specified. Upon an ordinary loan only the usual legal rate of interest can be reserved; but upon bottomry and respondentia loans any rate of interest, not grossly extortionate, which may be agreed upon, may be legally contracted for.

When the loan is not made upon the ship, but on the goods laden on board and which are to be sold or exchanged in the course of the voyage, the borrower's personal responsibility is deemed the principal security for the performance of the contract, which is therefore called Respondentia, which see. And in a loan upon respondentia the lender must be paid his principal and interest though the ship perish, provided the goods are saved. In most other respects the contracts of bottomry and of respondentia stand substantially upon the same footing. See further, 10 Jur. 845; 4 Thornt. 285, 512; 2 W. Rob. Adm. 83–85; 3 Mas. 225.

Bottomry bonds may be given by a master appointed by the charterers of the ship, by masters necessarily substituted or appointed abroad, or by the mate who has become master, as hæres necessarius, on the death of the appointed master. 1 Dod. 278; 3 Hagg. Adm. 18. But while in a port in which the owners, or one of them or a recognized agent of the owners, reside, the master, as such, has no authority to make contracts affecting the ship, and a bottomry bond executed under such circumstances is void; 1 Wash. C. C. 49; 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 623; 31 L. J., Adm. 81. Unless, it has been held in an English case, he has no means of communicating with the owners; 1 Dod. 273. The master has authority to hypothecate the vessel only in a foreign port; but in the jurisprudence of the United States all maritime ports, other than those of the State where the vessel belongs, are foreign to the vessel; 1 Cliff. 308; 1 Blatch. & H. 66, 90.

The owner of the vessel may borrow upon bottomry in the vessel's home port, and whether she is in port or at sea; and it is not necessary to the validity of a bond made by the owner that the money borrowed should be advanced for the necessities of the vessel or her voyage; 2 Sumn. 157; 1 Paine, 671. But it may well be doubted, whether, when money is thus borrowed by the owner for purposes other than necessities or uses of the ship, and a bottomry bond in the usual form is given, a court of admiralty has jurisdiction to enforce the lien; Bee, 348. As a contract made and to be performed on land, and having no necessary connection with the business of navigation, it is probable that it would not now be deemed a maritime contract, but would take effect and be enforced as a common-law mortgage. See Abbott, Shipp. 119, 120, 121, and Perkins's notes; 1 Wash. C. C. 293; 2 id. 145; 20 How. 393; Bee, 433; 1 Swab. 269. But see 1 Paine, 671; 1 Pet. Adm. 295.

If the bond be executed by the master of the vessel, it will be upheld and enforced only upon proof that there was a necessity for the loan, and also for pledging the credit of the ship; as the authority of the master to borrow money on the credit of the vessel rests upon the necessity of the case, and only exists under such circumstances of necessity as would induce a prudent owner to hypothecate his ship to raise money for her use; 3 Hagg. Adm. 66, 74; 3 Sumn, 228; 1 Wheat. 96; 1 Paine, 671; Abbott, Shipp. 156; Bee, 120. His authority is not confined, however, to such repairs and supplies as are absolutely and indispensably necessary, but includes also all such as are reasonably fit and proper for the ship and the voyage; 10 Wall. 192, 204; 9 id. 129; 17 id. 666.

If the master could have obtained the necessary supplies or funds on the personal credit of himself or of his owner, and this fact was known to the lender, the bond will be held invalid. And if the master borrows on bottomry without apparent necessity, or when the owner is known to be accessible enough to be consulted upon the emergency, the bond is void, and the lender can look only to the personal responsibility of the master; 3 W. Rob. Adm. 243, 265. For the fact that the advances were necessary, and were made on the security of the vessel, is not, in any instance, to be presumed; 3 Wash. C. C. 290. And moneys advanced to the master without inquiry as to the necessity of the advance, or seeing to the proper application, have been disallowed; 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 602. It may be given after the advances have been made, in pursuance of a prior agreement; 8 Pet. 538. If given for a larger sum than the actual advances, in fraud of the owners or underwriters, it vitiates the bond and avoids the bottomry lien even for the sum actually advanced; 18 How. 63; 1 Curt. C. C. 341. See 1 Wheat. 96; 8 Pet. 538.

The contract of bottomry is usually, in form a bond (termed a bottomry bond) conditioned for the repayment of the money lent, with the interest agreed upon, if the ship safely accomplishes the specified voyage or completes in safety the period limited by the contract; 2 Sumn. 157. Sometimes it is in that of a bill of sale, and sometimes in a different shape; but it should always specify the principal lent and the rate of maritime interest agreed upon; the names of the lender and borrower; the names of the vessel and of her master; the subject on which the loan is effected, whether of the ship alone, or of the ship and freight; whether the loan is for an entire or specific voyage or for a limited period, and for what voyage or for what space of time; the risks the lender is contented to bear; and the period of repayment. It is negotiable; 5 C. Rob. Adm. 102; 1 Newb. Adm. 514; 5 Jur. N. S. 632.

In case a highly extortionate or wholly unjustifiable rate of interest be stipulated for in a bottomry bond, courts of admiralty will enforce the bond for only the amount fairly due, and will not allow the lender to recover an unconscionable rate of interest. But in mitigating an exorbitant rate of interest they will proceed with great caution. For the course pursued where the amount of interest was accidentally omitted, see 1 Swab. 240. Fraud will induce a court of equity to set aside a bottomry bond, in England; 8 Sim. 358; 3 M. & C. 451, 453, n.

Where the express contract of bottomry is void for fraud, no recovery can be had, on the ground of an implied contract and lien of advances actually made; 1 Curt. C. C. 340; 18 How. 63. But a bottomry bond may be good in part and bad in part; 3 Mas. 255; Ware, 249; Olc. 55. And it has been held in England that fraud of the owner or mortgagor of a vessel, which might render the voyage illegal does not invalidate a bottomry bond to a bonâ fide lender; L. R. 1 Adm. & Ecc. 13.

Not only the ship, her tackle, apparel, and furniture (and the freight, if specifically pledged), are liable for the debt in case the voyage or period is completed in safety, but the borrower is also, in that event, personally responsible. See 2 Bla. Com. 457, 458; Marshall, Ins. b. 2, c. 1; Code de Comm. art. 311. But only, it would seem, in cases in which such responsibility has been especially made a condition of the bond; 6 Am. L. Rev. 763; 48 Barb. 269.

The borrower on bottomry is affected by the doctrines of seaworthiness and deviation; 3 Kent, 360; Phillips, Ins. sec. 988, 989; and if, before or after the risk on the bottomry bond has commenced, the voyage or adventure is voluntarily broken up by the borrower, in any manner whatsoever, whether by a voluntary abandonment of the voyage or adventure, or by a deviation or otherwise, the maritime risks terminate, and the bond becomes presently payable; 2 Sumn. 157; 3 Kent. 360. But maritime interest is not recoverable if the risk has not commenced.

But in England and America the established doctrine is that the owners are not personally liable, except to the extent of the fund pledged which has come into their hands; 8 Pet. 538, 554; 1 Hagg. Adm. 1, 13. If the ship or cargo be lost, not by the enumerated perils of the sea, but by the fraud or fault of the borrower or master, the hypothecation bond is forfeited and must be paid.

The risks assumed by the lender are usually such as are enumerated in the ordinary policies of marine insurance. If the ship be wholly lost in consequence of these risks, the lender, as before stated, loses his money; but the doctrine of constructive total loss does not apply to bottomry contracts; 1 Arnould, Ins. 115; 1 Man. & Scl. 30; 9 Eng. L. & Eq. 553; 22 L. T. R., Ex. 371; 2 Alb. L. J. 92; 3 Story, 465.

It is usual in bottomry bonds to provide that, in case of damage to the ship (not amounting to a total loss) by any of the enumerated perils, the lender shall bear his proportion of the loss, viz.: an amount which will bear the same proportion to the whole damage that the amount lent bears to the whole value of the vessel prior to the damage. Unless the bond contains an express stipulation to that effect, the lender is not entitled to take possession of the ship pledged, even when the debt becomes due; but he may enforce payment of the debt by a proceeding in rem, in the admiralty, against the ship; under which she may be arrested, and, in pursuance of a decree of the court, ultimately sold for the payment of the amount due. And this is the ordinary and appropriate remedy of the lender upon bottomry; though he has also, as a general rule, his remedy by action of covenant or debt at common law upon the bond; Tyler on Mar. Loans, 782. It was held in Mississippi that state legislatures have no authority to create maritime liens, or confer jurisdiction on state courts to enforce such liens by proceedings in rem. Such jurisdiction is exclusively in the courts of admiralty of the United States; 9 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 683; 49 Ala. 436. See 7 Wall. 624.

In entering a decree in admiralty upon a bottomry bond, the true rule is to consider the sum lent and the maritime interest as the principal, and to allow common interest on that sum from the time such principal became due; 3 Mas. 255; 2 Arnould, Ins. 1340. Where money is necessarily taken up on bottomry to defray the expenses of repairing a partial loss, against which the vessel is insured, the underwriter (although he has nothing to do with bottomry bond) is liable to pay his share of the extra expense of obtaining the money, in that mode, for the payment of such expenses; 12 Pet. 378.

The lien or privilege of a bottomry-bond holder, like all other maritime liens, has, ordinarily, preference of all prior and subsequent common-law and statutory liens, and binds all prior interests centring in the ship; 4 Cranch, 328. It holds good (if reasonable diligence be exercised in enforcing it) as against subsequent purchasers and common-law incumbrancers; but the lien of a bottomry bond is not indelible, and, like other admiralty liens, may be lost by unreasonable delay in asserting it, if the rights of purchasers or incumbrancers have intervened; 9 Wheat. 409; 16 Bost. L. Rep. 264; 17 id. 93, and authorities there cited; 2 W. & M. 48; 1 Swab. 269; 1 Cliff. 308; 5 Rob. Adm. 94. The rules under which courts of admiralty marshal assets claimed to be applicable to the payment of bottomry and other maritime liens and of common-law and statutory liens, will be more properly and fully considered in the article Maritime Liens, which see. But it is proper here to state that, as between the holders of two bottomry bonds upon the same vessel in respect to different voyages, the later one, as a general rule, is entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of the vessel; 1 Dod. 201; Olc. 55; 17 Bost. L. Rep. 93; 1 Paine, 671.

Seamen have a lien, prior to that of the holder of the bottomry bond, for their wages for the voyage upon which the bottomry is founded, or any subsequent voyage; but the owners are also personally liable for such wages, and if the bottomry-bond holder is compelled to discharge the seamen's lien, he has a resulting right to compensation over against the owners, and has been held to have a lien upon the proceeds of the ship for his reimbursement; 8 Pet. 538; 1 Abb. Adm. 150; 1 Hagg. Adm. 62. And see 1 Swab. 261; 1 Dod. 40.

The act of congress of July 29, 1850, declaring bills of sale, mortgages, hypothecations, and conveyances of vessels invalid against persons other than the grantor or mortgagor, his heirs and devisees, not having actual notice thereof, unless recorded in the office of the collector of the customs where such vessel is registered or enrolled, expressly provided that the lien by bottomry on any vessel, created during her voyage by a loan of money or materials necessary to repair or enable such vessel to prosecute a voyage, shall not lose its priority or be in any way affected by the provisions of that act. See Parsons, Mar. Law; Abbott, Shipping, with Story and Perkins's notes; Hall's translation of Emerigon's Essay on Maritime Loans, with the Appendix; Tyler on Usury (pt. iii. Mar. Loans); Marshall, Insurance, book 2; 1 Bouvier, Institutes, 504–509; 3 Kent, Lec. 49; 8 Pet. 538; 1 Hagg. Adm. 179; 2 Pet. Adm. 295.

BOUGHT NOTE. A written memorandum of a sale, delivered, by the broker who effects the sale, to the vendee; Story, Ag. § 28; 11 Ad. & E. 589; 8 M. & W. 834.

Bought and sold notes are made out usually at the same time, the former being delivered to the vendee, the latter to the vendor. When the broker has not exceeded his authority, both parties are bound thereby; 4 Esp. 114; 2 Campb. 337; 1 C. & P. 388; 5 B. & C. 436; 6 id. 117; 1 Bell, Com. 4th ed. 347, 477. Where the same broker acts for both parties, the notes must correspond; 1 Holt, N. P. 172; 5 B. & C. 436; 4 Q. B. 737; 17 id. 103; 3 Wend. 459; 2 Sandf. 133. The broker, as to this part of the transaction, is agent for both parties; 2 H. & N. 210; 16 Gray, 442; 71 Penn. 69. As to the rule where different brokers are employed, see 10 Exch. 323, 330. Whether a memorandum in the broker's books will cure a disagreement, see 9 M. & W. 802; 13 id. 746; 5 Taunt. 786; 1 M. & M. 43; 1 M. & R. 368; 17 Q. B. 115; 1 H. & N. 484; but it is said to be the better opinion that the signed entry in the broker's book constitutes the real contract between the parties; Whart. Ag. § 720; 1 C. P. D. 777; but it may be shown that the entry was in excess of the broker's authority; 4 L. R. Ir. 94; that the bought and sold notes do not constitute the contract, see 17 Q. B. 115. Where there is a variance between the bought and sold notes, and no entry of the transaction, there is no contract; id. § 721; 17 Q. B. 115. A bought note will take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, if there is no variance; 16 C. B. N. S. 11. See a full discussion in Benjamin, Sales, § 276 et seq.

BOUND BAILIFF. A sheriff's officer, who serves writs and makes arrests. He is so called because bound to the sheriff for the due execution of his office; 1 Bla. Com. 345.

BOUNDARY. Any separation, natural or artificial, which marks the confines or line of two contiguous estates. 3 Toullier, n. 171.

The term is applied to include the objects placed or existing at the angles of the bounding lines, as well as those which extend along the lines of separation.

A natural boundary is a natural object remaining where it was placed by nature.

A river or stream is a natural boundary, and the centre of the stream is the line; 12 Johns. 252; 20 id. 91; 6 Cow. 579; 1 Rand. 417; 3 id. 33; 4 Pick. 268; 1 Halst. 1; 4 Mas. 349; 9 N. H. 461; 1 Tayl. 136; 11 Miss. 366; 5 Harr. & J. 195, 245. And see 2 Conn. 481; 17 Johns. 195; 4 Ill. 510; 3 Ohio, 495; 4 Pick. 199; 14 S. & R. 71; 11 Ala. 436; 4 Mo. 343; 1 M'Cord, 580; 11 Ohio, 138; 1 Whart. 124; 63 Penn. 210. As to the rule where a pond is the boundary, see 13 Pick. 261; 9 N. H. 461; 10 Me. 224; 13 id. 198; 16 id. 257; where the seashore, see 2 Johns. 362; 5 Gray, 335; 13 id. 254; 2 Wall. 587; where one of the great lakes, 34 Ohio St. 492.

Where land is bounded by the sea, and the latter suddenly recedes, leaving considerable space uncovered, this new land, under the royal prerogative, becomes the property of the king. But if the dereliction be gradual, and by imperceptible degrees, then the land gained belongs to the adjacent owner, for de minimis non curat lex; 2 Bla. Com. 262; 3 Bar. & C. 91, and cases cited. Similarly, where a stream forming the boundary between two owners gradually changes its course, it continues to mark the line; but if the change be sudden and immediate, the boundary remains in the old channel; 2 Bla. Com. 262; 3 Tex. App. 323; 26 Ohio St. 40; 4 Neb. 437; 11 Wall. 395.

An artificial boundary is one erected by man.

The ownership, in case of such boundaries, must, of course, turn mainly upon circumstances peculiar to each case; 5 Taunt. 20; 3 id. 138; 8 B. & C. 259; generally extending to the centre; 4 Hill, N. Y. 309; 6 Conn. 471. A tree standing directly on the line is the joint property of both proprietors; 12 N. H. 454; otherwise, where it only stands so near that the roots penetrate; 1 M. & M. 112; 2 Rolle, 141; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 617. Land bounded on a highway extends to the centre-line, though a private street; 8 Cush. 595; 1 Sandf. 323, 344; 26 Penn. 228; unless the description excludes the highway; 15 Johns. 454; 11 Conn. 60; 1 Allen, 443; 2 Washb. R. P. 635.

Boundaries are frequently denoted by monuments fixed at the angles. In such case the connecting lines are always presumed to be straight, unless described to be otherwise; 16 Pick. 235; 6 T. B. Monr. 179; 3 Ohio, 382; 1 McL. 519; 2 Washb. R. P. 632. A practical surveyor may testify whether, in his opinion, certain marks on trees, piles of stones, or other marks on the ground, were intended as monuments of boundaries; 10 Weekly Notes of Cases, 321.

The following is the order of marshalling boundaries: first, the highest regard is had to natural boundaries; second, to lines actually run and corners marked at the time of the grant; third, if the lines and courses of an adjoining tract are called for, the lines will be extended, if they are sufficiently established, and no other departure from the deed is required, preference being given to marked lines; fourth, to courses and distances; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 301, n. See 3 Murph. 82; 4 Hen. & M. 125; 6 Wheat. 582; 8 Me. 61; 1 McL. 518; 3 Rob. La. 171; 8 Penn. 154; 85 id. 117.

Parol evidence is often admissible to identify and ascertain the locality of monuments called for by a description; 13 Pick. 267; 19 id. 445; and where the description is ambiguous, the practical construction given by the parties may be shown; 1 Metc. Mass. 378; 7 Pick. 274. Common reputation may be admitted to identify monuments, especially if of a public or quasi-public nature; 2 Washb. R. P. 636: 1 Greenl. Ev. § 145; 1 Hawks, 116; 1 McL. 45, 518; 10 N. H. 43; 4 id. 214; 2 A. K. Marsh. 158; 9 Dana, 322, 465; 1 Dev. 340; 6 Pet. 341; 8 Leigh, 697; 3 Ohio, 282. And see 3 Dev. & B. 49; 10 S. & R. 281; 10 Johns. 377; 12 Pick. 532; 7 Gray, 174; 5 E. & B. 166; 6 Litt. 9; 50 Tex. 371.

The determination of the boundaries of the States of the Union, is placed by the Constitution in the Supreme Court of the United States; 12 Pet. 657; 4 How. 591; 11 Wall. 39. This position was taken by that court against the opinion of Chief Justice Taney, who held that a controversy between States, or between individuals, in relation to the boundaries of a State, falls within the province of the court where the suit is brought to try a right of property in the soil, or any other right which is properly the subject of judicial cognizance and decision; but not a contest for rights of sovereignty and jurisdiction between States over any particular territory. This he held to be a political question; 12 Pet. 752.

Consult 2 Washb. R. P. 630–638; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 145, 301; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3923; article in 28 A. L. Reg. 546.

BOUNDED TREE. A tree marking or standing at the corner of a field or estate.

BOUNTY. An additional benefit conferred upon, or a compensation paid to, a class of persons.

It differs from a reward, which is usually applied to a sum paid for the performance of some specific act to some person or persons. It may or may not be part of a contract. Thus, the bounty offered a soldier would seem to be part of the consideration for his services. The bounty paid to fishermen is not a consideration for any contract, however. See 8 Allen, 80; 27 Md. 320; 39 How. Pr. 481.

A premium offered or given to induce men to enlist into the public service. 39 How. Pr. 481.

BOUWERYE. A farm.

BOUWMASTER. A farmer.

BOVATA TERRÆ. As much land as one ox can cultivate. Said by some to be thirteen, by others eighteen, acres in extent. Skene; Spelman, Gloss.; Coke, Litt. 5 a.

BOZERO. In Spanish Law. An advocate; one who pleads the causes of others, either suing or defending. Las Partidas, part. 3, tit. v. l. 1-6.

Called also abogadas. Amongst other classes of persons excluded from this office are minors under seventeen, the deaf, the dumb, friars, women, and infamous persons. White, New Rec. 274.

BRANCH. A portion of the descendants of a person, who trace their descent to some common ancestor, who is himself a descendant of such person.

The whole of a genealogy is often called the genealogical tree; and sometimes it is made to take the form of a tree, which is in the first place divided into as many branches as there are children, afterwards into as many branches as there are grandchildren, then great-grandchildren, etc. If, for example, it be desired to form the genealogical tree of Peter's family, Peter will be made the trunk of the tree; if he has had two children, John and James, their names will be written on the first two branches, which will themselves shoot out into as many smaller branches as John and James have children; from these others proceed, till the whole family is represented on the tree. Thus the origin, the application, and the use of the word branch in genealogy will be at once perceived.

BRANDING. An ancient mode of punishment by inflicting a mark on an offender with a hot iron. It is generally disused in civil law, but is a recognized punishment for some military offences.

BRANKS. An instrument of punishment formerly made use of in some parts of England for the correction of scolds, which it was said to do so effectually and so very safely that it was looked upon by Dr. Plotts, in his History of Staffordshire, p. 389, "as much to be preferred to the ducking-stool, which not only endangers the health of the party, but also gives the tongue liberty 'twixt every dip, to neither of which is this liable; it brings such a bridle for the tongue as not only quite deprives them of speech, but brings shame for the transgression and humiliation thereupon before it is taken off."

BREACH. In Contracts. The violation of an obligation, engagement, or duty.

A continuing breach is one where the condition of things constituting a breach continues during a period of time, or where the acts constituting a breach are repeated at brief intervals; F. Moore, 242; 1 Leon. 62; 1 Salk. 141; Holt, 178; 2 Ld. Raym. 1125.

In Pleading. That part of the declaration in which the violation of the defendant's contract is stated.

It is usual in assumpsit to introduce the statement of the particular breach, with the allegation that the defendant, contriving and fraudulently intending craftily and subtilely to deceive and defraud the plaintiff, neglected and refused to perform, or performed, the particular act, contrary to the previous stipulation.

In debt, the breach or cause of action complained of must proceed only for the non-payment of money previously alleged to be payable; and such breach is very similar whether the action be in debt on simple contract, specialty, record, or statute, and is usually of the following form: "Yet the said defendant, although often requested so to do, hath not as yet paid the said sum of —— dollars, above demanded, nor any part thereof, to the said plaintiff, but hath hitherto wholly neglected and refused so to do, to the damage of the said plaintiff —— dollars, and therefore he brings suit," etc.

The breach must obviously be governed by the nature of the stipulation; it ought to be assigned in the words of the contract, either negatively or affirmatively, or in words which are coextensive with its import and effect; Comyns, Dig. Pleader, C, 45-49; 2 Wms. Saund. 181 b, c; 6 Cranch, 127. And see 5 Johns. 168; 8 id. 111; 7 id. 376; 4 Dall. 436; 2 Hen. & M. 446; Steph. Pl. 307.

When the contract is in the disjunctive, as on a promise to deliver a horse by a particular day, or to pay a sum of money, the breach ought to be assigned that the defendant did not do the one act nor the other; 1 Sid. 440; Hardr. 320; Comyns, Dig. Pleader, C.

BREACH OF CLOSE. Every unwarrantable entry upon the soil of another is a breach of his close; 3 Bla. Com. 209.

BREACH OF COVENANT. A violation of, or a failure to perform the conditions of, a bond or covenant. The remedy is in some cases by a writ of covenant; in others, by an action of debt; 3 Bla. Com. 156.

BREACH OF THE PEACE. A violation of public order; the offence of disturbing the public peace. One guilty of this offence may be held to bail for his good behavior. An act of public indecorum is also a breach of the peace. The remedy for this offence is by indictment.

BREACH OF PRISON. An unlawful escape out of prison. This is of itself a misdemeanor; 1 Russell, Cr. 378; 4 Bla. Com. 129; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 18, s. 1; 7 Conn. 752. The remedy for this offence is by indictment. See ESCAPE.

BREACH OF TRUST. The wilful misappropriation, by a trustee, of a thing which had been lawfully delivered to him in confidence.

The distinction between larceny and a breach of trust is to be found chiefly in the terms or way in which the thing was taken originally into the party's possession; and the rule seems to be, that whenever the article is obtained upon a fair contract not for a mere temporary purpose, or by one who is in the employment of the deliverer, then the subsequent misappropriation is to be considered as an act of breach of trust. This rule is, however, subject to many nice distinctions. 15 S. & R. 93, 97. It has been adjudged that when the owner of goods parts with the possession for a particular purpose, and the person who receives them avowedly for that purpose has at the time a fraudulent intention to make use of the possession as a means of converting the goods to his own use, and does so convert them, it is larceny; but if the owner part with the property, although fraudulent means have been used to obtain it, the act of conversion is not larceny. Alison, Princ. c. 12, p. 354.

In the Year Book 21 Hen. VII. 14, the distinction is thus stated:—"Pigot. If I deliver a jewel or money to my servant to keep, and he flees or goes from me with the jewel, is it felony? Cutler said, Yes: for so long as he is with me or in my house, that which I have delivered to him is adjudged to be in my possession; as my butler, who has my plate in keeping, if he flees with it, it is felony. Same law, if he who keeps my horse goes away with him. The reason is, they are always in my possession. But if I deliver a horse to my servant to ride to market or the fair, and he flee with him, it is no felony; for he comes lawfully to the possession of the horse by delivery. And so it is if I give him a jewel to carry to London, or to pay one, or to buy a thing, and he flee with it, it is not felony; for it is out of my possession, and he comes lawfully to it. Pigot. It can well be; for the master in these cases has an action against him, viz.: Detinue, or Account." See this point fully discussed in Stamford, Pl. Cr. lib. 1. See also Year B. Edw. IV. fol. 9; 33 Hen. III. 7; 21 Hen. VII. 15. See BREAKING BULK.

BREAKING. Parting or dividing by force and violence a solid substance, or piercing, penetrating, or bursting through the same.

In cases of burglary and housebreaking, the removal of any part of the house, or of the fastenings provided to secure it, with violence and a felonious intent.

The breaking is actual, as in the above case; or constructive, as when the burglar or housebreaker gains an entry by fraud, conspiracy, or threats; 2 Russell, Cr. 2; 2 Chitty, Cr. L. 1092; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 553; Alison, Princ. 282, 291; 68 N. C. 207; 82 Penn. 306; 85 id. 54. In England it has been decided that if the sash of a window be partly open, but not sufficiently so to admit a person, the raising of it so as to admit a person is not a breaking of the house; 1 Mood. 178; followed in 105 Mass. 588. No reasons are assigned. It is difficult to conceive, if this case be law, what further opening will amount to a breaking. But see 1 Moody, 327, 377; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 524–540; BURGLARY.

It was doubted, under the ancient common law, whether the breaking out of a dwelling-house in the night-time was a breaking sufficient to constitute burglary. Sir M. Hale thinks that this was not burglary, because fregit et exivit, non fregit et intravit; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 554; see 55 Ala. 123. It may, perhaps, be thought that a breaking out is not so alarming as a breaking in, and, indeed, may be a relief to the minds of the inmates; they may exclaim, as Cicero did of Catiline, Magno me metu liberabis, dummodo inter me atque te murus intersit. But this breaking was made burglary by the statute 12 Anne, c. 1, § 7 (1713). The getting the head out through a skylight has been held to be a sufficient breaking out of a house to complete the crime of burglary; 1 Jebb, 99. The statute of 12 Anne is too recent to be binding as a part of the common law in all of the United States; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 99; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 540–544.

BREAKING BULK. In Criminal Law. The doctrine of breaking bulk proceeds upon the ground of a determination of the privity of the bailment by the wrongful act of the bailee. Thus, where a carrier had agreed to carry certain bales of goods, which were delivered to him, to Southampton, but carried them to another place, broke open the bales, and took the goods contained in them feloniously and converted them to his own use, the majority of the judges held that if the party had sold the entire bales it would not have been felony; "but as he broke them, and took what was in them, he did it without warrant," and so was guilty of felony; 13 Edw. IV. fol. 9. If a miller steals part of the meal, "although the corn was delivered to him to grind, nevertheless if he steal it it is felony, being taken from the rest;" 1 Rolle, Abr. 73, pl. 16; 1 Pick. 375. This construction involves the absurd consequence of its being felony to steal part of a package, but a breach of trust to steal the whole.

In an early case in Massachusetts, it was decided that if a wagon-load of goods, consisting of several packages, is delivered to a common carrier to be transported in a body to a certain place, and he, with a felonious intent, separates one entire package, whether before or after the delivery of the other packages, this is a sufficient breaking of bulk to constitute larceny, without any breaking of the package so separated; 4 Mass. 580. But this decision is in direct conflict with the English cases. Thus, where the master and owner of a ship steals a package out of several packages delivered him to carry, without removing any thing from the particular package; 1 Russ. & R. 92; or where a letter-carrier is intrusted with two directed envelopes, each containing a 5l. note, and delivers the envelopes, having previously taken out the two notes; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 215; or where a drover separates one sheep from a flock intrusted to him to drive a certain distance; 1 Jebb, 51; this is not a breaking of bulk sufficient to terminate the bailment and to constitute larceny. The Larceny Act of 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 3, has met the difficulty of deciding this class of cases in England, by providing that a bailee of any chattel, money, or valuable security, who fraudulently takes the same, although not breaking bulk, shall be guilty of larceny.

BREAKING DOORS. Forcibly removing the fastenings of a house so that a person may enter. See ARREST.

BREATH. In Medical Jurisprudence. The air expelled from the chest at each expiration.

Breathing, though a usual sign of life, is not conclusive that a child was wholly born alive; as breathing may take place before the whole delivery of the mother is complete; 5

C. & P. 329. See BIRTH; LIFE; INFANTICIDE.

BREHON LAW. The ancient system of Irish law; so named from the judges, called Brehons, or Breitheamhuin. Its existence has been traced from the earliest period of Irish history down to the time of the Anglo-Norman invasion. It is still a subject of antiquarian research. An outline of the system will be found in Knight's English Cyclopædia, and also in the Penny Cyclopædia.

BREPHOTROPHI. In Civil Law. Persons appointed to take care of houses destined to receive foundlings. Clef des Lois Rom., Administrateurs.

BRETTS AND SCOTTS, LAWS OF THE. A code or system of laws in use among the Celtic tribes of Scotland down to the beginning of the fourteenth century, and then abolished by Edward I. of England. A fragment only is now extant. See Acts of Parl. of Scotland, vol. 1, pp. 299–301, Edin. 1844. It is interesting, like the Brehon laws of Ireland, in a historical point of view.

BREVE (Lat. breve, brevis, short). A writ. An original writ. Any writ or precept issuing from the king or his courts.

It is the Latin term which in law is translated by "writ." In the Roman law these brevia were in the form of letters; and this form was also given to the early English brevia, and is retained to some degree in the modern writs. Spelman, Gloss. The name breve was given because they stated briefly the matter in question (rem quæ est breviter narrat). It was said to be "shaped in conformity to a rule of law" (formatum ad similitudinem regulæ juris); because it was requisite that it should state facts against the respondent bringing him within the operation of some rule of law. The whole passage from Bracton is as follows: "Breve quidem, cum sit formatum ad similitudinem regulæ juris quia breviter et paucis verbis intentionem proferentes exponit, et explanat sicut regula juris, rem quæ est breviter narrat. Non tamen ita breve esse debent, quin rationem et vim intentionis contineat." Bracton, 413 b, § 2. It is spelled briefs by Brooke. Each writ soon came to be distinguished by some important word or phrase contained in the brief statement, or from the general subject-matter; and this name was in turn transferred to the form of action, in the prosecution of which the writ (or breve) was procured. Stephen, Pl. 9. See WRIT. It is used perhaps more frequently in the plural (brevia) than in the singular, especially in speaking of the different classes of writs. See BREVIA.

Consult Cowel; Bracton, 108, 413 b; Fleta; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev.; Stephen, Pl.; Sharswood's Blackstone.

BREVE INNOMINATUM. A writ containing a general statement only of the cause of action.

BREVE NOMINATUM. A writ containing a statement of the circumstances of the action.

BREVE ORIGINALE. An original writ.

BREVE DE RECTO. A writ of right. The writ of right patent is of the highest nature of any in the law. Cowel; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev.

BREVE TESTATUM. A written memorandum introduced to perpetuate the tenor of the conveyance and investiture of lands; 2 Bls. Com. 307.

It was prepared after the transaction, and depended for its validity upon the testimony of witnesses, as it was not sealed. Spelman, Gloss.

In Scotch Law. A similar memorandum made out at the time of the transfer, attested by the pares curiæ and by the seal of the superior. Bell, Dict.

BREVET. In French Law. A warrant granted by government to authorize an individual to do something for his own benefit.

Brevet d'invention. A patent.

In American Law. A commission conferring on a military officer a degree of rank specified in the commission, without, however, conveying a right to receive corresponding pay.

BREVIA (Lat.). Writs. The plural of breve, which see.

BREVIA ANTICIPANTIA (Lat.). Writs of prevention. See QUIA TIMET.

BREVIA DE CURSU (Lat.). Writs of course. See BREVIA FORMATA.

BREVIA FORMATA (Lat.). Certain writs of approved and established form which were granted of course in actions to which they were applicable, and which could not be changed but by consent of the great council of the realm. Bracton, 413 b.

All original writs, without which an action could not anciently be commenced, issued from the chancery. Many of these were of ancient and established form, and could not be altered; others admitted of variation by the clerks according to the circumstances of the case. In obtaining a writ, a præcipe was issued by the party demandant, directed to the proper officer in chancery, stating the substance of his claim. If a writ already in existence and enrolled upon the Register was found exactly adapted to the case, it issued as of course (de cursu), being copied out by the junior clerks, called cursitors. If none was found, a new writ was prepared by the chancellor and subjected to the decision of the grand council, their assent being presumed in some cases if no objection was made. In 1250 it was provided that no new writs should issue except by direct command of the king or the council. The clerks, however, it is supposed, still exercised the liberty of adapting the old forms to cases new only in the instance, the council, and its successor (in this respect, at least), parliament, possessing the power to make writs new in principle. The strictness with which the common-law courts, to which the writs were returnable, adhered to the ancient form, gave occasion for the passage of the Stat. Westm. 2, c. 24, providing for the formation of new writs. Those writs which were contained in the Register are generally considered as pre-eminently brevia formata.

BREVIA JUDICIALIA (Lat.). Judicial writs. Subsidiary writs issued from the court during the progress of an action, or in execution of the judgment.

They were said to vary according to the variety of the pleadings and responses of the parties to the action; Bracton, 413 b; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 3; Co. Litt. 54 b, 73 b. The various forms, however, became long since fixed beyond the power of the courts to alter them; 1 Rawle, 52. Some of these judicial writs, especially that of capias, by a fiction of the issue of an original writ, came to supersede original writs entirely, or nearly so. See ORIGINAL WRIT.

BREVIA MAGISTRALIA. Writs framed by the masters in chancery. They were subject to variation according to the diversity of cases and complaints. Bracton, 413 b; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 4.

BREVIA TESTATA. See BREVE TESTATUM.

BREVIARIUM ALARICIANUM. A compilation made by order of Alaric II. and published for the use of his Roman subjects in the year 506.

It was collected by a committee of sixteen Roman lawyers from the Codex Gregorianus, Hermogenianus, and Theodosianus, some of the later novels, and the writings of Gaius, Paulus, and Papinianus; 1 Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 59.

BREVIATE. An abstract or epitome of a writing. Holthouse.

BREVIBUS ET ROTULIS LIBERANDIS. A writ or mandate directed to a sheriff, commanding him to deliver to his successor the county and the appurtenances, with all the briefs, rolls, remembrances, and other things belonging to his office.

BRIBE. In Criminal Law. The gift or promise, which is accepted, of some advantage as the inducement for some illegal act or omission; or of some illegal emolument, as a consideration for preferring one person to another, in the performance of a legal act.

BRIBERY. In Criminal Law. The receiving or offering any undue reward by or to any person whomsoever, whose ordinary profession or business relates to the administration of public justice, in order to influence his behavior in office, and to incline him to act contrary to his duty and the known rules of honesty and integrity. Co. 3d Inst. 149; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 67, s. 2; 4 Bla. Com. 139; 2 Russell, Cr. 122.

The term bribery now extends further, and includes the offence of giving a bribe to many other classes of officers; it applies both to the actor and receiver, and extends to voters, cabinet ministers, legislators, sheriffs, and other classes; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1858. The offence of the giver and of the receiver of the bribe has the same name. For the sake of distinction, that of the former—viz.: the briber—might be properly denominated active bribery; while that of the latter—viz.: the person bribed—might be called passive bribery.

Bribery at elections for members of parliament has always been a crime at common law, and punishable by indictment or information. It still remains so in England, notwithstanding the stat. 24 Geo. II. c. 14; 3 Burr. 1340, 1589. To constitute the offence, it is not necessary that the person bribed should in fact vote as solicited to do; 3 Burr. 1236; or even that he should have a right to vote at all; both are entirely immaterial; 3 Burr. 1590; 33 N. J. 102.

An attempt to bribe, though unsuccessful, has been holden to be criminal, and the offender may be indicted; 2 Dall. 384; 4 Burr. 2500; Co. 3d Inst. 147; 2 Campb. 229; 2 Wash. Va. 88; 33 N. J. L. 102; 1 Va. Cas. 138; 2 id. 460; 8 W. N. C. 212. In Illinois a proposal by an officer to receive a bribe, though not bribery, was held to be an indictable misdemeanor at common law; 21 Am. L. Reg. 617 (with note by Judge Redfield); s. c. 65 Ill. 58.

BRIBOUR. One that pilfers other men's goods; a thief. See Stat. 28 Edw. II. c. 1.

BRIDGE. A structure erected over a river, creek, stream, ditch, ravine, or other place, to facilitate the passage thereof; including by the term both arches and abutments; 8 Harr. N. J. 108; 15 Vt. 438; 55 Ga. 609. But see 1 Wall. 116; 7 Nev. 294.

Bridges are either public or private. Public bridges are such as form a part of the highway, common, according to their character as foot, horse, or carriage bridges, to the public generally, with or without toll; 2 East, 342; though their use may be limited to particular occasions, as to seasons of flood or frost; 2 Maule & S. 262; 4 Campb. 189. They are established either by legislative authority or by dedication.

By legislative authority. By the Great Charter (9 Hen. III. c. 15), in England, no town or freeman can be compelled to make new bridges where never any were before, but by act of parliament. Under such act, they may be erected and maintained by corporations chartered for the purpose, or by counties, or in whatever other mode may be prescribed; Woolrych, Ways, 196. In this country it is the practice to charter companies for the same purpose, with the right to take tolls for their reimbursement; 4 Pick. 341; or to erect bridges at the state's expense; or by general statutes to impose the duty of erection and maintenance upon towns, counties, or districts; 2 W. & S. 495; 5 Gratt. 241; 2 Ohio, 508; 23 Conn. 416; 14 B. Monr. 92; 5 Cal. 426; 1 Mass. 153; 12 N. Y. 52; 2 N. H. 513; 59 Me. 80; 85 Pa. St. 163. For their erection the state may take private property, upon making compensation, as in case of other highways; Angell, Highways, § 81 et seq.; the rule of damages for land so taken being not its mere value for agricultural purposes, but its value for a bridge site, minus the benefits derived to the owner from the erection; 17 Ga. 30. The right to erect a bridge upon the land of another may also be acquired by mere parol license, which, when acted upon, becomes irrevocable; 11 N. H. 102; 14 Ga. 1. But see 4 R. I. 47. The franchise of a toll bridge or ferry may be taken, like other property, for a free bridge; 6 How. 507; 23 Pick. 360; 4 Gray, 474; 28 N. H. 195; and, when vested in a town or other public corporation, may be so taken without compensation; 10 How. 511.

A new bridge may be erected, under legislative authority, so near an older bridge or ferry as to impair or destroy its value, without compensation, unless the older franchise be protected by the terms of its grant; 11 Pet. 420; 7 Pick. 344; 6 Paige, Ch. 554; 1 Barb. Ch. 547; 3 Sandf. Ch. 625; 8 Bush, 31; 2 Dill. 332; but, unless authorized by statute, a new bridge so erected is unlawful, and may be enjoined as a nuisance; 3 Bla. Com. 218, 219; 4 Term, 566; 2 Cr. M. & R. 432; 6 Cal. 590; 3 Wend. 610; 3 Ala. 211; 11 Pet. 261, Story, J.; and if the older franchise, vested in an individual or private corporation, be protected, or be exclusive within given limits, by the terms of its grant, the erection of a new bridge or ferry, even under legislative authority, is unconstitutional, as an act impairing the obligations of contract; 7 N. H. 35; 17 Conn. 40; 10 Ala. N. S. 37. The entire expense of a bridge erected within a particular town or district may be assessed upon the inhabitants of such town or district; 10 Ill. 405; 23 Conn. 416. A state has the right to erect a bridge over a navigable river within its own limits; 4 Pick. 460; 1 N. H. 467; 5 McL. 425; 35 Me. 325; 22 Conn. 198; 27 Penn. 303; 15 Wend. 113; although in exercising this right, care must be taken to interrupt navigation as little as possible; 43 Me. 198; 3 Hill, 621; 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 240; 4 Harr. Del. 544; 4 Ind. 36; 2 Gray, 339; 6 McL. 70, 209. For a bridge is no less a means of commercial intercourse than a navigable stream, and the state power may properly determine whether the interruption to commerce occasioned by the bridge be not more than compensated by the facilities which it affords. And if the bridge be authorized in good faith by a state, the Federal courts are not bound to enjoin it. However, congress, since its power to regulate commerce is supreme, may interpose whenever it may see fit, by general or special laws, and may prevent the building of a bridge, or cause the removal of one already erected; 3 Wall. 713, 782; 2 Wall. 403; 4 Blatchf. 74, 395; 10 Wall. 454. For any unnecessary interruption the proprietors of the bridge will be liable in damages to the persons specially injured thereby, or to have the bridge abated as a nuisance, by injunction, though not by indictment; such bridge, although authorized by state laws, being in contravention of rights secured by acts of congress regulating commerce; 13 How. 518; 1 W. & M. 401; 5 McL. 425; 6 id. 70, 237. The power of erecting a bridge, and taking tolls thereon, over a navigable river forming the boundary between two states, can only be conferred by the concurrent legislation of both; 13 N. J. Eq. 46; 17 N. H. 200.

Dedication. The dedication of bridges depends upon the same principles as the dedication of highways, except that their acceptance will not be presumed from mere use, until they are proved to be of public utility; Angell, High. 111; 5 Burr. 2594; 2 W. Blackst. 685; 2 East, 342; 2 N. H. 513; 18 Pick. 312; 23 Wend. 466; 6 Mass. 458; 13 East, 220; 3 M. & S. 526. See HIGHWAYS.

Reparation. At common law, all public bridges are primâ facie reparable by the inhabitants of the county, without distinction of foot, horse, or carriage bridges, unless they can show that others are bound to repair particular bridges; 13 East, 95; 14 E. L. & Eq. 116; Bacon, Abr. Bridges, p. 533. In this country, the common law not prevailing, the duty of repair is imposed by statute, generally, upon towns or counties; 9 Conn. 32; 10 id. 329; 2 N. H. 513; 12 N. Y. 52; 60 Ind. 580; 77 Penn. 317; 6 Ill. 567; 15 Vt. 438; 3 Ired. 402; 13 Pick. 60; 59 Me. 80; 3 Oreg. 424; or chartered cities; 17 Minn. 308; 47 Iowa, 348; except that bridges owned by corporations or individuals are reparable by their proprietors; 4 Pick. 341; 9 id. 142; 1 Spenc. 323; 6 Johns. 90; 24 Conn. 491; and that where the necessity for a bridge is created by the act of an individual or corporation in cutting a canal, ditch, or railway through a highway, it is the duty of the author of such necessity to make and repair the bridge; 6 Mass. 458; 23 Wend. 446; 14 id. 58; 66 N. C. 287; 85 Penn. St. 336; 35 Wis. 679. The parties chargeable must constantly keep the bridge in such repair as will make it safe and convenient for the service for which it is required; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 77, s. 1; 9 Dana, 403; 6 Johns. 189; 1 Aik. 74; 8 Vt. 189; 6 id. 496; 23 Wend. 254. See 85 Ill. 439; 47 Iowa, 348; 68 Penn. 408; 13 Hun, 293; 38 Vt. 666.

Remedies for non-reparation. If the parties chargeable with the duty of repairing neglect so to do, they are liable to indictment; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 77, s. 1; Ang. High. § 275; 1 Hill, N. Y. 50; 6 id. 516; 28 N. H. 195; 9 Pick. 142; 3 Ired. 411. It has also been held that they may be compelled by mandamus to repair; 5 Call, 548, 556; 1 Hill, 50; 14 B. Monr. 92; 3 Zabr. 214. But see 12 A. & E. 427; 3 Campb. 222. If a corporation be charged with the duty by charter, they may be proceeded against by quo warranto for the forfeiture of their franchise; 23 Wend. 254; or by action on the case for damages in favor of any person specially injured by reason of their neglect; 1 Spenc. 323; 18 Conn. 32; 6 Johns. 90; 6 Vt. 496; 6 N. H. 147; 4 Pick. 341. And in this country a similar action is given by statute, in many states, against public bodies chargeable with repair; 14 Conn. 475; 10 N. H. 130; Ang. High. § 286 et seq.

Tolls. The law of travel upon bridges is the same as upon highways, except when burdened by tolls. See HIGHWAY. The payment of tolls can be lawfully enforced only at the gate or toll-house; 15 Me. 402. Where by the charter of a bridge company certain persons are exempted from payment, such exemption is to be liberally construed; 10 Johns. 467; 7 Cow. 33; 2 Murph. 372; 2 Cow. 419; 4 Rich. Eq. 459.

Bridges, when owned by individuals, are real estate; 4 Watts, 341; 1 R. I. 165; 74 N. Y. 365; and also when owned by the public; yet the freehold of the soil is in its original owner; Coke, 2d Inst. 705. The materials of which they are formed belong to the parties who furnished them, subject to the public right of passage; 6 East, 154; 6 S. & R. 229.

A private bridge is one erected for the use of one or more private persons. Such a bridge will not be considered a public bridge although it may be occasionally used by the public; 12 East, 203–4; 3 Sandf. Ch. 625; 1 Rolle, Abr. 368, Bridges, pl. 2. The builder of a private bridge over a private way is not indictable for neglect to repair, though it be generally used by the public; 3 Hawks, 193. See 7 Pick. 344; 1 id. 432; 11 Pet. 539; 6 Hill, 516; 23 Wend. 466; 4 Johns. Ch. 150.

See many cases in 5 So. L. Rev. 731.

BRIEF. (Lat. brevis, L. Fr. briefe, short).

In Ecclesiastical Law. A papal rescript sealed with wax. See BULL.

In Practice. A writ. It is found in this sense in the ancient law authors.

An abridged statement of the party's case. It should contain a statement of the names of the parties, and of their residence and occupation, the character in which they sue and are sued, and wherefore they prosecute or resist the action; an abridgment of all the pleadings; a regular, chronological, and methodical statement of the facts, in plain common language; a summary of the points or questions in issue, and of the proof which is to support such issues, mentioning specially the names of the witnesses by which the facts are to be proved, or, if there be written evidence, an abstract of such evidence; the personal character of the witnesses, whether the moral character is good or bad, whether they are naturally timid or over-zealous, whether firm or wavering; of the evidence of the opposite party, if known, and such facts as are adapted to oppose, confute, or repel it.

This statement should be perspicuous and concise. The object of a brief is to inform the person who tries the case of the facts important for him to know, to present his case properly where it has been prepared by another person—as is the general practice in England, and to some extent in this country—or as an aid to the memory of the person trying a case when he has prepared it himself. In some of the state courts and in the supreme court of the United States, it is customary or requisite to prepare briefs of the case for the perusal of the court. These are written or printed. Of course the requisites of briefs will vary somewhat according to the purposes they are to subserve.

BRIEF OF TITLE. In Practice. An abridged and orderly statement of all matters affecting the title to a certain portion of real estate.

It should give the effective parts of all patents, deeds, indentures, agreements, records, and papers relating to such estate, with sufficient fulness to disclose their full effect, and should mention incumbrances existing, whether acquired by deed or use. All the documents of title should be arranged in chronological order, noticing particularly, in regard to deeds, the date, names of parties, consideration, description of the property, and covenants. See 1 Chitty, Pr. 304, 463; article in 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 529. See ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

BRIGBOTE (Sax.). A contribution to repair a bridge.

BRINGING MONEY INTO COURT. The act of depositing money in the hands of the proper officer of the court for the purpose of satisfying a debt or duty, or of an interpleader. See PAYMENT INTO COURT.

BROCAGE. The wages or commissions of a broker. His occupation is also sometimes called brocage.

BROCARIUS, BROCATOR. A broker; a middle-man between buyer and seller; the agent of both transacting parties. Used in the old Scotch and English law. Bell, Dict.; Cowel.

BROCELLA. A thicket, or covert, of bushes and brushwood. Browse is said to be derived hence. Cowel.

BROKERAGE. The trade or occupation of a broker; the commissions paid to a broker for his services.

BROKERS. Those who are engaged for others in the negotiation of contracts relative to property, with the custody of which they have no concern. Paley, Agency, 13. See Comyns, Dig. Merchant, C.

A broker is, for some purposes, treated as the agent of both parties; but, in the first place, he is deemed the agent only of the person by whom he is originally employed, and does not become the agent of the other until the bargain or contract has been definitely settled, as to the terms, between the principals, when he becomes the agent of both parties for the purpose of executing the bought and sold notes; Paley, Ag. Lloyd ed. 171, note p.; 1 Y. & J. 387; 13 Metc. 463; Whart. Ag. § 715.

Bill and Note Brokers negotiate the purchase and sale of bills of exchange and promissory notes.

They are paid a commission by the seller of the securities; and it is not their custom to disclose the names of their principals. There is an implied warranty that what they sell is what they represent it to be; and should a bill or note sold by them turn out to be a forgery, they are held to be responsible; but it would appear that by showing a payment over to their principals, or other special circumstances attending the transaction proving that it would be inequitable to hold them responsible, they will be discharged; Edw. Fact. & Bro. § 10; 5 R. I. 218; contra, 29 Me. 434; 4 Du. N. Y. 79.

Exchange Brokers negotiate bills of exchange drawn on foreign countries, or on other places in this country.

It is sometimes part of the business of exchange brokers to buy and sell uncurrent bank notes and gold and silver coins, as well as drafts and checks drawn or payable in other cities; although, as they do this at their own risk and for their own profit, it is difficult to see the reason for calling them brokers. The term is often thus erroneously applied to all persons doing a money business.

Insurance Brokers procure insurance, and negotiate between insurers and insured.

Merchandise Brokers negotiate the sale of merchandise without having possession or control of it, as factors have.

Pawnbrokers lend money in small sums, on the security of personal property, generally at usurious rates of interest. They are licensed by the authorities, and excepted from the operation of the usury laws.

Real Estate Brokers. Those who negotiate the sale or purchase of real property. They are a numerous class, and, in addition to the above duty, sometimes procure loans on mortgage security, collect rents, and attend to the letting and leasing of houses and lands.

Ship Brokers negotiate the purchase and sale of ships, and the business of freighting vessels. Like other brokers, they receive a commission from the seller only.

Stock Brokers. Those employed to buy and sell shares of stocks in incorporated companies, and the indebtedness of governments.

In the larger cities, the stock brokers are associated together under the name of the Board of Brokers. See STOCK EXCHANGE. This Board is an association admission to membership in which is guarded with jealous care. Membership is forfeited for default in carrying out contracts, and rules are prescribed for the conduct of the business, which are enforced on all members. The purchases and sales are made at sessions of the Board, and are all officially recorded and published by an officer of the association. Stock brokers charge commission to both the buyers and sellers of stocks.

See Story, Ag. §§ 28–32; Malynes, Lex Merc. 143; Liverm. Ag.; Chitty, Com. Law; Whart. Ag.; Benj. Sales; Lewis, Stock Exchange.

BROTHEL. A bawdy-house; a common habitation of prostitutes.

Such places have always been deemed common nuisances in the United States, and the keepers of them may be fined and imprisoned. Till the time of Henry VIII. they were licensed in England, but that prince suppressed them. See Coke, 2d Inst. 205; BAWDY-HOUSE. For the history of these pernicious places, see Merlin, Rép. mot Bordel; Parent Duchatellet, De la Prostitution dans la Ville de Paris, c. 5, § 1; Histoire de la Législation sur les Femmes publiques, etc., par M. Sabatier.

BROTHER. He who is born from the same father and mother with another, or from one of them only.

Brothers are of the whole blood when they are born of the same father and mother, and of the half-blood when they are the issue of one of them only. In the civil law, when they are the children of the same father and mother, they are called brothers germain; when they descend from the same father but not the same mother, they are consanguine brothers; when they are the issue of the same mother, but not the same father, they are uterine brothers. A half-brother is one who is born of the same father or mother, but not of both; one born of the same parents before they were married, a left-sided brother; and a bastard born of the same father or mother is called a natural brother. See BLOOD; HALF-BLOOD; LINE; Merlin, Répert. Frère; Dict. de Jurisp. Frère; Code, 3. 28. 27; Nov. 84, præf.; Dane, Abr. Index.

To obtain a conviction of the crime of incest, under a statute forbidding the marriage of brother and sister, it is not necessary to show legitimacy of birth; 34 Iowa, 547.

BROTHER-IN-LAW. The brother of a wife, or the husband of a sister.

There is no relationship, in the former case, between the husband and the brother-in-law, nor in the latter, between the brother and the husband of the sister: there is only affinity between them. See Vaugh. 302, 329.

BRUISE. In Medical Jurisprudence. An injury done with violence to the person, without breaking the skin: it is nearly synonymous with contusion (q. v.). 1 Ch. Pr. 38. See 4 C. & P. 381, 487, 558, 565.

BUBBLE ACT. The name given to the statute 6 Geo. I. c. 18, which was passed in 1719, and was intended "for restraining several extravagant and unwarrantable practices therein mentioned." See 2 P. Wms. 219.

BUGGERY. See SODOMY.

BUILDING. An edifice, erected by art, and fixed upon or over the soil, composed of stone, brick, marble, wood, or other proper substance, connected together, and designed for use in the position in which it is so fixed. Every building is an accessory to the soil, and is, therefore, real estate: it belongs to the owner of the soil; Cruise, Dig. tit. 1, s. 46; but a building placed on another's land by his permission, is the personal estate of the builder; 2 Bls. Com. 17–19.

BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS. Co-operative associations, usually incorporated, established for the purpose of accumulating and loaning money to their members upon real estate security. It is usual for the members to make monthly payments upon each share of stock, and for those who borrow money from the association to make such payments in addition to interest on the sum borrowed. When the stock, by successive payments and the accumulation of interest, has reached par, the mortgages given by borrowing members are cancelled, and the non-borrowing members receive in cash the par of their stock. See Wrigley, Building Associations.

BULK. Merchandise which is neither counted, weighed, nor measured.

A sale by bulk is a sale of a quantity of goods such as they are, without measuring, counting, or weighing. La. Civ. Code, art. 3522, n. 6.

BULL. A letter from the pope of Rome, written on parchment, to which is attached a leaden seal impressed with the images of Saint Peter and Saint Paul.

There are three kinds of apostolical rescripts —the brief, the signature, and the bull; which last is most commonly used in legal matters. Bulls may be compared to the edicts and letters-patents of secular princes: when the bull grants a favor, the seal is attached by means of silken strings; and when to direct execution to be performed, with flax cords. Bulls are written in Latin, in a round and Gothic hand. Ayliffe, Par. 132; Ayliffe, Paud. 21; Merlin, Répert.

BULLETIN. An official account of public transactions on matters of importance. In France, it is the registry of the laws.

BULLION. The term bullion is commonly applied to uncoined gold and silver, in the mass or lump.

It includes, first, grains of gold, whether large or small, the former being called lumps, or nuggets, the latter, gold dust; second, amalgams, in which quicksilver has been used as an agent to collect or segregate the metals; silver thus collected, and from which the quicksilver has been expelled by pressure and heat, is called plata pura; third, bars and cakes; fourth, plate, in which is included all articles for household purposes made of gold or silver; fifth, jewelry, or personal ornaments, composed of gold or silver, or both. The term bullion also includes—sixth, foreign coins; for, as foreign coins are not a legal tender, or, in other words, not money, it follows that they are only pieces of gold or silver at the mint. Such coins, when received on deposit, are treated as other deposits of gold or silver; they are weighed, and their fineness is ascertained by assay, and their value determined by their weight and fineness.

When bullion is brought to the mint for coinage, it is received by the superintendent. From the weight of the bullion and the report of the assayer, he computes the value of each deposit and also the amount of the charges or deductions, of all which he gives a detailed memorandum to the depositor, together with a certificate of the net amount of the deposit which is countersigned by the assayer. When the coins or bars which are the equivalent of any deposit of bullion are ready for delivery, they are paid to the depositor or his order by the superintendent; and the payments shall be made, if demanded, in the order in which the bullion shall have been brought to the mint, and in the denomination of coins delivered, the treasurer shall comply with the wishes of the depositor, unless when impracticable or inconvenient to do so. Act of Congress, Feb. 12, 1873, c. 131, § 45; Rev. Stat. U. S. § 3506, 3529. By act of Feb. 12, 1873, c. 131, § 66 (Rev. Stat. U. S. 3495), the different mints of the United States are those of Philadelphia, San Francisco, New Orleans, Carson, and Denver, the assay offices are at New York, Boise City, Idaho, and Charlotte, North Carolina.

The business of the assay office in New York is in all respects similar to that of the mints, except that bars only and not coin are manufactured therein, and no metal is purchased for minor coinage; Act of Feb. 12, 1873, Rev. Stat. U. S. § 3553; that of other assay offices is confined to the receipt of gold and silver bullion for melting and assaying, to be returned to the depositors in bars with weight and fineness stamped thereon. Rev. Stat. § 3558.

BULLION FUND. A deposit of public money at the mint and its branches. The object of this fund is to enable the mint to make returns of coins to private depositors of bullion without waiting until such bullion is actually coined. If the bullion fund is sufficiently large, depositors are paid as soon as their bullion is melted and assayed and the value ascertained. It thus enables the mint to have a stock of coin on hand to pay depositors in advance. Such bullion becomes the property of the government, and, being subsequently coined, is available as a means of prompt payment to other depositors. Act of June 22, 1874, Rev. Stat. U. S. § 3545.

BUOY. A piece of wood, or an empty barrel, or other thing, moored at a particular place and floating on the water, to show the place where it is shallow, to mark the channel, or to indicate the danger there is to navigation.

The act of congress approved the 28th September, 1850, enacts "that all buoys along the coast, in bays, harbors, sounds, or channels, shall be colored and numbered, so that, passing up the coast or sound, or entering the bay, harbor, or channel, red buoys, with even numbers, shall be passed on the starboard hand, black buoys, with uneven numbers, on the port hand, and buoys with red and black stripes on either hand. Buoys in channel-ways to be colored with alternate white and black perpendicular stripes."

BURDEN OF PROOF. The duty of proving the facts in dispute on an issue raised between the parties in a cause.

Burden of proof is to be distinguished from primâ facie evidence or a primâ facie case. Generally, when the latter is shown, the duty imposed upon the party having the burden will be satisfied; but it is not necessarily so; 6 Cush. 364; 11 Metc. Mass. 460; 22 Ala. 20; 7 Blackf. 427; 1 Gray, 61; 7 Bost. L. Rep. 439.

The burden of proof lies upon him who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74; 7 E. L. & Eq. 508; 3 M. & W. 510; but where the plaintiff grounds his case on negative allegations, he has the burden; 1 Term, 141; 6 id. 559; 2 M. & S. 395; 5 id. 206; 1 Campb. 199; 1 C. & P. 220; 5 B. & C. 758; 1 Me. 134; 4 id. 226; 2 Pick. 103; 4 id. 341; 100 Mass. 487; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 81.

In criminal cases, on the twofold ground that a prosecutor must prove every fact necessary to substantiate his charge against a prisoner, and that the law will presume innocence in the absence of convincing evidence to the contrary, the burden of proof, unless shifted by legislative interference, will fall, in criminal proceedings, on the prosecuting party, though in order to convict he must necessarily have recourse to negative evidence; 1 Tayl. Ev. § 344; 12 Wheat. 460. The burden of proof is throughout on the government, to make out the whole case; and when a primâ facie case is established, the burden of proof is not thereby shifted upon the defendant, and he is not bound to restore himself to that presumption of innocence in which he was at the commencement of the trial; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 352. See 9 Metc. 93; 5 Cush. 296; 2 Gratt. 594; 1 Wright, Ohio, 20; 5 Yerg. 340; 16 Miss. 401; but as every man is presumed to be sane till the contrary is shown, the burden of establishing the defence of insanity rests upon the defendant; Whart. Cr. Ev. 336; 4 Cra. C. C. 514; 7 Gray, 583; 20 Cal. 518; 20 Gratt. 860; 3 C. & K. 138; 76 Penn. 414; 53 Mo. 267; 26 Ark. 332; 47 Cal. 134. Contra, 63 Ala. 307; s. c. 35 Am. Rep. 30, and note; 6 Tex. App. 490; 66 Ind. 94. See 52 N. Y. 467.

BUREAU (Fr.). A place where business is transacted.

In the classification of the ministerial officers of government, and the distribution of duties among them, a bureau is understood to be a division of one of the great departments of which the secretaries or chief officers constitute the cabinet.

BURGAGE. A species of tenure, described by old law writers as but tenure in socage, where the king or other person was lord of an ancient borough, in which the tenements were held by a rent certain.

Such boroughs had, and still have, certain peculiar customs connected with the tenure, which distinguished it from the ordinary socage tenure. These customs are known by the name of Borough-English; and they alter the law in respect of descent, as well as of dower, and the power of devising. By it the youngest son inherits the lands of which his father died seised. A widow, in some boroughs, has dower in respect to all the tenements which were her husband's; in others, she has a moiety of her husband's lands so long as she remains unmarried; and with respect to devises, in some places, such lands only can be devised as were acquired by purchase; in others, estates can only be devised for life; 2 Bla. Com. 82; Glanv. b. 7, c. 3; Littleton, § 162; Cro. Car. 411; 1 Salk. 243; 2 Ld. Raym. 1024; 1 P. Wms. 63; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 150; Cro. Eliz. 415.

BURGATOR. One who breaks into houses or enclosed places, as distinguished from one who committed robbery in the open country. Spelman, Gloss. Burglaria.

BURGESS. A magistrate of a borough. Blount. An officer who discharges the same duties for a borough that a mayor does for a city. The word is used in this sense in Pennsylvania.

An inhabitant of a town; a freeman; one legally admitted as a member of a corporation. Spelman, Gloss. A qualified voter; 3 Steph. Com. 192. A representative in parliament of a town or borough; 1 Bla. Com. 174.

BURGESS ROLL. A list of those entitled to new rights under the act of 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 74; 3 Steph. Com. 192 et seq.

BURGHMOTE. In Saxon Law. A court of justice held twice a year, or oftener, in a burg. All the thanes and free owners above the rank of ceorls were bound to attend without summons. The bishop or lord held the court. Spence, Eq. Jur.

BURGLAR. One who commits burglary. He that by night breaketh and entereth into the dwelling-house of another. Wilmot, Burgl. 3.

BURGLARIOUSLY. In Pleading. A technical word which must be introduced into an indictment for burglary at common law. The essential words are "feloniously and burglariously broke and entered the dwelling-house in the night-time"; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 265.

No other word at common law will answer the purpose, nor will any circumlocution be sufficient; 4 Co. 39; 5 id. 121; Cro. Eliz. 920; Bacon, Abr. Indictment (G, C). But there is this distinction: when a statute punishes an offence, by its legal designation, without enumerating the acts which constitute it, then it is necessary to use the terms which technically charge the offence named, at common law. But this is not necessary when the statute describes the whole offence, and the indictment charges the crime in the words of the statute. Thus, an indictment which charges the statute crime of burglary is sufficient, without averring that the crime was committed "burglariously;" 4 Metc. 357. See 29 Tex. 47.

BURGLARY. In Criminal Law. The breaking and entering the house of another in the night-time, with intent to commit a felony therein, whether the felony be actually committed or not; Co. 3d Inst. 63; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 549; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 38, s. 1; 4 Bla. Com. 224; 2 East, Pl. Cr. c. 15, s. 1, p. 484; 2 Russell, Crimes, 2; Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 252; 1 Coxe, 441; 7 Mass. 247; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 758.

In what place a burglary can be committed. It must, in general, be committed in a mansion-house, actually occupied as a dwelling; but if it be left by the owner animo revertendi, though no person resides in it in his absence, it is still his mansion; Fost. 77; 3 Rawle, 207; 10 Cush. 478. See DWELLING-HOUSE. But burglary may be committed in a church, at common law. And under the statutes of some of the states, it has been held that it could be committed in a store over which were rooms in which the owner lived; 71 N. Y. 561; a wheat house; 1 Lea, 444; a railroad depot; 51 Vt. 287; a stable; 94 Ill. 456; but not a millhouse, seventy-five yards from the owner's dwelling, and not shown to be appurtenant; 3 Cox, 581; Coke, 3d Inst. 64. It must be the dwelling-house of another person; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 90; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 502. See 4 Dev. & B. 422; 12 N. H. 42; 1 R. & R. 525; 1 Mood. 42.

At what time it must be committed. The offence must be committed in the night; for in the daytime there can be no burglary; 4 Bla. Com. 224; 1 C. & K. 77; 16 Conn. 32; 10 N. H. 105. For this purpose it is deemed night when by the light of the sun a person cannot clearly discern the face or countenance of another; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 550; Coke, 3d Inst. 63; 1 C. & P. 297; 7 Dane, Abr. 134. This rule, it is evident, does not apply to moonlight; 4 Bla. Com. 224; 2 Russell, Crimes, 32; 10 N. H. 105; 6 Miss. 20. See 2 Cush. 582. The breaking and entering need not be done the same night; 1 R. & R. 417; but it is necessary the breaking and entering should be in the night-time; for if the breaking be in daylight and the entry in the night, or vice versâ, it is said, it will not be burglary; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 551; 2 Russell, Crimes, 32. But quære, Wilmot, Burgl. 9. See Comyns, Dig. Justices, P, 2; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law, 1092.

The means used. There must be both a breaking and an entry or an exit. An actual breaking takes place when the burglar breaks or removes any part of the house, or the fastenings provided for it, with violence; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 91. Breaking a window, taking a pane of glass out, by breaking or bending the nails or other fastenings; 1 C. & P. 300; 9 id. 44; 1 R. & R. 341, 499; 1 Leach, 406; cutting and tearing down a netting of twine nailed over an open window; 8 Pick. 354, 384; raising a latch, where the door is not otherwise fastened; 1 Stra. 481; 8 C. & P. 747; Coxe, 439; 1 Hill, N. Y. 336; 4 id. 437; 25 Me. 500; 1 Houst. Cr. Cas. 367, 402; 1 Lea, 444; 34 Ohio, 426; picking open a lock with a false key; putting back the lock of a door, or the fastening of a window, with an instrument; lowering a window fastened only by a wedge or weight; 1 R. & R. 355, 451; turning the key when the door is locked in the inside, or unloosening any other fastening which the owner has provided; lifting a trap-door; 1 Mood. 377; but see 4 C. & P. 231; are several instances of actual breaking. But removing a loose plank in a partition wall was held not a breaking; 1 Mass. 476. According to the Scotch law, entering a house by means of the true key, while in the door, or when it had been stolen, is a breaking; Alison, Pr. 284. See 1 Swint. Just. 433. Constructive breakings occur when the burglar gains an entry by fraud; 1 Cr. & D. 202; Hob. 62; 18 Ohio, 308; 9 Ired. 463; 32 Penn. 306; 85 id. 54; by conspiracy or threats; 1 Russell, Crimes, Graves ed. 792; 2 id. 2; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law, 1093. The breaking of an inner door of the house will be sufficient to constitute a burglary; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 553; 1 Stra. 481; 8 C. & P. 747; 1 Hill & D. 63; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 97; and it is not necessary that such breaking be accompanied with an intention to commit a felony in the very room entered; 85 Penn. 66.

Any, the least entry, with the whole or any part of the body, hand, or foot, or with any instrument or weapon, introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, will be sufficient to constitute the offence; Coke, 3d Inst. 64; 4 Bla. Com. 227; Bacon, Abr. Burglary (B); Comyns, Dig. Justices, P, 4. But the introduction of an instrument, in the act of breaking the house, will not be sufficient entry unless it be introduced for the purpose of committing a felony; 1 Leach, 406; 1 Mood. 183; 1 Gabbett, Cr. Law, 174. The whole physical frame need not pass within; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 92; 1 Gabbett, Cr. Law, 176. See 1 R. & R. 417; 7 C. & P. 432; 9 id. 44; 4 Ala. N. s. 643.

There was, at common law, doubt whether breaking out of a dwelling-house would constitute burglary; 4 Bla. Com. 227; 1 B. & H. Lead. Crim. Cas. 540; but it was declared to be so by stat. 12 Anne, c. 7, § 3, and 7 & 8 George IV. c. 29, § 11. The better opinion seems to be that it was not so at common law; 82 Penn. 324; Whart. Cr. L. § 1546. Contra, 43 Conn. 489; s. c. 21 Am. Rep. 665. As to what acts constitute a breaking out, see 1 Jebb, 99; 8 C. & P. 747; 4 id. 231; 1 Russell, Crimes, Graves ed. 792; 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 540–544.

The intention. The intent of the breaking and entry must be felonious; if a felony, however, be committed, the act will be primâ facie evidence of an intent to commit it; 1 Gabbett, Cr. Law, 192. If the breaking and entry be with an intention to commit a trespass, or other misdemeanor, and nothing further is done, the offence will not be burglary; 7 Mass. 245; 16 Vt. 551; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 560; East, Pl. Cr. 509, 514, 515; 2 Russell, Crimes, 33. Consult Bishop; Chitty; Wharton; Gabbett; Russell; on Criminal Law; Bennett & Heard, Lead. Crim. Cas.; Wilmot, Digest of Burglary.

BURGOMASTER. In Germany, this is the title of an officer who performs the duties of a mayor.

BURIAL. The act of interring the dead.

No burial is lawful unless made in conformity with the local regulations; and when a dead body has been found, it cannot be lawfully buried until the coroner has holden an inquest over it. In England it is the practice for coroners to issue warrants to bury, after a view. The leaving unburied the corpse of a person for whom the defendant is bound to provide Christian burial, as a wife or child, is an indictable misdemeanor, if he is shown to have been of ability to provide such burial. 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 325. See DEAD BODY.

BURLAW COURTS. In Scotch Law. Assemblages of neighbors to elect burlaw men, or those who were to act as rustic judges in determining disputes in their neighborhood. Skene; Bell, Dict.

BURNING. See ACCIDENT; FIRE.

BURNING IN THE HAND. When a layman was admitted to benefit of the clergy he was burned in the hand, "in the brawn of the left thumb," in order that he might not claim the benefit twice. This practice was finally abolished by stat. 19 Geo. III. c. 74; though before that time the burning was often done with a cold iron; 12 Mod. 448; 4 Bla. Com. 267 et seq. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

BURYING-GROUND. A place appropriated for depositing the dead; a cemetery. In Massachusetts, burying-grounds cannot be appropriated to roads without the consent of the owners. Mass. Gen. Stat. 244. So in Pennsylvania by acts passed in 1849 and 1861. See CEMETERY.

BUSHEL. The Winchester bushel, established by the 13 Will. III. c. 5 (1701) was made the standard of grain. A cylindrical vessel, eighteen and a half inches in diameter, and eight inches deep inside, contains a bushel; the capacity is 2145.42 cubic inches. The bushel established by the 5 & 6 Geo. IV. c. 74, is to contain 2218.192 cubic inches. This measure has been adopted in many of the United States. In New York the heaped bushel is allowed, containing 2815 cubic inches. The exceptions, as far as known, are Connecticut, where the bushel holds 2198 cubic inches; Kentucky, 2150⅄; Indiana, Ohio, Mississippi, and Missouri, where it contains 2150.4 cubic inches. Dane, Abr. c. 211, a. 12, s. 4. See the whole subject discussed in report of the Secretary of State of the United States to the Senate, Feb. 22, 1821.

BUSINESS HOURS. The time of the day during which business is transacted. In respect to the time of presentment and demand of bills and notes, business hours generally range through the whole day down to the hours of rest in the evening, except when the paper is payable at a bank or by a banker; 2 Hill, N. Y. 835. See 15 Me. 67; 17 id. 230.

BUTLERAGE. A certain portion of every cask of wine imported by an alien, which the king's butler was allowed to take. Called also prisage; 2 Bulstr. 254. Anciently, it might be taken also of wine imported by a subject; 1 Bla. Com. 315; Termes de la Ley; Cowel.

BUTT. A measure of capacity, equal to one hundred and eight gallons; also denotes a measure of land, Jac. Dict.; Cowel. See MEASURE.

BUTTALS. The bounding lines of land at the end; abuttals, which see.

BUTTS. The ends or short pieces of arable lands left in ploughing. Cowel.

BUTTS AND BOUND. The lines bounding an estate. The angles or points where these lines change their direction. Cowel; Spelman, Gloss. See ABUTTALS.

BUYING TITLES. The purchase of the rights of a disseisee to lands of which a third person has the possession.

When a deed is made by one who, though having a legal right to land, is at the time of the conveyance disseised, as a general rule of the common law, the sale is void: the law will not permit any person to buy a quarrel, or, as it is commonly termed, a pretended title. Such a conveyance is an offence at common law and by a statute of 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9. This rule has been generally adopted in the United States, and is affirmed by express statute in some of the states; 3 Washb. R. P. 329. In the following states the act is unlawful, and the parties are subject to various penalties in the different states: in Connecticut, 4 Conn. 575; Georgia, 29 Ga. 124; Indiana, 23 Ind. 432; 8 Blackf. 366; Kentucky, 1 Dana, 566; 2 id. 374; see 2 Litt. 225, 393; 4 Bibb, 424; Massachusetts, 5 Pick. 356; 6 Metc. 407; Mississippi, 26 Miss. 599; New Hampshire, 12 N. H. 291; New York, 24 Wend. 87; see 4 Wend. 474; 7 id. 53, 152; 8 id. 629; 11 id. 442; North Carolina, 1 Murph. 114; 4 Dev. 495; Ohio, Walker, Am. Law, 297, 351; Vermont, 6 Vt. 198; see 38 Vt. 204, 553.

By the transaction, the grantor does not lose his estate; 5 Pick. 348; 101 Mass. 179. As to what constitutes adverse possession, see 29 Me. 128.

In Illinois, 53 Ill. 279; Missouri, Rev. Stat. 119; Pennsylvania, 2 Watts, 272; Ohio, 9 Ohio, 96; Wisconsin, 14 Wis. 471; South Carolina, 12 Rich. 420; Maine, Rev. Stat. c. 73, § 1; Michigan, 21 Mich. 82; such sales are valid.

BY-BIDDING. Bidding with the connivance or at the request of the vendor of goods by auction, without an intent to purchase, for the purpose of obtaining a higher price than would otherwise be obtained.

By-bidders are also called puffers, which see. It has been said that the practice is probably allowable if it be done fairly, with an intention only to prevent a sale at an unduly low price; 6 B. Monr. 630; 11 Paige, Ch. 439; 3 Story, 622; 15 M. & W. 371; 1 Parsons, Contr. 418. See BID; AUCTION.

Lord Mansfield held that the employment of a single puffer was a fraud; Cowp. 395; this rule was afterwards relaxed, in equity only, so as to allow a single bidder; 12 Ves. 477. The rule was stated in L. R. 1 Ch. 10, to be, that a single puffer will vitiate a sale in law, but may be allowed in equity; though either at law or in equity, such bidding is permissible upon notice at the sale. By 30 and 31 Vict. c. 48, the rule in equity was declared to be the same as at law. See L. R. 9 Eq. 60. Lord Mansfield's opinion has been followed in Pennsylvania; 14 Penn. 446, per Gibson, C. J., overruling 11 S. & R. 86. In

New Hampshire; 23 N. H. 360. In Louisiana; 13 La. 287. In New Jersey it seems that if there is a bonâ fide bid next before that of the buyer, the bidding of puffers will not avoid the sale (so held also in 3 Story, 611); but it is intimated that it would be a better rule to forbid puffing; 20 N. J. Eq. 159. Kent favors Lord Mansfield's rule; 2 Kent, *540. The employment of a puffer to enhance the price of property sold is a fraud; 17 Hun. 373. So held in 8 How. 378. Exceptions to the rule may occur when it does not appear that the buyer paid more than the value of the property or he had determined to bid; 6 Ired. Eq. 430. A purchaser thus misled must restore the property as soon as he discovers the fraud; 38 Penn. 251; 3 Story, 611, 631. In 3 Metc. Mass. 384, the validity of the sale is held to depend upon the animus with which the puffing is carried on.

BY BILL. Actions commenced by capias instead of by original writ were said to be by bill. 3 Bla. Com. 285, 286.

The usual course of commencing an action in the King's Bench is by a bill of Middlesex. In an action commenced by bill it is not necessary to notice the form or nature of the action; 1 Chitty, Pl. 283.

BY ESTIMATION. A term used in conveyances. In sales of land it not unfrequently occurs that the property is said to contain a certain number of acres by estimation, or so many acres, more or less. When these expressions are used, if the land fall short by a small quantity, the purchaser will receive no relief. In one case of this kind, the land fell short two-fifths, and the purchaser received no relief; 2 Freem. 106; 20 Ohio, 453; 9 Gill, 446; 1 Call, 301; 4 Mas. 419; 4 H. & M. 184; 6 Binn. 106; 1 S. & R. 166; 2 Johns. 37; 15 id. 471; 2 Mass. 382; 1 Root, 528. The meaning of these words has never been precisely ascertained by judicial decision. See Sugden, Vend. 231–236; where he applies the rule to contracts in fieri. But this distinction was not accepted in 99 Mass. 234, where it was said that the Americans do not encourage litigation by reason of variation in the quantity of land sold, unless the quantity was of the essence of the contract; and the cases cited under the articles MORE OR LESS; SUBDIVISION.

BY-LAWS. Rules and ordinances made by a corporation for its own government.

The power to make by-laws is usually conferred by express terms of the charter creating the corporation. When not expressly granted, it is given by implication, and it is incident to the very existence of a corporation; Brice, Ultra Vires, 15. When there is an express grant, limited to certain cases and for certain purposes, the corporate power of legislation is confined to the objects specified, all others being excluded by implication; 2 P. Wms. 207; Angell, Corp. 177. The power of making by-laws is to be exercised by those persons in whom it is vested by the charter; but if that instrument is silent on that subject, it resides in the members of the corporation at large; 1 Harr. & G. 324; 4 Burr. 2515, 2521; 6 Brown, P. C. 519; 51 Ind. 4; 12 Wend. 183; 17 Mass. 29; 33 N. H. 424.

The constitution of the United States, and acts of congress made in conformity to it, the constitution of the state in which a corporation is located, and acts of the legislature constitutionally made, together with the common law as there accepted, are of superior force to any by-law; and such by-law, when contrary to either of them, is therefore void whether the charter authorizes the making of such by-law or not; because no legislature can grant power larger than they themselves possess; 7 Cow. 585, 604; 11 Wall. 369; 31 Me. 573; 35 Penn. 151; 24 Wis. 21; 31 Mich. 458; 9 Nev. 325; 1 Q. B. D. 12. By-laws must not be inconsistent with the charter; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 15.

By-laws must be reasonable; 3 Daly, 20; 3 Whart. 228; 2 Mo. App. 96; and not retrospective; 9 Cal. 112; 31 Mich. 458; but a by-law void as against strangers or non-assenting members, may be good as a contract against assenting members; 19 Johns. 456; 9 Ala. (N. S.) 738; 8 Metc. 321. It has been held that third parties dealing with corporations are not bound to take notice of their by-laws; 12 Cush. 1; 3 Mas. 505; see 1 Woolw. 400; where a distinction was raised between by-laws made by the corporation and those made by the directors, so far as relates to notice to third parties; but, contra, 52 Barb. 399.

See, generally, Angell, Corp. c. 9; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires; Field, Corporations; Bacon, Abr.; 4 Viner, Abr. 301; Dane, Abr. Index; Comyns, Dig.

BY-LAW MEN. In an ancient deed, certain parties are described as "yeomen and by-law men for this present year in Easinguold." 6 Q. B. 60.

They appear to have been men appointed for some purpose of limited authority by the other inhabitants, as the name would suggest, under by-laws of the corporation appointing.

BY THE BYE. In Practice. Without process. A declaration is said to be filed by the bye when it is filed against a party already in the custody of the court under process in another suit. This might have been done, formerly, where the party was under arrest and technically in the custody of the court; and even giving common bail was a sufficient custody in the King's Bench. 1 Sellon, Pr. 228; 1 Tidd, Pr. 419. It is no longer allowed. Archbold, New Pr. 293.

C.

C. The third letter of the alphabet. It was used among the Romans to denote condemnation, being the initial letter of condemno. See A.

CABALLERIA. In Spanish Law. A quantity of land, varying in extent in different provinces. In those parts of the United States which formerly belonged to Spain, it is a lot of one hundred feet front, two hundred feet depth, and equivalent to five peonias. 2 White, New Recop. 49; 12 Pet. 444, n.; Escriche, Dicc. Raz.

CABINET. Certain officers who, taken collectively, form a council or advisory board; as the cabinet of the president of the United States, which is composed of the secretary of state, the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of the interior, the secretary of war, the secretary of the navy, the attorney-general, and the postmaster-general.

These officers are the advisers of the president. They are also the heads of their respective departments; and by the constitution (art. 2, sec. 2) the president may require the opinion in writing of these officers upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective departments. These officers respectively have, under different acts of congress, the power of appointing many inferior officers charged with duties relating to their departments. See Const. art. 2, sec. 2.

The cabinet meets frequently at the executive mansion, by direction of the president, who presides over its deliberations and directs it proceedings. No record of its doings is kept; and it has, as a body, no legal authority. Its action is advisory merely; and the president and heads of departments in the execution of their official duties are entitled to disregard the advice of the cabinet and take the responsibility of independent action.

In England, the king, under its constitution, is irresponsible; or, as the phrase is, the king can do no wrong. The real responsibility of government in that country, therefore, rests with his ministers, who constitute his cabinet. The king may dismiss his ministers if they do not possess his confidence; but they are seldom dismissed by the king. They ordinarily resign when they cannot command a majority in favor of their measures in the house of commons.

The first lord of the treasury, the lord chancellor, the principal secretaries of state, and the chancellor of the exchequer, are always of the cabinet; but in regard to the other great officers of state the practice is not uniform, as at times they hold and at others do not hold seats in the cabinet. The British cabinet usually consists of from ten to fifteen persons. See Knight's Pol. Dict. title Cabinet; Bagehot, English Constitution.

CACICAZGOS. In Spanish Law. Lands held in entail by the caciques in Indian villages in Spanish America.

CADASTRE. The official statement of the quantity and value of real property in any district, made for the purpose of justly apportioning the taxes payable on such property; 12 Pet. 428, n.; 3 Am. St. Pap. 679.

CADERE (Lat.). To fall; to fail; to end; to terminate.

The word was generally used to denote the termination or failure of a writ, action, complaint, or attempt: as, cadit actio (the action fails), cadit assisa (the assise abates), cadere causa, or a causa (to lose a cause). Abate will translate cadere as often as any other word, the general signification being, as stated, to fail or cease. Cadere ab actione (literally, to fall from an action), to fail in an action; cadere in partem, to become subject to a division.

To become; to be changed to; cadit assisa in juratum (the assize has become a jury). Calvinus, Lex.

CADET. A younger brother. One trained for the army.

CADI. A Turkish civil magistrate.

CADUCA (Lat. cadere, to fall).

In Civil Law. An inheritance; an escheat; every thing which falls to the legal heir by descent.

By some writers bona caduca are said to be those to which no heir succeeds, equivalent to escheats. Du Cange.

CÆTERORUM (Lat. of the rest).

In Practice. Administration granted as to the residue of an estate, which cannot be administered under the limited power already granted; 1 Williams, Ex. 585; 2 Hagg. 62; 4 Hagg. Eccl. 382, 386; 4 M. & G. 398; 1 Curt. Eccl. 286.

It differs from administration de bonis non in this, that in cæterorum the full power granted is exercised and exhausted, while in the other the power is, for some cause, not fully exercised. See ADMINISTRATION.

CALEFAGIUM. A right to take fuel yearly. Blount.

CALENDAR. An almanac.

Julius Cæsar ordained that the Roman year should consist of three hundred and sixty-five days, except every fourth year, which should contain three hundred and sixty-six,—the additional day to be reckoned by counting the 24th day of February (which was the 6th of the calends of March) twice. See BISSEXTILE. This period of time exceeds the solar year by eleven minutes or thereabouts, which amounts to the error of a day in about one hundred and thirty-one years. In 1582 the error amounted to eleven days or more, which was corrected by Pope

Gregory. Out of this correction grew the distinction between Old and New Style. The Gregorian or New Style was introduced into England in 1752, the 2d day of September (O. S.) of that year being reckoned as the 14th day of September (N. S.)

In Criminal Law. A list of prisoners, containing their names, the time when they were committed and by whom, and the cause of their commitments.

CALIFORNIA. The largest and most populous of the Pacific Coast States.

It was formerly a part of Mexico, but was taken possession of by the United States in the late war with Mexico, and by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, May 30, 1848, the latter country ceded it to the United States.

The commanding officer of the U. S. forces exercised the duties of civil governor at first, but June 3, 1849, Brigadier-General Riley, then in command, issued a proclamation for holding an election August 1, 1849, for delegates to a general convention to frame a state constitution.

The convention met at Monterey, Sept. 1, 1849; adopted a constitution on October 10, 1849, which was ratified by a vote of the people, November 13, 1849. At the same time an election was held for governor and other state officers, and two members of congress.

The first legislature met at San Jose, December 15, 1849. General Riley, on December 20, 1849, resigned the administration of civil affairs to the newly elected officers under the constitution, and shortly thereafter two United States senators were elected.

In March, 1850, the senators and representatives submitted to congress the constitution, with a memorial asking the admission of the state into the American Union.

On September 9, 1850, congress passed an act admitting the state into the Union on an equal footing with the original states, and allowing her two representatives in congress until an apportionment according to an actual enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States. The third section of the act provides for the admission, upon the express condition that the people of the state, through their legislation or otherwise, shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits, and shall not pass any law or do any act whereby the title of the United States to any right to dispose of the same shall be impaired or questioned; and that they shall never lay any tax or assessment of any description whatsoever upon the public domain of the United States, and that in no case shall non-resident proprietors who are citizens of the United States be taxed higher than residents; and that all the navigable waters within the state shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of the state as to the citizens of the United States, and without any tax, impost, or duty therefor.

Congress passed an act, March 3, 1851, to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the state of California. By this act a board of commissioners was created, before whom every person claiming lands in California, by virtue of any right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican governments, was required to present his claim, together with such documentary evidence and testimony of witnesses as he relied upon. From the decision of this board an appeal might be taken to the district court of the United States for the district in which the land was situated. Both the board and the court, on passing on the validity of any claim, were required to be governed by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the law of nations, the laws, usages, and customs of the government from which the claim was derived, the principles of equity, and the decisions of the supreme court of the United States.

A large part of the best agricultural lands of the state was claimed under Spanish and Mexican grants. The evidence in support of these grants was in many instances meagre and unsatisfactory, and the amount of litigation arising therefrom was enormous and has not yet wholly ceased. The board of commissioners, having completed its work, went out of existence.

By an act passed September 28, 1850, congress declared all laws of the United States, not locally inapplicable, in force within the State.

There is one United States district court, with jurisdiction extending over the entire state. The state also is a part of the ninth circuit.

The constitution adopted in 1849 was amended November 4, 1856, and September 3, 1862, and on January 1, 1880, was superseded by the present constitution, which had been framed by a convention March 3, 1879, and adopted by popular vote May 7, 1879.

The new constitution declares California to be an inseparable part of the American Union. Its provisions are mandatory and prohibitory unless by express words they are declared othewise.

It secures freedom of religious opinion, of speech, and of the press, and provides that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without compensation having first been made or paid into the court for the owner.

No person can be imprisoned for debt in civil actions, except in cases of fraud, and for wilful injury to person or property.

Foreigners of the white race, or of African descent, and eligible to become citizens of the United States, under the naturalization laws, have the same rights in respect to property while bonâ fide residents of the state that native-born citizens have.

Trial by jury may be waived in all civil actions, and in criminal cases not amounting to felony. In civil actions three-fourths of a jury may render a verdict.

A grand jury must be summoned in each county at least once a year, but offenees may be prosecuted by information or by indictment. In prosecutions for libel against newspapers the trial must be in the county where the newspaper has its publication office or where the party libelled resides. No special privileges or immunities can be granted. No property qualification can be attached to the right of suffrage, but no native of China, idiot or insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime or of embezzling or misappropriating public money can vote. On the other hand, persons engaged in the service of the United States, or in navigation, or attending a seminary of learning, or kept at an almshouse or other asylum at public expense, or while confined in a public prison, do not lose their residence for the purpose of voting—the only qualification of the right of suffrage being, that the voter must be a male citizen of the United States, twenty-one years of age, have been naturalized, if of foreign birth, ninety days, a resident of the state one year, of the county ninety days, and of the precinct thirty days.

Any person convicted of having given or offered a bribe to procure his election or appointment is disqualified from holding office.

All property owned by either husband or wife before marriage, or acquired afterwards by gift, devise, or descent, is his or her separate property.

LEGISLATIVE POWER.—The legislative power is vested in a senate and assembly. The sessions of the legislature are biennial, commencing on the first Monday after the first day of January of the odd years.

No pay is allowed to members for a longer time than sixty days, nor can a bill be introduced in either house after fifty days from the commencement of the session, without the consent of two-thirds of the members of that house.

The senate consists of forty, the assembly of eighty members—chosen by districts.

The members of the assembly are elected for two years, of the senate for four years; and in either case the member must have been a citizen and inhabitant of the state three years, and of his district one year next before election.

No bill can become a law unless read on three several days in each house, unless in case of urgency, and by a vote by yeas and nays two-thirds of the house dispense with the reading.

Every act shall embrace but one subject, which must be expressed by its title.

The powers usually possessed by legislative bodies are by this constitution much restricted, one section alone enumerating thirty-three subjects, of frequent local and special legislation, in which the legislature is forbidden to pass local or special laws.

The legislature, likewise, cannot authorize lotteries or gift enterprises, and must prohibit the sale of lottery tickets, and shall regulate or prohibit the buying and selling stock of corporations in stock boards or exchanges.

All contracts for the sale of stock on a margin are declared void.

The legislature cannot lend the credit of the state, or any subdivision of the state, or authorize any such subdivision to lend its credit, to any person, corporation, or association, or grant extra compensation to any public agent or contractor.

It shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of charges of telegraphic, gas, and storage corporations.

Stringent provisions are made against lobbying, which is declared a felony.

The legislature must provide for common schools, and there is devoted to their support the proceeds of all lands that may be granted by the United States for the support of schools, and the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to the new states under the act of congress distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several states, and the estates of all deceased persons who may have died without leaving any will or heir.

It also provides that the State University constitutes a public trust, and that its organization and government shall be perpetually continued.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.—The governor holds office for four years, and possesses the usual powers.

There are also a lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, controller, treasurer, surveyor-general, and attorney-general, with the usual powers appertaining to those offices, and who are elected at the same time with the governor, and for the same term.

The governor shall not, during his term of office, be elected to the United States senate.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.—The judicial power is vested in the senate, sitting as a court of impeachment; supreme court, a superior court in each county, justices of the peace, and such inferior courts as the legislature may establish in cities and towns.

The supreme court consists of a chief justice and six associate justices, whose term of office is twelve years.

Two departments are provided for—the chief justice assigning three justices to each department. Each department has power to hear and determine causes, and any three members of the court may pronounce judgment upon causes heard before a department.

The chief justice apportions the business between the departments, and may order causes to be heard in banc, as likewise may four justices. In causes heard in banc the concurrence of four members of the court is necessary to pronounce judgment. The decisions of the court must be in writing, and the grounds of the decision stated. The chief justice presides in banc, and may sit in either department.

The court has appellate jurisdiction in such cases as the superior court has original jurisdiction, and may issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, and habeas corpus.

The superior court of each county may consist of one or more judges, as the legislature shall order, whose term of office is six years. There may be as many sessions of any court at once as there are judges thereof. It has original jurisdiction in all cases in equity, and all cases at law involving title or possession of real property, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and in all other cases in which the demand exclusive of interest amounts to $300.00, and in criminal cases amounting to felony; of actions of forcible entry and detainer, to prevent or abate a nuisance; of proceedings in insolvency; of matters of probate; of divorce and naturalization; and has appellate jurisdiction from justices and other inferior courts in such matters as are provided by law. It may also issue writs of mandamus, etc.

In San Francisco, the superior court consists of twelve judges, who elect from among their number a presiding judge, who distributes the business among the several judges.

A judicial officer who absents himself from the state for sixty days is deemed to have forfeited his office. Justices of the supreme court and judges of the superior court may be removed by concurrent resolution of both houses of the legislature, adopted by a two-thirds vote of each; and before a judge can draw his monthly salary he must make affidavit that no cause remains in his court undecided, which has been submitted for a decision for a period of ninety days.

A judge cannot charge juries with respect to matters of law.

MISCELLANEOUS.—The subject of corporations is treated of at length by the constitution, upon the theory that they should be controlled and regulated by the state. The state is divided into three railroad districts, for each of which a railroad commissioner is elected by popular vote for the term of four years, and the board thus formed is given extensive powers over railroads in the state.

Elaborate provision is made for reaching all property for purposes of taxation, except growing crops. Water and water rights, public lands, homesteads, and harbors are treated of.

One article is devoted to the Chinese, whose presence is declared to be dangerous to the well-being of the state. One portion of the article, to wit, that corporations shall not employ Chinamen, has been declared inoperative, because in conflict with the constitution and treaties of the United States. No Chinese can be employed on any public work.

Sending or accepting a challenge to fight, or fighting, a duel works a forfeiture of the right of suffrage and the right to hold office. Liens for mechanics, material men, and laborers upon property, on which they have labored or furnished materials are provided for. Eight hours constitutes a legal day's work on all public works.

No person on account of sex shall be disqualified from pursuing any lawful business or occupation. Many subjects usually left to legislative action or discretion are likewise made a part of the fundamental law of the state.

CALLING THE PLAINTIFF. In Practice. A formal method of causing a nonsuit to be entered.

When a plaintiff perceives that he has not given evidence to maintain his issue, and intends to become nonsuited, he withdraws himself; whereupon the crier is ordered to call the plaintiff, and on his failure to appear he becomes nonsuited. The phrase "let the plaintiff be called," which occurs in some of the earlier state reports, is to be explained by reference to this practice. See 3 Bla. Com. 376; 2 C. & P. 403; 5 Mass. 236; 7 id. 257; 4 Wash. C. C. 97.

CALLING TO THE BAR. Conferring the degree or dignity of barrister upon a member of the inns of court. Holthouse, Dict.

CALUMNIÆ JUSJURANDUM (Lat.). The oath against calumny.

Both parties at the beginning of a suit, in certain cases, were obliged to take an oath that the suit was commenced in good faith and in a firm belief that they had a good cause. Bell, Dict. The object was to prevent vexatious and unnecessary suits. It was especially used in divorce cases, though of little practical utility; Bishop, Marr. & Div. § 353. A somewhat similar provision is to be found in the requirement made in some states that the defendant shall file an affidavit of merits.

CALUMNIATORS. In Civil Law. Persons who accuse others, whom they know to be innocent, of having committed crimes.

CAMBIO. Exchange.

CAMBIPARTIA. Champerty.

CAMBIPARTICEPS. A champertor.

CAMBIST. A person skilled in exchange; one who deals or trades in promissory notes or bills of exchange; a broker.

CAMBIUM. Change, exchange. Applied in the civil law to exchange of lands, as well as of money or debts. DuCange.

Cambium reale or manuale was the term generally used to denote the technical common-law exchange of lands; cambium locale, mercantile, or trajectitium, was used to designate the modern mercantile contract of exchange, whereby a man agrees, in consideration of a sum of money paid him in one place, to pay a like sum in another place. Pothier, de Change, n. 12; Story, Bills, § 2 et seq.

CAMERA REGIS. In old English law a chamber of the king; a place of peculiar privileges especially in a commercial point of view. The city of London was so called. Year Book, p. 7, Hen. VI. 27; Burrill, Law Dic.

CAMERA SCACCARII. The Exchequer Chamber. Spelman, Gloss.

CAMERA STELLATA. The Star Chamber.

CAMERARIUS. A chamberlain; a keeper of the public money; a treasurer. Spelman, Gloss. Cambellarius; 1 Perr. & D. 243.

CAMINO. In Spanish Law. A road or highway. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 2, l. 6.

CAMPARTUM. A part or portion of a larger field or ground, which would otherwise be in gross or in common. Champerty.

CAMPERTUM. A cornfield; a field of grain. Cowel; Whishaw.

CAMPUS (Lat. a field). In old European law an assemby of the people so called from being held in the open air, in some plain capable of containing a large number of persons. 1 Robertson's Charles V. App. n. 38.

In feudal or old English law a field or plain. Burrill, Law Dict.

CANADA. The name of one of the British possessions in North America.

The first explorations of this country, of which any authentic information exists, were by Jacques Cartier, between the years 1534 and 1554, thus giving to France the first claim upon its territory. Great activity was shown during these and the succeeding years on the part of Great Britian and France to acquire territorial jurisdiction on the newly discovered continent, and the division lines between their acquisitions were not very clearly marked. Those of France included Florida in the south and the lands watered by the St. Lawrence in the north, and to it all the name of "New France" was given. In 1603 an expedition for trading purposes was fitted out under the command of Samuel Champlain, whose explorations up the river St. Lawrence and its tributary, the Richelieu River, brought him to the lake which still bears his name.

The viceroyalty of New France was conferred in 1612 upon the Prince de Condé, who made a formal assignment of it in 1619 to Admiral Montmorency, who personally visited the country.

In 1628, under the rule of Cardinal Richelieu in France, the colony was ceded to "La Compagnie de Cents Associes" (The Company of the One Hundred Associates), a trading company, but armed, like the Hudson Bay Company in later years, with full power for the administration of justice in the primitive forms practicable in new countries and with mixed populations.

This company had an unsuccessful career financially, and upon its disorganization, in 1663, Louis XIV. resumed territorial jurisdiction over the colony, and in April of that year published an edict establishing a "Sovereign Council" for the government of Canada, and this council was specially instructed to prepare laws and ordinances for the administration of justice, framed as much as possible upon those then in force in France under the provisions of the "Custom of Paris."

For more than one hundred years all the legal business of the province was determined by this council—in fact, until the conquest by the English in 1759. By the terms of the capitulation, it was stipulated and conceded that the ancient laws of land tenure should continue to subsist, but it was understood that the English criminal and commercial law should be introduced and adopted.

Under this stipulation the law of France, as it existed in 1759, was recognized as the civil law of Canada, and has always since formed the basis of that law—modified, of course, after the subsequent establishment of a representative government in the colony, by the statutory provisions of the colonial parliaments. This result was applicable, however, only to that section of the country which subsequently was called Lower Canada, now the province of Quebec. The portion of the colony since known as the province of Upper Canada (now the province of Ontario), was then unsettled, and being subsequently colonized from Great Britain and her other dependencies, the whole body of law, civil as well as criminal, was based upon that in force in England.

Under the provisions of a statute passed by the imperial parliament of Great Britain in 1774, called "The Quebec Act," a legislative council of twenty-three members was established for the province, with power to enact laws. In 1791 Pitt introduced the bill into the English House of Commons which gave a constitution to Canada and divided it into the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. Since then (with the short interregnum from 1837 to 1841), regular parliaments have been held, at which the jurisprudence of the country and the establishment of its courts have been determined by formal acts.

In 1867, the confederation of the different North American dependencies of Great Britain, under the name of the "Dominion of Canada," was consummated by an act of the imperial parliament, at the instance and request of the different provinces, including Upper and Lower Canada (under the names of Ontario and Quebec), New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, to which have since been added Prince Edward's Island, Manitoba, and British Columbia. The act under which this confederation was established—called The British North American Act—contains the provisions of a written constitution, under which the executive government and authority is declared to be vested in the sovereign of Great Britain, whose powers are deputed to a governor-general, nominated by the imperial government, but whose salary is paid by the Dominion. The form of government is modelled after that of Great Britain. The governor acts under the guidance of a council, nominally selected by himself, but which must be able to command the support of a majority in that branch of parliament which represents the suffrages of the electors.

The Dominion parliament consists of a senate and house of commons: the former numbering from 72 to 78 members, appointed for life. The commons consisted, at confederation, of 181 members: 82 for Ontario, 65 for Quebec, 19 for Nova Scotia, and 15 for New Brunswick. This number has since been increased by the addition of new provinces, as follows: 6 from Prince Edward's Island, 4 from Manitoba, and 6 from British Columbia.

Senators must have a property qualification of at least $4000, in real estate and personal property, and must be residents of the province for which they are appointed; and in the province of Quebec, must either reside or have their property qualification in the division which they are appointed to represent. No property qualification is required for a member of the house of commons. He need not be even a resident of the county which elects him as its representative. The limit of the term for which members of the commons are elected is five years, but a house may be dissolved at any time within that limit by order of the governor general and his council, and new elections held. This is only done when a ministry fail to command a working majority in the house and believe that additional support may be obtained by a new appeal to the suffrages of the electors.

The privileges, immunities, and powers of the senate and house of commons are within the control of the parliament of Canada—that is of the three united branches—queen (or governor general), senate, and commons.

Any male person twenty-one years of age, a subject of her majesty by birth or naturalization, and not disqualified by law, may vote for members of the legislative assembly, if he be enrolled on the last assessment-roll, as revised, corrected, and in force, as owner, tenant, or occupant of real property of the assessed value of three hundred dollars clear of incumbrances, or of the annual clear value of thirty dollars, situated within the limits of the town or city, for municipal purposes; or as possessed of property to the clear value of two hundred dollars, or clear annual value of twenty dollars, situated within the limits of any township, parish, or place within the limits of such town or city, for representative, but not for municipal purposes; or if enrolled on such roll, in any parish, township, town, village, or place, not within the limits of a town or city entitled to send a member of the legislative assembly, as owner, tenant, or occupant of property of the clear assessed value of two hundred dollars, or the clear annual value of twenty dollars, situated in the district in which such town, etc., is included. Judges of all courts holding fixed sessions, and officers of such courts, as sheriffs and the like, under a penalty of two thousand dollars, officers of the customs, returning officers of elections, and all who have been employed by any candidate in assisting or forwarding his election, are prohibited voting.

It is declared that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference, so that the same be not made an excuse for acts of licentiousness or a justification of practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the province, is by the constitution and laws of this province allowed to all her majesty's subjects within the same. Consol. Can. Laws, 857.

Each of the provinces has also a separate parliamentary organization for the administration of local affairs, with a lieutenant governor for each, appointed for a term of five years by the governor general in council.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The administration of the laws differs in the separate provinces. There is, however, a supreme court with ultimate jurisdiction in matters affecting the Dominion and as a final court of appeal from the provincial courts. It consists of a chief justice and five puisne judges, and is held at Ottawa. Litigants in cases in the provincial courts, involving amounts exceeding $2500, may appeal either to the supreme court or to the queen in privy council, but the decision, by whichever tribunal selected, is final.

The judicial system in the province of Quebec is based upon that in France in the last century, while that in Ontario and the other provinces is modelled mainly after the English system.

The province of Quebec is divided into twenty judicial districts, in which circuit and superior courts are held. The circuit court has jurisdiction in cases up to $200, except in Montreal and Quebec, where it is limited to $100. The superior court has unlimited jurisdiction in civil matters beyond that of the circuit. A single superior court judge presides over each court. The court of review is a revisionary tribunal consisting of three judges of the superior court, sitting in Montreal and Quebec, before which all superior court cases and cases in the circuit court over $100 may be re-argued, after decision of a single judge. The judgment of this court—confirming or reversing the original judgment—becomes the judgment of record, but in case of a reversal of the original judgment an appeal may be taken to the court of queen's bench (appeal side), to which appeals may also be taken direct from the first judgment. This court consists of six judges, five of whom constitute a full bench, and sit alternately at Montreal and Quebec. A judge of this court is detailed in both Montreal and Quebec to hold the terms of the criminal court, a duty imposed in country districts upon the judge of the superior court.

In this province (Quebec) the members of the bar are incorporated by act of parliament under the name of "The Bar of the Province of Quebec," with absolute control over their own organization,—both as to admission to its ranks and control and discipline over its members.

The notarial profession is also regularly organized and incorporated. Its members are obliged to make a certain course of study and clerkship before admission. A notary when once admitted becomes a public functionary. Documents executed before him remain always in his custody, and copies only are delivered to the parties, but these copies when authenticated by the notary make proof of themselves in all courts and legal proceedings. Upon the decease of the notary his original documents (minutes, as they are called), all numbered consecutively, are delivered up to the clerk of the superior court and deposited in the archives of that court for future reference. A very elaborate system of registration is in force in all the provinces for all transactions affecting real estate, and throughout the cities and older provinces, Cadastral plans are in force showing the exact position and dimensions of each property with its Cadastral number, which is a sufficient designation of it for legal or registration purposes.

In the province of Quebec either the English or French language may be used in contracts, in writs or other legal proceedings or pleadings, and both languages are used in all official proclamations and in the publication of the statutes.

In the other provinces the English language only is officially used, and the procedure in all the courts—based upon that of England—is quite uniform and similar to that still in use there.

CANAL. An artificial cut or trench in the earth, for conducting and confining water to be used for transportation.

Public canals originate under statutes and charters enacted to authorize their construction and to protect and regulate their use. They are in this country constructed and managed either by the state itself, acting through the agency of commissioners, or by companies incorporated for the purpose. These commissioners and companies are armed with authority to appropriate private property for the construction of their canals, in exercising which they are bound to a strict compliance with the statutes by which it is conferred. Where private property is thus taken, it must be paid for in gold and silver; 8 Blackf. 246. Such payment need not precede or be cotemporaneous with the taking; 20 Johns. 735; 4 Zabr. 587; 8 Blackf. 266; though, if postponed, the proprietor of the land taken is entitled to interest; 5 Denio, 401; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 248. The following cases relate to the rules to be observed in estimating the amount of damage to be awarded for private property taken or injured by the construction of canals: 7 Blackf. 209; 5 id. 384-543; 6 id. 483; 1 Watts & S. 346; 1 Penn. 462; 15 Barb. 457, 627; 24 id. 362; 4 Wend. 647; 1 Spenc. 249; 14 Conn. 146; 16 id. 98; 1 Sneed, 239; 1 Sumn. 46.

After the appropriation of land for a canal, duly made under statute authority, though the title remains in the original owner until he is paid therefor, he cannot sustain an action against the party taking the same for any injury thereto; 19 Barb. 263, 370; 4 Wend. 647; 20 Johns. 735; 7 Johns. Ch. 314; 19 Penn. 456. But if there be a deviation from the statute authority, the statute is no protection against suits by persons injured by such deviation; 4 Denio, 356; 26 Wend. 485; 1 Sumn. 46; 2 Dow. 519; Coop. Ch. 77. Appraisers appointed to assess damages for land taken have no authority to entertain claims not presented in the mode and within the time prescribed by statute; 9 Barb. 496; 11 N. Y. 314. But though a special remedy for damages be given by a statute authorizing the construction of a canal, the party injured thereby is not barred of his common-law action; 24 Barb. 159; 5 Cow. 163; 16 Conn. 98. But see, to the contrary; 12 Mass. 466; 1 N. H. 339. The legislature have the exclusive power to determine when land may be taken for a canal or other public use, and the courts cannot review their determination in that respect; 9 Barb. 350; 8 Blackf. 266.

In navigating canals, it is the duty of the canal-boats to exercise due care in avoiding collisions, and in affording each other mutual accommodation; and for any injury resulting from the neglect of such care the proprietors of the boats are liable in damages; 19 Wend. 399; 8 id. 469; 6 Cow. 698; 1 Barr, 44. The proprietors of the canal will be liable for any injury to canal-boats occasioned by a neglect on their part to keep the canal in proper repair and free from obstructions; 7 Mass. 189; 7 Metc. 276; 13 Gratt. 541; 8 Dana, 161; 7 Ind. 462; 20 Barb. 620; 11 A. & E. 223. In regard to the right of the proprietors of canals to tolls, the rule is that they are only entitled to take them as authorized by statute, and that any ambiguity in the terms of the statute must operate in favor of the public; 2 B. & Ad. 792; 2 id. 58; 2 M. & G. 134; 9 How. 172;

6 Cow. 567; 21 Penn. 131. For other cases relating to various points arising under statutes in regard to canals; see 8 Blackf. 352; 12 Mass. 403; 7 B. Monr. 160; 4 Zabr. 62, 555; 11 Penn. 202; 2 id. 217; 1 Binn. 70; 1 Gill, 222; 6 W. & S. 560; 17 Barb. 193; 19 id. 657; 25 Wend. 692. See RAILWAY.

CANCELLARIA. Chancery; the court of chancery. Curia cancellaria is also used in the same sense. See 4 Bla. Com. 46; Cowel.

CANCELLARIUS. A chancellor. A janitor, or one who stood at the door of the court and was accustomed to carry out the commands of the judges. A scribe. A notary. Du Cange.

It was under the reign of the Merovingian kings that the cancellarii first obtained the dignity corresponding with that of the English chancellor, and became keepers of the king's seal. Du Cange. In ecclesiastical matters it was the duty of the cancellarius to take charge of all matters relating to the books of the church,—acting as librarian; to correct the laws, comparing the various readings, and also to take charge of the seal of the church, affixing it when necessary in the business of the church.

In this latter sense only of keeper of the seal the word chancellor, derived hence, seems to have been used in the English law. 3 Bla. Com. 46. It is said by Ingulphus that Edward the Elder appointed Torquatel his chancellor, so that whatever business of the king, spiritual or temporal, required a decision, should be decided by his advice and decree, and, being so decided, the decree should be held irrevocable. Spence, Eq. Jur. 78, n.

The origin of the word has been much disputed; but it seems probable that the meaning assigned by Du Cange is correct, who says that the cancellarii were originally the keepers of the gate of the king's tribunal, and who carried out the commands of the judges. In the civil law their duties were very various, giving rise to a great variety of names, as notarius, a notis, abactis, secretarius, a secretis, a cancellis, a responsis, generally derived from their duties as keepers and correctors of the statutes and decisions of the tribunals.

The transition from keeper of the seal of the church to keeper of the king's seal would be natural and easy in an age when the clergy were the only persons of education sufficient to read the documents to which the seal was to be appended. And this latter sense is the one which has remained and been perpetuated in the English word Chancellor. See Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Spence, Eq. Jur. 78; 3 Bla. Com. 46.

CANCELLATION. The act of crossing out a writing. The manual operation of tearing or destroying a written instrument; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 409; Roberts, Wills, 367, n.

The Statute of Frauds provides that the revocation of a will by cancellation must be by the "testator himself, or in his presence and by his direction and consent." This provision is in force in many of the United States; 1 Jarm. Wills, Rand. & Talc. ed. c. 7, § 2, n. In order that a revocation may be effected, it must be proved to have been done according to the statute; 25 N. Y. 79; 31 Penn. 246; 60 Mo. 579; 46 Ala. 216; declarations of a testator are not sufficient; 2 W. & S. 455; 26 Md. 95; 2 Johns. 31.

Cancelling a will, animo revocandi, is a revocation; and the destruction or obliteration need not be complete; 3 B. & Ald. 489; 2 W. Blackst. 1043; 4 Mass. 462; 2 N. & M'C. 472; 5 Conn. 168; 4 S. & R. 567. It must be done animo revocandi; 62 Ill. 368; 6 Mo. 177; and evidence is admissible to show with what intention the act was done; 7 Johns. 394; 4 Wend. 474, 485; 9 Mass. 307; 4 Conn. 550; 5 id. 262; 8 Vt. 373; 1 N. H. 1; 4 id. 191; 2 Dall. 266; 4 S. & R. 297; 3 Hen. & M. 502; 1 Harr. & M'H. 162; 4 Kent, 531; 57 Me. 449; 25 Mich. 505; 2 Rich. 184; 6 Mich. 411; 32 Ga. 156. Accidental cancellation is not a revocation; 3 Stockt. 156. Where the first few lines of a will were cut off, the remainder, which was complete, was admitted to probate; L. R. 2 P. & D. 206. Partial cancellation, with proof of an animo revocandi, will revoke a will; 2 Miss. 336. Where the testator wrote on his will, "this will is invalid," held a revocation; 2 Conn. 67. Cancellation by an insane man will not revoke a valid will; 54 Barb. 274; 7 Humphr. 92. See 1 Pick. 535; 1 Rich. 80.

There may be a partial obliteration, which works a revocation pro tanto; 34 Barb. 140; 123 Mass. 102; 62 Ill. 368; and a careful interlineation is not a cancellation; 55 Penn. 424. A cancellation by pencil is enough; 2 D. & B. 311; 6 Hare, 39; L. R. 2 P. & D. 256. Where a will is found among a testator's papers, torn, there is a presumption of revocation; 41 Vt. 125; 50 Mo. 28; 40 Conn. 587; 11 Wend. 227.

Mere cancellation of a deed does not divest the grantee's title; 9 Pick. 108; 33 Ala. 264; 18 Cal. 49; 4 Conn. 550; even though done before recording; 24 Me. 312; but it might practically have that effect between the parties by estoppel; 50 N. H. 143; or by reason of the destruction of the only evidence of the transaction; 14 Iowa, 400; 4 Wis. 12.

CANDIDATE (Lat. candidus, white. Said to be from the custom of Roman candidates to clothe themselves in a white tunic).

One who offers himself, or is offered by others, for an office.

CANON. In Ecclesiastical Law. A prebendary, or member of a chapter. All members of chapters except deans are now entitled canons, in England. 3 Steph. Com. 67, n.; 1 Bla. Com. 382.

CANON LAW. A body of ecclesiastical law, which originated in the church of Rome, relating to matters of which that church has or claims jurisdiction.

A canon is a rule of doctrine or of discipline, and is the term generally applied to designate the ordinances of councils and decrees of popes. The position which the canon law obtains beyond the papal dominions depends on the extent to which it is sanctioned or permitted by the government of each country; and hence the system of canon law as it is administered in different countries varies somewhat.

Though this system of law is of primary importance in Catholic countries alone, it still maintains great influence and transmits many of its peculiar regulations down through the jurisprudence of Protestant countries which were formerly Catholic. Thus, the canon law has been a distinct branch of the profession in the ecclesiastical courts of England for several centuries; but the recent modifications of the jurisdiction of those courts have done much to reduce its independent importance.

The Corpus Juris Canonici is drawn from various sources—the opinions of the ancient fathers of the church, the decrees of councils, and the decretal epistles and bulls of the holy see, together with the maxims of the civil law and the teachings of the Scriptures. These sources were first drawn upon for a regular ecclesiastical system about the time of Pope Alexander III., in the middle of the twelfth century, when one Gratian, an Italian monk, animated by the discovery of Justinian's Pandects, collected the ecclesiastical constitutions also into some method in three books, which he entitled Concordia Discordantium Canonum. These are generally known as Decretum Gratiani.

The subsequent papal decrees to the time of the pontificate of Gregory IX. were collected in much the same method, under the auspices of that pope, about the year 1230, in five books, entitled Decretalia Gregorii Noni. A sixth book was added by Boniface VIII., about the year 1298, which is called Sextus Decretalium. The Clementine Constitution, or decrees of Clement V., were in like manner authenticated in 1317 by his successor, John XXII., who also published twenty constitutions of his own, called the Extravagantes Joannis, so called because they were in addition to, or beyond the boundary of, the former collections, as the additions to the civil law were called Novels. To these have since been added some decrees of later popes, down to the time of Sixtus IV., in five books, called Extravagantes communes. And all these together—Gratian's Decrees, Gregory's Decretals, the Sixth Decretals, the Clementine Constitutions, and the Extravagants of John and his successors—form the Corpus Juris Canonici, or body of the Roman canon law; 1 Bla. Com. 82; Encyclopédie, Droit Canonique, Droit Public Ecclesiastique; Dict. de Jur. Droit Canonique, Erskine, Inst. b. 1. t. 1, s. 10. See, in general, Ayliffe, Par. Jur. Can. CANONRY. An ecclesiastical benefice attaching to the office of canon. Holthouse, Dict.

CANTRED. A hundred; a district containing a hundred villages. Used in Wales in the same sense as hundred in England. Cowel; Termes de la Ley.

CANVASS. The act of examining the returns of votes for a public officer. This duty is usually intrusted to certain officers of a state, district, or county, who constitute a board of canvassers. The determination of the board of canvassers of the persons elected to an office is primâ facie evidence only of their election. A party may go behind the canvass to the ballots, to show the number of votes cast for him. The duties of the canvassers are wholly ministerial; 8 Cow. 102; 20 Wend. 14; 1 Dougl. Mich. 59; 1 Mich. 362; 15 Ill. 492.

CAPACITY. Ability, power, qualification, or competency of persons, natural or artificial, for the performance of civil acts depending on their state or condition as defined or fixed by law; as, the capacity to devise, to bequeath, to grant or convey lands; or to take and hold lands; to make a contract, and the like. 2 Comyns, Dig. 294; Dane, Abr.

CAPAX DOLI (Lat. capable of committing crime). The condition of one who has sufficient mind and understanding to be made responsible for his actions. See DISCRETION.

CAPE. A judicial writ touching a plea of lands and tenements. The writs which bear this name are of two kinds—namely, cape magnum, or grand cape, and cape parvum, or petit cape. The petit cape is so called not so much on account of the smallness of the writ as of the letter. Fleta, l. 6, c. 55, § 40. For the difference between the form and the use of these writs, see 2 Wms. Saund. 45 c, d; Fleta, l. 6, c. 55, § 40.

CAPERS. Vessels of war owned by private persons, and different from ordinary privateers only in size, being smaller. Beawes, Lex Merc. 230.

CAPIAS (Lat. capere, to take; capias, that you take). In Practice. A writ directing the sheriff to take the person of the defendant into custody.

It is a judicial writ, and issued originally only to enforce compliance with the summons of an original writ or with some judgment or decree of the court. It was originally issuable as a part of the original process in a suit only in case of injuries committed by force or with fraud, but was much extended by statutes. See ARREST; BAIL. Being the first word of distinctive significance in the writ, when writs were framed in Latin, it came to denote the whole class of writs by which a defendant's person was to be arrested. It was issuable either by the court of Common Pleas or King's Bench, and bore the seal of the court.

Consult Sellon, Practice, Introd.; Spence, Eq. Jur.; BAIL; BREVE; ARREST; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2794.

CAPIAS AD AUDIENDUM JUDICIUM. In Practice. A writ issued, in a case of misdemeanor, after the defendant has appeared and is found guilty, to bring him to judgment if he is not present when called. 4 Bla. Com. 368.

CAPIAS AD COMPUTANDUM. In Practice. A writ which issued in the action of account render upon the judgment quod computet, when the defendant refused to appear in his proper person before the auditors and enter into his account.

According to the ancient practice, the defendant might, after arrest upon this process, be delivered on mainprize, or, in default of finding mainpernors, was committed to the Fleet prison, where the auditors attended upon him to hear and receive his account. The writ is now disused.

Consult Thessurus Brevium, 38, 39, 40; Coke, Entries, 46, 47; Rastell, Entries, 14 b, 15.

CAPIAS PRO FINE. In Practice. A writ which issued against a defendant who had been fined and did not discharge the fine according to the judgment.

The object of the writ was to arrest a defendant against whom a plaintiff had obtained judgment, and detain him until he paid to the king the fine for the public misdemeanor, coupled with the remedy for the private injury sustained, in all cases of forcible torts; 11 Coke, 43; 5 Mod. 285; falsehood in denying one's own deed; Coke, Litt. 131; 8 Coke, 60; unjustly claiming property in replevin, or contempt by disobeying the command of the king's writ, or the express prohibition of any statute; 8 Coke, 60. It is now abolished; 3 Bla. Com. 398.

CAPIAS AD RESPONDENDUM. In Practice. A writ commanding the officer to whom it is directed "to take the body of the defendant and keep the same to answer the plaintiff," etc.

This is the writ of capias which is generally intended by the use of the word capias, and was formerly a writ of great importance. For some account of its use and value, see ARREST; BAIL.

According to the course of the practice at common law, the writ bears teste, in the name of the chief justice, or presiding judge of the court, on some day in term-time, when the judge is supposed to be present, not being Sunday, and is made returnable on a regular return day.

If the writ has been served and the defendant does not give bail, but remains in custody, it is returned C. C. (cepi corpus); if he have given bail, it is returned C. C. B. B. (cepi corpus, bail bond); if the defendant's appearance have been accepted, the return is, "C. C., and defendant's appearance accepted." See 1 Archb. Pr. 67.

CAPIAS AD SATISFACIENDUM. In Practice. A writ directed to the sheriff or coroner, commanding him to take the person therein named and him safely keep so that he may have his body in court on the return day of the writ, to satisfy (ad satisfaciendum) the party who has recovered judgment against him.

It is a writ of execution issued after judgment, and might have been issued against a plaintiff against whom judgment was obtained for costs, as well as against the defendant in a personal action. As a rule at common law it lay in all cases where a capias ad respondendum lay as a part of the mesne process. Some classes of persons were, however, exempt from arrest on mesne process who were liable to it on final. It was a very common form of execution, until within a few years, in many of the states; but its efficiency has been destroyed by statutes facilitating the discharge of the debtor, in some states, and by statutes prohibiting its issue, in others, except in specified cases. See ARREST; PRIVILEGE. It is commonly known by the abbreviation ca. sa.

It is tested on a general teste day, and returnable on a general return day.

It is executed by arresting the defendant and keeping him in custody. He cannot be discharged upon bail or by consent of the sheriff. See ESCAPE. And payment to the sheriff is held in England not to be sufficient to authorize a discharge.

The return made by the officer is either C. C. & C. (cepi corpus et committitur), or N. E. I. (non est inventus). The effect of execution by a ca. sa. is to prevent suing out any other process against the lands or goods of the person arrested, at common law; but this is modified by statutes in the modern law. See EXECUTION.

Consult Archbold; Chitty; Sellon, Practice; 3 Bla. Com. 414.

CAPIAS UTLIGATUM. In Practice. A writ directing the arrest of an outlaw.

If general, it directs the sheriff to arrest the outlaw and bring him before the court on a general return day.

If special, it directs the sheriff, in addition, to take possession of the goods and chattels of the outlaw, summoning a jury to determine their value.

It was a part of the process subsequent to the capias, and was issued to compel an appearance where the defendant had absconded and a capias could not be served upon him. The outlawry was readily reversed upon any plausible pretext, upon appearance of a party in person or by attorney, as the object of the writ was then satisfied. The writ issued after an outlawry in a criminal as well as in a civil case. See 3 Bla. Com. 284; 4 id. 320.

CAPIAS IN WITHERNAM. In Practice. A writ directing the sheriff to take other goods of a distrainor equal in value to a distress which he has formerly taken and still withholds from the owner beyond the reach of process.

When chattels taken by distress were decided to have been wrongfully taken and were by the distrainor eloigned, that is, carried out of the county or concealed, the sheriff made such a return. Thereupon this writ issued, thus putting distress against distress.

Goods taken in withernam are irrepleviable till the original distress be forthcoming; 3 Bla. Com. 148.

CAPITA (Lat.). Heads, and figuratively entire bodies, whether of persons or animals. Spelman.

An expression of frequent occurrence in laws regulating the distribution of the estates of persons dying intestate. When all the persons entitled to shares in the distribution are of the same degree of kindred to the deceased person (e. g. when all are grandchildren), and claim directly from him in their own right, and not through an intermediate relation, they take per capita, that is, equal shares, or share and share alike. But when they are of different degrees of kindred (e. g. some the children, others the grandchildren or the great-grandchildren, of the deceased), those more remote take per stirpem, or per stirpes, that is, they take respectively the shares their parents (or other relation standing in the same degree with them of the surviving kindred entitled, who are in the nearest degree of kindred to the intestate) would have taken had they respectively survived the intestate. Reeve, Descent, Introd. XXVII.; also, 1 Roper, Leg. 126, 130. See PER CAPITA; PER STIRPES; STIRPES.

CAPITAL. In Commerce. The sum of money which a merchant, banker, or trader adventures in any undertaking, or which he contributes to the common stock of a partnership, and also the fund of a trading company. McCulloch; Abb. Dict.

Capital signifies the actual estate, whether in money or property, owned by an individual or corporation; 23 N. Y. 192; it is the fund upon which it transacts its business, which would be liable to its creditors, and in case of insolvency pass to a receiver; 28 Barb. 318; it does not include money borrowed temporarily; 21 Wall. 284. See, also, 31 Conn. 306; 7 Blackf. 295; 5 Blatch. 315; 18 Wend. 605.

CAPITAL CRIME. One for which the punishment of death is inflicted.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT. The punishment of death.

The subject of capital punishment has occupied the attention of enlightened men for a long time, particularly since the middle of the last century; and none deserves to be more carefully investigated. The right of punishing its members by society is admitted; but how far this right extends, by the laws of nature or of God, has been much disputed by theoretical writers, although it cannot be denied that most nations, ancient and modern, have deemed capital punishment to be within the scope of the legitimate powers of government. Beccaria contends with zeal that the punishment of death ought not to be inflicted in time of peace, nor at other times, except in cases where the laws can be maintained in no other way. Beccaria, chap. 28.

CAPITAL STOCK. The sum, divided into shares, which is raised by mutual subscription of the members of a corporation. It is said to be the sum upon which calls may be made upon the stockholders, and dividends are to be paid; 1 Sandf. Ch. 280; 4 Zabr. 195; Angell & A. Corp. §§ 151, 556. The term is used to indicate the amount of capital which the charter provides for, and not the value of the property of the corporation; 23 N. J. L. 195. See 30 Ark. 693 (contra, under an Illinois revenue statute; 83 Ill. 602); the entire sum agreed to be contributed to the enterprise, whether paid in or not; 40 Ga. 98.

It has been held to mean the amount paid in, not the amount subscribed; 52 Penn. 177; contra, 8 Ga. 486.

CAPITALIS JUSTICIARIUS. The chief justiciary; the principal minister of state, and guardian of the realm in the king's absence.

This office originated under William the Conqueror; but its power was greatly diminished by Magna Charta, and finally distributed among several courts by Edward I. Spelman, Gloss.; 3 Bla. Com. 38.

CAPITANEUS. He who held his land or title directly from the king himself.

A commander or ruler over others, either in civil, military, or ecclesiastical matters.

A naval commander. This latter use began A. D. 1264. Spelman, Gloss. Capitaneus, Admiralius.

CAPITATION (Lat. caput, head). A poll-tax. An imposition yearly laid upon each person.

The constitution of the United States provides that "no capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census, or enumeration, thereinbefore directed to be taken." Art. 1, s. 9, n. 4. See 3 Dall. Penn. 171; 5 Wheat. 317.

CAPITE. See IN CAPITE.

CAPITULA. Collections of laws and ordinances drawn up under heads or divisions. Spelman, Gloss.

The term is used in the civil and old English law, and applies to the ecclesiastical law also, meaning chapters or assemblies of ecclesiastical persons. Du Cange.

CAPITULA CORONÆ. Specific and minute schedules, or capitula itineris.

CAPITULA ITINERIS. Schedules of inquiry delivered to the justices in eyre before setting out on their circuits, and which were intended to embrace all possible crimes.

CAPITULA DE JUDÆIS. A register of mortgages made to the Jews. 2 Bla. Com. 343; Crabb, Eng. Law, 130 et seq.

CAPITULARY. In French Law. A collection of laws and ordinances orderly arranged by divisions.

The term is especially applied to the collections of laws made and published by the early French emperors.

The execution of these capitularies was intrusted to the bishops, courts, and missi regis; and many copies were made. The best edition of the Capitularies is said by Butler to be that of Baluze, 1677. Coke, Litt. 191 a, Butler's note, 77.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A collection of laws and ordinances orderly arranged by divisions. A book containing the beginning and end of each Gospel which is to be read every day in the ceremony of saying mass. Du Cange.

CAPITULATION. The treaty which determines the conditions under which a fortified place is abandoned to the commanding officer of the army which besieges it.

On surrender by capitulation, all the property of the inhabitants protected by the articles is considered by the law of nations as neutral, and not subject to capture on the high seas by the belligerent or its ally; 2 Dall. 8.

In Civil Law. An agreement by which the prince and the people, or those who have the right of the people, regulate the manner in which the government is to be administered. Wolffius, § 989.

CAPITUR PRO FINE. See CAPIAS PRO FINE. See, also, Wharton, Dict.

CAPTAIN (Lat. capitaneus; from caput, head). The commander of a company of soldiers.

The term is also used of officers in the municipal police in a somewhat similar sense: as, captain of police, captain of the watch.

The master or commander of a merchant-vessel, or a vessel of war.

A subordinate officer having charge of a certain part of a vessel of war.

In the United States, the commander of a merchant-vessel is, in statutes and legal proceedings and language, more generally termed master, which title see. In foreign laws and languages he is frequently styled patron.

The rank of captain in the United States navy is next above that of commander; and captains are generally appointed from this rank in the order of seniority. The president has the appointing power, subject to the approval and consent of the senate.

CAPTATION. In French Law. The act of one who succeeds in controlling the will of another, so as to become master of it. It is generally taken in a bad sense.

Captation takes place by those demonstrations of attachment and friendship, by those assiduous attentions, by those services and officious little presents, which are usual among friends, and by all those means which ordinarily render us agreeable to others. When these attentions are unattended by deceit or fraud, they are perfectly fair, and the captation is lawful; but if, under the mask of friendship, fraud is the object, and means are used to deceive the person with whom you are connected, then the captation is fraudulent, and the acts procured by the captator are void.

CAPTION (Lat. capere, to take). A taking, or seizing; an arrest. The word is no longer used in this sense.

The heading of a legal instrument, in which is shown when, where, and by what authority it was taken, found, or executed.

In the English practice, when an inferior court, in obedience to the writ of certiorari, returned an indictment into the king's bench, it was annexed to the caption, then called a schedule, and the caption concluded with stating that "it is presented in manner and form as appears in a certain indictment thereto annexed," and the caption and indictment were returned on separate parchments; 1 Wms. Saund. 309, n. 2.

In some of the states, every indictment has a caption attached to it, and returned by the grand jury as part of their presentment in each particular case; and in this respect a caption differs essentially from that of other tribunals, where the separate indictments are returned without any caption, and the caption is added by the clerk of the court, as a general caption embracing all the indictments found at the term; 3 Gray, 454; 4 id. 5; 6 Cush. 174.

In Criminal Practice. The object of the caption is to give a formal statement of the proceedings, describe the court before which the indictment is found, and the time and place when it was found; 3 Gray, 454; and the jurors by whom it was found; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 91. Thus particulars must be set forth with reasonable certainty; 6 McLean, 66; 39 Me. 78; 20 Ala. 33. It must show that the venire facias was returned, and from whence the jury came; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 91. The caption may be amended in the court in which the indictment was found; 6 McLean, 156; 101 Mass. 33; 78 Penn. 122; even in the supreme court; 4 Halst. 357; 2 McCord, 301. It is no part of the indictment; 3 Gray, 454; 37 N. H. 196; 37 N. Y. 117; 24 Ala. 672.

In Depositions. The caption should state the title of the cause, the names of the parties, and at whose instance the depositions are taken; 2 Cra. 123; 34 Me. 208. See 1 Hemp. 701.

See Week, Depositions.

For some decisions as to the forms and requisites of captions, see 1 Murph. 281; 1 Brev. 169; 8 Yerg. 514; 1 Hawks, 354; 6 Mo. 469; 2 Ill. 456; 6 Blackf. 299; 6 Miss. 20.

CAPTIVE. A prisoner of war. Such a person does not by his capture lose his civil rights.

CAPTOR. One who has taken property from an enemy: this term is also employed to designate one who has taken an enemy.

Formerly, goods taken in war were adjudged to belong to the captor; they are now considered to vest primarily in the state or sovereign, and belong to the individual captors only to the extent that the municipal laws provide. Captors are responsible to the owners of the property for all losses and damages, when the capture is tortious and without reasonable cause in the exercise of belligerent rights. But if the capture is originally justifiable, the captors will not be responsible, unless by subsequent misconduct they become trespassers ab initio; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 93, 96. See 2 Gall. 374; 1 id. 274; 1 Pet. Adm. 116; 1 Mas. 14.

CAPTURE. The taking of property by one belligerent from another.

To make a good capture of a ship, it must be subdued and taken by an enemy in open war, or by way of reprisals, or by a pirate, and with intent to deprive the owner of it.

Capture may be with intent to possess both ship and cargo, or only to seize the goods of the enemy, or contraband goods, which are on board. The former is the capture of the ship in the proper sense of the word; the latter is only an arrest and detention, without any design to deprive the owner of it. Capture is deemed lawful when made by a declared enemy lawfully commissioned and according to the laws of war, and unlawful, when it is against the rules established by the law of nations; Marshall, Ins. b. 1, c. 12, s. 4. All captures jure belli are made for the government; 10 Wheat. 306; 1 Kent, 100. See 1 Curt. C. C. 266.

See, generally, 1 Kent, 100 et seq.; Bouvier, Inst.; Story, Const. §§ 1168–1177; Wheaton, Int. Law; Phillimore, Int. Law; PRIZE; 2 Caines, Cas. 158; 7 Johns. 449; 13 id. 161; 14 id. 227; 6 Mass. 197; 4 Cranch, 43; 11 Wheat. 1; 2 How. 210; Paine, 129.

CAPUT (Lat. head).

In Civil Law. Status; a person's civil condition.

According to the Roman law, three elements concurred to form the status or caput of the citizen, namely, liberty, libertas, citizenship, civitas, and family, familia.

Libertas est naturalis facultas ejus quod cuique facere libet, nisi si quid vi aut jure prohibetur. This definition of liberty has been translated by Dr. Cooper, and all the other English translators of the Institutes, as follows: "Freedom, from which we are denominated free, is the natural power of acting as we please, unless prevented by force or by the law." This, although it may be a literal, is certainly not a correct, translation of the text. It is absurd to say that liberty consists in the power of acting as we think proper, so far as not restrained by force; for it is evident that even the slave can do what he chooses, except so far as his volition is controlled by the power exercised over him by his master. The true meaning of the text is, "Liberty (from which we are called free) is the power which we derive from nature of acting as we please, except so far as restrained by physical and moral impossibilities." It is obvious that a person is perfectly free though he cannot reach the moon nor stem the current of the Mississippi; and it is equally clear that true freedom is not impaired by the rule of law not to appropriate the property of another to ourselves, or the precept of morality to behave with decency and decorum.

Civitas—the city—reminds us of the celebrated expression, "civis sum Romanus," which struck awe and terror into the most barbarous nations. The citizen alone enjoyed the jus Quiritium, which extended to the family ties, to property, to inheritance, to wills, to alienations, and to engagements generally. In striking contrast with the civis stood the peregrinus, hostis, barbarus. Familia—the family—conveyed very different ideas in the early period of Roman jurisprudence from what it does in modern times. Besides the singular organization of the Roman family, explained under the head of pater familias, the members of the family were bound together by religious rites and sacrifices,—sacra familiæ.

The loss of one of these elements produced a change of the status, or civil condition; this change might be threefold; the loss of liberty carried with it that of citizenship and family, and was called the maxima capitis deminutio; the loss of citizenship did not destroy liberty, but deprived the party of his family, and was denominated media capitis deminutio; when there was a change of condition by adoption or abrogation, both liberty and citizenship were preserved, and this produced the minima capitis deminutio. But the loss or change of the status, whether the great, the less, or the least, was followed by serious consequences: all obligations merely civil were extinguished; those purely natural continued to exist. Gaius says, Eas obligationes quæ naturalem præstationem habere intelliguntur, palam est capitis deminutione non perire, quia civilis ratio naturalia jura corrumpere non potest. Usufruct was extinguished by the diminution of the head: amittitur usufructus capitis deminutione. D. 3. 6. § 28. It also annulled the testament: "Testamenta jure facta infirmantur, cum is qui fecerit testamentum capite deminutus sit." Gaius, 2, § 143. Capitis deminutio means that the family, to which the person whose status has been lost or changed belongs, has lost a head, or one of its members. See Rattigan, Roman Law.

At Common Law. A head.

Caput comitatis (the head of the county). The sheriff; the king. Spelman, Gloss.

A person; a life. The upper part of a town. Cowel. A castle. Spelman, Gloss.

Caput anni. The beginning of the year. Cowel.

CAPUT LUPINUM (Lat.). Having a wolf's head.

Outlaws were anciently said to have caput lupinum, and might be killed by any one who met them, if attempting to escape; 4 Bla. Com. 320. In the reign of Edward III. this power was restricted to the sheriff when armed with lawful process; and this power, even, has long since disappeared, the process of outlawry being resorted to merely as a means of compelling an appearance; Coke, Litt. 128 b; 3 Bla. Com. 284; 1 Reeve's Hist. Eng. Law, 471.

CAPUTAGIUM. Head-money; the payment of head-money. Spelman, Gloss; Cowel.

CARAT. The weight of four grains, used by jewellers in weighing precious stones. Webster.

CARCAN. In French Law. An instrument of punishment, somewhat resembling a pillory. It sometimes signifies the punishment itself. Biret, Vocab.

CARDINAL. In Ecclesiastical Law. The title given to one of the highest dignitaries of the church of Rome.

Cardinals are next to the pope in dignity: he is elected by them and out of their body. There are cardinal bishops, cardinal priests, and cardinal deacons. See Fleury, Hist. Eccléa. liv. xxxv. n. 17, li. n. 19; Thomassin, part ii. liv. i. c. 53, part iv. liv. i. cc. 79, 80; Loiseau, Traité des Ordres, c. 3. n. 31; André, Droit Canon.

CARDS. In Criminal Law. Small rectangular pasteboards, generally of a fine quality, on which are painted figures of various colors, and used for playing certain games. The playing of cards for amusement is not forbidden; nor is gaming for money, at common law; Bish. Stat. Cr. § 504.

CARETA (spelled, also, Carreta and Carecta). A cart; a cart-load.

In Magna Charta (9 Hen. III. c. 21) it is ordained that no sheriff shall take horses or carts (careta) without paying the ancient livery therefor.

CARGO. In Maritime Law. The entire load of a ship or other vessel; Abbott, Shipp.; 1 Dall. 197; Merlin, Répert.; 2 Gill. & J. 136.

This term is usually applied to goods only, and does not include human beings; 1 Phillips, Ins. 185; 4 Pick. 429. But in a more extensive and less technical sense it includes persons: thus, we say, A cargo of emigrants. See 7 M. & G. 729, 744.

CARNAL KNOWLEDGE. Sexual connection. The term is generally, if not exclusively, applied to the act of the male.

CARNALLY KNEW. In Pleading. A technical phrase essential in an indictment to charge the defendant with the crime of rape.

No other words nor circumlocution will suffice. Comyns, Dig. Indictment; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 632; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law, 243; Coke, Litt. 137. Their omission renders an indictment bad on demurrer, but is cured by a verdict; 1 Russ. 686; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 448; 97 Mass. 59.

CARRIER. One who undertakes to transport goods from one place to another; 1 Parsons, Contr. 632.

They are either common or private. Private carriers incur the responsibility of the exercise of ordinary diligence only, like other bailees for hire; Story, Bailm. § 495; 13 Barb. 481; 1 Wend. 272; 1 Hayw. 14; 2 Dana, 430; 4 Taunt. 787; 6 id. 577; 2 B. & P. 417; 2 C. B. 877. See COMMON CARRIER.

CARRYING AWAY. In Criminal Law. Such a removal or taking into possession of personal property as is required in order to constitute the crime of larceny.

The words "did take and carry away" are a translation of the words cepit et asportavit, which were used in indictments when legal processes and records were in the Latin language. But no single word in our language expresses the meaning of asportavit. Hence the word "away," or some other word, must be subjoined to the word "carry," to modify its general signification and give it a special and distinctive meaning; 7 Gray, 45.

Any removal, however right, of the entire article, which is not attached either to the soil or to any other thing not removed, is sufficient; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 699; 1 Mood. 14; 1 Dearsl. 421; Coxe, 439. Thus, to snatch a diamond from a lady's ear, which is instantly dropped among the curls of her hair; 1 Leach, 320; to remove sheets from a bed and carry them into an adjoining room; 1 Leach, 222, n.; to take plate from a trunk, and lay it on the floor with intent to carry it away; id.; to remove a package from one part of a wagon to another, with a view to steal it; 1 Leach, 236; have respectively been holden to be felonies. But nothing less than such a severance will be sufficient; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 556; 1 Leach, 4th ed. 236, 321; 1 Hall, Pl. Cr. 508; 1 Ry. & M. 14; 4 Bla. Com. 231; 2 Russell, Cr. 96.

CART. A carriage for luggage or burden, with two wheels, as distinguished from a wagon, which has four wheels. Worcester, Dict.; Brande. The vehicle in which criminals are taken to execution. Johnson.

The term has been held to include four-wheeled vehicles, to carry out the intent of a statute; 22 Ala. N. S. 621.

CART BOTE. An allowance to the tenant of wood sufficient for carts and other instruments of husbandry. 2 Bla. Com. 35.

CARTA. A charter, which title see. Any written instrument.

In Spanish Law. A letter; a deed; a power of attorney. Las Partidas, pt. 3, t. 18, l. 30.

CARTE BLANCHE. The signature of one or more individuals on a white paper, with a sufficient space left above it to write a note or other writing.

In the course of business, it not unfrequently occurs that, for the sake of convenience, signatures in blank are given with authority to fill them up. These are binding upon the parties. But the blank must be filled up by the very person authorized; 6 Mart. La. 707. See Chitty, Bills, 70; 2 Penn. 200.

CARTEL. An agreement between two belligerent powers for the delivery of prisoners or deserters, and also a written challenge to a duel.

Cartel ship. A ship commissioned in time of war to exchange prisoners, or to carry any proposals between hostile powers: she must carry no cargo, ammunition, or implements of war, except a single gun for signals. The conduct of ships of this description cannot be too narrowly watched. The service on which they are sent is so highly important to the interests of humanity that it is peculiarly incumbent on all parties to take care that it should be conducted in such a manner as not to become a subject of jealousy and distrust between the two nations; 4 C. Rob. Adm. 357. See Merlin, Répert.; Dane, Abr. c. 40, a. 6, § 7; 1 Kent, 68, 69; 3 Phill. Int. Law, 161–163; 1 Pet. C. C. 106; 3 C. Rob. Adm. 141; 6 id. 386; 1 Dods. Adm. 60.

CARTMEN. Persons who carry goods and merchandise in carts, either for great or short distances, for hire.

Cartmen who undertake to carry goods for hire as a common employment are common carriers; 3 C. & K. 61; Story, Bailm. § 496. And see 2 Wend. 327; 2 N. & M'C. 88; 1 M'Cord, 444; 2 Bail. 421; 2 Vt. 92; 1 Murph. 417; Bacon, Abr. Carriers, A.

CARUCAGE. A taxation of land by the caruca or carue.

The caruca was as much land as a man could cultivate in a year and a day with a single plough (carucs). Carucage, carugage, or caruage was the tribute paid for each carues by the carucarius, or tenant. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowel.

CARUCATA. A certain quantity of land used as the basis for taxation. As much land as may be tilled by a single plough in a year and a day. Skene, de verb. sig. A team of cattle. A cartload.

It may include houses, meadow, woods, etc. It is said by Littleton to be the same as soca, but has a much more extended signification. Spelman, Gloss.; Blount; Cowel.

CASE. In Practice. A question contested before a court of justice. An action or suit at law or in equity. 1 Wheat. 352.

A case arising under a treaty (U. S. Const. art. 3, sect. 2) is a suit where is drawn in question the construction of a treaty and the decision is against the title set up by either party under such treaty; Story, J.; 1 Wheat. 356. And see also 6 Cra. 286; 9 Wheat. 819; 11 How. 529; 12 id. 111.

In Practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages for injuries for which the more ancient forms of action will not lie. Steph. Pl. 15.

Case, or, more fully, action upon the case, or trespass on the case, includes in its widest sense assumpsit and trover, and distinguishes a class of actions in which the writ is framed according to the special circumstances of the case, from the ancient actions, the writs in which, called brevia formata, are collected in the Registrum Brevium.

By the common law, and by the statute Westm. 2d, 13 Edw. I. c. 24, if any cause of action arose for which no remedy had been provided, a new writ was to be formed, analogous to those already in existence which were adapted to similar causes of action. The writ of trespass was the original writ most commonly resorted to as a precedent; and in process of time the term trespass seems to have been so extended as to include every species of wrong causing an injury, whether it was *mal*feasance, *mis*feasance, or *non*feasance, apparently for the purpose of enabling an action on the case to be brought in the king's bench. It thus includes actions on the case for breach of a parol undertaking, now called assumpsit (see ASSUMPSIT), and actions based upon a finding and subsequent unlawful conversion of property, now called trover (see TROVER), as well as many other actions upon the case which seem to have been derived from other originals than the writ of trespass, as nuisance, deceit, etc.

And, as the action had thus lost the peculiar character of a technical trespass, the name was to a great extent dropped, and actions of this character came to be known as actions on the case.

As used at the present day, case is distinguished from assumpsit and covenant, in that it is not founded upon any contract, express or implied; from trover, which lies only for unlawful conversion; from detinue and replevin, in that it lies only to recover damages; and from trespass, in that it lies for injuries committed without force, or for forcible injuries which damage the plaintiff consequentially only, and in other respects. See 3 Reeves, Eng. Law, 84; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 237-243; 1 Chitty, Pl. 123; 3 Bla. Com. 41.

A similar division existed in the civil law, in which upon nominate contracts an action distinguished by the name of the contract was given. Upon innominate contracts, however, an action præscriptis verbis (which lay where the obligation was one already recognized as existing at law, but to which no name had been given), or in factum (which was founded on the equity of the particular case), might be brought.

The action lies for:

Torts not committed with force, actual or implied; 2 Ired. 38; 2 Gratt. 366; 20 Vt. 151; 8 Ga. 190; as, for malicious prosecution; 6 Munf. 27, 113; 11 G. & J. 80; 7 B. Monr. 545; 21 Ala. N. The declaration must not state the injury to have been committed vi et armis; 3 Conn. 64 (yet after verdict the words vi et armis (with force and arms) may be rejected as surplusage; Harp. 122); and should not conclude contra pacem. Comyns, Dig. Action on the Case (C, 3).

Damages not resulting necessarily from the acts complained of must be specially stated; 3 Strobh. 373; 32 Me. 578; 5 Cush. 104; 9 Ga. 160; 4 Chandl. Wisc. 20. Evidence which shows the injury to be trespass will not support case; 5 Mass. 560; 16 id. 451; 3 Johns. 468; 4 Barb. 596; 3 Md. 431. See 2 Rand. 440; 8 Blackf. 119.

The plea of not guilty raises the general issue; 2 Ashm. 150. Under this plea almost any matter may be given in evidence, except the statute of limitations; and the rule is modified in actions for slander and a few other instances; 1 Wms. Saund. 130, n. 1; Willes, 20.

The judgment is that the plaintiff recover a sum of money ascertained by a jury for his damages sustained by the commission of the grievances complained of in the declaration; 2 Ired. 221; 18 Vt. 620; 18 Conn. 494; with costs.

CASE STATED. In Practice. A statement of all the facts of a case, with the names of the witnesses, and a detail of the documents which are to support them. A brief.

An agreement in writing, between a plaintiff and defendant, that the facts in dispute between them are as therein agreed upon and set forth. 3 Whart. 143.

Some process of this kind exists, it is presumed, in all the states, for the purpose of enabling parties who agree upon the facts to dispense with a formal trial to ascertain what is already known, and secure a decision upon the law involved merely. These agreements are called also agreed cases, cases agreed on, agreed statements, etc. In chancery, also, when a question of mere law comes up, it is referred to the king's bench or common pleas, upon a case stated for the purpose; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 453, n.; 6 Term, 313.

The jury in such case find a general verdict for the plaintiff or defendant, subject to the decision of the court upon the law-questions involved; 3 Bla. Com. 378.

The facts being thus ascertained, it is left for the court to decide for which party is the law. As no writ of error lies on a judgment rendered on a case stated; Dane, Abr. c. 137, art. 4, § 7; it is usual in the agreement to insert a clause that the case stated shall be considered in the nature of special verdict.

In that case, a writ of error lies on the judgment which may be rendered upon it. And a writ of error will also lie on a judgment on a case stated, when the parties have agreed to it; 8 S. & R. 529.

CASH. That which circulates as money, including bank bills, but not mere bills receivable. The provision of the limited partnership acts requiring "actual cash payment" by the special partner is not complied with by the delivery to the firm of promissory notes, which are received and treated as cash; 5 Allen, 91; nor of credits, 62 N. Y. 513; nor of post-dated checks, 69 id. 148; though regular checks of third parties, conceded to represent cash, have been allowed, 34 Penn. 344.

Cash price is the price of articles paid for in cash at the time of purchase, in distinction from the barter and credit prices.

CASH-BOOK. A book in which a merchant enters an account of all the cash he receives or pays. An entry of the same thing ought to be made, under the proper dates, in the journal. The object of the cash-book is to afford a constant facility to ascertain the true state of a man's cash. Pardessus, n. 87.

CASHIER. An officer of a moneyed institution, or of a private person or firm, who is entitled by his office to take care of the cash or money of such institution, person, or firm.

The cashier of a bank is usually intrusted with all the funds of the bank, its notes, bills, and other choses in action, to be used from time to time for the ordinary and extraordinary exigencies of the bank. He usually receives, directly, or through subordinate officers, all moneys and notes of the bank; delivers up all discounted notes and other securities; signs drafts on corresponding banks, and, with the president, the notes payable on demand issued by the bank; and, as an executive officer of the bank, transacts much of its general business. He need not be a stockholder; indeed, some bank charters prohibit him from owning stock in the bank. He usually gives security for the faithful discharge of his trusts. It is his duty to make reports to the proper state officer (in banks incorporated under the national bank act to the comptroller of the currency; U. S. R. S. § 5210 et seq.) of the condition of the bank, as provided by law; and false statements are punished, and render the cashier liable for any damage resulting to third parties therefrom. Bank Mag. July, 1860.

In general, the bank is bound by the acts of the cashier within the scope of his authority, express or implied; 1 Pet. 46, 70; 8 Wheat. 300, 361; 5 id. 326; 10 Wall. 604; 3 Mas. 505; 1 Holmes, 396; 1 Ill. 45; 1 T. B. Monr. 179. But the bank is not bound by a declaration of the cashier not within the scope of his authority: as if, when a note is about to be discounted by the bank, he tells a person that he will incur no risk nor responsibility by becoming an indorser on such note; 6 Pet. 51; 8 id. 12. See 95 U. S. 557; 58 How. Pr. 267; 17 Mass. 1; Story, Ag. §§ 114, 115; Whart. Ag. §§ 684–687; 3 Am. L. Rev. 612; 3 Halst. 1; 12 Wheat. 183; 1 W. & S. 161; 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. 240.

In Military Law. To deprive a military officer of his office. See Art. of War, art. 14.

CASSARE. To quash; to render void; to break. Du Cange.

CASSATION. In French Law. A decision emanating from the sovereign authority, by which a decree or judgment in the court of last resort is broken or annulled. See COUR DE CASSATION.

CASSETUR BREVE (Lat. that the writ be quashed). In Practice. A judgment sometimes entered against a plaintiff at his request when, in consequence of allegations of the defendant, he can no longer prosecute his suit with effect.

The effect of such entry is to stop proceedings, and exonerate the plaintiff from liability for future costs, leaving him free to sue out new process; 3 Bla. Com. 303. See Gould, Pl. c. 5, § 139; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2913, 2914; 5 Term, 634.

CASTELLAIN, CASTELLANUS. The keeper or captain of a fortified castle; the constable of a castle. Spelman, Gloss.; Termes de la Ley; Blount.

CASTELLORUM OPERATIO. In Old English Law. Service or labor done by inferior tenants for the building and upholding of castles and public places of defence.

Towards this some gave their personal service, and others, a contribution of money or goods. This was one branch of the trinoda necessitas; 1 Bla. Com. 263; from which no lands could be exempted under the Saxons; though immunity was sometimes allowed after the conquest. Kennett, Paroch. Ant. 114; Cowel.

CASTIGATORY. An engine used to punish women who have been convicted of being common scolds. It is sometimes called the trebucket, tumbrel, ducking-stool, or cucking-stool. This barbarous punishment has perhaps never been inflicted in the United States; 12 S. & R. 225.

CASTING-VOTE. The privilege which the presiding officer possesses of deciding a question where the body is equally divided. The vice-president of the United States, as president of the senate, has the casting-vote when that body is equally divided, but cannot vote at any other time; Const. I. 3. This is a provision frequently made, though in some cases the presiding officer, after giving his vote with the other members, is allowed to decide the question in case of a tie; 48 Barb. 603.

CASTRATION. In Criminal Law. The act of gelding. When this act is maliciously performed upon a man, it is a mayhem, and punishable as such, although the sufferer consented to it; 2 Bishop, Cr. Law, §§ 1001, 1008. By the ancient law of England the crime was punished by retaliation, membrum pro membro; Coke, 3d Inst. 118. It is punished in the United States, generally, by fine and imprisonment. The civil law punished it with death. Dig. 47. 8. 4. 2. For the French law, vide Code Pénal, art. 316. The consequences of castration, when complete, are impotence and sterility. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 72.

CASU PROVISO (Lat. in the case provided for). In Practice. A writ of entry framed under the provisions of the statute of Gloucester (6 Edw. I.) c. 7, which lay for the benefit of the reversioner when a tenant in dower aliened in fee or for life.

It seems to have received this name to distinguish it from a similar writ framed under the provisions of the statute Westm. 2d (13 Edw. I.) c. 24, where a tenant by curtesy had alienated as above, and which was known emphatically as the writ in consimili casu.

The writ is now practically obsolete. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 205; Dane, Abr. Index.

CASUAL EJECTOR. In Practice. The person supposed to perform the fictitious ouster of the tenant of the demandant in an action of ejectment. See EJECTMENT.

CASUALTIES OF SUPERIORITY. In Scotch Law. Certain emoluments arising to the superior lord in regard to the tenancy.

They resemble the incidents to the feudal tenure at common law. They take precedence of a creditor's claim on the tenant's land, and constitute a personal claim also against the vassal; Bell, Dict. They have very generally disappeared; Paterson, Comp. 29.

CASUALTY. Inevitable accident. Unforeseen circumstances not to be guarded against by human agency, and in which man takes no part. Story, Bailm. § 240; 1 Parsons, Contr. 543–547; Whart. Negl. § 558.

CASUS FŒDERIS (Lat.). In International Law. A case within the stipulations of a treaty.

The question whether, in case of a treaty of alliance, a nation is bound to assist its ally in war against a third nation, is determined in a great measure by the justice or injustice of the war. If manifestly unjust on the part of the ally, it cannot be considered as casus fœderis. Grotius, b. 2, c. 25; Vattel, b. 2, c. 12, § 168.

See 1 Kent, 49; 3 Cow. 264.

CASUS FORTUITUS (Lat.). An inevitable accident. A loss happening in spite of all human effort and sagacity. 3 Kent, 217, 300; Whart. Negl. §§ 113, 553.

It includes such perils of the sea as strokes of lightning, etc. A loss happening through the agency of rats was held an unforeseen, but not an inevitable, accident. 1 Curt. C. C. 148. The happening of a casus fortuitus excuses ship-owners from liability for goods conveyed; 3 Kent, 216; L. R. 1 C. P. D. 143.

CASUS MAJOR (Lat.). An unusual accident. Story, Bailm. § 240.

CASUS OMISSUS (Lat.). A case which is not provided for. When such cases arise in statutes which are intended to provide for all cases of a given character which may arise, the common law governs; 5 Coke, 38; 11 East, 1; 2 Binn. 279; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 260; Broom, Max. 46. A casus omissus may occur in a contract as well as in a statute; 2 Bla. Com. 260.

CATALLA OTIOSA (Lat.). Dead goods, and animals other than beasts of the plough, averia carucæ, and sheep. 3 Bla. Com. 9; Bract. 217 b.

CATALLUM. A chattel.

The word is used more frequently in the plural, catalla, but has then the same signification, denoting all goods, movable or immovable, except such as are in the nature of fees and freeholds. Cowel; Du Cange.

CATANEUS. A tenant in capite. A tenant holding immediately of the crown. Spelman, Gloss.

CATCHING BARGAIN. An agreement made with an heir expectant for the purchase of his expectancy at an inadequate price.

In such cases the heir is, in general, entitled to relief in equity, and may have the contract rescinded upon terms of redemption; 1 Vern. 167, 320, n.; 2 id. 121; 2 Cox, 80; 2 Ch. Cas. 136; 2 Freem. 111; 2 Ventr. 329; 1 P. Wms. 312; 3 id. 290, 293, n.; 1 Cro. Car. 7; 2 Atk. 133; 2 Swanst. 147, and the cases cited in the note; 1 Foubl. Eq. 140; 1 Belt, Supp. Ves. Jr. 66; 2 id. 361. It has been said that all persons dealing for a reversionary interest are subject to this rule; but it may be doubted whether the course of decisions authorizes so extensive a conclusion, and whether, in order to constitute a title to relief, the reversioner must not combine the character of heir; 2 Swanst. 148, n. See 1 Ch. Pr. 112, 113, n., 458, 826, 838, 839. A mere hard bargain is not sufficient ground for relief.

The English law on this subject has been so altered by stat. 31 and 32 Vic. c. 4, that, while before that act slight inadequacy of consideration was sufficient to set the contract aside, at present only positive unfairness will be relieved against; Bisph. Eq. § 221, and cases cited. See Chesterfield v. Janssen, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 773, and notes; Bisph. Eq. § 220 et seq.

CATCHPOLE. A name formerly given to a sheriff's deputy, or to a constable, or other officer whose duty it is to arrest persons. He was a sort of sergeant. The word is not now in use as an official designation; Minshew.

CATER COUSIN. A very distant relation. Bla. Law Tracts, 6.

CATHEDRAL. In Ecclesiastical Law. A tract set apart for the service of the church.

After the establishment of Christianity, the emperors and other great men gave large tracts of land whereon the first places of public worship were erected,—which were called cathedræ, cathedrals, sees, or seats, from the clergy's residence thereon. And when churches were afterwards built in the country, and the clergy were sent out from the cathedrals to officiate therein, the cathedral or head seat remained to the bishop, with some of the chief of the clergy as his assistants.

CATHOLIC CREDITOR. In Scotch Law. A creditor whose debt is secured on several parts or all of his creditor's property. Such a creditor is bound to take his payment with reference to the rights of the secondary creditors, or, if he disregards their rights, must assign over to them his claims. This rule applies where he collects his debts of a cautioner (surety). Bell, Dict.

CATHOLIC EMANCIPATION ACT. The act 10 Geo. IV. c. 7. This act relieves from disabilities and restores all civil rights to Catholics, except that of holding ecclesiastical offices and certain high state offices. 3 Steph. Com. 109.

CATTLE GATE. A customary proportionate right of pasture enjoyed in common with others. The right is measured not by the number of cattle to be pastured, but by reference to the rights of others and the whole amount of pasture. 34 E. L. & Eq. 511; 1 Term, 137.

CAUSA (Lat.). A cause; a reason.

A condition; a consideration. Used of contracts, and found in this sense in the Scotch law also. Bell, Dict.

A suit; an action pending. Used in this sense in the old English law.

Property. Used thus in the civil law in the sense of res (a thing). Non porcellum, non agnellum nec aliam causam (not a hog, not a lamb, nor other thing). Du Cange.

By reason of.

Causa proxima. The immediate cause.

Causa remota. A cause operating indirectly by the intervention of other causes.

In its general sense, causa denotes anything operating to produce an effect. Thus, it is said, causa causantis causa est causati (the cause of the thing causing is the cause of the thing caused). 4 Gray, Mass. 398; 4 Campb. 284. In law, however, only the direct cause is considered. See CAUSA PROXIMA; 9 Coke, 50; 12 Mod. 639.

CAUSA JACTITATIONIS MARITAGII (Lat.). A form of action which anciently lay against a party who boasted or gave out that he or she was married to the plaintiff, whereby a common reputation of their marriage might ensue. 3 Bla. Com. 93.

CAUSA MATRIMONII PRÆLOCUTI (Lat.). A writ lying where a woman has given lands to a man in fee-simple with the intention that he shall marry her, and he refuses so to do within a reasonable time, upon suitable request. Cowel. Now obsolete. 3 Bla. Com. 183, n.

CAUSA PROXIMA NON REMOTA SPECTATUR (Lat.). The direct and not the remote cause is considered.

Important questions have arisen as to which, in the chain of acts tending to the production of a given state of things, is to be considered the cause. It is not merely distance of place or of causation that renders a cause remote. The cause nearest in order of causation, which is adequate without any efficient concurring cause to produce the result, may be considered the direct cause. The rule is thus stated by Thomas, J., in 4 Gray, 412: "Having discovered an efficient, adequate cause, that is to be deemed the true cause, unless some new cause, not incidental to, but independent of, the first, shall be found to intervene between it and the result." See other statements of the rule by Bacon, Max. Reg. 1; Phillips, Ins. vol. 2, §§ 1097, 1131, 1132; Story, J. 14 Pet. 99.

The principle is of frequent application in fire and marine insurance; 2 Arnould, Ins. § 284; L. R. 4 Q. B. 414; Broom, Max. 210; 12 East, 648; L. R. 4 C. P. 206; Am. L. J. (1870), 216; 14 Pet. 99; 14 How. 487; 2 Sumn. 218; 13 Mass. 354; 8 Cush. 477; 1

Duer, 159; 2 id. 301; 11 N. Y. 9; 32 Penn. 351; 13 B. Monr. 311; 16 id. 427; 14 How. 351; and in cases of injuries sustained in consequence of negligence; L. R. 4 C. P. 279; 5 C. & P. 190; L. R. 8 Q. B. 274; 35 N. J. 17; 70 Penn. 86; 1 Sm. L. C. 755; 109 Mass. 277; or tortious acts of the defendant; 2 W. Bla. 892. See Whart. Negl. § 73 et seq.; 4 Am. L. Rev. 201; 4 So. L. Rev. 703.

CAUSA REI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Things accessory or appurtenant. All those things which a man would have had if the thing had not been withheld. Du Cange; 1 Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 55.

CAUSARE (Lat. to cause). To be engaged in a suit; to litigate; to conduct a cause. Used in the old English and in the civil law.

CAUSATOR (Lat.). A litigant; one who takes the part of the plaintiff or defendant in a suit.

CAUSE (Lat. causa). In Civil Law. The consideration or motive for making a contract. Dig. 2. 14. 7; Toullier, liv. 3, tit. 3, c. 2, § 4.

In Pleading. Reason; motive.

In a replication de injuria, for example, the plaintiff alleges that the defendant of his own wrong and without the cause by him, etc., where the word cause comprehends all the facts alleged as an excuse or reason for doing the act. 8 Coke, 67; 11 East, 451; 1 Chitty, Plead. 585.

In Practice. A suit or action. Any question, civil or criminal, contested before a court of justice. Wood, Civ. Law, 301.

CAUSE OF ACTION. In Practice. Matter for which an action may be brought.

A cause of action is said to accrue to any person when that person first comes to a right to bring an action. There is, however, an obvious distinction between a cause of action and a right, though a cause of action generally confers a right. Thus, statutes of limitation do not affect the cause of action, but take away the right.

When a wrong has been committed, or a breach of duty has occurred, the cause of action has accrued, although the claimant may be ignorant of it; 3 B. & Ald. 288, 626; 5 B. & C. 259; 4 C. & P. 127. A cause of action does not accrue until the existence of such a state of things as will enable a person having the proper relations to the property or persons concerned to bring an action; 5 B. & C. 360; 8 D. & R. 346; 4 Bingh. 686.

CAUTIO, CAUTION. In Civil Law. Security given for the performance of any thing. A bond whereby the debtor acknowledges the receipt of money and promises to pay it at a future day.

In French Law. The person entering into an obligation as a surety.

In Scotch Law. A pledge, bond, or other security for the performance of an obligation, or completion of the satisfaction to be obtained by a judicial process. Bell, Dict.

CAUTIO FIDEJUSSORIA. Security by means of bonds or pledges entered into by third parties. Du Cange.

CAUTIO PIGNORATITIA. A pledge by deposit of goods.

CAUTIO PRO EXPENSIS. Security for costs or expenses.

This term is used among the civilians, Nov. 112, c. 2, and generally on the continent of Europe. In nearly all the countries of Europe, a foreign plaintiff, whether resident or not, is required to give caution pro expensis; that is, security for costs. In some states this requisition is modified, and, when such plaintiff has real estate or a commercial or manufacturing establishment within the state, he is not required to give such caution. Fœlix, Droit Intern. Privé, n. 106.

CAUTIO USUFRUCTUARIA. Security, which tenants for life give, to preserve the property rented free from waste and injury. Erskine, Inst. 2. 9. 59.

CAUTION JURATORY. Security given by oath. That which a suspender swears is the best he can afford in order to obtain a suspension. Erskine, Pract. 4. 3. 6; Paterson, Comp.

CAUTIONER. A surety; a boudsman. One who binds himself in a bond with the principal for greater security. He is still a cautioner whether the bond be to pay a debt or whether he undertake to produce the person of the party for whom he is bound. Bell, Dict.

CAVEAT (Lat. let him beware). In Practice. A notice not to do an act, given to some officer, ministerial or judicial, by a party having an interest in the matter.

It is a formal caution or warning not to do the act mentioned, and is addressed frequently to prevent the admission to probate of wills, the granting letters of administration, etc.

1 Bouvier, Inst. 71, 534; 1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 19, 263; Nelson, Abr.; Dane, Abr.; Ayliffe, Parerg.; 3 Bla. Com. 246; 2 Chitty, Pr. 502, note b; 3 Redf. Wills, 119; Poph. 133; 1 Sid. 371; 3 Binn. 314; 3 Halst. 139.

In Patent Law. A legal notice not to issue a patent on a particular device to any other person without allowing the caveator an opportunity to establish his priority of invention.

It is filed in the patent-office under statutory regulations. The principal object of filing it is to obtain for an inventor time to perfect his invention without the risk of having a patent granted to another person for the same thing.

Upon the filing of such caveat and the payment of the proper fee, the law provides that if application be made within the year for a patent with which the caveat would in any manner interfere, the commissioner shall deposit the drawings, etc., of such application in the confidential archives of his office, and give notice thereof by mail to the person filing the caveat, who, if he would avail himself of his caveat, shall file his description, etc., within three months of the mailing of the notice, with allowance for the usual time of transmission.

As to the form of the caveat, it need contain nothing more than simply an intelligible description of any invention which the caveator claims to have made, giving its distinguishing characteristics. It amounts in effect to a notice to the office not to grant a patent for the same thing to another without giving the caveator an opportunity to show his better title to the same. Act of 1870, § 40. See PATENTS.

CAVEAT EMPTOR (Lat. let the purchaser take care). In every sale of real property, a purchaser's right to relief at law or in equity on account of defects or incumbrances in or upon the property sold depends solely upon the covenants for title which he has received; 2 Sugd. Vend. 425; Coke, Litt. 384 a, Butl. note; Dougl. 665; 1 Salk. 211; 2 Freem. 1; 3 Swanst. 651; 1 Coke, 1; 17 Pick. 475; 10 Ga. 311; 1 S. & R. 52; unless there be fraud on the part of the vendor; 3 B. & P. 162; 14 Me. 133; 30 id. 266; 2 Caines, 192; 2 Johns. Ch. 519; 5 id. 79; 9 N. Y. 36; 24 Penn. 142; 4 Gill, 300; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 351; 1 Spenc. 353; 66 N. C. 233; 70 id. 713; 4 Ill. 334; 11 id. 146; 76 id. 71; 8 Leigh, 658; 7 Gratt. 238; 15 B. Monr. 627; Freem. Ch. 134, 276; 3 Ired. Eq. 408; 3 Humphr. 347; 5 Iowa, 293; 39 Tex. 177; and consult Rawle on Covenants for Title, 4th ed. 565-647.

In sales of personal property, substantially the same rule applies, and is thus stated by Story (Sales, 3d ed. § 348). The purchaser buys at his own risk, unless the seller gives an express warranty, or unless the law implies a warranty from the circumstances of the case or the nature of the thing sold, or unless the seller be guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment in respect to a material inducement to the sale; Benj. Sales, 2d Am. ed. § 610 et seq.; 10 Wall. 383; 1 Pet. C. C. 301; 4 Johns. 421; 20 id. 196; 1 Wend. 185; 53 N. Y. 515; 82 Penn. 441; 11 Metc. 559; 33 Iowa, 120; 43 Cal. 110; 51 Ala. 410; 75 N. C. 397. SEE MISREPRESENTATION; CONCEALMENT.

Consult Rawle, Covenants for Title; Benjamin, Sales; Story, Sales; 2 Kent, Comm. 478; 1 Story, Equity; Sugden, Vendors & P.; 1 Bouvier, Inst. 954, 955.

CAVEATOR. One who files a caveat.

CAYAGIUM. A toll or duty paid the king for landing goods at some quay or wharf. The barons of the Cinque Ports were free from this duty. Cowel.

CEAPGILD. Payment of an animal. An ancient species of forfeiture. Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.

CEDE. To assign; to transfer. Applied to the act by which one state or nation transfers territory to another.

CEDENT. An assignor. The assignor of a chose in action. Kames, Eq. 43.

CEDULA. In Spanish Law. A written obligation, under private signature, by which a party acknowledges himself indebted to another in a certain sum, which he promises to pay on demand or on some fixed day.

In order to obtain judgment on such an instrument, it is necessary that the party executing it should acknowledge it in open court, or that it be proved by two witnesses who saw its execution.

The citation affixed to the door of an absconding offender, requiring him to appear before the tribunal where the accusation is pending.

CELEBRATION OF MARRIAGE. The solemn act by which a man and woman take each other for husband and wife, conformably to the rules prescribed by law.

CEMETERY. A place set apart for the burial of the dead. Cemeteries are regulated in England and many of the United States by statute. The fundamental English act is the cemeteries clauses act, 1847, 10 and 11 Vict. c. 65.

After ground has once been devoted to this object it can be applied to secular purposes only with the sanction of the legislature; L. R. 4 Q. B. 407; 100 Mass. 1. A cemetery association holds the fee of lands purchased for the purposes of the association. The persons to whom lots are conveyed for burial purposes take only an easement—the right to use their lots for such purposes; 32 Barb. 42; 46 N. Y. 503; 21 Hun, 184. In the absence of a deed, or certificate equivalent thereto, they are mere licensees; 8 B. & C. 288. Their rights cease when the cemetery is vacated, as such, by authority of law; 39 Md. 631; 88 Penn. 42; and the owner of a lot in which no interments have been made, loses all use of it by the passage of a law making interments therein unlawful; 66 Penn. 411.

The property of cemetery associations is usually exempt from taxation; 118 Mass. 354; 86 Ill. 336; and this exemption includes immunity from claims for municipal improvements, e. g., a sewer passing by the cemetery; 37 Leg. Int. 264. See 1 Washb. R. P. 9; Washb. Easem. 515; 19 Am. L. Reg. 65.

CENEGILD. In Saxon Law. A pecuniary mulct or fine paid to the relations of a murdered person by the murderer or his relations. Spelman, Gloss.

CENNINGA. A notice given by a buyer to a seller that the things which had been sold were claimed by another, in order that he might appear and justify the sale. Blount; Whishaw.

The exact significance of this term is somewhat doubtful. It probably denoted notice, as defined above. The finder of stray cattle was not always entitled to it; for Spelman says, "As to strange (or stray) cattle, no one shall have them but with the consent of the hundred of tithingmen; unless he have one of these, we cannot allow him any cenninga (I think notice)." Spelman, Gloss.

CENS. In Canadian Law. An annual payment or due reserved to a seignor or lord, and imposed merely in recognition of his superiority. Guyot, Inst. c. 9.

The land or estate so held is called a censive; the tenant is a censitaire. It was originally a tribute of considerable amount, but became reduced in time to a nominal sum. It is distinct from the rentes. The cens varies in amount and in mode of payment. Payment is usually in kind, but may be in silver. 2 Low. C. 40.

CENSARIA. A farm, or house and land, let at a standing rent. Cowel.

CENSUS (Lat. censere, to reckon). An official reckoning or enumeration of the inhabitants and wealth of a country.

The census of the United States is taken every tenth year, in accordance with the provisions of the constitution; and many of the states have made provisions for a similar decennial reckoning at intervening periods. U. S. Laws, 73, 722, 751; 2 id. 1134, 1139, 1169, 1194; 3 id. 1776; 4 Sharsw. U. S. Laws, 2179; Rev. Stat. U. S. title xxxi.

CENT (Lat. centum, one hundred). A coin of the United States, weighing seventy-two grains, and composed of eighty-eight per centum of copper and twelve of nickel. Act of Feb. 21, 1857, sect. 4. See 11 U. S. Stat. at Large, 163, 164; Rev. Stat. U. S. § 3515 et seq.

Previous to the act of congress just cited, the cent was composed wholly of copper. By the act of April 2, 1792, Stat. at Large, vol. 1, p. 248, the weight of the cent was fixed at eleven pennyweights, or 264 grains; the half cent in proportion. Afterwards, namely, on the 14th of January, 1793, it was reduced to 208 grains; the half-cent in proportion. 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 299. In 1796 (Jan. 26), by the proclamation of President Washington, who was empowered by law to do so, act of March 3, 1795, sect. 8, 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 440, the cent was reduced in weight to 168 grains; the half-cent in proportion. It remained at this weight until the passage of the act of Feb. 21, 1857. The same act directs that the coinage of half-cents shall cease. The first issue of cents from the national mint was in 1793, and has been continued every year since, except 1815. But in 1791 and 1792 some experimental pieces were struck, among which was the so-called Washington cent of those years.

CENTESIMA (Lat. centum). In Roman Law. The hundredth part.

Usuræ centesimæ. Twelve per cent. per annum; that is, a hundredth part of the principal was due each month,—the month being the unit of time from which the Romans reckoned interest; 2 Bla. Com. 462, n.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT. In English Law. A court which has jurisdiction of all cases of treason, murder, felony, or misdemeanor committed within the city of London and county of Middlesex, and certain parts of the counties of Essex, Kent and Surry, and also of all serious offences within the former jurisdiction of the admiralty court.

This court was erected in 1834, and received the jurisdiction of the court of sessions, as far as concerned all the more serious offences, by virtue of the act 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 36; and by virtue of the same act, and the subsequent acts 7 Will. IV. and 1 Vict. cc. 84–89, received the entire criminal jurisdiction of the court of admiralty.

The court consists of the lord mayor, the Lord Chancellor, the judges of the three superior courts at Westminster, the judges in bankruptcy, the judges of the admiralty, the dean of the arches, the aldermen, recorder, and common serjeant of London, the judges of the sheriff's court, persons who have been Lord Chancellor, or judge in one of the superior courts, and such others as may from time to time be appointed by the crown.

Twelve sessions at least are held every year, at the Sessions House in the Old Bailey. The important cases are heard in a session of the court presided over by two of the judges of the superior courts at Westminster. The less important cases are tried by either the recorder or common serjeant, or a judge from the sheriff's court commissioned for that purpose,—on every occasion the lord mayor or some of the aldermen being also present on the bench. Two sessions of the court adjoin each other and sit simultaneously.

See 9 & 10 Vict. c. 24; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 65; L. R. 4 Q. B. 394.

CENTUMVIRI (Lat. one hundred men). The name of a body of Roman judges.

Their exact number was one hundred and five, there being selected three from each of the thirty-five tribes comprising all the citizens of Rome. They constituted, for ordinary purposes, four tribunals; but some cases (called centumvirales causæ) required the judgment of all the judges. 3 Bla. Com. 515.

CENTURY. One hundred. One hundred years.

The Romans were divided into centuries, as the English were formerly divided into hundreds.

CEORL. A tenant at will of free condition, who held land of the thane on condition of paying rent or services.

A freeman of inferior rank occupied in husbandry. Spelman, Gloss.

Those who tilled the outlands paid rent; those who occupied or tilled the inlands, or demesne, rendered services. Under the Norman rule, this term, as did others which denoted workmen, especially those which applied to the conquered race, became a term of reproach, as is indicated by the popular signification of churl. Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.

CEPI (Lat.). I have taken. It was of frequent use in the returns of sheriffs when they were made in Latin; as, for example, cepi corpus et B. B. (I have taken the body and discharged him on bail bond); cepi corpus et est in custodia (I have taken the body and it is in custody); cepi corpus et est languidus (I have taken the body and he is sick).

CEPI CORPUS (Lat. I have taken the body). The return of an officer who has arrested a person upon a capias. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2804.

CEPIT (Lat. capere, to take; cepit, he took or has taken).

In Civil Practice. A form of replevin which is brought for carrying away goods merely; Wells on Replevin, § 53; 3 Hill, 282. Non detinet is not the proper answer to such a charge; 17 Ark. 85. And see 3 Wisc. 399. Success upon a non cepit does not entitle the defendant to a return of the property; 5 Wisc. 85. A plea of non cepit is not inconsistent with a plea showing property in a third person. 8 Gill, 133.

In Criminal Practice. Took. A technical word necessary in an indictment for larceny. The charge must be that the defendant took the thing stolen with a felonious design. Bacon, Abr. Indictment, G, 1.

CEPIT ET ABDUXIT (Lat.). He took and led away. Applicable in a declaration in trespass or indictment for larceny where the defendant has taken away a living chattel.

CEPIT ET ASPORTAVIT (Lat.). He took and carried away. Applicable in a declaration in trespass or an indictment for larceny where the defendant has carried away goods without right. 4 Bla. Com. 231.

CEPIT IN ALIO LOCO (Lat. he took in another place). In Pleading. A plea in replevin, by which the defendant alleges that he took the thing replevied in another place than that mentioned in the declaration; 1 Chitty, Pl. 490; 2 id. 558; Rast. Entr. 554, 555; Willes, 475; Morris on Replevin, 3d ed. 141; Wells on Replevin, § 707. It is the usual plea where the defendant intends to avow or justify the taking to entitle himself to a return; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3569.

CERT MONEY. The head-money given by the tenants of several manors yearly to the lords, for the purpose of keeping up certain inferior courts. Called in the ancient records certum letæ (leet money). Cowel.

CERTAINTY. In Contracts. Distinctness and accuracy of statement.

A thing is certain when its essence, quality, and quantity are described, distinctly set forth, etc. Dig. 12. 1. 6. It is uncertain when the description is not that of an individual object, but designates only the kind. La. Civ. Code, art. 3522, no. 8; 5 Coke, 121.

If a contract be so vague in its terms that its meaning cannot be certainly collected, and the statute of frauds preclude the admissibility of parol evidence to clear up the difficulty, 5 B. & C. 583, or parol evidence cannot supply the defect, then neither at law nor in equity can effect be given to it; 1 R. & M. 116; 1 Ch. Pr. 123.

It is a maxim of law, that that is certain which may be made certain: certum est quod certum reddi potest. Co. Litt. 43. For example, when a man sells the oil he has in his store at so much a gallon, although there is uncertainty as to the quantity of oil, yet, inasmuch as it can be ascertained, the maxim applies, and the sale is good. See, generally, Story, Eq. §§ 240–256; Mitford, Eq. Pl. Jeremy ed. 41; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 5; Wigram, Disc. 77.

In Pleading. Such clearness and distinctness of statement of the facts which constitute the cause of action or ground of defence that they may be understood by the party who is to answer them, by the jury who are to ascertain the truth of the allegations, and by the court who are to give the judgment; Cowp. 682; Hob. 295; 13 East, 107; 2 B. & P. 267; Co. Litt. 303; Comyns, Dig. Pleader, c. 17.

Certainty to a common intent is attained by a form of statement in which words are used in their ordinary meaning, though by argument or inference they may be made to bear a different one. See 2 H. Blackst. 530.

Certainty to a certain intent in general is attained when the meaning of the statute may be understood upon a fair and reasonable construction without recurrence to possible facts which do not appear; 1 Wms. Saund. 49; 9 Johns. 317; 5 Conn. 423.

Certainty to a certain intent in particular is attained by that technical accuracy of statement which precludes all argument, inference, and presumption against the party pleading. When this certainty is required, the party must not only state the facts of his case in the most precise way, but add to them such as show that they are not to be controverted, and, as it were, anticipate the case of his adversary; Lawes, Pl. 54, 55.

The last description of certainty is required in estoppels; Coke, Litt. 303; 2 H. Blackst. 530; Dougl. 159; and in pleas which are not favored in law, as alien enemy; 8 Term, 167; 6 Binn. 247. See 10 Johns. 70; 1 Rand. 270. With respect to an indictment, it is laid down that "an indictment ought to be certain to every intent, and without any intendment to the contrary;" Cro. Eliz. 490; and the charge contained in it must be sufficiently explicit to support itself; for no latitude of intention can be allowed to include any thing more than is expressed; 2 Burr. 1127.

These decisions, which have been adopted from Lord Coke, have been subjected to severe criticism, but are of some utility in drawing attention to the different degrees of exactness and fulness of statement required in different instances. Less certainty is required where the law presumes that the knowledge of the facts is peculiarly in the opposite party; 8 East, 85; 13 id. 112; 3 Maule & S. 14; 13 Johns. 437.

Less certainty than would otherwise be requisite is demanded in some cases, to avoid prolixity of statement. 2 Wms. Saund. 117, n. 1; id. 411, n. 4. See, generally, 1 Chitty, Pl.

CERTIFICATE. In Practice. A writing made in any court, and properly authenticated, to give notice to another court of any thing done therein.

A writing by which testimony is given that a fact has or has not taken place.

Certificates are either required by law, as an insolvent's certificate of discharge, an alien's certificate of naturalization, which are evidence of the facts therein mentioned; or voluntary, which are given of the mere motion of the party giving them, and are in no case evidence. Comyns, Dig. Chancery (T, 5); 1 Greenl. Ev. § 498; 2 Willes, 549, 550.

There were anciently various modes of trial commenced by a certificate of various parties, which took the place of a writ in a common-law action. See Comyns, Dig. Certificate.

By statute, the certificates of various officers may be made evidence, in which case the effect cannot be extended by including facts other than those authorized; 1 Maule & S. 599; 3 Pet. 12, 29; 4 How. 522; 13 Pick. 172; 14 id. 442; 1 Dall. 406; 6 S. & R. 324; 3 Murph. 331; Rob. La. 307. See RETURN; NOTARY.

CERTIFICATE OF ASSIZE. In Practice. A writ granted for the re-examination or retrial of a matter passed by assize before justices. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 181. It is now entirely obsolete. 3 Bla. Com. 389. Consult, also, Comyns, Dig. Assize (B, 27, 28).

CERTIFICATE OF COSTS. See JUDGE'S CERTIFICATE.

CERTIFICATE OF REGISTRY. A certificate that a ship has been registered as the law requires. 3 Kent, 149. Under the United States statutes, "every alteration in the property of a ship must be indorsed on the certificate of registry, and must itself be registered." Unless this is done, the ship or vessel loses its national privileges as an American vessel; 1 Parsons, Sh. & Adm. 50; Desty, Sh. & Adm. §§ 8–28. The English statutes make such a transfer void. Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 54; Stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, §§ 44–54; Abbot, Shipp. 12th ed. 46.

The registry is not a document required by the law of nations as expressive of a ship's national character; 4 Taunt. 367; and is at most only primâ facie evidence of ownership; 2 Hall, Adm. 1; 2 Wall. Jr. 264; Newb. Adm. 176, 312; 23 Penn. 76; 1 Cal. 481; 33 E. L. & Eq. 204; 14 East, 226; 16 id. 169. The registry acts are to be considered as forms of local or municipal institution for purposes of public policy; 3 Kent, 149.

CERTIFICATION. In Scotch Law. A notice to a party in a suit that, if he fail to do something, certain consequences will follow. Paterson, Comp.

CERTIFIED CHECK. A check which has been recognized by the proper officer as a valid appropriation of the amount of money therein specified to the person therein named, and which bears upon itself the evidence of such recognition.

Certification of a check is usually accomplished by writing the name of the officer authorized to bind the bank in that manner, or the word "good," across the face of the check. See CHECK; Sewall, Bank.

CERTIORARI. In Practice. A writ issued by a superior to an inferior court of record, requiring the latter to send in to the former some proceeding therein pending, or the records and proceedings in some cause already terminated in cases where the procedure is not according to the course of the common law.

The office of the writs of certiorari and mandamus is often much the same. It is the practice of the United States Supreme Court, upon a suggestion of any defect in the transcript of the record sent up into that court upon a writ of error, to allow a special certiorari, requiring the court below to certify more fully; 3 Dall. 411; 7 Cranch, 288; 3 How. 553; 9 Wall. 661. The same result might also be effected by a writ of mandamus. The two remedies are, when addressed to an inferior court of record, from a superior court, requiring the return of a record, much the same. But where diminution of the record is suggested in the inferior court, and the purpose is to obtain a more perfect record, and not merely a more perfect copy or transcript, it is believed that the writ of mandamus is the appropriate remedy.

In many of the states, the writ produces the same result in proceedings given by statute, such as the proceedings for obtaining damages under the mill acts, highway acts, pauper laws, etc., as the writ of error does when the proceedings are according to the course of the common law. Where the lower court is to be required to proceed in a cause, a writ of procedendo or mandamus is the proper remedy.

The writ lies in most of the states of the United States to remove from the lower courts proceedings which are created and regulated by statute merely, for the purpose of revision; 2 Mass. 89; 11 id. 466; 13 Pick. 195; 8 Me. 293; 5 Binn. 27; 5 S. & R. 174; 7 Halst. 368; 2 Dutch. 49; 4 Hayw. 100; 2 Yerg. 173; 1 G. & J. 196; 8 Vt. 271; 1 Ohio, 383; 2 Va. Cas. 270; 16 Johns. 50; 20 id. 300; 54 Barb. 589; 1 Ala. 95; 8 Cal. 58; 6 Mich. 137; and to complete the proceedings when the lower court refuses to do so, upon erroneous grounds; 1 Hayw. 302; 2 Ark. 78. In England, 13 E. L. & Eq. 129; 1 B. & C. 142; 3 Salk. 78; 9 L. R. Q. B. 350; and in some states of the United States; 3 H. & M'H. 115; Coxe, 287; 2 South. 539; 7 Cow. 141; 2 Yerg. 173; 2 Whart. 117; 3 Brews. 30; 2 Va. Cas. 268; 2 Murph. 100; 1 Ala. 95; 5 R. I. 385; the writ may also be issued to remove criminal causes to a superior court. But see 10 Ohio, 345.

It is used also as an auxiliary process to obtain a full return to other process, as when, for example, the record of an inferior court is brought before a superior court by appeal, writ of error, or other lawful mode, and there is a manifest defect or suggestion of diminution, to obtain a perfect transcript and all papers; 3 Dall. 413; 7 Cra. 288; 9 Wheat. 526; 3 Johns. 23; 2 Cow. 38; 2 South. 270, 551; 7 Halst. 85; 1 Blackf. 32; 3 Ind. 316; 3 Dev. 117; 1 Dev. & B. 382; 11 Mass. 414; 2 Munf. 229; 2 T. It does not lie to enable the superior court to revise a decision upon matters of fact; 6 Wend. 564; 69 N. Y. 408; 4 Halst. 209; 2 Dutch. 303; 2 Green, 74, 141; 34 N. J. It does not lie where the errors are formal merely, and not substantial; 8 Ad. & E. 413; 4 Mass. 567; 17 id. 351; 1 Metc. Mass. 122; 6 Miss. 578; 42 Me. 395; 56 Me. 184; 59 Ill. 225; nor where substantial justice has been done though the proceedings were informal; 24 Me. 9; 20 Pick. 71; 24 id. 181; 13 Tex. 18; 32 Wisc. 467.

It is granted or refused in the discretion of the superior court; Colby, Pr. 351; 8 Me. 293; 24 id. 9; 2 Mass. 445; 17 id. 352; 2 N. H. 210; 15 Wend. 198; 2 Hill, 9, 14; 26 Barb. 437; 34 N. J. The judgment is either that the proceedings below be quashed or that they be affirmed; 8 Yerg. 102, 218; 5 Mass. 423; 11 id. 466; 12 G. & J. 329; 6 Coldw. 362; see 35 N. The costs are discretionary with the court; 16 Vt. 426; 6 Ind. 367; but at common law neither party recovers costs; 8 Johns. 321; 12 Wend. 262; 11 Mass. 465; 3 N. H. 44; 4 Ohio, 200; and the matter is regulated by statute in some states; 4 Watts, 451; 1 Spenc. 271. See MANDAMUS; PROCEDENDO. Consult 4 Bla. Com. 262, 265; Redf. Railw. and the authorities on the practice of the several states.

He who has a right to a beneficial interest in and out of an estate the legal title to which is vested in another. 2 Wash. R. P. 163.

He may be said to be the equitable owner; Williams, R. P. 135; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 497; 1 Ed. Ch. 223; 2 Pick. 29; is entitled, therefore, to the rents and profits; may transfer his interest, subject to the provisions of the instrument creating the trust; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 507; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 195; may defend his title in the name of his trustee, 1 Cruise, Dig. tit. 12, c. 4, § 4; but has no legal title to the estate, as he is merely a tenant at will if he occupies the estate; 2 Ves.

CHALDRON. A measure of capacity, equal to fifty-eight and two-thirds cubic feet, nearly; Cowel.

CHALLENGE. In Criminal Law. A request by one person to another to fight a duel. No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a challenge, and it may be oral or written; 6 Blackf. 20; 12 Ala. 276; 2 Nott. & M. 181; 3 Dana (Ky.), 418. Sending a challenge is a high offence at common law, and indictable as tending to a breach of the peace; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 3, § 3; 3 East, 581; 6 id. 464; 1 Dana, 524; 1 South. 40; 2 M'Cord, 334; 1 Const. 107; 1 Hawks, 487; 2 Ala. 506; 6 Blackf. 20; 9 Leigh, 603; 3 Rog. 133; 3 Wheel. Cr. Cas. 245. He who carries a challenge is also punishable by indictment; 3 Cra. C. C. 178. In most of the states, this barbarous practice is punishable by special laws. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, §§ 312–315. And in a large number of them by their constitutions the giving, accepting, or knowingly carrying a challenge, deprives the party of the right to hold any office of honor or profit in the commonwealth; Desty's Const. of California, pp. 367, 368; 20 Johns. 457; 1 Munf. 468; 28 Gratt. 130; 10 Bush, 725.

In most of the civilized nations, challenging another to fight is a crime, as calculated to destroy the public peace; and those who partake in the offence are generally liable to punishment. In Spain, it is punished by loss of offices, rents, and honors received from the king, and the delinquent is incapable to hold them in future; Aso & M. Inst. b. 2, t. 19, c. 2, § 6. See, generally, Joy, Chall.; 1 Russell, Cr. 275; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, chap. xv; 6 J. J. Marsh. 120; 1 Const. 107; 1 Munf. 468.

In Practice. An exception to the jurors who have been arrayed to pass upon a cause on its trial.

An exception to those who have been returned as jurors; Co. Litt. 155 b.

The most satisfactory derivation of the word is that adopted by Webster and Crabb, from call, challenge implying a calling off. The word is also used to denote exceptions taken to a judge's capacity on account of interest; 2 Binn. 454; 4 id. 349; and to the sheriff for favor as well as affinity; Co. Litt. 158 a; 10 S. & R. 336; 11 id. 308.

Challenges are of the following classes:—

To the array. Those which apply to all the jurors as arrayed or set in order by the officer upon the panel. Such a challenge is, in general, founded upon some error or manifest partiality committed in obtaining the panel, and which, from its nature, applies to all the jurors so obtained. These are not allowed in the United States generally; Colby, Pr. 235; 2 Blatchf. 435; 6 Miss. 20; the same end being attained by a motion addressed to the court, but are in some states; 33 Penn. 338; 12 Tex. 252; 41 id. 417; 24 Miss. 445; 1 Mann. 451; 20 Conn. 510; 1 Zabr. 656; 5 Johns. 133; 1 Cowen, 432; 2 Blackf. 332; 82 Penn. 306.

For cause. Those for which some reason is assigned.

These may be of various kinds, unlimited in number, may be to the array or to the poll, and depend for their allowance upon the existence and character of the reason assigned.

To the favor. Those challenges to the poll for cause which are founded upon reasonable grounds to suspect that the juror will act under some undue influence or prejudice, though the cause be not so evident as to authorize a principal challenge; Co. Litt. 147 a, 157 a; Bacon, Abr. Juries, E, 5; 3 Wis. 823. Such challenges are at common law decided by triors, and not by the court. See TRIORS; 16 N. Y. 501; 14 N. J. L. 195. But see 24 Ark. 346; 21 N. Y. 134; 6 Hun, 140.

Peremptory. Those made without assigning any reason, and which the court must allow. The number of these in trials for felonies was, at common law, thirty-five; 4 Bla. Com. 354; but, by statute, has been reduced to twenty in most states, and is allowed in criminal cases only when the offence is capital; 2 Blatchf. C. C. 470; 10 B. Monr. 125; 8 Ohio St. 98; 25 Mo. 167; see 5 Wis. 324; 1 Jones, N. C. 289; 16 Ohio, 354; while in civil cases the right is not allowed at all; 9 Exch. 472; 2 F. & F. 137; 2 Blatchf. 470; or, if allowed, only to a very limited extent; 5 Harr. Del. 245; 7 Ohio St. 155; 9 Barb. 161; 20 Conn. 510; 8 Blackf. 507; 3 Iowa, 216.

To the poll. Those made separately to each juror to whom they apply. Distinguished from those to the array.

Principal. Those made for a cause which when substantiated is of itself sufficient evidence of bias in favor of or against the party challenging; Co. Litt. 156 b. See 3 Bla. Com. 363; 4 id. 353. They may be either to the array or to the poll; Co. Litt. 156 a, b.

The importance of the distinction between principal challenges and those to the favor is found in the case of challenges to the array or of challenges to the poll for favor or partiality. All other challenges to the poll must, it seems, be principal. The distinctions between the various classes of challenges are of little value in modern practice, as the court generally determine the qualifications of a juror upon suggestion of the cause for challenge, and examination of the juror upon oath when necessary. See TRIORS.

The causes for challenge are said to be either propter honoris respectum (from regard to rank), which do not exist in the United States; propter defectum (on account of some defect), from personal objections, as alienage, infancy, lack of statutory requirements; propter affectum (on account of partiality), from some bias or partiality either actually shown to exist or presumed from circumstances; propter delictum (on account of crime), including cases of legal incompetency on the ground of infamy; Co. Litt. 155 b et seq.

These causes include, amongst others, alienage, Wall. C. C. 147, but see 2 Cranch, C. C. 3; incapacity resulting from age, lack of statutory qualifications; 10 Gratt. 767; partiality arising from near relationship; 19 N. H. 372; 19 Penn. 95; 10 Gratt. 690; Busb. 330; 32 Me. 310; 20 Conn. 87; 2 Barb. Ch. 331; 3 Ind. 198; 47 Ga. 538; see 38 Me. 44; 19 N. H. 351; an interest in the result of the trial; 11 Ind. 234; 8 Cush. 69; 21 N. H. 438; 1 Zabr. 656; 11 Mo. 247; conscientious scruples as to finding a verdict of conviction in a capital case; 1 Baldw. 78; 16 Tex. 206, 445; 7 Ind. 338; 2 Cal. 257; 3 Ga. 453; 17 Miss. 115; 16 Ohio, 364; 13 N. B. 815; 5 Cal. 347; 4 Gray, 18; citizenship in a municipality interested in the case; 13 Iowa, 229; 42 id. 315; 51 N. Y. 506; 51 Ind. 119; 61 Mo. 479; 20 Kan. 156; or indicated by declarations of wishes or opinions as to the result of the trial; 1 Zabr. 106; 19 Ohio, 198; 1 Johns. 316; 60 Ill. 452, 465; 75 Penn. 424; 76 id. 414; 79 id. 308; 52 Ind. 68; see 96 U. S. 640; 6 Ind. 169; or opinions formed or expressed as to the guilt or innocence of one accused of crime; 19 Ark. 156; 30 Miss. 627; 2 Wall. Jr. 333; 10 Humphr. 456; 13 Ill. 685; 2 Greene, 404; 19 Ohio. 198; 5 Ga. 85. See 1 Dutch. 566; 15 Ga. 490; 18 id. 383; 7 Ind. 332; 2 Swan, 581; 16 Ill. 364; 1 Cal. 379; 5 Cush. 295; 7 Gratt. 593; 12 Mo. 223; 18 Conn. 166.

Who may challenge. Both parties, in civil as well as in criminal cases, may challenge, for cause; and equal privileges are generally allowed both parties in respect to peremptory challenges; but see 6 B. Monr. 15; 3 Wisc. 823; 2 Park. Cr. Cas. N. Y. 586; and after a juror has been challenged by one party and found indifferent, he may yet be challenged by the other; 32 Miss. 389. A juror has no right to challenge himself, and though a good cause of challenge subsists, yet, if neither party will take advantage of it, the court cannot reject him; 1 N. J. L. 220; but see 43 Miss. 641.

The time to make a challenge is between the appearance and swearing of the jurors; 8 Gratt. 637; 3 Jones, N. C. 443; 3 Iowa, 216; 23 Penn. 12; 8 Gill, 487; 8 Blackf. 194; 3 Ga. 453; 14 La. Ann. 461; 4 Nev. 265; 22 Mich. 76; 113 Mass. 297; but see 7 Ala. 189; 1 Curt. C. C. 23. It is a general rule at common law that no challenge can be made till the appearance of a full jury; 4 B. & Ald. 476; 45 Cal. 323; on which account a party who wishes to challenge the array may pray a tales to complete the number, and then make his objection. Challenges to the array, where allowed, must precede those to the poll; and the right to the former is waived by making the latter; Co. Litt. 158 a; Bacon, Abr. Juries, E, 11; 6 Cal. 214; but see 13 Wall. 434. In cases where peremptory challenges are allowed, a juror unsuccessfully challenged for cause may subsequently be challenged peremptorily; 4 Bla. Com. 356; 6 Term, 531; 4 B. & Ald. 476. See 5 Cush. 295.

Manner of making. Challenges to the array must be made in writing; 1 Mann. 451; 1 Iowa, 141; but challenges to the poll are made orally and generally by the attorney's or party's saying, "Challenged," or, "I challenge," or, "We challenge;" 1 Chitty, Cr. Law, 533–541; 4 Hargrave, St. Tr. 740; Trials per Pais, 172; Cro. Car. 105. See 43 Me. 11; 25 Penn. 134; 82 id. 306.

CHAMBER. A room in a house. There may be an estate of freehold in a chamber as distinct and separate from the ownership of the rest of the house; 1 Term, 701; Coke, Litt. 48 b; 4 Mass. 576; 1 Metc. Mass. 538; 10 Conn. 318; and ejectment will lie for a deprivation of possession; 1 Term, 701; 9 Pick. 293; though the owner thereof does not thereby acquire any interest in the land; 11 Metc. 448. See Brooke, Abr. Demand, 20; 6 N. H. 555; 3 Watts, 243; 3 Leon. 210.

Consult Washburn; Preston; Real Property.

CHAMBER OF ACCOUNTS. In French Law. A sovereign court, of great antiquity, in France, which took cognizance of and registered the accounts of the king's revenue: nearly the same as the English court of exchequer. Encyc. Brit.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. A society of the principal merchants and traders of a city, who meet to promote the general trade and commerce of the place. Some of these are incorporated, as in Philadelphia. Similar societies exist in all the large commercial cities, and are known by various names, as, Board of Trade, etc.

CHAMBERS. In Practice. The private room of the judge. Any hearing before a judge which does not take place during a term of court or while the judge is sitting in court, or an order issued under such circumstances, is said to be in chambers. The act may be an official one, and the hearing may be in the court-room; but if the court is not in session, it is still said to be done in chambers.

CHAMPART. In French Law. The grant of a piece of land by the owner to another, on condition that the latter would deliver to him a portion of the crops. 18 Toullier, n. 182.

CHAMPERTOR. In Criminal Law. One who makes pleas or suits, or causes them to be moved, either directly or indirectly, and sues them at his proper costs, upon condition of having a part of the gain. 1 Stat. 33 Edw. I. stat. 2.

CHAMPERTY. A bargain with a plaintiff or defendant in a suit, for a portion of the land or other matter sued for, in case of a successful termination of the suit which the champertor undertakes to carry on at his own expense. See 19 Alb. L. J. 468.

Champerty differs from maintenance chiefly in this, that in champerty the compensation to be given for the service rendered is a part of the matter in suit, or some profit growing out of it; 16 Ala. 488; 24 Ala. N. S. 472; 9 Metc. 489; 1 Jones, Eq. 100; 5 Johns. Ch. 44; 4 Litt. 117; 57 Ga. 263; 10 Heisk. 339; 89 Ill. 183; while in simple maintenance the question of compensation does not enter into the account; 2 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 131; 53 Ind. 317.

The offence was indictable at common law; 4 Bla. Com. 135; 1 Pick. 415; 5 T. B. Champerty avoids contracts into which it enters; 8 R. I. 389. A common instance of champerty is where an attorney agrees with a client to collect by suit a particular claim or claims in general, receiving a certain proportion of the money collected; 9 Ala. N. S. 755; 17 id. 305; 1 Ohio, 132; 4 Dowl. 304; or a percentage thereon; 17 Ala. N. S. 206; 9 Metc. 489; 2 Bishop, Cr. Law, § 132. And see 3 Pick. 79; 4 Duer, 275; 1 Pat. & H. 48; 18 Ill. 449; 15 B. CHAMPION. He who fights for another, or who takes his place in a quarrel. One who fights his own battles. Bracton, l, 4, t. 2, c. 12.

CHANCE. See ACCIDENT.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. In Criminal Law. A sudden affray. This word is sometimes applied to any kind of homicide by misadventure, but in strictness it is applicable to such killing only as happens in defending one's self. 4 Bla. Com. 184.

CHANCELLOR. An officer appointed to preside over a court of chancery, invested with various powers in the several states.

The office of chancellor is of Roman origin. He appears at first to have been a chief scribe or secretary, but was afterwards invested with judicial power, and had superintendence over the other officers of the empire. From the Romans the title and office passed to the church; and therefore every bishop of the Catholic church has, to this day, his chancellor, the principal judge of his consistory. When the modern kingdoms of Europe were established upon the ruins of the empire, almost every state preserved its chancellor, with different jurisdictions and dignities, according to their different constitutions. In all he seems to have had a supervision of all charters, letters, and such other public instruments of the crown as were authenticated in the most solemn manner; and when seals came into use, he had the custody of the public seal. See CANCELLARIUS.

An officer bearing this title is to be found in most countries of Europe, and is generally invested with extensive authority. The title and office of chancellor came to us from England. Many of our state constitutions provide for the appointment of this officer, who is by them and by the laws of the several states invested with power as they provide; see 1 Spence, Eq. Jur.; Encyc. Am.; 4 Viner, Abr. 374; Woodd. Lect. 95.

In England the title is borne by several functionaries; thus (see Mozley & Whiteley's Law Dictionary, s. v.).

The Lord High Chancellor is speaker of the house of lords, formerly presided over the court of chancery, and is principal judge of the high court of justice under the judicature act, 1873. He is a privy councillor by virtue of his office, and visitor of all hospitals and colleges of the king's foundation for which no other visitor is appointed. To him belongs the appointment of justices of the peace throughout the kingdom. Cowel; 3 Bla. Com. 38, 47; 2 Steph. Com. 382; 3 id. 320.

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, who presides over the court of the duchy, to judge and determine controversies relating to lands holden of the king in right of the Duchy of Lancaster. This court has a concurrent jurisdiction with the court of chancery in matters relating to the duchy. Cowel; 3 Bla. Com. 78; 3 Steph. Com. 347, n.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer is an officer who formerly sat in the court of exchequer, and, with the rest of the court, ordered things for the king's benefit; Cowel. This part of his functions is now practically obsolete; and the chancellor of the exchequer is now known as the minister of state who has control over the national revenue and expenditure. 2 Steph. Com. 458.

The Chancellor of a University, who is the principal officer of the university. His office is for the most part honorary. The chancellor's court has a jurisdiction over the members of the university, and the judge of the court is the vice-chancellor or his deputy. 3 Bla. Com. 83; 3 Steph. Com. 299, 300; 1 id. 67; 4 id. 325.

The Chancellor of a Diocese is the officer appointed to assist a bishop in matters of law, and to hold his consistory courts for him; 1 Bla. Com. 382; 2 Steph. Com. 672.

CHANCELLOR'S COURTS IN THE TWO UNIVERSITIES. In English Law. Courts of local jurisdiction in and for the two univerities of Oxford and Cambridge in England.

These courts have jurisdiction of all civil actions or suits, except those in which a right of freehold is involved, and of all criminal offences and misdemeanors, under the degree of treason, felony, or mayhem, at Oxford when a scholar or privileged person is one of the parties, and at Cambridge when both parties are scholars or privileged persons and the cause of action arose within the town of Cambridge or its suburbs; 3 Bla. Com. 83, n.; Stat. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 17, § 18, c. 88; Rep. temp. Hardw. 241; 2 Wils. 406; 12 East, 12; 13 id. 635; 15 id. 634. The judge of the chancellor's court at Oxford is a vice-chancellor, with a deputy or assessor. An appeal lies from his sentence to delegates appointed by the congregation, thence to delegates appointed by the house of convocation, and thence, in case of any disagreement only, to judges delegates appointed by the crown under the great seal in chancery; 3 Steph. Com. 453, 455.

They are now governed by the common and statute law of the realm. Stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81, § 45; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 36; 19 & 20 Vict. cc. 31, 95; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 25.

CHANCERY. See COURT OF CHANCERY.

CHANTRY. A church or chapel endowed with lands for the maintenance of priests to say mass daily for the souls of the donors. Termes de la Ley; Cowel.

CHAPELRY. The precinct of a chapel; the same thing for a chapel that a parish is for a church. Termes de la Ley; Cowel.

CHAPELS. Places of worship. They may be either private chapels, such as are built and maintained by a private person for his own use and at his own expense, or free chapels, so called from their freedom or exemption from all ordinary jurisdiction, or chapels of ease, which are built by the mother-church for the ease and convenience of its parishioners, and remain under its jurisdiction and control.

CHAPTER. In Ecclesiastical Law. A congregation of clergymen.

Such an assembly is termed capitulum, which signifies a little head; it being a kind of head, not only to govern the diocese in the vacation of the bishopric, but also for other purposes. Coke, Litt. 103.

CHARACTER. In Evidence. The opinion generally entertained of a person derived from the common report of the people who are acquainted with him. 3 S. & R. 336; 3 Mass. 192; 3 Esp. 236.

A clear distinction exists between the strict meaning of the words character and reputation. Character is defined to be the assemblage of qualities which distinguish one person from another, while reputation is the opinion of character generally entertained; Worcester, Dict. This distinction, however, is not regarded either in the statutes or in the decisions of the courts; thus, a libel is said to be an injury to character; the character of a witness for veracity is said to be impeached; evidence is offered of a prisoner's good character; Abbott, Law Dict.

The moral character and conduct of a person in society may be used in proof before a jury in three classes of cases: first, to afford a presumption that a particular party has not been guilty of a criminal act; second, to affect the damages in particular cases, where their amount depends on the character and conduct of any individual; and, third, to impeach or confirm the veracity of a witness.

Where the guilt of an accused party is doubtful, and the character of the supposed agent is involved in the question, a presumption of innocence arises from his former conduct in society, as evidenced by his general character; since it is not probable that a person of known probity and humanity would commit a dishonest or outrageous act in the particular instance. But where it is a question of great and atrocious criminality, the commission of the act is so unusual, so out of the ordinary course of things and beyond common experience—it is so manifest that the offence, if perpetrated, must have been influenced by motives not frequently operating upon the human mind—that evidence of character, and of a man's habitual conduct under common circumstances, must be considered far inferior to what it is in the instance of accusations of a lower grade. Against facts strongly proved, good character cannot avail. It is therefore in smaller offences, in such as relate to the actions of daily and common life, as when one is charged with pilfering and stealing, that evidence of a high character for honesty will satisfy a jury that the accused is not likely to yield to so slight a temptation. In such case, where the evidence is doubtful, proof of character may be given with good effect. But still, even with regard to the higher crimes, testimony of good character, though of less avail, is competent evidence to the jury, and a species of evidence which the accused has a right to offer. But it behooves one charged with an atrocious crime, like murder, to prove a high character, and by strong evidence, to make it counterbalance a strong amount of proof on the part of the prosecution. It is the privilege of the accused to put his character in issue, or not. If he does, and offers evidence of good character, then the prosecution may give evidence to rebut and counteract it. But it is not competent for the government to give in proof the bad character of the defendant, unless he first opens that line of inquiry by evidence of good character. Per Shaw, C. J., 5 Cush. 325. See 5 Esp. 13; 1 Campb. 460; 3 id. 519; 2 Strange, 925; 2 State Tr. 1038; 1 Coxe, 424; 5 S. & R. 352; 2 Bibb, 286; 3 id. 195; 5 Day, 260; 7 Conn. 116; 14 Ala. 382; 6 Cowen, 673; 3 Hawks, 105. Negative evidence of character is competent; 22 Minn. 407.

On the trial of an indictment for homicide evidence offered generally to prove that the deceased was well known, and understood to be a quarrelsome, riotous, and savage man, is inadmissible; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 641; but for the purpose of showing that the homicide was justifiable on the ground of self-defence, proof of the character of the deceased may be admitted, if it is also shown that the prisoner was influenced by his knowledge thereof in committing the deed; 26 Ohio, 162. Unless the character of the deceased is attacked, it is clearly not admissible for the prosecution to prove its peaceableness; 1 Whart. Cr. L. § 641.

In some instances, evidence in disparagement of character is admissible, not in order to prove or disprove the commission of a particular fact, but with a view to damages. In actions for criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife, evidence may be given of the wife's general bad character for want of chastity, and even of particular acts of adultery committed by her previous to her intercourse with the defendant; Buller, N. P. 27, 296; 12 Mod. 232; 3 Esp. 236. See 5 Munf. 10. As to the statutory use of the word "character," see 8 Barb. 603; 5 Park. Cr. C. 254; 5 Ia. 389; id. 430; 18 id. 372; 49 id. 531.

In actions for slander or libel, the law is well settled that evidence of the previous general character of the plaintiff, before and at the time of the publication of the slander or libel, is admissible, under the general issue, in mitigation of damages. The ground of admitting such evidence is that a person of disparaged fame is not entitled to the same measure of damages as one whose character is unblemished. And the reasons which authorize the admission of this species of evidence under the general issue alike exist, and require its admission, where a justification has been pleaded but the defendant has failed in sustaining it; Stone v. Varney, 7 Metc. 86, where the decisions are collected and reviewed; 11 Cush. 241; 3 Pick. 378; 4 Denio, 509; 20 Vt. 232; 6 Penn. 170; 2 Nott & M'C. 511; 1 id. 268; Heard, Lib. & Sland. § 299. See 1 Johns. 46; 11 id. 38. When evidence is admitted touching the general character of a party, it is manifest that it is to be confined to matters in reference to the nature of the charge against him; 2 Wend. 352.

The party against whom a witness is called may disprove the facts stated by him, or may examine other witnesses as to his general character; but they will not be allowed to speak of particular facts or parts of his conduct; Buller, N. P. 296. For example, evidence of the general character of a prosecutrix for a rape may be given, as that she was a street-walker; but evidence of specific acts of criminality cannot be admitted; 3 C. & P. 589. And see 17 Conn. 467; 18 Me. 372; 14 Mass. 387; 5 Cox, Cr. Cas. 146. The regular mode is to inquire whether the witness under examination has the means of knowing the former witness's general character, and whether, from such knowledge, he would believe him on his oath; 4 State Tr. 693; 4 Esp. 102; 17 Wall. 586. In answer to such evidence against character, the other party may cross-examine the witness as to his means of knowledge and the grounds of his opinion, or he may attack such witness's general character, and by fresh evidence support the character of his own; 2 Stark. 151, 241; Starkie, Ev. pt. 4, 1753 to 1758; 1 Phillips, Ev. 229. A party cannot give evidence to confirm the good character of a witness, unless his general character has been impugned by his antagonist; 9 Watts, 124. Consult Wharton; Greenleaf; Phillips; Starkie; Evidence; Roscoe, Crim. Evidence.

CHARGE. A duty or obligation imposed upon some person. A lien, incumbrance, or claim which is to be satisfied out of the specific thing or proceeds thereof to which it applies.

To impose such an obligation; to create such a claim.

To accuse.

The distinctive significance of the term rests in the idea of obligation directly bearing upon the individual thing or person to be affected, and binding him or it to the discharge of the duty or satisfaction of the claim imposed. Thus, charging an estate with the payment of a debt is appropriating a definite portion to the particular purpose; charging a person with the commission of a crime is pointing out the individual who is bound to answer for the wrong committed; charging a jury is stating the precise principles of law applicable to the case immediately in question. In this view, a charge will, in general terms, denote a responsibility peculiar to the person or thing affected and authoritatively imposed, or the act fixing such responsibility.

In Contracts. An obligation, binding upon him who enters into it, which may be removed or taken away by a discharge. Termes de la Ley.

An undertaking to keep the custody of another person's goods.

An obligation entered into by the owner of an estate, which binds the estate for its performance. Comyns, Dig. Rent, c. 6; 2 Ball & B. 223.

In Devises. A duty imposed upon a devisee, either personally, or with respect to the estate devised.

Where the charge is personal, the devisee will generally take the fee of the estate devised; 4 Kent, 540; 2 Bla. Com. 108; 3 Term, 356; 6 Johns. 185; 24 Pick. 139; but he will take only a life estate if it be upon the estate generally; 5 Term, 558; 4 East, 496; 14 Mees. & W. 698; 3 Mas. 209; 10 Wheat. 231; 10 Johns. 148; 18 id. 55; 7 Paige, Ch. 481; 15 Me. 436; 8 Harr. & J. 208; 9 Mass. 161; unless the charge be greater than a life estate will satisfy; 6 Co. 16; 4 Term, 93; 1 Barb. 102; 24 Pick. 138; 1 Washb. R. P. 59. A charge is not an interest in, but a lien upon, lands; 3 Mas. 768; 12 Wheat. 498; 4 Metc. Mass. 523.

Consult Washburn, Real Property; Kent; Preston, Estates; Roper, Legacies; Williams, Executors.

In Equity Pleading. An allegation in the bill of matters which disprove or avoid a defence which it is alleged the defendant is supposed to pretend or intend to set up. Story, Eq. Pl. § 31.

It is frequently omitted, and this the more properly as all matters material to the plaintiff's case should be fully stated in the stating part of the bill. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 11; 11 Ves. Ch. 574; 2 Anstr. 543. See 2 Hare, Ch. 264.

In Practice. The instructions given by the court to the grand jury or inquest of the county, at the commencement of their session, in regard to their duty.

The exposition by the court to a petit jury of those principles of the law which the latter are bound to apply in order to render such a verdict as will, in the state of facts proved at the trial to exist, establish the rights of the parties to the suit.

The essential idea of a charge is that it is authoritative as an exposition of the law, which the jury are bound by their oath and by moral obligations to obey; 10 Metc. 285-287; 13 N. H. 536; 21 Barb. 566; 2 Blackf. 162; 1 Leigh, 588; 3 id. 761; 3 J. J. Marsh. 150; 21 How. St. Tr. 1039; 89 Penn. 522. See 5 South. L. Rev. 352. By statute, in some states, the jury are constituted judges of the law as well as of the facts in criminal cases,—an arrangement which assimilates the duties of a judge at once to those of the moderator of a small-sized town-meeting and of the preceptor of a class of law-students, besides subjecting successive criminals to a code of laws varying as widely as the impulses of successive juries can differ. The charge frequently and usually includes a summing up of the evidence, given to show the application of the principles involved; and in English practice the term summing up is used instead of charge. Though this is customary in many courts, the judge is not bound to sum up the facts; Thomps. Ch. Juries, § 79; 3 Hawks, 390. But if he do sum up he must present all the material facts; 6 W. & S. 132; 1 Ga. 428. This is the practice in the courts of the U. S.; 8 Wall. 342. In case of an omission a party must request a charge at that point at the time, or the omission is not error; ibid.

It should be a clear and explicit statement of the law applicable to the condition of the facts; 4 Hawks, 61; 1 A. K. Marsh. 76; 1 Dana, 35; 1 Bail. 482; 4 Conn. 356; 3 Wend. 75; 10 Metc. 14, 263; 1 Mo. 97; 24 Me. 289; 16 Vt. 679; 3 Green, 32; 5 Blackf. 296; 6 W. & S. 488; 23 Penn. 76; 1 Gill, 127; adding such comments on the evidence as are necessary to explain its application; 8 Me. 42; 1 Const. 216; 1 W. & S. 68; 22 Ga. 385 (though in some states the court is prohibited by law from charging as to matters of fact, "but may state the testimony and the law;" e. g., California, Tennessee, South Carolina, Georgia, Massachusetts, etc.); and may include an opinion on the weight of evidence; 13 How. 115; 2 M. & G. 721; 34 N. H. 460; 8 Conn. 431; 81 Penn. 139; 5 Cow. 243; 28 Vt. 223; 5 Jones, No. C. 393; though the rule is otherwise in some states; 79 Ill. 441; 53 Ga. 162; 31 Ark. 307; but should not undertake to decide the facts; 7 J. J. Marsh. 410; 3 Dana, 66; 7 Cow. 29; 10 Ala. N. S. 599; 10 Gill & J. 346; 5 R. I. 295; unless in the entire absence of opposing proof; 5 Gray, 440; 7 Wend. 160; 17 Vt. 176; 26 Mo. 523; 1 Penn. 68; 28 Ala. N. S. 675. And see 3 Dana, 566.

For the effect of an omission or refusal to charge on important points of law, see 1 Wash. C. C. 198; 4 Halst. 149; 10 Mo. 354; 5 Ohio, 375; 15 id. 123; 5 Wend. 289; 12 Conn. 219; 11 N. H. 547; 4 Jones, No. C. 23; 10 Miss. 268; 6 Penn. 61; 17 Ga. 351. Erroneous instructions in matters of law which might have influenced the jury in forming a verdict are a cause for a new trial; 5 Mass. 365; 12 Pick. 177; 9 Conn. 107; 4 Hawks, 64; even though on hypothetical questions; 11 Wheat. 59; 14 Tex. 483; 6 Cal. 214; on which no opinion can be required to be given; 5 Ohio, 88; 11 Gill & J. 388; 3 Ired. 470; 5 Jones, No. C. 388; 5 Ala. N. S. 383; 28 id. 100; 3 Humphr. 466; 6 id. 317; 6 Mo. 6; 20 N. H. 354; 16 Me. 171; 23 id. 246; 5 Cal. 478; 5 Blackf. 112; 16 Miss. 401; 9 Tex. 536; 16 id. 229; 3 Iowa, 509; 18 Ga. 411; Hilliard, New Trials; but the rule does not apply where the instructions could not prejudice the cause; 11 Conn. 342; 1 McLean, 509; 2 How. 457. Any decision or declaration by the court upon the law of the case, made in the progress of the cause, and by which the jury are influenced and the counsel controlled, is considered within the scope and meaning of the term "instructions;" Hilliard, New Trials, 255.

See Thompson, Charging Juries.

CHARGE DES AFFAIRES. CHARGE D'AFFAIRES. In International Law. The title of a diplomatic representative or minister of an inferior grade, to whose care are confided the affairs of his nation.

He has not the title of minister, and is generally introduced and admitted through a verbal presentation of the minister at his departure, or through letters of credence addressed to the minister of state of the court to which he is sent. He has the essential rights of a minister; 1 Kent, 39, n.; 4 Dall. 321. The first form of the phrase here given is the one used in the act of congress of May 1, 1810, by which the president is authorized to allow such officer a sum not greater than at the rate of four thousand five hundred dollars per annum, as a compensation for his personal services and expenses; 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1171.

CHARGE TO ENTER HEIR. In Scotch Law. A writ commanding a person to enter heir to his predecessor within forty days, otherwise an action to be raised against him as if he had entered.

The heir might appear and renounce the succession, whereupon a decree cognitionis causa passed, ascertaining the creditor's debt. If the heir did not appear, he then became personally liable to the creditor. A charge was either general, or special, or general-special. Charges are now abolished, by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 48, § 16, and a summons of constitution against the unentered heir substituted.

CHARGES. The expenses which have been incurred in relation either to a transaction or to a suit. Thus, the charges incurred for his benefit must be paid by a hirer; the defendant must pay the charges of a suit. In relation to actions, the term includes something more than the costs, technically so called.

CHARITABLE USES, CHARITIES. Gifts to general public uses, which may extend to the rich as well as the poor. Ambl. 651; 2 Sneed, 305.

Gifts to such purposes as are enumerated in the act 43 Eliz. c. 4, or which, by analogy, are deemed within its spirit or intendment. Boyle, Charity, 17.

They had their origin under the Christian dispensation, and were regulated by the Justinian Code. Code Just. 1. 3, De Episc. et Cler.; Domat, b. 2, t. 2, § 6, 1, b. 4, t. 2, § 6, 2; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 96; Mr. Binney's argument on the Girard will, p. 40; Chastel on the Charity of the Primitive Churches, b. 1, c. 2, b. 2, c. 10; Codex donationem piarum, passim. Under that system, donations for pious uses which had not a regular and determined destination were liable to be adjudged invalid, until the edicts of Valentinian III. and Marcian declared that legacies in favor of the poor should be maintained even if the legatees were not designated. Justinian completed the work by sweeping all such general gifts into the coffers of the church, to be administered by the bishops. It should seem that, by the English rule before the statute, general and indefinite trusts for charity, especially if no trustees were provided, were invalid. If sustainable, it was under the king's prerogative, exercising in that respect a power analogous to that of the ordinary in the disposition of bona vacantia prior to the Statute of Distributions; F. Moore, 882, 890; Duke, Char. Uses, 73, 363; 1 Vern. 224, note; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 96, pl. 8; 1 Ves. Sen. 225; Hob. 136; 1 Am. L. Reg. 545. The main purpose of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4 was to define the uses which were charitable, as contradistinguished from those which, after the Reformation in England, were deemed superstitious, and to secure their application; Shelf. Mortm. 89, 103. This statute, as a mode of proceeding, fell into disuse, although under its influence and by its mere operation many charities were upheld which would otherwise have been void; Shelf. Mortm. 278, 279, and notes; 3 Leigh, 470; Nelson, Lex Test. 137; Boyle, Char. 18 et seq.; 1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 317 a. Under this statute, courts of chancery are empowered to appoint commissioners to superintend the application and enforcement of charities; and if, from any cause, the charity cannot be applied precisely as the testator has declared, such courts exercise the power in some cases of appropriating it, according to the principles indicated in the devise, as near as they can to the purpose expressed. And this is called an application cy pres; 3 Washb. R. P. 514. See Cy Pres.

There is no need of any particular persons or objects being specified; the generality and indefiniteness of the object constituting the charitable character of the donation; Boyle, Char. 23.

They embrace gifts to the poor of every class, including poor relations, where the intention is manifest; 33 Penn. 9; 2 Sneed, 305; 4 Wheat. 518; 1 Sumn. 276; 10 Penn. 23; 35 N. H. 445; 28 Penn. 23; for every description of college and school, and their instructors and pupils, where nothing contrary to the fundamental doctrine of Christianity is taught; to all institutions for the advancement of the Christian religion; 7 B. Monr. 351, 481; 4 Ired. Eq. 19; 30 Penn. 425; to all churches; 10 Cush. 129; 7 S. & R. 559; 4 Iowa, 180; chapels, hospitals, orphan-asylums; 33 Penn. 9; 12 La. An. 301; 8 Rich. Eq. 190; 125 Mass. 321; even when discrimination is made in favor of members of one religious denomination; 90 Penn. 21; dispensaries; 27 Barb. 260; and the like; 2 Sandf. Ch. 46; to general public purposes; 30 Penn. 437; as supplying water or light to towns, building roads and bridges, keeping them in repair, etc.; 24 Conn. 350; and to other charitable purposes general in their character; 4 R. When the purposes of a charity may be best sustained by alienating the specific property bequeathed and investing the proceeds in a different manner, a court of equity has jurisdiction to direct such sale and investment, taking care that no deviation of the gift be permitted; 6 Wall. 169.

Before the recent acts, charities in England were interpreted, sustained, controlled, and applied by the court of chancery, in virtue of its general jurisdiction in equity, aided by the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4 and the prerogative of the crown; the latter being exercised by the lord chancellor, as the delegate of the sovereign acting as parens patriæ; Spence, Eq. Jur. 439, 441; 12 Mass. 537. The subject has since been regulated by various statutes; the Charitable Trusts Act of 1853, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, amended by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 124; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 76; Tudor's Charitable Trust Act, passim. By the Toleration Act, 1 Wm. & M. c. 18, charitable trusts for promoting the religious opinions of Protestant Dissenters have been held valid; 2 Ves. Sen. 273. Roman Catholics share in their benefits · 2 & 3

Will. IV. c. 115; and Jews, by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59, § 2. The stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4 has not been re-enacted or generally followed in the United States. In some of them it has been adopted by usage; but, with several striking exceptions, the decisions of the English Chancery upon trusts for charity have furnished the rule of adjudication in our courts, without particular reference to the fact that the most remarkable of them were only sustainable under the peculiar construction given to certain phrases in the statute; Boyle, Char. 18 et seq. The opinion prevailed extensively in this country that the validity of charitable endowments and the jurisdiction of courts of equity in such cases depended upon that statute. These views were assailed in 1833 by Baldwin, J. (in Bright. 346), in 1835 in 7 Vt. 241, and in 1844 by Mr. Binney in the Girard will case in 2 How. 128; 95 U. S. 304. It is now conceded as settled that courts of equity have an inherent and original jurisdiction over charities, independent of the statute; Perry, Trusts, § 694; 45 Me. 122; 28 Ala. 299; 29 Mo. 543; 35 Ind. 246; 27 Tex. 173.

In Virginia and New York, that statute, with all its consequences, seems to have been repudiated; 3 Leigh, 450; 22 N. Y. 70, & App. So in North Carolina, Connecticut, Maryland, and the District of Columbia; 1 Dev. Eq. 276; 1 Hawks, 96; 4 Ired. Ch. 26; 6 Conn. 293; 22 id. 31; 5 Harr. & J. 392; 6 id. 1; 8 Md. 551; 7 Am. Dec. 339; 95 U. S. 304. In Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, and perhaps some other states, the English rule is acted on; 8 Blackf. 15; 18 B. Monr. 635; 4 Ga. 404; 4 Iowa, 252; 16 Pick. 107; 4 R. I. 414; 12 La. An. 301; 7 Vt. 211, 241; 4 Wheat. 1; 2 How. 127; 17 id. 369; 24 id. 465. See 16 Ill. 225; 19 Ala. N. s. 814; 1 Swan, 348.

It is said that charitable uses are favorites with courts of equity; the construction of all instruments when they are concerned is liberal in their behalf; 95 U. S. 313; and even the rule against perpetuities is relaxed for their benefit; ibid.; contra, 34 N. Y. 504. A gift may be made to a charity not in esse at the time; ibid.; Perry, Trusts, § 736.

Generally, the rules against accumulations do not apply; Perry, Trusts, § 738; 10 Allen, 1; 45 Penn. 1. Where there is no trustee appointed or none capable of acting, the trust will be sustained, and a trustee appointed; 3 Hare, 191; 3 Pet. 99.

Legacies to pious or charitable uses are not, by the law of England, entitled to a preference in distribution; although such was the doctrine of the civil law. Nor are they in the United States, except by special statute.

CHARTA. A charter or deed in writing. Any signal or token by which an estate was held.

CHARTA CHYROGRAPHATA. An indenture. The two parts were written on the same sheet, and the word chyrograph written between them in such a manner as to divide the word in the separation of the two parts of the indenture.

CHARTA COMMUNIS. An indenture.

CHARTA PARTITA. A charter-party.

CHARTA DE UNA PARTE. A deed poll. A deed of one part.

Formerly this phrase was used to distinguish a deed poll—which is an agreement made by one party only; that is, only one of the parties does any act which is binding upon him—from a deed inter partes. Co. Litt. 229. See DEED POLL.

CHARTA DE FORESTA. A collection of the laws of the forest, made in the 9th Hen. III., and said to have been originally a part of Magna Charta.

CHARTEL. A challenge to single combat. Used at the period when trial by single combat existed. Cowel.

CHARTER. A grant made by the sovereign either to the whole people or to a portion of them, securing to them the enjoyment of certain rights. 1 Story, Const. § 161; 1 Bla. Com. 108.

A charter differs from a constitution in this, that the former is granted by the sovereign, while the latter is established by the people themselves: both are the fundamental law of the land.

A deed. The written evidence of things done between man and man. Cowel. Any conveyance of lands. Any sealed instrument. Spelman. See Co. Litt. 6; 1 Co. 1; F. Moore, 687.

The act of legislature creating a corporation. Dane, Abr. Charter. By statutory provision in Pennsylvania, charters may be granted by the courts of the different counties, for the purpose of creating corporations of various sorts; Act April 29, 1874, P. L. 75.

CHARTER-LAND. In English Law. Land formerly held by deed under certain rents and free services. It differed in nothing from free socage land; and it was also called bookland. 2 Bla. Com. 90.

CHARTER-PARTY. A contract of affreightment, by which the owner of a ship or other vessel lets the whole or a part of her to a merchant or other person for the conveyance of goods, on a particular voyage, in consideration of the payment of freight.

The term is derived from the fact that the contract which bears this name was formerly written on a card (charta-partita), and afterwards the card was cut into two parts from top to bottom, and one part was delivered to each of the parties, which was produced when required, and by this means counterfeits were prevented. Abb. Ship. 175; but see Pothier, Traité de Charte-partie, for a different explanation.

It is in writing not generally under seal, in modern usage; 1 Parsons, Adm. & Ship. 270; but may be by parol; 16 Mass. 336; 5 Pick. Mass. 422; 16 id. 401; 9 Metc. 233; Ware, Dist. Ct. 263; 3 Sumn. C. C. 144. It should contain, first, the name and tonnage of the vessel, see 14 Wend. 195; 7 N. Y. 262; second, the name of the captain; 2 B. & Ald. 421; third, the names of the letter to freight and the freighter; fourth, the place and time agreed upon for the loading and discharge; fifth, the price of the freight; 2 Gall. 61; sixth, the demurrage or indemnity in case of delay; 9 C. & P. 709; 10 M. & W. 498; 17 Barb. 184; Abb. Adm. 548; 4 Binn. 299; 9 Leigh, 532; 5 Cush. 18; seventh, such other conditions as the parties may agree upon; 13 East, 343; 20 Bost. L. Rep. 669; Bee, 124.

It may either provide that the charterer hires the whole capacity and burden of the vessel,—in which case it is in its nature a contract whereby the owner agrees to carry a cargo which the charterer agrees to provide,—or it may provide for an entire surrender of the vessel to the charterer, who then hires her as one hires a house, and takes possession in such a manner as to have the rights and incur the liabilities which grow out of possession. See 2 B. & B. 410; 10 Bingh. 345; 8 Ad. & E. 835; 4 Wash. C. C. 110; 1 Cra. 214; 23 Me. 289; 4 Cow. 470; 17 Barb. 191; 1 Sumn. 551; 2 id. 589; 1 Paine, 358. If the object sought can be conveniently accomplished without a transfer of the vessel, the courts will not be inclined to consider the contract as a demise of the vessel; 2 Sumn. 583; 3 Cliff. 339; 1 Cra. 214; 11 Wall. 591; 97 U. S. 379.

When a ship is chartered, this instrument serves to authenticate many of the facts on which the proof of her neutrality must rest, and should therefore be always found on board chartered ships; 1 Marshall, Ins. 407.

CHARTIS REDDENDIS (Lat. for returning charters). A writ which lay against one who had charters of feoffment intrusted to his keeping, which he refused to deliver. Reg. Orig. 159. It is now obsolete.

CHASE. The liberty or franchise of hunting, oneself, and keeping protected against all other persons, beasts of the chase within a specified district, without regard to the ownership of the land. 2 Bla. Com. 414–416.

The district within which such privilege is to be exercised.

A chase is a franchise granted to a subject, and hence is not subject to the forest laws; 2 Bla. Com. 38. It differs from a park, because it may be another's ground, and is not enclosed. It is said by some to be smaller than a forest and larger than a park. Termes de la Ley. But this seems to be a customary incident, and not an essential quality.

The act of acquiring possession of animals feræ naturæ by force, cunning, or address.

The hunter acquires a right to such animals by occupancy, and they become his property; 4 Toullier, n. 7. No man has a right to enter on the lands of another for the purpose of hunting, without his consent; 14 East, 249; Pothier, Propriété, pt. 1, c. 2, a. 2.

CHASTITY. That virtue which prevents the unlawful commerce of the sexes.

A woman may defend her chastity by killing her assailant. See SELF-DEFENCE.

Sending a letter to a married woman soliciting her to commit adultery is an indictable offence; 7 Conn. 266. See 14 Penn. 226. In England, and perhaps elsewhere, the mere solicitation of chastity is not indictable; 2 Chitty, Pr. 478. Words charging a woman with a violation of chastity are actionable in themselves, because they charge her with a crime punishable by law, and of a character to degrade, disgrace, and exclude her from society; 2 Conn. 707; 8 Pick. 384; 5 Gray, 2, 5; 2 N. H. 194; Heard, Lib. & Sland. § 36.

CHATTEL (Norm. Fr. goods, of any kind). Every species of property, movable or immovable, which is less than a freehold.

In the Grand Coustumier of Normandy it is described as a mere movable, but is set in opposition to a fief or feud; so that not only goods, but whatever was not a feud or fee, were accounted chattels; and it is in this latter sense that our law adopts it. 2 Bla. Com. 385.

Real chattels are interests which are annexed to or concern real estate: as, a lease for years of land. And the duration of the lease is immaterial, whether it be for one or a thousand years, provided there be a certainty about it and a reversion or remainder in some other person. A lease to continue until a certain sum of money can be raised out of the rents is of the same description; and so in fact will be found to be any other interest in real estate whose duration is limited to a time certain beyond which it cannot subsist, and which is, therefore, something less than a freehold.

Personal chattels are properly things movable, which may be carried about by the owner; such as animals, household stuff, money, jewels, corn, garments, and every thing else that can be put in motion and transferred from one place to another; 2 Kent, 340; Co. Litt. 48 a; 4 Co. 6; 5 Mass. 419; 1 N. H. 350.

Chattels, whether real or personal, are treated as personal property in every respect, and, in case of the death of the owner, usually belong to the executor or administrator, and not to the heir at law. There are some chattels, however, which, as Chancellor Kent observes, though they be movable, yet are necessarily attached to the freehold: contributing to its value and enjoyment, they go along with it in the same path of descent or alienation. This is the case with deeds, and other papers which constitute the muniments of title to the inheritance; the shelves and family pictures in a house; and the posts and rails of an enclosure. It is also understood that pigeons in a pigeon-house, deer in a park, and fish in an artificial pond, go with the inheritance, as heir-looms, to the heir at law. But fixtures, or such things of a personal nature as are attached to the realty, whether for a temporary purpose or otherwise, become chattels, or not, according to circumstances. See FIXTURES; 2 Kent, 342; Co. Litt. 20 a, 118; 12 Price, p. 163; 11 Co. 50 b; 1 Chitty, Pr. 90; 8 Viner, Abr. 296; 11 id. 166; 14 id. 109; Bacon, Abr. Baron, etc., C, 2; Dane, Abr. Index; Comyns, Dig. Biens, A; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

CHATTEL INTEREST. An interest in corporeal hereditaments less than a freehold. 2 Kent, 342.

There may be a chattel interest in real property, as in case of a lease; Stearns, Real Act. 115. A term for years, no matter of how long duration, is but a chattel interest, unless declared otherwise by statute. See the subject fully treated in 1 Washburn, R. P. 310 et seq.

CHATTEL MORTGAGE. A transfer of personal property as security for a debt or obligation in such form that upon failure of the mortgagor to comply with the terms of the contract, the title to the property will be in the mortgagee; Thomas, Mort. 427.

An absolute pledge, to become an absolute interest if not redeemed at a fixed time; 2 Caines, Cas. 200, per Kent, Ch.

Strictly speaking, a conditional sale of a chattel as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of some other obligation; Jones, Chat. Mort. § 1. The condition is that the sale shall be void upon the performance of the condition named. At law, if the condition be not performed, the chattel is irredeemable at law; but it may be otherwise in equity or by statute; ibid. The title is fully vested in the mortgagee and can be defeated only by the due performance of the condition; upon a breach, the mortgagee may take possession and treat the chattel as his own; ibid.; 43 How. Pr. 445; s. c. 34 N. Y. (Sup. Ct.) 398.

At common law a chattel mortgage may be made without writing; it is valid as between the parties; 4 N. Y. 497; and even as against third parties if accompanied by possession in the mortgagee; 66 Barb. 433; but delivery is not essential in all cases to the validity of a chattel mortgage; 35 Ala. 131; but see 66 Barb. 433. It differs from a pledge in that in case of a mortgage the title is vested in the mortgagee, subject to defeasance upon the performance of the condition; while in the case of a pledge, the title remains in the pledgor, and the pledgee holds the possession for the purposes of the bailment; 24 Wend. 116; 28 Vt. 237; 48 Me. 368. By a mortgage the title is transferred; by a pledge, the possession; Jones, Mort. § 4. See 5 Johns. 258; 52 Barb. 367.

Upon default, in cases of pledge, the pledgor may recover the chattel upon tendering the amount of the debt secured; but in case of a mortgage, upon default the chattel, at law, belongs to the mortgagee; 43 How. Pr. 445. In equity he may be held liable to an account; 38 id. 296. Apart from statutes, no special form is required for the creation of a chattel mortgage. A bill of sale absolute in form, with a separate agreement of defeasance, constitute together a mortgage, as between the parties; 97 Mass. 452, 489; 38 Ala. 185; 30 Cal. 685. And in equity, the defeasance may be subsequently executed; 26 Ala. 312. A parol defeasance is not good in law; 10 Allen, 332; 36 Me. 562; 10 Mo. 506; contra, 3 Mich. 211; but it is in equity; 72 N. Y. 133; 45 Md. 477; 43 Ga. 262; 83 Ill. 470; 6 Oreg. 321, 362; even as to third parties with notice; 6 N. W. Rep. 367.

In a conditional sale, the purchaser has merely a right to repurchase, and no debt or obligation exists on the part of the vendor; this distinguishes such a sale from a mortgage; 40 Miss. 462; 4 Daly, 77.

Where there is an absolute sale and a simultaneous agreement of resale, the tendency is to consider the transaction a mortgage; 12 Sm. & M. 306; 11 Tex. 478; 15 Ark. 280; but not when the intention of the parties is clearly otherwise; 6 Gratt. 197; 5 Humph. 575.

It is not necessary that a chattel mortgage should be under seal; 47 Me. 504; 98 Mass. 59.

At common law a mortgage can be given only of chattels actually in existence, and belonging to the mortgagor actually or potentially; 32 N. H. 484; 2 Mo. App. 322; 6 Bradw. 162; 38 N. J. L. 253; 42 Wis. 583; 11 R. I. 476, 482; and even though the mortgagor may afterwards acquire title, the mortgage is bad against subsequent purchasers and creditors; but it is otherwise between the parties; 20 Hun, 265.

In equity the rule is different; the mortgage, though not good as a conveyance, is valid as an executory agreement; the mortgagor is considered as a trustee for the mortgagee; 11 R. I. 476; 10 H. L. Cas. 191; 2 Story, 630; 94 U. S. 382; 2 Fed. Rep. 747; 1 Woods, 214; 2 Low. 458. See article in 15 Am. L. Rev. 121. But see 13 Metc. 17; 43 Wis. 583. As to mortgages of rolling stock, see that title. Under this principle all sorts of future interests in chattels may be mortgaged; Jones, Chat. Mort. § 174.

Independent of statutes, a delivery is necessary to the validity of a chattel mortgage, as against creditors. The registration statutes simply provide a substitute for change of possession. Between the parties, a change of possession is unnecessary; if there is a change of possession, registration is not required; 30 Wis. 81; 49 N. H. 340.

No mortgage of a vessel is valid against third parties without notice, unless recorded in the office of the collector of customs of the port where the vessel is enrolled; Rev. Stat. § 4192, etc. As between parties and those who have notice, registration is not required; 100 U. S. 145; 61 N. Y. 71; 3 Woods, 61. See Jones, Chattel Mortgages; Thomas; Jones; Mortgages.

CHAUD-MEDLEY (Fr. chaud). The killing of a person in the heat of an affray.

It is distinguished by Blackstone from chance-medley, an accidental homicide. 4 Bla. Com. 184. The distinction is said to be, however, of no great importance. 1 Russell, Cr. 660. Chance-medley is said to be the killing in self-defence, such as happens on a sudden rencounter, as distinguished from an accidental homicide. Id.

CHEAT. "Deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavoring to defraud another of his known right, by some wilful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty." Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 23, § 1. "The fraudulent obtaining the property of another by any deceitful and illegal practice or token (short of felony) which affects or may affect the public."

In order to constitute a cheat or indictable fraud, there must be a prejudice received; and such injury must affect the public welfare, or have a tendency so to do; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 817; 1 Deacon, Crim. Law, 225.

It seems to be a fair result of the cases, that a cheat, in order to be indictable at common law, must have been public in its nature, by being calculated to defraud numbers, or to deceive or injure the public in general, or by affecting the public trade or revenue, the public health, or being in fraud of public justice, etc. And the other cases to be found in the books, of cheats apparently private which have been yet held to be indictable at common law, will, upon examination, appear to involve considerations of a public nature also, or else to be founded in conspiracy or forgery. Thus, it is not indictable for a man to obtain goods by false verbal representations of his credit in society, and of his ability to pay for them; 6 Mass. 72; or to violate his contract, however fraudulently it be broken; 1 Mass. 137; or fraudulently to deliver a less quantity of amber than was contracted for and represented; 2 Burr. 1125; 1 W. Blackst. 273; or to receive good barley to grind, and to return instead a musty mixture of barley and oatmeal; 4 Maule & S. 214. See 2 East, Pl. Cr. 816; 7 Johns. 201; 14 id. 371; 9 Cow. 588; 9 Wend. 187; 2 Mass. 138; 1 Me. 387; 1 Yerg. 76; 1 Dall. 47; 1 Bennett & H. L. Cr. Cas. 1.

To cheat a man of his money or goods, by using false weights or false measures, has been indictable at common law from time immemorial; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 86; 6 Mass. 72. In addition to this, the statute 33 Hen. VIII. 1, which has been adopted and considered as a part of the common law in some of the United States, and the provisions of which have been either recognized as common law or expressly enacted in nearly all of them, was directed, as appears from its title and preamble, against such persons as received money or goods by means of counterfeit letters or privy tokens in other men's names; 6 Mass. 72; 12 Johns. 292; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 86. A "privy token," within the meaning of this statute, was held to denote some real visible mark or thing, as a key, a ring, etc., and not a mere affirmation or promise. And though writings, generally speaking, may be considered as tokens, yet to be within this statute they must be such as were made in the names of third persons, whereby some additional credit and confidence might be gained to the party using them; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 826, 827.

The word "cheat" is not actionable, unless spoken of the plaintiff in relation to his profession or business; Heard, Lib. & Sl. §§ 16, 28, 48; 6 Cush. 185; 2 Chitt. Bail, 657; 2 Penn. 187; 20 Up. Can. Q. B. 382; 5 Wend. 263. See FALSE PRETENCES; TOKEN; ILLITERATE.

CHECK. Contracts. A written order or request, addressed to a bank or persons carrying on the business of banking, by a party having money in their hands, desiring them to pay, on presentment, to a person therein named or bearer, or to such person or order, a named sum of money. 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 528; 28 Gratt. 170. See 6 N. Y. 412.

The chief differences between checks and bills of exchange are: First, a check is not due until presented, and, consequently, it can be negotiated any time before presentment, and yet not subject the holder to any equities existing between the previous parties; 3 Johns. Cas. 5, 9; 9 B. & C. 388; Chitty, Bills, 8th ed. 546. Secondly, the drawer of a check is not discharged for want of immediate presentment with due diligence; while the drawer of a bill of exchange is. The drawer of a check is only discharged by such neglect when he sustains actual damage by it, and then only pro tanto; 6 Cow. 484; Kent, Comm. Lec. 44, 5th ed. p. 104, note; 3 Johns. Cas. 5, 259; 10 Wend. 306; 2 Hill, 425. See 31 Penn. 100. Thirdly, the death of the drawer of a check rescinds the authority of the banker to pay it; while the death of the drawer of a bill of exchange does not alter the relations of the parties; 3 M. & G. 571-573. Fourthly, checks, unlike bills of exchange, are always payable without grace; 25 Wend. 672; 6 Hill, 174.

Checks are in use only between banks and bankers and their customers, and are designed to facilitate banking operations. It is of their very essence to be payable on demand, because the contract between the banker and customer is that the money is payable on demand; 21 Wend. 372; 20 id. 205; 10 id. 306; 2 Stor. 502, 512; 10 Wall. 647.

They ought to be drawn within the state where the bank is situated, because if not so drawn they become foreign bills of exchange, subject to the law merchant. This law requires that they be protested, and that due diligence be used in presenting them, in order to hold the drawer and indorsers. It is not necessary to use diligence in presenting an ordinary check, in order to charge the drawer, unless he has received damage by the delay; 2 Pet. 586; 2 Hill, 425; 1 Ga. 304; 2 M. & R. 401; 3 Scott, N. R. 555; 3 Kent, 104, n.; 57 N. Y. 641; 22 Gratt. 743; 1 Vroom, 284; Story, Pr. Notes, § 492.

In common with other kinds of negotiable paper, they must contain an order to pay money, and words of negotiability. This enables a bonâ fide holder for value to collect the money without regard to the previous history of the paper; 16 Pet. 1; 5 Johns. Ch. 54; 20 Johns. 637; 3 Kent, 81; 42 Ala. 108.

They must be properly signed by the person or firm keeping the account at the banker's, as it is part of the implied contract of the banker that only checks so signed shall be paid.

Post-dated checks are payable on the day of their date, although negotiated beforehand. See 1 Vroom, 284.

Checks, being payable on demand, are not to be accepted, but presented at once for payment. There is a practice, however, of marking checks "good," by the banker, which fixes his responsibility to pay that particular check when presented, and amounts, in fact, to an acceptance; 10 Wall. 648. Such a marking is called certifying; and checks so marked are called certified checks. See 25 N. Y. 143; 73 Penn. 483.

The bank thereby becomes the principal debtor; 52 N. Y. 350; 10 Wall. 648; to the holder, not the drawer; 39 Penn. 92; and the statute of limitation does not run against the check; 39 Penn. 92. The bank cannot refuse to pay, because notified not to pay by the drawer; 12 Hun, 537; nor, generally, can it set up that the check was forged; or that the drawer has no funds; 18 Wall. 621. In New York, it is held that certifying a check warrants only the signature, and not the terms of the check; 67 N. Y. 458; contra, 28 La. An. 189.

Giving a check is no payment unless the check is paid; 1 Hall, 56, 78; L. R. 10 Ex. 153; 99 Mass. 277; 4 Hun, 639; 66 Ill. 351; 7 S. & R. 116. See 3 Rand. 481. But a tender was held good when made by a check contained in a letter, requesting a receipt in return, which the plaintiff sent back, demanding a larger sum, without objecting to the nature of the tender; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2436; and receiving a check marked "good" is payment; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 559.

A check cannot be the subject of a donatio mortis causâ, unless it is presented and paid during the life of the donor; because his death revokes the banker's authority to pay; 4 Brown, Ch. 286; 27 La. An. 465. But in such a case a check has been considered as of a testamentary character; 3 Curt. Eccl. 650; and see 1 P. Wms. 441.

There is a practice of writing across checks "memorandum," or "mem." They are given thus, not as an ordinary check, but as a memorandum of indebtedness; and between the original parties this seems to be their only effect. In the hands of a third party, for value, they have, however, all the force of checks without such word of restriction; 16 Pick. 535; 11 Paige, 612; Story, Pr. Notes, § 499.

See, generally, Shaw, Checks; 4 Johns. 304; 7 id. 26; 6 Wend. 445; 13 id. 133; 10 id. 304; 2 N. & M'C. 251; 1 Blackf. 104; 1 Litt. 194; 2 id. 299; 4 H. & J. 276; 7 id. 381; 15 Mass. 74; 7 S. & R. 116; 9 id. 125; 4 Yerg. 210; 30 N. CHECK BOOK. A book containing blanks for checks.

These books are so arranged as to leave a margin, called by merchants a stump, or stub, when the check is filled out and torn off. Upon these stumps a memorandum is made of the date of the check, the payee, and the amount; and this memorandum, in connection with the evidence of the party under oath, is evidence of the facts there recorded.

CHEMIN (Fr.). The road wherein every man goes; the king's highway. Called in law Latin via regia. Often spelled Chimin. Termes de la Ley; Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.

CHEMIS. In Old Scotch Law. A mansion-house.

CHEVAGE. A sum of money paid by villeins to their lords in acknowledgment of their villenage.

It was paid to the lord in token of his being chief or head. It was exacted for permission to marry, and also permission to remain without the dominion of the lord. When paid to the king, it was called subjection. Termes de la Ley; Co. Litt. 140 a; Spelman, Gloss.

CHEVANTIA. A loan, or advance of money on credit. See CHEVISANCE.

CHEVISANCE (Fr. agreement). A bargain or contract. An unlawful bargain or contract.

CHICKASAW NATION, THE. Within certain limits established by treaty between the United States, the Choctaw and the Chickasaw Indians, signed at Washington, June 22, 1855, the Chickasaw nation has exclusive control and jurisdiction.

The following treaties have been made, establishing the rights of this nation: Between the United States and the Chickasaws, concluded October 20, 1832, ratified March 1, 1833; one concluded May 24, 1834, ratified July 1, 1834; one between the United States, the Choctaws, and the Chickasaws, concluded January 17, 1837, ratified March 24, 1837; one between the United States and the Chickasaws, concluded June 22, 1852, ratified February 24, 1853; one between the United States, the Choctaws, and the Chickasaws, concluded June 22, 1855, ratified March 4, 1856. This nation has a written constitution, prefaced by a declaration of rights, which is substantially as follows, viz.: that all political power inheres in the people; that all men should be free to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience, and not be compelled to attend, erect, or support any ministry against their consent; that there should be freedom of speech; that there should be security from unreasonable searches of property or person; that every person accused of crime should have a speedy trial.

The more important provisions of the constitution are as follows:—

All free males nineteen years old or more, who are Chickasaws by birth or adoption, may vote. But no idiot, or insane person, or person convicted of an infamous crime, may vote.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—The Senate is to be composed of not less than one-third nor more than two-thirds the number of representatives, elected by the people for the term of two years. The present number of senators is twelve, elected in each of the four districts of the state, each district being also a county. A senator must be thirty years of age at least, must be a Chickasaw by birth or adoption, and must have been a resident of the nation for one year, and for the last six months a citizen of the county from which he is chosen.

The House of Representatives consists of eighteen members, elected by the people of the counties for one year. A representative must be twenty-one years old, and otherwise possess the same qualifications as a senator. Constitution, art. iv.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The Governor is elected for two years by the people of the nation. He must be a Chickasaw by birth or adoption, thirty years of age, and must have resided in the nation for one year next before his election. He is to execute the laws; may convene the legislature at unusual times; is to give information and recommend measures to the legislature; may adjourn the legislature in case of disagreement as to the time of adjournment, not beyond the next session.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The Supreme Court is composed of one chief and two assistant justices, elected by the legislature for the term of four years. A judge must be thirty years old. This court has appellate jurisdiction only, coextensive with the limits of the nation. It may issue the writs necessary to enforce its jurisdiction, and compel any judge of the district court to proceed to trial.

The Circuit Court is held in each of the four counties of the nation. It has original jurisdiction of all criminal cases, and exclusive jurisdiction of all crimes amounting to felony, as well as of all civil cases not cognizable by the county court, and has original jurisdiction of all actions of contract where the amount involved is more than fifty dollars. One circuit judge for the nation is elected by the legislature. He rides four circuits a year, holding court each time in each of the four counties in the state.

A County Court is held in each county by a single judge, elected by the people of the county for the term of two years. It has a civil jurisdiction in all actions where the amount involved is more than fifty dollars. It has also jurisdiction of the probate of wills, the settlement of estates of decedents, the appointment and control of guardians. A probate term is held each month.

CHIEF. One who is put above the rest. Principal. The best of a number of things.

Declaration in chief is a declaration for the principal cause of action. 1 Tidd, Pr. 419.

Examination in chief is the first examination of a witness by the party who produces him. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 445.

Tenant in chief was one who held directly of the king. 1 Washb. R. P. *19.

CHIEF BARON. The title of the chief justice of the English court of exchequer. 3 Bla. Com. 44.

CHIEF CLERK IN THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE. An officer appointed by the secretary of state, whose duties are to attend to the business of the office under the superintendence of the secretary, and, when the secretary is removed from office by the president, or in any other case of vacancy, during such vacancy to take the charge and custody of all records, books, and papers appertaining to the department. See Ab. Dict.

CHIEF JUSTICE. The presiding or principal judge of a court.

CHIEF JUSTICIAR. Under the early Norman kings, the highest officer in the kingdom next to the king.

He was guardian of the realm in the king's absence. His power was diminished under the reign of successive kings, and, finally, completely distributed amongst various courts in the reign of Edward I. 3 Bla. Com. 28. The same as Capitalis Justiciarius.

CHIEF LORD. The immediate lord of the fee. Burton, R. P. 317.

CHIEF PLEDGE. The borsholder, or chief of the borough. Spelman, Gloss.

CHILD. The son or daughter, in relation to the father or mother.

Illegitimate children are bastards. Legitimate children are those born in lawful wedlock. Natural children are illegitimate children. Posthumous children are those born after the death of the father.

Children born in lawful wedlock, or within a competent time afterwards, are presumed to be the issue of the father, and follow his condition; but this presumption may be repelled by the proof of such facts tending to establish non-intercourse as may satisfy a jury to the contrary; 2 Kent, 210; 3 C. & P. 215, 427; 12 East, 550; 13 Ves. Ch. 58; 3 Paige, Ch. 139; 6 Binn. 286; 3 Dev. 548. See 3 Wall. 175. Those born out of lawful wedlock follow the condition of the mother. The father is bound to maintain his children, and to educate them, and to protect them from injuries; Schoul. Dom. Rel. *315 et seq. The Stat 43 Eliz. c. 2, provided that the father and mother, grandfather and grandmother of a poor, impotent, etc., child should support it. It is said that this act is in force in the U. S.; Schoul. Dom. Rel. *320. See FATHER. But not after majority; 1 Ld. Raym. 699. Children are not liable at common law for the support of infirm and indigent parents; 16 Johns. 281; but generally they are bound by statutory provisions to maintain their parents who are in want, when they have sufficient ability to do so; 2 Kent, 208; Pothier, Du Mariage, n. 384, 389; 2 Root, 168; 5 Cow. 284. The child may justify an assault in defence of his parent; 3 Bla. Com. 3. The father, in general, is entitled to the custody of minor children; but, under certain circumstances, the mother will be entitled to them when the father and mother have separated; 5 Binn. 520. The courts of U. S. will, in their sound discretion, give the custody to the mother, or to a third party. Considerations as to the age and condition of the child weigh with the court. The well-being of the child, rather than the supposed right of either parent, controls the question of custody; 10 Cent. L. J. 389; s. c. 12 R. I. 462; 21 N. J. Eq. 384. See FATHER; MOTHER. Children are liable to the reasonable correction of their parents. See CORRECTION; ASSAULT.

The term children does not, ordinarily and properly speaking, comprehend grandchildren, or issue generally; yet sometimes that meaning is affixed to it in cases of necessity; 6 Co. 16. And it has been held to signify the same as issue, in cases where the testator, by using the terms children and issue indiscriminately, showed his intention to use the former term in the sense of issue, so as to entitle grandchildren, etc., to take under it; 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 196; Ambl. 555, 661; 3 Ves. Ch. 258; 3 V. & B. 69; 7 Paige, Ch. 328; 1 Bail. Eq. 7; 4 Watts, 82; 3 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 213, note. When legally construed, the term children is confined to legitimate children; 7 Ves. Ch. 458; and when the term is used in a will, there must be evidence to be collected from the will itself, or extrinsically, to show affirmatively that the testator intended that his illegitimate children should take, or they will not be included; 1 V. & B. 422, 469; 1 Madd. 234; 9 Paige, Ch. 88; 1 R. & M. 581; 4 Kent, 346, 414, 419, and notes. The civil code of Louisiana, art. 2522, n. 14, enacts that "under the name of children are comprehended not only children of the first degree, but the grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and all other descendants in the direct line."

Posthumous children inherit, in all cases, in like manner as if they had been born in the lifetime of the intestate and had survived him; 2 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 135; 4 Kent, 412. See 2 Washb. R. P. 412, 439, 699.

In Pennsylvania, and in some other states; Laws of Penn. 1686, p. 250; R. I. Rev. Stat. tit. xxiv. c. 154, § 10; 3 Gray, 367; the will of their fathers or mothers in which no provision is made for them is revoked, as far as regards them, by operation of law; 3 Binn. 498. See, as to the law of Virginia on this subject, 3 Munf. 20, and article IN VENTRE SA MERE. As to their competency as witnesses, see 1 Greenl. Ev. § 367; 2 Stark. Ev. 699.

CHILDWIT (Sax.). A power to take a fine from a bondwoman gotten with child without the lord's consent.

By custom in Essex county, England, every reputed father of a bastard child was obliged to pay a small fine to the lord. This custom is known as childwit. Cowel.

CHILTERN HUNDREDS. A range of hills in England, formerly much infested by robbers.

To exterminate the robbers, a steward of the Chiltern Hundreds was appointed. The office long since became a sinecure, and is now used to enable a member of parliament to resign, which he can do only by the acceptance of some office within the gift of the chancellor. 2 Steph. Com. 403; Whart. Dict.

CHIMIN. See CHEMIN.

CHIMINAGE. A toll for passing on a way through a forest; called in the civil law pedagium. Cowel. See Co. Litt. 56 a; Spelman, Gloss.; Termes de la Ley.

CHIMINUS. The way by which the king and all his subjects and all under his protection have a right to pass, though the property of the soil of each side where the way lieth may belong to a private man. Cowel.

CHINESE. Stringent laws looking to the entire exclusion of Chinese from the states have been passed in California, Nevada, and Oregon; many of these have been decided to be unconstitutional. An ordinance providing that every male person imprisoned in the county jail should have his hair cut short is unconstitutional, as inflicting cruel and unusual punishment, and as contrary to the XIV amendment of the U. S. constitution; 5 Sawy. 552. A statute forbidding the employment of Chinamen on public works, etc., is void, as contravening the Burlingame treaty and the XIV amendment; 5 Sawy. 566; 1 Fed. Rep. 481. So is an act forbidding Chinamen to fish for the purpose of sale; 2 Fed. Rep. 743. But a state law forbidding the exhumation of dead bodies and their removal, without a permit, is not invalid when applied to the removal of bodies of Chinamen who have been buried in California; it is a merely sanitary regulation; 2 Fed. Rep. 624.

CHINESE INTEREST. Interest for money charged in China. In a case where a note was given in China, payable eighteen months after date, without any stipulation respecting interest, the court allowed the Chinese interest of one per cent. per month from the expiration of the eighteen months. 2 W. & S. 227, 264.

CHIPPINGAVEL. A toll for buying and selling. A tax imposed on goods brought for sale. Whishaw; Blount.

CHIRGEMOTE (spelled, also, Chirchgemote, Circgemote, Kirkmote; Sax. circgemote, from circ, ciric, or cyric, a church, and gemot, a meeting or assembly).

In Saxon Law. An ecclesiastical court or assembly (forum ecclesiasticum); a synod; a meeting in a church or vestry. Blount; Spelman, Gloss.; LL. Hen. I. cc. 4, 8; Co. 4th Inst. 321; Cunningh. Law Dict.

CHIROGRAPH. In Conveyancing. A deed or public instrument in writing.

Chirographs were anciently attested by the subscription and crosses of witnesses. Afterwards, to prevent frauds and concealments, deeds of mutual covenant were made in a script and rescript, or in a part and counter-part; and in the middle, between the two copies, they drew the capital letters of the alphabet, and then tallied, or cut asunder in an indented manner, the sheet or skin of parchment, one of which parts being delivered to each of the parties were proved authentic by matching with and answering to one another. Deeds thus made were denominated syngrapha by the canonists, because that word, instead of the letters of the alphabet or the word chirographum, was used. 2 Bla. Com. 296. This method of preventing counterfeiting, or of detecting counterfeits, is now used, by having some ornament or some word engraved or printed at one end of certificates of stocks, checks, and a variety of other instruments, which are bound up in a book, and, after they are executed, are cut asunder through such ornament or word.

The last part of a fine of land.

It is called, more commonly, the foot of the fine. It is an instrument of writing, beginning with these words: "This is the final agreement," etc. It concludes the whole matter, reciting the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom the fine was acknowledged and levied. Cruise, Dig. t. 35, c. 2, s. 52.

In Civil and Canon Law. An instrument written out and subscribed by the hands of the king or prince. An instrument written out by the parties and signed by them.

The Normans, destroying these chirographa, called the instruments substituted in their place charta (charters), and declared that these charta should be verified by the seal of the signer with the attestation of three or four witnesses. Du Cange; Cowel.

In Scotch Law. A written voucher for a debt. Bell, Dict. The possession of this instrument by the debtor raises a presumption of payment by him. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. 1. 2, t. 4, § 5.

CHIVALRY, TENURE BY. Tenure by knight-service. Coke, Litt.

CHOCTAW NATION, THE. By treaty with the United States, a portion of territory is set apart, over which the Choctaw Indians have exclusive jurisdiction.

They have a written constitution, prefaced by a bill of rights. The bill of rights declares, among other things, that political power is inherent in the people; that there shall be religious freedom; that there shall be freedom of speech and of the press; that the person and property shall be secure from unreasonable searches; that there shall be trial by jury; that no person shall be arrested except for offences defined by the laws; that excessive bail shall not be required in any case.

By the constitution, every free male citizen twenty-one years old, and who has been a citizen of the nation six months and who has lived in the county one month, is entitled to vote.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER.—The Senate is composed of not less than one-third nor more than one-half the number of representatives, elected by the people for the term of four years. They are so classified that one-half the number go out of office every two years. A senator must be thirty years old, and have been a resident of the district for which he is chosen at least one year and of the nation two years preceding his election.

The House of Representatives is composed of not less than seventeen nor more than thirty-five members, apportioned among the counties, and elected by the people for the term of two years.

There are the provisions customary in the constitutions of the various states of the United States for organizing the two houses; making each the judge of the qualification of its members; making each regulate the conduct of its members; providing for the continuance of sessions, for open sessions, for keeping a journal of proceedings, etc. Members are privileged from arrest, except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, during the session, and going to and returning from the same, allowing one day for each twenty miles the member has to travel.

THE EXECUTIVE POWER.—The Governor is elected by the people for the term of two years. He must be thirty years old, and a free and acknowledged citizen of the Choctaw nation, and must have lived in the nation five years. He is eligible for four years only out of any term of six years. He possesses powers substantially the same as those of the governors of the various States.

THE JUDICIAL POWER.—The Supreme Court consists of three circuit court judges. It holds two sessions each year, at the capital. It sits as a court of errors and appeals only.

The Circuit Court is composed of three judges, elected by the people, one from each of the districts into which the nation is divided for the purposes of this court. It has original jurisdiction in all criminal cases, and in all civil cases where the amount involved exceeds fifty dollars, except those cases of minor offences where a justice of the peace has exclusive jurisdiction. Two terms a year, at least, must be held in each county.

The Probate Court is held by a judge elected in each county by the people for the term of two years. It has the regulation of the settlement of estates of decedents, the appointment and control of guardians of minors, lunatics, etc., and the probate of wills.

Justices of the Peace are chosen by the electors of each county for the term of two years. They have a civil jurisdiction in all cases where the amount involved is less than fifty dollars. They constitute a board of police for the county, and have charge of the highways, bridges, etc.

CHOSE (Fr. thing). Personal property.

Choses in possession. Personal things of which one has possession.

Choses in action. Personal things of which the owner has not the possession, but merely a right of action for their possession. 2 Bla. Com. 389, 397; 1 Chitty, Pr. 99.

CHOSE IN ACTION. A right to receive or recover a debt, or money, or damages for breach of contract, or for a tort connected with contract, but which cannot be enforced without action. Comyns, Dig. Biens.

It is one of the qualities of a chose in action that at common law it is not assignable; 10 Co. 47, 48; 2 Johns. 1; 12 Wend. 297; 1 Cra. 367; but in equity, from an early period, the courts have viewed the assignment of a chose in action for a valuable consideration as a contract by the assignor to permit the assignee to use his name for the purpose of recovery, and, consequently, enforce its specific performance, unless contrary to public policy; 1 P. Wms. Ch. 381; Freem. Ch. 145; 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 412; 2 Stor. 660; 2 Ired. Eq. 54; 1 Wheat. 236; 15 Mo. 662. And now, at common law, the assignee is entitled to sue and recover in the name of the assignor, and the debtor will not be allowed, by way of defence to such suit, to avail himself of any payment to or release from the assignor, if made or obtained after notice of the assignment; 4 Term, 340; 1 Hill, 483; 4 Ala. N. s. 184; 14 Conn. 123; 29 Me. 9; 13 N. H. 230; 10 Cush. 93; 20 Vt. 25. If, after notice of the assignment, the debtor expressly promise the assignee to pay him the debt, the assignee will then, in the United States, be entitled to sue in his own name; 10 Mass. 316; 3 Metc. Mass. 66; 5 Pet. 597; 2 R. I. 146; 7 H. & J. 213; 2 Barb. 349, 420; 27 N. H. 269; but without such express promise the assignee, except under peculiar circumstances, must proceed, even in equity, in the name of the assignor; 2 Barb. Ch. 596; 1 Johns. Ch. 463; 7 G. & J. 114; 2 Wheat. 373. By statute in England, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25 (6), any absolute assignment by writing under the hand of the assignor of a chose in action, with written notice to the debtor, passes the legal right thereto and all remedies thereon.

But courts of equity will not, any more than courts of law, give effect to such assignments when they contravene any rule of law or of public policy. Thus, they will not give effect to the assignment of the half-pay or full pay of an officer in the army; 2 Anstr. 533; 1 Ball. & B. 389; or of a right of entry or action for land held adversely; 2 Ired. Eq. 54; or of a part of a right in controversy, in consideration of money or services to enforce it; 16 Ala. 488; 4 Dana, 173; 2 Dev. & B. Eq. 24. Neither do the courts, either of law or of equity, give effect to the assignment of mere personal actions which die with the person; 19 Wend. 73; 4 S. & R. 19; 13 N. Y. 322; 6 Cal. 456. But a claim of damages to property, though arising ex delicto, which on the death of the party would survive to his executors or administrators as assets, may be assigned; 3 E. D. Sm. 246; 12 N. Y. 622; 15 id. 432; 2 Barb. 110; 4 Du. N. Y. 74, 600.

The assignee of a chose in action, unless it be a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange, although without notice, in general takes it subject to all the equities which subsist against the assignor; 1 P. Wms. 496; 4 Price, 161; 1 Johns. N. Y. 522; 7 Pet. 608; 11 Paige, Ch. 467; 2 Stockt. 146. And a payment made by the debtor, even after the assignment of the debt, if before notice thereof, will be effectual; 3 Day, 364; 10 Conn. 444; 3 Binn. 394; 4 Metc. Mass. 594.

To constitute an assignment, no writing or particular form of words is necessary, if the consideration be proved and the meaning of the parties apparent; 15 Mass. 485; 16 Johns. 51; 19 id. 342; 1 Hill, 583; 13 Sim. Ch. 469; 1 M. & C. 690; and therefore the mere delivery of the written evidence of debt; 2 Jones, No. C. 224; 28 Mo. 56; 24 Miss. 260; 13 Mass. 304; 5 Me. 349; 17 Johns. 284; 7 Penn. 251; or the giving of a power of attorney to collect a debt, may operate as an equitable transfer thereof, if such be the intention of the parties; 7 Ves. Ch. 28; 1 Caines, Cas. 18; 19 Wend. 73. See ASSIGNMENT.

Bills of exchange and promissory notes, in exception to the general rule, are by the law merchant transferable, and the legal as well as equitable right passes to the transferee. See BILL OF EXCHANGE. In some states, by statutory provisions, bonds, mortgages, and other documents may be assigned, and the assignee receives the whole title, both legal and equitable; 2 Bouvier, Inst. 192. In New York, the code enables an assignee to maintain an action in his own name in those cases in which the right was assignable in law or in equity before the code was adopted; 4 Du. N. Y. 74.

CHRISTIANITY. The religion established by Jesus Christ.

Christianity has been judicially declared to be a part of the common law of Pennsylvania; 11 S. & R. 394; 5 Binn. 555; of New York, 8 Johns. 291; of Connecticut, 2 Swift, System, 321; of Massachusetts, 7 Dane, Abr. c. 219, a. 2, 19. See 20 Pick. 206. To write or speak contemptuously and maliciously against it is an indictable offence; Cooper, Libel, 59, 114. See 5 Jur. 529; 8 Johns. 290; 20 Pick. 206; 2 Lew. 237.

Archbishop Whately, in his preface to the Elements of Rhetoric, says, "It has been declared, by the highest legal authorities, that 'Christianity is part of the law of the land,' and, consequently, any one who impugns it is liable to prosecution. What is the precise meaning of the above legal maxim I do not profess to determine, having never met with any one who could explain it to me; but evidently the mere circumstance that we have religion by law established does not of itself imply the illegality of arguing against that religion." It seems difficult, says a late accomplished writer (Townsend, St. Tr. vol. ii. p. 389), to render more intelligible a maxim which has perplexed so learned a critic. Christianity was pronounced to be part of the common law, in contradistinction to the ecclesiastical law, for the purpose of proving that the temporal courts, as well as the courts spiritual, had jurisdiction over offences against it. Blasphemies against God and religion are properly cognizable by the law of the land, as they disturb the foundations on which the peace and good order of society rest, root up the principle of positive laws and penal restraints, and remove the chief sanction for truth, without which no question of property could be decided and no criminal brought to justice. Christianity is part of the common law, as its root and branch, its majesty and pillar—as much a component part of that law as the government and maintenance of social order. The inference of the learned archbishop seems scarcely accurate, that all who impugn this part of the law must be prosecuted. It does not follow, because Christianity is part of the law of England, that every one who impugns it is liable to prosecution. The manner of and motives for the assault are the true tests and criteria. Scoffing, flippant, railing comments, not serious arguments, are considered offences at common law, and justly punished, because they shock the pious no less than deprave the ignorant and young. The meaning of Chief-Justice Hale cannot be expressed more plainly than in his own words. An information was exhibited against one Taylor, for uttering blasphemous expressions too horrible to repeat. Hale, C. J., observed that "such kind of wicked, blasphemous words were not only an offence to God and religion, but a crime against the laws, state, and government, and therefore punishable in the court of King's Bench. For, to say religion is a cheat, is to subvert all those obligations whereby civil society is preserved; that Christianity is part of the laws of England, and to reproach the Christian religion is to speak in subversion of the law." Ventr. 293. To remove all possibility of further doubt, the English commissioners on criminal law, in their sixth report, p. 83 (1841), have thus clearly explained their sense of the celebrated passage: "The meaning of the expression used by Lord Hale, that 'Christianity was parcel of the laws of England,' though often cited in subsequent cases, has, we think, been much misunderstood. It appears to us that the expression can only mean either that, as a great part of the securities of our legal system consist of judicial and official oaths sworn upon the Gospels, Christianity is closely interwoven with our municipal law, or that the laws of England, like all municipal laws of a Christian country, must, upon principles of general jurisprudence, be subservient to the positive rules of Christianity. In this sense, Christianity may justly be said to be incorporated with the law of England, so as to form parcel of it; and it was probably in this sense that Lord Hale intended the expression should be understood. At all events, in whatever sense the expression is to be understood, it does not appear to us to supply any reason in favor of the rule that arguments may not be used against it; for it is not criminal to speak or write either against the common law of England, generally, or against particular portions of it, provided it be not done in such a manner as to endanger the public peace by exciting forcible resistance; so that the statement that Christianity is parcel of the law of England, which has been so often urged in justification of laws against blasphemy, however true it may be as a general proposition, certainly furnishes no additional argument for the propriety of such laws." If blasphemy mean a railing accusation, then it is, and ought to be, forbidden; Heard, Lib. & Sl. § 388. See 2 How. 127, 197-201; 11 S. & R. 394; 8 Johns. 290; 10 Ark. 259; 2 Harr. CHURCH. A society of persons who profess the Christian religion. 7 Halst. 206, 214; 10 Pick. 193; 3 Penn. 282; 31 id. 9.

The place where such persons regularly assemble for worship. 5 Tex. 288.

The term church includes the chancel, aisles, and body of the church. Hammond, N. P. 204; 3 Tex. 288. By the English law, the terms church or chapel, and church-yard, are expressly recognized as in themselves correct and technical descriptions of the building and place, even in criminal proceedings; 8 B. & C. 25; 1 Salk. 256; 11 Co. 25 b; 2 Esp. 5, 28.

Burglary may be committed in a church, at common law; 3 Cox, Cr. Cas. 581. The church of England is not deemed a corporation aggregate; but the church in any particular place is so considered, for the purposes at least of receiving a gift of lands; 9 Cra. 292; 2 Conn. 287; 3 Vt. 400; 2 Rich. Eq. 192. See 9 Mass. 44; 11 Pick. 495; 10 id. 97; 1 Me. 288; 3 id. 400; 4 Iowa, 252; 5 Tex. 288; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 143.

As to the right of succession to glebe lands, see 9 Cranch, 43, 292; 9 Wheat. 468; or other church property, see 18 N. Y. 395. As to the power of a church to make by-laws, etc., under local statutes, see 5 S. & R. 510; 3 Penn. 282; 4 Des. 578; 30 Vt. 595; 5 Cush. 412.

Controversies in the civil courts concerning property rights of religious societies are generally to be decided by a reference to one or more of three propositions:—

(1st.) Was the property or fund, which is in question, devoted, by the express terms of the gift, grant, or sale, by which it was acquired, to the support of any specific religious doctrine or belief, or was it acquired for the general use of the society for religious purposes, with no other limitation?

(2d.) Is the society which owned it of strictly congregational or independent form of church government, owing no submission to any organization outside the congregation?

(3d.) Or is it one of a number of such societies, united to form a more general body of churches, with ecclesiastical control in the general association over the members and societies of which it is composed?

In the first class of cases, the court will, when necessary to protect the trust to which the property has been devoted, inquire into the religious faith or practice of the parties claiming its use or control, and will see that it shall not be diverted from that trust.

If the property was acquired in the ordinary way of purchase, or gift, for the use of a religious society, the court will inquire who constitute that society, or its legitimate successors, and award to them the use of the property.

In case of the independent order of the congregation, this is to be determined by the majority of the society, or by such organization of the society as, by its own rules, constitute its government.

In the class of cases in which property has been acquired in the same way by a society which constitutes a subordinate part of a general religious organization with established tribunals for ecclesiastical government, these tribunals must decide all questions of faith, discipline, rule, custom, or ecclesiastical government.

In such cases where the right of property in the civil court is dependent on the question of doctrine, discipline, ecclesiastical law, rule, or custom, or church government, and that has been decided by the highest tribunal within the organization to which it has been carried, the civil court will accept that decision as conclusive, and be governed by it in its application to the case before it; Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 680; s. c. 11 Am. L. Reg. 430; with a full note by Judge Redfield.

See a learned and full article on the law of church corporations; 12 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 201, 329, 537. See also 15 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 264; 92 Ill. 463; 88 Penn. 60, 503; 89 id. 97; 103 U. S. 330.

Where it is apparent from the charter of a church, that it is in full connection with a synodical body, and not independent of it as a congregation, those who secede, whether a majority or not, lose all right and privilege to the corporate property, and those who remain hold them; 10 Paige, 627. Where property is devoted under a trust to a particular religious faith or form of church government, those who adhere, however small in numbers, are entitled to its use, as against those who abandon the doctrines or church government; 1 Speer, Eq. 87; 41 Penn. 9; 48 id. 20; 4 N. J. 653; 1 Kern. 243; 6 Ohio, 363; 16 Mass. 506; 10 Pick. 172; 98 Mass. 65; 7 Paige, 281; 3 Meriv. 264.

CHURCH RATE. A tribute by which the expenses of the church are to be defrayed. They are to be laid by the parishioners, in England, and may be recovered before two justices, or in the ecclesiastical court. Wharton, Dict.

CHURCH-WARDEN. An officer whose duty it is to take care of or guard the church.

They are taken to be a kind of corporation in favor of the church for some purposes: they may have, in that name, property in goods and chattels, and bring actions for them for the use and benefit of the church, but may not waste the church property, and are liable to be called to account; 3 Steph. Com. 90; 1 Bla. Com. 394; Cowel.

These officers are created in some ecclesiastical corporations by the charter, and their rights and duties are definitely explained. In England, it is said, their principal duties are to take care of the church or building, the utensils and furniture, the church-yard, certain matters of good order concerning the church and church-yard, the endowments of the church; Bacon, Abr. By the common law, the capacity of church-wardens to hold property for the church is limited to personal property; 9 Cra. 43.

CHURL. See CEORL.

CINQUE PORTS. The five ports of England which lie towards France.

These ports, on account of their importance as defences to the kingdom, early had certain privileges granted them, and in recompense were bound to furnish a certain number of ships and men to serve on the king's summons once in each year. "The service that the barons of the Cinque Ports acknowledge to owe; upon the king's summons, if it shall happen, to attend with their ships fifteen days at their own cost and charges, and so long as the king pleases, at his own charge;" Cowel, Quinque Portus. The Cinque Ports are Dover, Sandwich, Hastings, Hithe, and Romney. Winchelsea and Rye are reckoned parts of Sandwich; and the other of the Cinque Ports have ports appended to them in like manner. The Cinque Ports have a lord-warden, who had a peculiar jurisdiction, sending out writs in his own name, and who is also constable of Dover Castle. The jurisdiction was abolished by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 48; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 1. The representatives in parliament and the inhabitants of the Cinque Ports are each termed barons; Brande; Cowel; Termes de la Ley.

CIRCUIT. A division of the country, appointed for a particular judge to visit for the trial of causes or for the administration of justice. See 3 Bla. Com. 58; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2532.

Courts are held in each of these circuits, at stated periods, by judges assigned for that purpose; 3 Steph. Com. 321. The United States are divided into nine circuits; 1 Kent, 301.

The term is oftener applied, perhaps, to the periodical journeys of the judges through their various circuits. The judges, or, in England, commissioners of assize and nisi prius, are said to make their circuit; 3 Bla. Com. 57. The custom is of ancient origin. Thus, in A. D. 1176, justices in eyre were appointed, with delegated powers from the aula regis, being held members of that court, and directed to make the circuit of the kingdom once in seven years.

The custom is still retained in some of the states, as well as in England, as, for example, in Massachusetts, where the judges sit in succession in the various counties of the state, and the full bench of the supreme court, by the arrangement of law terms, makes a complete circuit of the state once in each year. See, generally, 3 Steph. Com. 221 et seq.; 1 Kent, 301.

CIRCUIT COURTS. In American Law. Courts whose jurisdiction extends over several counties or districts, and of which terms are held in the various counties or districts to which their jurisdiction extends.

The term is applied distinctively to a class of the federal courts of the United States, of which terms are held in two or more places successively in the various circuits into which the whole country is divided for this purpose; see 1 Kent, 301–309; COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES; and, in some of the states, to courts of general jurisdiction of which terms are held in the various counties or districts of the state. Such courts sit in some instances as courts of nisi prius, in others, either at nisi prius or in banc. They may have an equity as well as a common-law jurisdiction, and may be both civil and criminal courts. The systems of the various states are widely different in these respects; and reference must be had to the articles on the different states for an explanation of the system adopted in each. The term is unknown in the classification of English courts, and conveys a different idea in the various states in which it is adopted as the designation of a court or class of courts, although the constitution of such courts, in many instances, is quite analogous to that of the English courts of assize and nisi prius.

CIRCUITY OF ACTION. Indirectly obtaining, by means of a subsequent action, a result which may be reached in an action already pending.

This is particularly obnoxious to the law, as tending to multiply suits; 4 Cow. 682.

CIRCUMDUCTION. In Scotch Law. A closing of the period for lodging papers, or doing any other act required in a cause. Paterson, Comp.

CIRCUMSTANCES. The particulars which accompany an act. The surroundings at the commission of an act.

The facts proved are either possible or impossible, ordinary and probable or extraordinary and improbable, recent or ancient; they may have happened near us, or afar off; they are public or private, permanent or transitory, clear and simple or complicated; they are always accompanied by circumstances which more or less influence the mind in forming a judgment. And in some instances these circumstances assume the character of irresistible evidence: where, for example, a woman was found dead in a room, with every mark of having met with a violent death, the presence of another person at the scene of action was made manifest by the bloody mark of a left hand visible on her left arm; 14 How. St. Tr. 1324. These points ought to be carefully examined, in order to form a correct opinion. The first question ought to be, Is the fact possible? If so, are there any circumstances which render it impossible? If the facts are impossible, the witness ought not to be credited. If, for example, a man should swear that he saw the deceased shoot himself with his own pistol, and, upon an examination of the ball which killed him, it should be found too large to enter into the pistol, the witness ought not to be credited; 1 Starkie, Ev. 505; or if one should swear that another had been guilty of an impossible crime.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE. See EVIDENCE.

CIRCUMSTANTIBUS. See TALES.

CIRCUMVENTION. In Scotch Law. Any act of fraud whereby a person is reduced to a deed by decreet. Tech. Dict. It has the same sense in the civil law. Dig. 50. 17. 49. 155; id. 12. 6. 6. 2; id. 41. 2. 34.

CITACION. In Spanish Law. The order of a legal tribunal directing an individual against whom a suit has been instituted to appear and defend it within a given time. It is synonymous with the term emplazamiento in the old Spanish law, and the in jus vocatio of the Roman law.

CITATIO AD REASSUMENDAM CAUSAM. In Civil Law. The name of a citation, which issued when a party died pending a suit, against the heir of the defendant, or, when the plaintiff died, for the heir of the plaintiff. Our bill of revivor is probably borrowed from this proceeding.

CITATION (Lat. citare, to call, to summon). In Practice. A writ issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction, commanding a person therein named to appear on a day named and do something therein mentioned, or show cause why he should not. Proctor, Pract.

The act by which a person is so summoned or cited.

In the ecclesiastical law, the citation is the beginning and foundation of the whole cause, and is said to have six requisites, namely: the insertion of the name of the judge, of the promovert, of the impugnant, of the cause of suit, of the place, and of the time of appearance; to which may be added the affixing the seal of the court, and the name of the register or his deputy. 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 453, 454; Ayliffe, Parerg. xliii. 175; Hall, Adm. Pr. 5; Merlin, Rép.

The process issued in courts of probate and admiralty courts. It is usually the original process in any proceeding where used, and is in that respect analogous to the writ of capias or summons at law, and the subpœna in chancery.

In Scotch Practice. The calling of a party to an action done by an officer of the court under a proper warrant.

The service of a writ or bill of summons. Paterson, Comp.

CITATION OF AUTHORITIES. The production of or reference to the text of acts of legislatures, treatises, or cases of similar nature decided by the courts, in order to support propositions advanced.

As the knowledge of the law is to a great degree a knowledge of precedents, it follows that there must be necessarily a frequent reference to these preceding decisions to obtain support for propositions advanced as being statements of what the law is. Constant reference to the law as it is enacted is, of course, necessary. References to the works of legal writers are also desirable for elucidation and explanation of doubtful points of law.

In the United States, the laws of the general government are generally cited by their date: as, Act of Sept. 24, 1789, § 35; or, Act of 1819, c. 170, 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1722; or by the section of the Revised Statutes of 1878, or its supplement. The same practice prevails in Pennsylvania, and in most of the other states, when the date of the statute is important. Otherwise, in most of the states, reference is made to the revised code of laws or the official publication of the laws: as, Va. Rev. Code, c. 26; N. Y. Rev. Stat. 4th ed. 400. Books of reports and text-books are generally cited by the number of the volume and page: as, 2 Washburn, R. P. 350; 4 Penn. 60. Sometimes, however, the paragraphs are numbered, and reference is made to the paragraphs: as, Story, Bailm. § 494; Gould, Pl. c. 5, § 30.

The civilians on the continent of Europe, in referring to the Institutes, Code, and Pandects or Digest, usually give the number, not of the book, but of the law, and the first word of the title to which it belongs; and, as there are more than a thousand of these, it is no easy task for one not thoroughly acquainted with those collections to find the place to which reference is made. The American writers generally follow the natural mode of reference, by putting down the name of the collection, and then the number of the book, title, law, and section. For example, Inst. 4. 15. 2. signifies Institutes, book 4, title 15, and section 2; Dig. 41. 9. 1. 3. means Digest, book 41, title 9, law 1, section 3; Dig. pro dote, or ff pro dote, signifies section 3, law 1, of the book and title of the Digest or Pandects entitled pro dote. It is proper to remark that Dig. and ff are equivalent: the former signifies Digest, and the latter—which is a careless mode of writing the Greek letter π, the first letter of the word πανδεκται—signifies Pandects; and the Digest and Pandects are different names for one and the same thing. The Code is cited in the same way. The Novels are cited by their number, with that of the chapter and paragraph: for example, Nov. 185. 2. 4. for Novella Justiniani 185, capite 2, paragrapho 4. Novels are also quoted by the Collation, the title, chapter, and paragraph, as follows: In Authentico, Collutione 1, titulo 1, cap. 281. The Authentics are quoted by their first words, after which is set down the title of the Code under which they are placed: for example, Authentica, cum testator, Codice ad legem fascidiam. See Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 65; Domat, Civ. Law, Cush. ed. Index.

In this edition of this work the system of citation adopted in the last edition has been somewhat varied from, in order that citations of authorities might take up as little space as possible. The briefest possible citation, that will avoid ambiguity, has been adopted; the table of abbreviations (see ABBREVIATIONS) gives the full name of the book or volume of reports referred to in all cases.

Statutes of the various states will be cited by giving the number of the volume (where there are more volumes than one), the name of the state (using the common geographical abbreviation), the designation of the code, and the page where the statute or provision in consideration is found: thus, 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 4th ed. 63. To this it is desirable to add, when regard for space allows, the chapter and section of the statute referred to.

United States statutes, and statutes of the states not included in the codified collection of the state, are cited as statutes of the year in which they were enacted, or by the proper section of the Revised Statutes.

English statutes are referred to by indicating the year of the reign in which they were enacted, the chapter and section: thus, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 96, § 2.

Text-books are referred to by giving the number of the volume (where there are more volumes than one), and the name of the author, with an abbreviation of the title of the work sufficiently extended to distinguish it from other works by the same author and to indicate the class of subjects of which it treats: thus, 2 Story, Const.

Where an edition is referred to which has been prepared by other persons than the authors, or where an edition subsequent to the first is referred to, this fact is sometimes indicated, and the page, section, or paragraph of the edition cited is given: thus, Angell & A. Corp. Lothrop ed. 96; Smith, Lead. Cas. 5th Hare & W. ed. 173. The various editions of Blackstone's Commentaries, however, have the editor's name preceding the title of the book: thus, Sharswood, Bla. Com.; Coleridge, Bla. Com.; wherever the reference is to a note by the editor cited; otherwise the reference is merely to Blackstone.

Reports of the Federal courts of the United States, and of the English, Irish, and Scotch courts, are cited by the names of the reporters: thus, 3 Cranch, 96; 5 East, 241. In a few instances, however, common usage has given a distinctive name to a series; and wherever this is the case such name has been adopted; as, Term; C. B.; Exch.

The reports of the state courts are cited by the name of the state, wherever a series of such reports has been recognized as existing: thus, 5 Ill. 63; 21 Penn. 96; and the same rule applies to citations of the reports of provincial courts: thus, 6 Low. C. 167.

Otherwise, the reporter's name is used; thus, 5 Rawle, 23, or an abbreviation of it; as, 11 Pick. 23. This rule extends also to the provincial reports; and the principle is applied to the decisions of Scotch and Irish cases.

Where the same reporter reports decisions in courts both of law and equity, an additional abbreviation indicates which series is meant: thus, 3 Paige, Ch. 87.

For a list of abbreviations as used in this book, and as commonly used in legal books, see ABBREVIATIONS. For a list of reports, see REPORTS.

CITIZEN. In English Law. An inhabitant of a city. 1 Rolle, 138. The representative of a city, in parliament. 1 Bla. Com. 174.

In American Law. One who, under the constitution and laws of the United States, has a right to vote for representatives in congress, and other public officers, and who is qualified to fill offices in the gift of the people.

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside; XIV. Amendment, U. S. Const.

One of the sovereign people. A constituent member of the sovereignty, synonymous with the people. 19 How. 404.

A member of the civil state entitled to all its privileges; Cooley, Constit. Law, 77. See 92 U. S. 542; 21 Wall. 162.

Citizens are either native-born or naturalized. Native citizens may fill any office; naturalized citizens may be elected or appointed to any office under the constitution of the United States, except the offices of president and vice-president. The constitution of the United States (art. 4, s. 2) provides that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states." These are privileges which in their nature are fundamental; which belong of right to the citizens of all free states, and which have, at all times, been enjoyed by the citizens of the several states; 4 Wash. C. C. 380. The supreme court will not define these, but will decide each case as it arises; 12 Wall. 418; 94 U. S. 39; 18 How. 591; see 37 N. J. 106; 55 Ill. 185; 16 Wall. 36, 130; 8 id. 168; 18 id. 129; 92 U. S. 542. The term citizen in the constitution applies only to natural persons; 8 Wall. 168; 1 Woods, 85.

Free persons of color, born in the United States, were always entitled to be regarded as citizens; 1 Abb. U. S. 28; but see 19 How. 393. Negroes born within the United States are citizens; 2 Bond, 389; Chase's Dec. 157 (but not before the 14th Amendment; 19 How. 393; 10 Bush, 681); but the child of a member of one of the Indian tribes within the United States is not a citizen, though born in the United States; 2 Sawy. 118; 1 Dill. 444; but quære if the parents had given up their tribal relations; Abb. L. Dict. sub voce. The fact that an unnaturalized person of foreign birth is enabled by a state statute to vote and hold office does not make him a citizen;

4 Dill. 425. A Chinaman is not entitled to become naturalized; 5 Sawy. 155.

The age of the person does not affect his citizenship, though it may his political rights; 1 Abb. L. Dict. 224; nor the sex; ibid.; 21 Wall. 162; 92 U. S. 214; 1 McArthur, 169; the right to vote and the right to hold office are not necessary constituents of citizenship; 21 Wall. 162; 43 Cal. 43.

All natives are not citizens of the United States: the descendants of the aborigines are not entitled to the rights of citizens; see supra. Anterior to the adoption of the constitution of the United States, each state had the right to make citizens of such persons as it pleased.

A citizen of the United States residing in any of the states of the Union is a citizen of that state; 6 Pet. 761; Paine, 594; 6 Rob. 33; 12 Blatch. 320; 1 Brock. 391; 1 Paige, Ch. 183.

The child of American parents born in a foreign country, on board an American ship of which his father was the captain, is a citizen of the United States; 5 Blatch. 18; and so is a child born abroad whose father was at the time a citizen of the United States residing abroad; 13 Op. Att.-Gen. 91; 45 Iowa, 99.

A person may be a citizen for commercial purposes and not for political purposes; 7 Md. 209.

Consult 3 Story, Const. § 1687; 2 Kent, 258; Bouvier, Inst.; Vattel, l. 1, c. 19, § 212.

As to citizenship as acquired by naturalization, see ALLEGIANCE.

CITY. In England. An incorporated town or borough which is or has been the see of a bishop. Co. Litt. 108; 1 Bla. Com. 114; Cowel.

A large town incorporated with certain privileges. The inhabitants of a city. The citizens. Worcester, Dict.

Although the first definition here given is sanctioned by such high authority, it is questionable if it is essential to its character as a city, even in England, that it has been at any time a see; and it certainly retains its character of a city after it has lost its ecclesiastical character; 1 Steph. Com. 115; 1 Bla. Com. 114; and in the United States it is clearly unnecessary that it should ever have possessed this character. Originally, this word did not signify a town, but a portion of mankind who lived under the same government—what the Romans called civitas, and the Greeks πολις; whence the word politeia, civitas seu respublica status et administratio. Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. 1. 1, t. 1, n. 202; Henrion de Pansey, Pouvoir Municipal, pp. 36, 37.

CIVIL. In contradistinction to barbarous or savage, indicates a state of society reduced to order and regular government: thus, we speak of civil life, civil society, civil government, and civil liberty. In contradistinction to criminal, to indicate the private rights and remedies of men, as members of the community, in contrast to those which are public and relate to the government: thus, we speak of civil process and criminal process, civil jurisdiction and criminal jurisdiction.

It is also used in contradistinction to military or ecclesiastical, to natural or foreign; thus, we speak of a civil station, as opposed to a military or an ecclesiastical station; a civil death, as opposed to a natural death; a civil war, as opposed to a foreign war; Story, Const. § 789; 1 Bla. Com. 6, 125, 251; Montesquieu, Sp. of Laws, b. 1, c. 3; Rutherforth, Inst. b. 2, c. 2; id. c. 3; id. c. 8, p. 359; Heineccius, Elem. Jurisp. Nat. b. 2, ch. 6.

CIVIL ACTION. In Practice.

IN THE CIVIL LAW.—A personal action which is instituted to compel payment, or the doing some other thing which is purely civil. Pothier, Introd. Gen. aux Cout. 110.

AT COMMON LAW.—An action which has for its object the recovery of private or civil rights or compensation for their infraction. See ACTION.

CIVIL COMMOTION. An insurrection of the people for general purposes, though it may not amount to rebellion where there is an usurped power. 2 Marsh. Ins. 793.

In the printed proposals which are considered as making a part of the contract of insurance against fire, it is declared that the insurance company will not make good any loss happening by any civil commotion.

CIVIL DAMAGE ACTS. Acts passed in many of the United States which provide an action for damages against a vender of intoxicating liquors, on behalf of the wife or family of a person who has sustained injuries by reason of his intoxication. Such an act, even if it allows an action against the owner on the property where the liquor was sold, without evidence that he authorized the sale, is constitutional; 74 N. Y. 509; the act in New York creates a new right of action, viz., for injury to the "means of support;" it is not necessary that the injury should be one remediable at common law; ibid. 526. The Indiana act is constitutional, even though the liquor-seller was licensed; 57 Ind. 171. So in 41 Mich. 475. CIVIL DEATH. That change of state of a person which is considered in the law as equivalent to death. See DEATH.

CIVIL LAW. This term is generally used to designate the Roman jurisprudence, jus civile Romanorum.

In its most extensive sense, the term Roman Law comprises all those legal rules and principles which were in force among the Romans, without reference to the time when they were adopted. But in a more restricted sense we understand by it the law compiled under the auspices of the Emperor Justinian, and which are still in force in many of the states of modern Europe, and to which all refer as authority or written reason.

The ancient leges curiatæ are said to have been collected in the time of Tarquin, the last of the kings, by a pontifex maximus of the name of Sextus or Publius Papirius. This collection is known under the title of Jus Civile Papirianum; its existing fragments are few, and those of an apocryphal character. Mackeldey, § 21.

After a fierce and uninterrupted struggle between the patricians and plebeians, the latter extorted from the former the celebrated law of the Twelve Tables, in the year 300 of Rome. This law, framed by the decemvirs and adopted in the comitia centuriata, acquired great authority, and constituted the foundation of all the public and private laws of the Romans, subsequently, until the time of Justinian. It is called Lex Decemviralis. Id. From this period the sources of the jus scriptum consisted in the leges, the plebiscita, the senatusconsulta, and the constitutions of the emperors, constitutiones principum; and the jus non scriptum was found partly in the mores majorum, the consuetudo, and the res judicata, or auctoritas rerum perpetua similiter judicatorum. The edicts of the magistrates, or jus honorarium, also formed a part of the unwritten law; but by far the most prolific source of the jus non scriptum consisted in the opinions and writings of the lawyers—responsa prudentium.

The few fragments of the twelve tables that have come down to us are stamped with the harsh features of their aristocratic origin. But the jus honorarium established by the prætors and other magistrates, as well as that part of the customary law which was built up by the opinions and writings of the prudentes, are founded essentially on principles of natural justice.

Many collections of the imperial constitutions had been made before the advent of Justinian to the throne. He was the first after Theodosius who ordered a new compilation to be made. For this purpose he appointed a committee of ten lawyers, with very extensive powers; at their head was the ex-quæstor sacri palatii, Johannes, and among them the afterwards well-known Tribonian. His instructions were to select, in the most laconic form, all that was still of value in the existing collections, as well as in the later constitutions; to omit all obsolete matter; to introduce such alterations as were required by the times; and to divide the whole into appropriate titles. Within fourteen months the committee had finished their labors. Justinian confirmed this new code, which consisted of twelve books, by a special ordinance, and prohibited the use of the older collections of rescripts and edicts. This Code of Justinian, which is now called Codex vetus, has been entirely lost.

After the completion of this code, Justinian, in 530, ordered Tribonian, who was now invested with the dignity of quæstor sacri palatii, and sixteen other jurists, to select all the most valuable passages from the writings of the old jurists which were regarded as authoritative, and to arrange them, according to their subjects, under suitable heads. These commissioners also enjoyed very extensive powers; they had the privilege, at their discretion, to abbreviate, to add, and to make such other alterations as they might consider adapted to the times; and they were especially ordered to remove all the contradictions of the old jurists, to avoid all repetitions, and to omit all that had become entirely obsolete. The natural consequence of this was, that the extracts did not always truly represent the originals, but were often interpolated and amended in conformity with the existing law. Alterations, modifications, and additions of this kind are now usually called emblemata Triboniani. This great work is called the Pandects, or Digest, and was completed by the commissioners in three years. Within that short space of time, they had extracted from the writings of no less than thirty-nine jurists all that they considered valuable for the purpose of this compilation. It was divided into fifty books, and was entitled Digesta sive Pandectæ juris enucleati ex omni vetere jure collecti. The Pandects were published on the 16th of December, 533, but they did not go into operation until the 30th of that month. In confirming the Pandects, Justinian prohibited further reference to the old jurists; and, in order to prevent legal science from becoming again so diffuse, indefinite, and uncertain as it had previously been, he forbade the writing of commentaries upon the new compilation, and permitted only the making of literal translations into Greek.

In preparing the Pandects, the compilers met very frequently with controversies in the writings of the jurists. Such questions, to the number of thirty-four, had been already determined by Justinian before the commencement of the collection of the Pandects, and before its completion the decisions of this kind were increased to fifty, and were known as the fifty decisions of Justinian. These decisions were at first collected separately, and afterwards embodied in the new code.

For the purpose of facilitating the study of the law, Justinian ordered Tribonian, with the assistance of Theophilus and Dorotheus, to prepare a brief system of law under the title of Institutes, which should contain the elements of legal science. This work was founded on, and to a great extent copied from, the commentaries of Gaius, which, after having been lost for many centuries, were discovered by the great historian Niebuhr, in 1816, in a palimpsest, or re-written manuscript, of some of the homilies of St. Jerome, in the Chapter Library of Verona. What had become obsolete in the commentaries was omitted in the Institutes, and references were made to the new constitutions of Justinian so far as they had been issued at the time. Justinian published his Institutes on the 21st November, 533, and they obtained the force of law at the same time with the Pandects, December 30, 533. Theophilus, one of the editors, delivered lectures on the Institutes in the Greek language, and from these lectures originated the valuable commentaries known under the Latin title, Theophili Antecessoris Paraphrasis Græca Institutionum Cæsarearum. The Institutes consist of four books, each of which contains several titles.

After the publication of the Pandects and the Institutes, Justinian ordered a revision of the Code, which had been promulgated in the year 529. This became necessary on account of the great number of new constitutions which he had issued, and of the fifty decisions not included in the Old Code, and by which the law had been altered, amended, or modified. He therefore directed Tribonian, with the assistance of Dorotheus, Menna, Constantinus, and Johannes, to revise the Old Code and to incorporate the new constitutions into it. This revision was completed in the same year; and the new edition of the Code, Codex repetitæ prælectionis, was confirmed on the 16th November, 534, and the Old Code abolished. The Code contains twelve books, subdivided into appropriate titles.

During the interval between the publication of the Codex repetitæ prælectionis, in 535, to the end of his reign, in 565, Justinian issued, at different times, a great number of new constitutions, by which the law on many subjects was entirely changed. The greater part of these constitutions were written in Greek, in obscure and pompous language, and published under the name of Novellæ Constitutiones, which are known to us as the Novels of Justinian. Soon after his death, a collection of one hundred and sixty-eight Novels was made, one hundred and fifty-four of which had been issued by Justinian, and the others by his successors.

Justinian's collections were, in ancient times, always copied separately, and afterwards they were printed in the same way. When taken together, they were indeed called, at an early period, the Corpus Juris Civilis; but this was not introduced as the regular title comprehending the whole body; each volume had its own title until Dionysius Gothofredus gave this general title in the second edition of his glossed Corpus Juris Civilis, in 1604. Since that time this title has been used in all the editions of Justinian's collections.

It is generally believed that the laws of Justinian were entirely lost and forgotten in the Western Empire from the middle of the eighth century until the alleged discovery of a copy of the Pandects at the storming and pillage of Amalfi, in 1135. This is one of those popular errors which had been handed down from generation to generation without question or inquiry, but which has now been completely exploded by the learned discussion, supported by conclusive evidence, of Savigny, in his History of the Roman Law during the Middle Ages. Indeed, several years before the sack of Amalfi the celebrated Irnerius delivered lectures on the Pandects in the University of Bologna. The pretended discovery of a copy of the Digest at Amalfi, and its being given by Lothaire II. to his allies the Pisans as a reward for their services, is an absurd fable. No doubt, during the five or six centuries when the human intellect was in a complete state of torpor, the study of the Roman Law, like that of every other branch of knowledge, was neglected; but on the first dawn of the revival of learning the science of Roman jurisprudence was one of the first to attract the attention of mankind; and it was taught with such brilliant success as to immortalize the name of Irnerius, its great professor.

Even at the present time the Roman Law exercises dominion in every state in Europe except England. The countrymen of Lycurgus and Solon are governed by it, and in the vast empire of Russia it furnishes the rule of civil conduct. In America, it is the foundation of the law of Louisiana, Canada, Mexico, and all the republics of South America. Its influence in the formation of the common law of England cannot be denied by the impartial inquirer. It was publicly taught in England, by Roger Vacarius, as early as 1149; and all admit that the whole equity jurisprudence prevailing in England and the United States is mainly based on the civil law. See CODES; DIGESTS; INSTITUTES; NOVELS.

CIVIL LIST. An annual sum granted by the English parliament at the commencement of each reign, for the expenses of the royal household and establishment as distinguished from the general exigencies of the state. It is the provision for the crown made out of the taxes in lieu of its proper patrimony and in consideration of the assignment of that patrimony to the public use. Wharton, Dict.

CIVIL OBLIGATION. One which binds in law, and which may be enforced in a court of justice. Pothier, Obl. 173, 191.

CIVIL OFFICER. Any officer of the United States who holds his appointment under the national government, whether his duties are executive or judicial, in the highest or the lowest departments of the government, with the exception of officers of the army and navy. Rawle, Const. 213; 1 Story, Const. § 790.

The term occurs in the constitution of the United States, art. 2, sec. 4, which provides that the president, vice-president, and civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of, treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. It has been decided that a senator of the United States is not a civil officer within the meaning of this clause in the constitution. Senate Journals, 10th January, 1799; 4 Tucker, Bla. Com. App. 57, 58; Rawle, Const. 213; Sergeant, Const. Law, 376; Story, Const. § 791.

CIVIL REMEDY. In Practice. The remedy which the party injured by the commission of a tortious act has by action against the party committing it, as distinguished from the proceeding by indictment, by which the wrong-doer is made to expiate the injury done to society.

In cases of treason, felony, and some other of the graver offences, this private remedy is suspended, on grounds of public policy, until after the prosecution of the wrong-doer for the public wrong; 4 Bla. Com. 363; 12 East, 409; 35 Ala. 184; 1 N. H. 239. The law is otherwise in Massachusetts, except, perhaps, in case of felonies punishable with death; 15 Mass. 333; North Carolina, 1 Tayl. 58; Ohio, 4 Ohio, 377; South Carolina, 3 Brev. 302; Mississippi, 30 Miss. 492; Tennessee, 6 Humph. 433; Maine, 23 Me. 381; and Virginia. At common law, in cases of homicide the civil remedy is merged in the public punishment; 1 Chitty, Pr. 10. See INJURIES; MERGER; Bish. Cr. L. § 267.

CIVIL RIGHTS. A term applied to certain rights secured to citizens of the United States by the 13th and 14th Amendments to the constitution, and by various acts of congress made in pursuance thereof.

The act of April 9, 1866, provided that all persons born in the United States, and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are citizens of the United States: that such citizens of every race and color shall have the same right in every state and territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, etc., and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property, as is enjoyed by white citizens, and be subject to like punishment, etc., and none other. This act is constitutional; 1 Abb. U. S. 28; 1 Am. L. T. 7; and must be liberally construed; 1 Abb. U. S. 28.

It is substantially replaced by the 14th Amendment which provides that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; or deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; or deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

This provision applies to white as well as colored persons, and is intended to protect them against the action both of their own state and of other states in which they may happen to be. It renders void an act of a state legislature which gives to a few persons the sole right to carry on stock yards near New Orleans; 16 Wall. 36. A statute of West Virginia provided that juries should be composed of "white male citizens," etc. Held, that the object of this amendment was to prevent any discrimination between whites and blacks, and this statute was therefore invalid; 99 U. S. 303. But where a statute of Virginia did not in terms exclude negroes from juries, but entrusted the selection of jurymen to the county judge who habitually excluded negroes in his selection, held that his conduct was a gross violation of the act of congress of March, 1878, which prohibits such discrimination, but that it was not such a denial of the rights of negroes as is contemplated by the statutes for the removal of such causes to the federal courts; a mixed jury in any particular case is not provided for in the act; but it is the right of every colored man that in the selection of jurymen to pass upon his life, etc., negroes shall not be, by law, excluded on account of their race; 100 U. S. 313; 17 Alb. L. J. 111.

The provision of the act of March 1, 1875, that no person possessing all other qualifications required by law shall be disqualified from jury service in any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and imposing a penalty upon any officer who shall not comply with its provisions, is constitutional; 100 U. S. 339.

Where equally good public schools are provided for white and colored children, a provision that the two races shall attend different schools is not contrary to the 14th Amendment; 3 Woods, 177. So of the separation of white and black persons in public conveyances, when appropriate, though distinct, quarters are provided for each; 9 Cent. L. J. 206. These amendments were designed to secure rights of a civil and political nature only, but not social or domestic rights; a state law forbidding marriages between whites and blacks does not contravene these provisions; 59 Ala. 57; 3 Woods, 367; 3 Hughes, 9; 30 Gratt. 808.

A state is not prohibited by the 14th Amendment from prescribing the jurisdiction of the several courts, either as to their territorial limits, or the subject matter, amount, or penalties of their respective judgments; 101 U. S. 22.

A state law punishing more severely adultery between a white and a negro is valid; 58 Ala. 190. So is one declaring null and void marriages between whites and negroes; 1 Woods, 537.

A law in Maine that no person shall recover damages from any municipality for injuries caused by a defective highway, if he is a resident of a place by the laws of which such actions will not lie, is invalid under the 14th Amendment; 69 Me. 278.

The right to sell liquor is not one of the rights of citizens protected by the 14th Amendment; 18 Wall. 129.

Negroes born within the United States are entitled to vote under the 14th Amendment, and are protected therein by the act of May 31, 1870; 2 Bond, 389.

This amendment does not add to the privileges and immunities of citizens, but only protects those which they already have. It does not entitle women to vote in the various states; 21 Wall. 162; 1 McArth. 169; 11 Blatch. 200. It does not prohibit a state from passing laws to regulate the charges of warehousemen in their business; 94 U. S. 113.

CIVILIAN. A doctor, professor, or student of the civil law.

CIVILITER. Civilly: opposed to criminaliter, or criminally.

When a person does an unlawful act injurious to another, whether with or without an intention to commit a tort, he is responsible civiliter. In order to make him liable criminaliter, he must have intended to do the wrong; for it is a maxim, actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea. 2 East, 104.

CIVILITER MORTUUS. Civilly dead. In a state of civil death.

CLAIM. A challenge of the ownership of a thing which is wrongfully withheld from the possession of the claimant. Plowd. 359. See 1 Dall. 444; 12 S. & R. 179.

The owner of property proceeded against in admiralty by a suit in rem must present a claim to such property, verified by oath or affirmation, stating that the claimant by whom or on whose behalf the claim is made, and no other person, is the true and bonâ fide owner thereof, as a necessary preliminary to his making defence; 2 Conkl. Adm. 201-210.

A demand entered of record of a mechanic or material-man for work done or material furnished in the erection of a building, in certain counties in Pennsylvania.

The assertion of a liability to the party making it to do some service or pay a sum of money. See 16 Pet. 539.

The possession of a settler upon the wild lands of the government of the United States; the lands which such a settler holds possession of.

The land must be so marked out as to distinguish it from adjacent lands; 10 Ill. 273; 2 id. 185. Such claims are considered as personalty in the administration of decedents' estates; 8 Iowa, 463; are proper subjects of sale and transfer; 1 Morr. 70, 80, 312; 8 Iowa, 463; 5 Ill. 531; 14 id. 171; the possessor being required to deduce a regular title from the first occupant to maintain ejectment, 5 Ill. 531, and a sale furnishing sufficient consideration for a promissory note; 1 Morr. 80, 438; 1 Iowa, 23. An express promise to pay for improvements made by "claimants" is good, and the proper amount to be paid may be determined by the jury; 2 Ill. 532.

CLAIM OF CONUSANCE. In Practice. An intervention by a third person demanding jurisdiction of a cause which the plaintiff has commenced out of the claimant's court. Now obsolete. 2 Wils. 409; 3 Bla. Com. 298. See COGNIZANCE.

CLAIMANT. In Admiralty Practice. A person authorized and admitted to defend a libel brought in rem against property: thus, for example, Thirty hogsheads of sugar, Bentzon Claimant v. Boyle, 9 Cra. 191.

CLAMOR (Lat.). A suit or demand; a complaint. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

In Civil Law. A claimant. A debt; any thing claimed from another. A proclamation; an accusation. Du Cange.

CLARE CONSTAT (Lat. it is clearly evident).

In Scotch Law. A deed given by a mesne lord (subject-superior) for the purpose of completing the title of the vassal's heir to the lands held by the deceased vassal under the grantor. Bell, Dict.

CLARENDON, CONSTITUTIONS OF. The constitutions of Clarendon were certain statutes made in the reign of Henry II. of England, at a parliament held at Clarendon (A. D. 1164) by which the king checked the power of the pope and his clergy, and greatly narrowed the exemption they claimed from secular jurisdiction.

Previous to this time, there had been an entire separation between the clergy and laity, as members of the same commonwealth. The clergy, having emancipated themselves from the laws as administered by the courts of law, had assumed powers and exemptions quite inconsistent with the good government of the country.

This state of things led to the enactment referred to. By this enactment all controversies arising out of ecclesiastical matters were required to be determined in the civil courts, and all appeals in spiritual causes were to be carried from the bishops to the primate, and from him to the king, but no further without the king's consent. The archbishops and bishops were to be regarded as barons of the realm, possessing the privileges and subject to the burdens belonging to that rank, and bound to attend the king in his councils. The revenues of vacant sees were to belong to the king, and goods forfeited to him by law were no longer to be protected in churches or church-yards. Nor were the clergy to pretend to the right of enforcing the payment of debts in cases where they had been accustomed to do so, but should leave all lawsuits to the determination of the civil courts. The rigid enforcement of these statutes by the king was unhappily stopped, for a season, by the fatal event of his disputes with Archbishop Becket; Fitz Stephen, 27; 2 Lingard, 59; 1 Hume, 382; Wilkins, 321; 4 Bla. Com. 422.

CLASS. A number of persons or things ranked together for some common purpose or as possessing some attribute in common.

The term is used of legatees; 3 M'Cord, Ch. 440; of obligees in a bond; 3 Dev. 284; 4 id. 382; and of other collections of persons; 17 Wend. 53; 16 Pick. 132.

CLAUSE. A part of a treaty; of a legislative act; of a deed; of a will, or other written instrument. A part of a sentence.

CLAUSUM. In Old English Law. Close. Closed.

A writ was either clausum (close) or apertum (open). Grants were said to be by litera patentæ (open grant) or litera clausæ (close grant); 2 Bla. Com. 346.

A close. An enclosure.

Occurring in the phrase quare clausum fregit (4 Blackf. Ind. 181), it denotes in this sense only realty in which the plaintiff has some exclusive interest, whether for a limited or unlimited time or for special or for general purposes; 1 Chitty, Pl. 174; 9 Cow. 39; 12 Mass. 127; 6 East, 606.

CLAUSUM FREGIT. See QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT; TRESPASS.

CLEARANCE. A certificate given by the collector of a port, in which it is stated that the master or commander (naming him) of a ship or vessel named and described, bound for a port named (and having on board goods described, in case the master requires the particulars of his cargo to be stated in such clearance), has entered and cleared his ship or vessel according to law.

This certificate, or clearance, evidences the right of the vessel to depart on her voyage; and clearance has therefore been properly defined as a permission to sail. The same term is also used to signify the act of clearing. Worcester, Dict.

The sixteenth section of the act of August 18, 1856 (R. S. § 4207), regulating the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States, makes it the duty of the collector of the customs whenever any clearance is granted to any ship or vessel of the United States, duly registered as such, and bound on any foreign voyage, to annex thereto, in every case, a copy of the rates or tariff of fees which shall be allowed in pursuance of the provisions of that act. See the form of clearance and tariff of fees, Regulations under Revenue Laws, 1857, 90, 91, art. 123, 124, 125.

The act of congress of 2d March, 1799, section 93 (R. S. § 4197), directs that the master of any vessel bound to a foreign port or place shall deliver to the collector of the district from which such vessel shall be about to depart a manifest of all the cargo on board, and the value thereof, by him subscribed, and shall swear or affirm to the truth thereof; whereupon the collector shall grant a clearance for such vessel and her cargo, but without specifying the particulars thereof in such clearance, unless required by the master so to do. And if any vessel bound to any foreign place shall depart on her voyage to such foreign place without delivering such a manifest and obtaining a clearance, the master shall forfeit and pay the sum of five hundred dollars for every such offence: provided, that the collectors and other officers of the customs shall pay due regard to the inspection laws of the states in which they respectively act, in such manner that no vessel having on board goods liable to inspection shall be cleared out until the master or other person shall have produced such certificate, that all such goods have been duly inspected, as the laws of the respective states do or may require to be produced to the collector or other officer of the customs; and provided, that receipts for the payment of all legal fees which shall have accrued on any vessel shall, before any clearance is granted, be produced to the collector or other officer aforesaid.

The 11th section of the act of February 10, 1820 (R. S. § 4200) provides that, before a clearance shall be granted for any vessel bound to a foreign place, the owners, shippers, or consignors of the cargo on board of such vessel shall deliver to the collector manifests of the cargo, or the parts thereof shipped by them respectively, and shall verify the same by oath or affirmation; and such manifests shall specify the kinds and quantities of the articles shipped by them respectively, and the value of the total quantity of each kind of articles; and such oath or affirmation shall state that such manifest contains a full, just, and true account of all articles laden on board of such vessel by the owners, shippers, or consignors respectively, and that the values of such articles are truly stated according to their actual cost or the values which they truly bear at the port and time of exportation. And, before a clearance shall be granted for any such vessel, the master of every such vessel, and the owners, shippers, and consignors of the cargo, shall state, upon oath or affimation, to the collector, the foreign place or country in which such cargo is truly intended to be landed; and the said oath or affirmation shall be taken and subscribed in writing.

According to Boulay-Paty, Dr. Com. t. 2, p. 19, the clearance is imperatively demanded for the safety of the vessel; for if a vessel should be found without it at sea it may be legally taken and brought into some court for adjudication on a charge of piracy. See SHIP'S PAPERS, and the Regulations under the Revenue Laws, above referred to, 88–98.

CLEARING-HOUSE. In Commercial Law. An office where bankers settle daily with each other the balance of their accounts.

The London clearing-house has long been established; and a similar office was opened in New York in 1853. The plan was found so efficient as to recommend it to bankers in all our large cities, and it has been generally introduced. The Clearing-House Association of New York consists of all the incorporated banks—private bankers not being admitted, as in London. Two clerks from each bank attend at the clearing-house every morning, where one takes a position inside of an elliptical counter at a desk bearing the number of his bank, the other standing outside the counter and holding in his hand fifty-four parcels, containing the checks on each of the other banks received the previous day. At the sound of a bell, the outside men begin to move, and at each desk they deposit the proper parcel, with an account of its contents—until, having walked around the ellipse, they find themselves at their own desk again. At the end of this process the representative of each bank has handed to the representatives of every other bank the demands against them, and received from each of the other banks their demands on his bank. A comparison of the amounts tells him at once whether he is to pay into or receive from the clearing-house a balance in money. The clearing-house is under the charge of a superintendent and several clerks. Balances are paid in coin daily. In London the practice of presenting checks at the clearing-house has been held a good presentment to the banker at law. It is not usual to examine the checks until they are taken to the bank, and if any are then found not good they are returned to the bank which presented them, which settles for such returned checks in coin. In this country, when a check is returned not good through the clearing-house, it is usually again presented at the bank; and no case has arisen to test the validity of a presentment through the clearing-house only.

CLEMENTINES. In Ecclesiastical Law. The collection of decretals or constitutions of Pope Clement V., which was published, by order of John XXII., his successor, in 1317.

The death of Clement V., which happened in 1314, prevented him from publishing this collection, which is properly a compilation as well of the epistles and constitutions of this pope as of the decrees of the council of Vienna, over which he presided. The Clementines are divided into five books, in which the matter is distributed nearly upon the same plan as the decretals of Gregory IX. See Dupin, Bibliothèque.

CLERGY. The name applicable to ecclesiastical ministers as a class.

Clergymen were exempted by the emperor Constantine from all civil burdens. Baronius, ad ann. 319, § 30. Lord Coke says, 2 Inst. 3, ecclesiastical persons have more and greater liberties than other of the king's subjects, wherein to set down all would take up a whole volume of itself. In the United States the clergy is not established by law, but each congregation or church may choose its own clergyman.

CLERGYABLE. In English Law. Allowing of, or entitled to, the benefit of clergy (privilegium clericale). Used of persons or crimes. 4 Bla. Com. 371 et seq. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

CLERICAL ERROR. An error made by a clerk in transcribing or otherwise. This is always readily corrected by the court.

An error, for example, in the teste of a fi. fa.; 4 Yeates, 185, 205; or in the teste and return of a vend. exp.; 1 Dall. 197; or in writing Dowell for McDowell; 1 S. & R. 120; 9 id. 284; 8 Co. 162 a. An error is amendable where there is something to amend by, and this even in a criminal case; 2 Pick. 550; 1 Binn. 367; 2 id. 516; 12 Ad. & E.

217; 5 Burr. 2667; Dougl. 377; Cowp. 408. For the party ought not to be harmed by the omission of the clerk; 3 Binn. 102, even of his signature, if he affixes the seal; 1 S. & R. 97.

CLERICUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Any one who has taken orders in church, of whatever rank; monks. A general term including bishops, subdeacons, readers, and cantors. Du Cange. Used, also, of those who were given up to the pursuit of letters, and who were learned therein. Also of the amanuenses of the judges or courts of the king. Du Cange.

In English Law. A secular priest, in opposition to a regular one. Kennett, Paroch. Ant. 171. A clergyman or priest; one in orders. Nullus clericus nisi causidicus (no clerk but what is a pleader). 1 Bla. Com. 17. A freeman, generally. One who was charged with various duties in the king's household. Du Cange.

CLERK. In Commercial Law. A person in the employ of a merchant, who attends only to a part of his business, while the merchant himself superintends the whole. He differs from a factor in this, that the latter wholly supplies the place of his principal in respect to the property consigned to him. Pardessus, Droit Comm. n. 38; 1 Chitty, Pr. 80; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1287.

In Ecclesiastical Law. Any individual who is attached to the ecclesiastical state and has submitted to the tonsure. One who has been ordained; 1 Bla. Com. 388. A clergyman; 4 Bla. Com. 367.

In Offices. A person employed in an office, public or private, for keeping records or accounts.

His business is to write or register, in proper form, the transactions of the tribunal or body to which he belongs. Some clerks, however, have little or no writing to do in their offices: as the clerk of the market, whose duties are confined chiefly to superintending the markets. This is a common use of the word at the present day, and is also a very ancient signification, being derived, probably, from the office of the clericus, who attended, amongst other duties, to the provisioning the king's household. See Du Cange.

CLERKSHIP. The period which must be spent by a law-student in the office of a practising attorney before admission to the bar. 1 Tidd, Pr. 61 et seq. See EDUCATION.

CLIENT. In Practice. One who employs and retains an attorney or counsellor to manage or defend a suit or action to which he is a party, or to advise him about some legal matters. See ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.

CLOSE. An interest in the soil; Doctor & Stud. 30; 6 East, 154; 7 id. 207; 1 Burr. 133; or in trees or growing crops; 4 Mass. 266; 9 Johns. 113.

In every case where one man has a right to exclude another from his land, the law encircles it, if not already inclosed, with an imaginary fence, and entitles him to a compensation in damages for the injury he sustains by the act of another passing through his boundary—denominating the injurious act a breach of the inclosure; Hammond, N. P. 151; Doctor & Stud. dial. 1, c. 8, p. 30; 2 Whart. 430.

An ejectment will not lie for a close; 11 Co. 55; 1 Rolle, 55; Salk. 254; Cro. Eliz. 235; Adams, Eject. 24. See CLAUSUM.

CLOSE COPIES. Copies which might be written with any number of words on a sheet. Office copies were to contain only a prescribed number of words on each sheet.

CLOSE ROLLS. Rolls containing the record of the close writs (literæ clausæ) and grants of the king, kept with the public records. 2 Bla. Com. 346.

CLOSE WRITS. Writs directed to the sheriff instead of to the lord. 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 45. Writs containing grants from the crown to particular persons and for particular purposes, which, not being intended for public inspection, are closed up and sealed on the outside, instead of being open and having the seal appended by a strip of parchment. 2 Bla. Com. 346; Sewall, Sher. 372.

CO-ADMINISTRATOR. One who is administrator with one or more others. See ADMINISTRATOR.

CO-ASSIGNEE. One who is assignee with one or more others. See ASSIGNMENT.

CO-EXECUTOR. One who is executor with one or more others. See EXECUTOR.

COADJUTOR. The assistant of a bishop. An assistant.

COADUNATIO. A conspiracy. 9 Coke, 56.

COAL NOTE. In English Law. A species of promissory note authorized by the stat. 3 Geo. II. c. 26, §§ 7, 8, which, having these words expressed therein, namely, "value received in coals," are to be protected and noted as inland bills of exchange.

COALITION. In French Law. An unlawful agreement among several persons not to do a thing except on some conditions agreed upon; a conspiracy.

COAST. The margin of a country bounded by the sea. This term includes the natural appendages of the territory which rise out of the water, although they are not of sufficient firmness to be inhabited or fortified. Shoals perpetually covered with water are not, however, comprehended under the name of coast. The small islands situate at the mouth of the Mississippi, composed of earth and trees drifted down by the river, which are not of consistency enough to support the purposes of life, and are uninhabited, though resorted to for shooting birds, were held to form a part of the coast.

COCKET. A seal appertaining to the king's custom-house. Reg. Orig. 192. A scroll or parchment sealed and delivered by the officers of the custom-house to merchants as an evidence that their wares are customed. Cowel; Spelman, Gloss. See 7 Low. C. 116. The entry office in the custom-house itself. A kind of bread said by Cowel to be hard-baked; sea-biscuit; a measure.

CODE. A body of law established by the legislative authority of the state, and designed to regulate completely, so far as a statute may, the subject to which it relates.

The idea of a code involves that of the exercise of the legislative power in its promulgation; but the name has been loosely applied also to private compilations of statutes. The subject of codes and the kindred topics of legal reform have received great attention from the jurists and statesmen of the present century. When it is considered how rapidly statutes accumulate as time passes, it is obvious that great convenience will be found in having the statute law in a systematic body, arranged according to subject-matter, instead of leaving it unorganized, scattered through the volumes in which it was from year to year promulgated. But when the transposition of the statutes from a chronological to a scientific order is undertaken, more radical changes immediately propose themselves. These are of two classes: first, amendments for the purpose of harmonizing the inconsistencies which such an arrangement brings to notice, and supplying defects; second, the introduction into the system of all other rules which are recognized as the unwritten or common law of the state. The object of the latter class of changes is to embody in one systematic enactment all that is thenceforth to be regarded as the law of the land. It is this attempt which is usually intended by the distinctive term codification.

The first two of the questions thus indicated may be deemed as settled, by general concurrence, in favor of the expediency of such changes; and the process of the collection of the statute law in one general code, or in a number of partial codes or systematic statutes, accompanied by the amendments which such a revision invites, is a process which for some years has been renovating the laws of England and the United States. Although at the same time something has been done, especially in this country, towards embodying in these statutes principles which before rested in the common or report law, yet the feasibility of doing this completely, or even to any great extent, must be deemed an open question. It has been discussed with great ability by Bentham, Savigny, Thibaut, and others. It is undeniable that, however successfully a code might be supposed to embody all existing and declared law, so as to supersede previous sources, it cannot be expected to provide prospectively for all the innumerable cases which the diversity of affairs rapidly engenders, and there must soon come a time when it must be studied in the light of numerous explanatory decisions.

These discussions have called attention to a subject formerly little considered, but which is of fundamental importance to the successful preparation of a code—the matter of statutory expression. There is no species of composition which demands more care and precision than that of drafting a statute. The writer needs not only to make his language intelligible, he must make it incapable of misconstruction. When it has passed to a law, it is no longer his intent that is to be considered, but the intent of the words which he has used; and that intent is to be ascertained under the strong pressure of an attempt of the advocate to win whatever possible construction may be most favorable to his cause. The true safeguard is found not in the old method of accumulating synonyms and by an enumeration of particulars, but rather—as is shown by those American codes of which the Revised Statutes of New York and the revision of Massachusetts are admirable specimens—by concise but complete statement of the full principle in the fewest possible words, and the elimination of description and paraphrase by the separate statement of necessary definitions. One of the rules to which the New York revisors generally adhered, and which they found of very great importance, was to confine each section to a single proposition. In this way the intricacy and obscurity of the old statutes were largely avoided. The reader who wishes to pursue this interesting subject will find much that is admirable in Coode's treatise on Legislative Expression (Lond. 1845) (reprinted in Brightly's Purdon's Digest, Penna.). The larger work of Gael (Legal Composition, Lond. 1840) is more especially adapted to the wants of the English profession.

The course which the discussion upon codification has taken in England has led to the collection and revision of statutes upon particular subjects. Under the direction of Lord Cairns, the statutes of England from 1 Henry III. have been revised by a committee, and published as the "Revised Statutes." Thirteen volumes have been published, bringing the work down to 1861.

In this country the subject has presented obstacles of less magnitude. Codes and revisions have been enacted as follows: the date given is the date of the last revision:—

United States.—The Revision of 1873, which went into effect June 22, 1874, was by act of congress declared to constitute the law of the land; the pre-existing laws were thereby repealed, and ceased to be of effect. By subsequent acts of congress, certain errors in this revision were corrected. A new edition of the Revision of 1873 was authorized by acts of March 2, 1877, and March 9, 1878; this is not a new enactment, but merely a new publication; it contains a copy of the Revision of 1873, with certain specific alterations and amendments made by subsequent enactments of the 43d and 44th congresses, incorporated according to the judgment and discretion of the editor, under the authority of the acts providing for his appointment. These alterations, or amendments, were merely indicated by italics and brackets. The act of March 9, 1878, provides that the edition of 1878 shall be legal evidence of the laws therein contained in all the courts of the United States, and of the several states and territories, "but shall not preclude reference to, nor control in case of any discrepancy the effect of any original act as passed by congress since the first day of December, 1873."

The supplement of 1881 is official to a limited extent. The provisions in regard to it are as follows: "The publication herein authorized shall be taken to be primâ facie evidence of the laws therein contained in all the courts of the United States, and of the several states and territories therein; but shall not preclude reference to, nor control, in case of any discrepancy, the effect of any original act as passed by congress:—Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to change or alter any existing law;" 21 Stat. L. 388. See Wright v. U. S., 15 Ct. of Cl. 80, where the subject is explained by Richardson, J., one of the compilers.

The following states and territories have adopted Code Practice: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Dakota, Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, South Carolina, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

AUSTRIAN. The Civil Code was promulgated in 1811,—the code of Joseph II. (1780) having been found wholly unsuited to the purpose and by his successor abrogated. It is founded in a great degree upon the Prussian. The Penal Code (1852) is said to adopt to some extent the characteristics of the French Penal Code.

BURGUNDIAN. Lex Romana, otherwise known in modern times as the Papiniani Responsorum. Promulgated A. D. 517.

It was founded on the Roman law; and its chief interest is the indication which, in common with the other Barbaric codes, it affords of the modifications of jurisprudence under the changes of society amidst which it arose.

CONSOLATO DEL MARE. A code of maritime law of high antiquity and great celebrity.

Its origin is not certainly known. It has been ascribed to the authority of the ancient kings of Arragon; but there is some reason for maintaining the theory that it was gradually collected and handed down as a digest of all the principal rules and usages established among the maritime nations of Europe from the twelfth to the fourteenth century. Since it was first promulgated at Barcelona in the fourteenth century it has been enlarged from time to time by the addition of various commercial regulations. Its doctrines are founded to a large extent on the Greek and Roman law. It seems to have been originally written in the dialect of Catalonia; but it has been translated into every language of Europe, except English. It is referred to at the present day as an authority in respect to the ownership of vessels, the rights and obligations thereto, to the rights and responsibilities of master and seamen, to the law of freight, of equipment and supply, of jettison and average, of salvage, of ransom, and of prize. The edition of Pardessus, in his Collection de Lois Maritimes (vol. 2), is deemed the best.

FRENCH CODES. The chief French codes of the present day are five in number, sometimes known as Les Cinq Codes. They were in great part the work of Napoleon, and the first in order bears his name. They are all frequently printed in one duodecimo volume. These codes do not embody the whole French law, but minor codes and a number of scattered statutes must also be resorted to upon special subjects.

Code Civil, or Code Napoléon, is composed of thirty-six laws, the first of which was passed in 1803 and the last in 1804, which united them all in one body, under the name of Code Civil des Français.

The first steps towards its preparation were taken in 1793, but it was not prepared till some years subsequently, and was finally thoroughly discussed in all its details by the court of Cassation, of which Napoleon was president and in the discussions of which he took an active part throughout. In 1807 a new edition was promulgated, the title Code Napoléon being substituted. In the third edition (1816) the old title was restored; but in 1852 it was again displaced by that of Napoleon.

Under Napoleon's reign it became the law of Holland, of the Confederation of the Rhine, Westphalia, Bavaria, Italy, Naples, Spain, etc. It has undergone great amendment by laws enacted since it was established. It is divided into three books. Book 1, Of Persons and the enjoyment and privation of civil rights. Book 2, Property and its different modifications. Book 3, Different ways of acquiring property. Prefixed to it is a preliminary title, Of the Publication, Effects, and Application of Laws in General.

One of the most perspicuous and able commentators on this code is Toullier, frequently cited in this work.

Code de Procédure Civil. That part of the code which regulates civil proceedings.

It is divided into two parts. Part First consists of five books: the first of which treats of justices of the peace; the second, of inferior tribunals; the third, of royal (or appellate) courts; the fourth, of extraordinary means of proceeding; the fifth, of the execution of judgments. Part Second is divided into three books, treating of various matters and proceedings special in their nature.

Code de Commerce. The code for the regulation of commerce.

This code was enacted in 1807. Book 1 is entitled, Of Commerce in General. Book 2, Maritime Commerce. The whole law of this subject is not embodied in this book. Book 3, Failures and Bankruptcy. This book was very largely amended by the law of 28th May, 1838. Book 4, Of Commercial Jurisdiction,—the organization, jurisdiction, and proceedings of commercial tribunals. This code is, in one sense, a supplement to the Code Napoléon, applying the principle of the latter to the various subjects of commercial law. Sundry laws amending it have been enacted since 1807. Pardessus is one of the most able of its expositors. See Goirand, Code of Commerce.

Code d' Instruction Criminelle. The code regulating procedure in criminal cases, taking that phrase in a broad sense.

Book 1 treats of the police; Book 2, of the administration of criminal justice. It was enacted in 1808 to take effect with the Penal Code in 1811.

Code Pénal. The penal or criminal code.

Enacted in 1810. Book 1 treats of penalties in criminal and correctional cases, and their effects; Book 2, of crimes and misdemeanors, and their punishment; Book 3, offences against the police regulations, and their punishment. Important amendments of this code have been made by subsequent legislation.

There is also a Code Forestier; and the name code has been inaptly given to some private compilations on other subjects.

GREGORIAN. An unofficial compilation of the rescripts of the Roman emperors. It was made in the fourth century, and is not now extant.

The Theodosian Code, which was promulgated nearly a century afterwards, was a continuation of this and of the collection of Hermogenes. The chief interest of all of these collections is in their relation to their great successor the Justinian Code.

HANSE TOWNS, LAWS OF THE. A code of maritime law established by the Hanseatic towns.

It was first published in German, at Lubec, in 1597. In an assembly of deputies from the several towns, held at Lubec, May 23, 1614, it was revised and enlarged. The text, with a Latin translation, was published with a commentary by Kuricke; and a French translation has been given by Cleirac in Us et Coutumes de la Mer. It is not unfrequently referred to on subjects of maritime law.

HENRI (French). The best-known of several collections of ordinances made during the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, the number of which in part both formed the necessity and furnished the material for the Code Napoléon.

HENRI (Haytien). A very judicious adaptation from the Code Napoléon for the Haytiens. It was promulgated in 1812 by Christophe (Henri I.).

HERMOGENIAN. An unofficial compilation made in the fourth century, supplementary to the code of Gregorius. It is not now extant.

INSTITUTES OF MENU. A code of Hindoo law, of great antiquity, which still forms the basis of Hindoo jurisprudence (Elphinstone's Hist. of India, p. 83), and is said also to be the basis of the laws of the Burmese and of the Laos. Buckle, Hist. of Civilization, vol. 1, p. 54, note 70. "It undoubtedly enshrines many genuine observances of the Hindoo race, but the opinion of the best contemporary orientalists is, that it does not, as a whole, represent a set of rules ever actually administered in Hindoostan." Maine, Anc. Law, 16.

The Institutes of Menu are in point of the relative progress of Hindoo jurisprudence, a recent production; Maine, Anc. Law, 17; though ascribed to the ninth century B. C. A translation will be found in the third volume of Sir William Jones's Works. See, also, HINDOO LAW.

JUSTINIAN CODE. A collection of imperial ordinances compiled by order of the emperor Justinian.

All the judicial wisdom of the Roman civilization which is of importance to the American lawyer is embodied in the compilations to which Justinian gave his name, and from which that name has received its lustre. Of these, first in contemporary importance, if not first in magnitude and present interest, was the Code. In the first year of his reign he commanded Tribonian, a statesman of his court, to revise the imperial ordinances. The first result, now known as the Codex Vetus, is not extant. It was superseded a few years after its promulgation by a new and more complete edition. Although it is this alone which is now known as the Code of Justinian, yet the Pandects and the Institutes which followed it are a part of the same system, declared by the same authority; and the three together form one codification of the law of the Empire. The first of these works occupied Tribonian and nine associates fourteen months. It is comprised in twelve divisions or books, and embodies all that was deemed worthy of preservation of the imperial statutes from the time of Hadrian down. The Institutes is an elementary treatise prepared by Tribonian and two associates upon the basis of a similar work by Gaius, a lawyer of the second century.

The Pandects, which were made public about a month after the Institutes, were an abridgment of the treatises and the commentaries of the lawyers. They were presented in fifty books. Tribonian and the sixteen associates who aided him in this part of his labors accomplished this abridgment in three years. It has been thought to bear obvious marks of the haste with which it was compiled; but it is the chief embodiment of the Roman law, though not the most convenient resort for the modern student of that law.

Tribonian found the law, which for fourteen centuries had been accumulating, comprised in two thousand books, or—stated according to the Roman method of computation—in three million sentences. It is probable that this matter, if printed in law volumes such as are now used, would fill from three to five hundred volumes. The comparison, to be more exact, should take into account treatises and digests, which would add to the bulk of the collection more than to the substance of the material. The commissioners were instructed to extract a series of plain and concise laws, in which there should be no two laws contradictory or alike. In revising the imperial ordinances, they were empowered to amend in substance as well as in form.

The codification being completed, the emperor decreed that no resort should be had to the earlier writings, nor any comparison be made with them. Commentators were forbidden to disfigure the new with explanations, and lawyers were forbidden to cite the old. The imperial authority was sufficient to sink into oblivion nearly all the previously existing sources of law; but the new statutes which the emperor himself found it necessary to establish, in order to explain, complete, and amend the law, rapidly accumulated throughout his long reign. These are known as the "Novels." The Code, the Institutes, the Pandects, and the Novels, with some subsequent additions, constitute the Corpus Juris Civilis.

Among English translations of the Institutes are that by Cooper (Phila. 1812; N. Y. 1841)—which is regarded as a very good one—and that by Sanders (Lond. 1853), which contains the original text also, and copious references to the Digests and Code. Among the modern French commentators are Ortolan and Pasquiere.

LIVINGSTON'S CODE. Edward Livingston, one of the commissioners who prepared the Louisiana Code, prepared and presented to congress a draft of a penal code for the United States; which, though it was never adopted, is not unfrequently referred to in the books as stating principles of criminal law.

MOSAIC CODE. The code proclaimed by Moses for the government of the Jews, B.C. 1491.

One of the peculiar characteristics of this code is the fact, that, whilst all that has ever been successfully attempted in other cases has been to change details without reversing or ignoring the general principles which form the basis of the previous law, that which was chiefly done here was the assertion of great and fundamental principles in part contrary and in part perhaps entirely new to the customs and usages of the people. These principles, thus divinely revealed and sanctioned, have given the Mosaic Code vast influence in the subsequent legislation of other nations than the Hebrews. The topics on which it is most frequently referred to as an authority in our law are those of marriage and divorce, and questions of affinity and of the punishment of murder and seduction. The commentaries of Michaelis and of Wines are valuable aids to its study.

ORDONNANCE DE LA MARINE. A code of maritime law enacted in the reign of Louis XIV.

It was promulgated in 1681, and with great completeness embodied all existing rules of maritime law, including insurance. Kent pronounces it a monument of the wisdom of the reign of Louis "far more durable and more glorious than all the military trophies won by the valor of his armies." Its compilers are unknown. An English translation is contained in the appendix to Peters's Admiralty Reports, vol. 1. The ordinance has been at once illustrated and eclipsed by Valin's commentaries upon it.

OLERON, LAWS OF. A code of maritime law which takes its name from the island of Oleron.

Both the French and the English claim the honor of having originated this code,—the former attributing its compilation to the command of Queen Eleanor, Duchess of Guienne, near which province the island of Oleron lies; the latter ascribing its promulgation to her son, Richard I. The latter monarch, without doubt, caused it to be improved, if he did not originate it, and he introduced it into England. Some additions were made to it by king John. It was promulgated anew in the reign of Henry III., and again confirmed in the reign of Edward III. It is most accessible to the American profession in the translation contained in the appendix to the first volume of Peters's Admiralty Reports. The French version, with Cleirac's commentary, is contained in Us et Coutumes de la Mer. The subjects upon which it is now valuable are much the same as those of the Consolato del Mare.

OSTROGOTHIC. The code promulgated by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, at Rome, A. D. 500. It was founded on the Roman law.

PRUSSIAN. Allgemeines Landrecht. The former code of 1751 was not successful; but the attempt to establish one was resumed in 1780, under Frederic II.; and, after long and thorough discussion, the present code was finally promulgated in 1794. It is known also as the Code Frederic.

RHODIAN LAWS. A maritime code adopted by the people of Rhodes, and in force among the nations upon the Mediterranean nine or ten centuries before Christ. There is reason to suppose that the collection under this title in Vinnius is spurious, and, if so, the code is not extant. See Marsh. on Ins. b. 1, c. 4, p. 15.

THEODOSIAN. A code compiled by a commission of eight, under the direction of Theodosian the Younger.

It comprises the edicts and rescripts of sixteen emperors, embracing a period of one hundred and twenty-six years. It was promulgated in the Eastern Empire in 438, and quickly adopted, also, in the Western Empire. The great modern expounder of this code is Gothofredus (Godefroi). The results of modern researches regarding this code are well stated in the Foreign Quar. Rev. vol. 9, 374.

TWELVE TABLES. Laws of ancient Rome, compiled on the basis of those of Solon and other Greek legislators.

They first appeared in the year of Rome 303, inscribed on ten plates of brass. In the following year two more were added; and the entire code bore the name of the Laws of the Twelve Tables. The principles they contained were the germ of the body of the Roman law, and enter largely into the modern jurisprudence of Europe. See fragment of the law of the Twelve Tables, in Cooper's Justinian, 656; Gibbon's Rome, c. 44; Maine, Anc. Law.

VISIGOTHIC. The Lex Romani; now known as Breviarum Alaricianum. Ordained by Alaric II. for his Roman subjects, A. D. 506.

WISBUY, LAWS OF. A concise but comprehensive code of maritime law, established by the "merchants and masters of the magnificent city of Wisbuy."

The port of Wisbuy, now in ruins, was situated on the northwestern coast of Gottland, in the Baltic sea. It was the capital of the island, and the seat of an extensive commerce, of which the chief relic and the most significant record is this code. It is a mooted point whether this code was derived from the Laws of Oleron, or that from this; but the similarity of the two leaves no doubt that one was the offspring of the other. It was of great authority in the northern parts of Europe. "Lex Rhodia navalis," says Grotius, "pro jure gentium in illo mare Mediterraneo vigebat; sicut apud Gallium leges Oleronis, et apud omnes transrhenanos, legis Wisbuenses." De Jure B. lib. 2, c. 3. It is still referred to on subjects of maritime law. An English translation will be found in the appendix to the first volume of Peters's Admiralty Reports.

CODEX (Lat.). A volume or roll. The code of Justinian.

CODICIL. Some addition to, or qualification of, a last will and testament.

This term is derived from the Latin codicillus, which is a diminutive of codex, and in strictness imports a little code or writing,—a little will. In the Roman Civil Law, codicil was defined as an act which contains dispositions of property in prospect of death, without the institution of an heir or executor. Domat, Civil Law, p. ii. b. iv. tit. i. s. 1; Just. De Codic. art. i. s. 2. So, also, the early English writers upon wills define a codicil in much the same way. "A codicil is a just sentence of our will touching that which any would have done after their death, without the appointing of an executor." Swinburne, Wills, pt. i. s. 5, pl. 2. But the present definition of the term is that first given. 1 Williams, Exrs. 8; Swinburne, Wills, pt. i. s. v. pl. 5.

Under the Roman Civil Law, and also by the early English law, as well as the canon law, all of which very nearly coincided in regard to this subject, it was considered that no one could make a valid will or testament unless he did name an executor, as that was of the essence of the act. This was attended with great formality and solemnity, in the presence of seven Roman citizens as witnesses, omni exceptione majores. Hence a codicil is there termed an unofficious, or unsolemn, testament. Swinburne, Wills, pt. i. s. v. pl. 4; Godolph. pt. i. c. 1, s. 2; id. pt. i. c. 6, s. 2; Plowd. 185; where it is said by the judges, that "without an executor a will is null and void," which has not been regarded as law, in England, for the last two hundred years, probably.

The office of a codicil under the civil law seems to have been to enable the party to dispose of his property, in the near prospect of death, without the requisite formalities of executing a will (or testament, as it was then called). Codicils were strictly confined to the disposition of property; whereas a testament had reference to the institution of an heir or executor, and contained trusts and confidences to be carried into effect after the decease of the testator. Domat, b. iv. tit. i.

In the Roman Civil Law there were two kinds of codicils: the one, where no testament existed, and which was designed to supply its place as to the disposition of property, and which more nearly resembled our donatio causâ mortis than any thing else now in use; the other, where a testament did exist, had relation to the testament, and formed a part of it and was to be construed in connection with it. Domat, p. ii. b. iv. tit. i. s. i. art. v. It is in this last sense that the term is now universally used in the English law, and in the American states where the common law prevails.

Codicils owe their origin to the following circumstance. Lucius Lentulus, dying in Africa, left codicils, confirmed by anticipation in a will of former date, and in those codicils requested the Emperor Augustus, by way of fidei commissum, or trust, to do something therein expressed. The emperor carried this will into effect, and the daughter of Lentulus paid legacies which she would not otherwise have been legally bound to pay. Other persons made similar fidei commissa, and then the emperor, by the advice of learned men whom he consulted, sanctioned the making of codicils, and thus they became clothed with legal authority. Inst. 2. 25; Bowyer, Com. 155, 156.

All codicils are part of the will, and are to be so construed; 4 Brown, Ch. 55; 17 Sim. 108; 16 Beav. 510; 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 242, by Lord Hardwicke; 3 Ves. Ch. 107, 110; 4 id. 610; 4 Y. & C. Ch. 160; 2 Russ. & M. 117; 8 Cow. 56; 3 Sandf. Ch. 11; 4 Kent, 531; and executed with the same formalities; 4 Kent, 531; 13 Gray, 103.

A codicil properly executed to pass real and personal estate, and in conformity with the statute of frauds, and upon the same piece of paper with the will, operates as a republication of the will, so as to have it speak from that date; 4 Penn. 376; 4 Dane, Abr. c. 127, a. 1, § 11, p. 550; 14 B. Monr. 333; 1 Cush. 118; 3 M. & C. 359. So also it has been held that it is not requisite that the codicil should be on the same piece of paper in order that it should operate as a republication of the will; 1 Hill, 590; 7 id. 346; 3 Zabr. 447.

A codicil duly executed, and attached or referring to a paper defectively executed as a will, has the effect to give operation to the whole, as one instrument; 3 B. Monr. 390; 6 Johns. Ch. 374, 375; 14 Pick. 548; 16 Ves. Ch. 167; 7 id. 98; 1 Ad. & E. 423. See, also, the numerous cases cited by Mr. Perkins, Piggott v. Walker, 7 Ves. Ch. Sumner ed. 98; 1 Cr. & M. 42.

There may be numerous codicils to the same will. In such cases, the later ones operate to revive and republish the earlier ones; 3 Bingh. 614; 12 J. B. Moore, 2.

But in order to set up an informally executed paper by means of one subsequently executed in due form, referring to such informal paper, the reference must be such as clearly to identify the paper; 4 N. Y. 140.

A codicil which depends on the will for interpretation or execution falls, if the will be revoked; 1 Tucker, 436; 5 Bush, 337.

It is not competent to provide by will for the disposition of property to such persons as shall be named in a subsequent codicil, not executed according to the prescribed formalities in regard to wills; since all papers of that character, in whatever form, if intended to operate only in the disposition of one's property after death, are of a testamentary character, and must be so treated; 2 Ves. Ch. 204; 12 id. 29; 2 M. & K. 765; 1 V. & B. 422, 445.

COEMPTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The ceremony of celebrating marriage by solemnities.

The parties met and gave each other a small sum of money. They then questioned each other in turn. The man asked the woman if she wished to be his mater-familias. She replied that she so wished. The woman then asked the man if he wished to be her pater-familias. He replied that he so wished. They then joined hands; and these were called nuptials by coëmptio. Boethius, Coëmptio; Calvinus, Lex.; Taylor, Law Gloss.

COERCION. Constraint; compulsion; force.

Direct or positive coercion takes place when a man is by physical force compelled to do an act contrary to his will: for example, when a man falls into the hands of the enemies of his country, and they compel him, by a just fear of death, to fight against it.

Implied coercion exists where a person is legally under subjection to another, and is induced, in consequence of such subjection, to do an act contrary to his will.

As will is necessary to the commission of a crime or the making of a contract, a person actually coerced into either has no will on the subject, and is not responsible; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 225; 5 Q. B. 279. The command of a superior to an inferior; 3 Wash. C. C. 209, 220; 12 Metc. 56; 1 Blatchf. 549; 13 How. 115; of a parent to a child; Broom, Max. 11; of a master to his servant, or a principal to his agent; 13 Mo. 246; 14 id. 137, 340; 3 Cush. 279; 11 Metc. 66; 5 Miss. 304; 14 Ala. 365; 22 Vt. 32; 14 Johns. 119; do not amount to coercion.

As to persons acting under the constraint of superior power, and, therefore, not criminally amenable, the principal case is that of married women, with respect to whom the law recognizes certain presumptions. Thus, if a wife commits a felony, other than treason or homicide, or, perhaps, highway robbery, in company with her husband, the law presumes that she acted under his coercion, and, consequently, without any guilty intent, unless the fact of non-coercion is distinctly proved. See 2 C. & K. 887, 903; Jebb. 93; 103 Mass. 71; 65 N. C. 398; 97 Mass. 547. This presumption appears on some occasions to have been considered conclusive, and is still practically regarded in no very different light, especially when the crime is of a flagrant character; but the better opinion seems to be that in every case the presumption may now be rebutted by positive proof that the woman acted as a free agent; and in one case that was much discussed, the Irish judges appear to have considered that such positive proof was not required, but that the question was always one to be determined by the jury on the evidence submitted to them; Jebb, 93; 1 Mood. 143. It seems that a married woman cannot be convicted under any circumstances as a receiver of stolen goods, when the property has been taken by her husband and given to her by him; 1 Dearsl. 184.

Husband and wife were jointly charged with felonious wounding with intent to disfigure and to do grievous bodily harm. The jury found that the wife acted under the coercion of the husband, and that she did not personally inflict any violence on the prosecutor. On this finding, the wife was held entitled to an acquittal; 1 Dearsl. & B. 553.

Whether the doctrine of coercion extends to any misdemeanor may admit of some doubt; but the better opinion seems to be that, provided the misdemeanor is of a serious nature, as, for instance, the uttering of base coin, the wife will be protected in like manner as in cases of felony; although it has been distinctly held that the protection does not extend to assaults and batteries or to the offence of keeping a brothel; 2 Lew. 229; 8 C. & P. 19, 541; 2 Mood. 284; 10 Mod. 63; 1 Metc. Mass. 151; 10 Mass. 152. Indeed, it is probable that in all inferior misdemeanors this presumption, if admitted at all, would be held liable to be defeated by far less stringent evidence of the wife's active co-operation than would suffice in cases of felony; 8 C. & P. 541; 2 Mood. 53; 1 Taylor, Ev. 152. The law upon responsibility of married women for crime is fully stated in 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 76–87.

COFRADIA. The congregation or brotherhood entered into by several persons for the purpose of performing pious works. No society of this kind can be lawfully formed without license from the king and the bishop of the diocese.

COGNATES. In Civil and Scotch Law. Relations through females. 1 Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 137; Bell, Dict.

COGNATI. In Civil Law. Collateral heirs through females. Relations in the line of the mother; 2 Bla. Com. 235.

The term is not used in the civil law as it now prevails in France. In the common law it has no technical sense; but as a word of discourse in English it signifies, generally, allied by blood, related in origin, of the same family.

Originally, the maternal relationship had no influence in the formation of the Roman family, nor in the right of inheritance. But the edict of the prætor established what was called the Prætorian succession, or the bonorum possessio, in favor of cognates in certain cases. Dig. 38. 8. See PATER-FAMILIAS; Vicat; Biret, Vocabulaire.

COGNATION. In Civil Law. Signifies generally the kindred which exists between two persons who are united by ties of blood or family, or both.

Civil cognation is that which proceeds alone from the ties of families, as the kindred between the adopted father and the adopted child.

Mixed cognation is that which unites at the same time the ties of blood and family, as that which exists between brothers the issue of the same lawful marriage. Inst. 3. 6; Dig. 38. 10.

Natural cognation is that which is alone formed by ties of blood; such is the kindred of those who owe their origin to an illicit connection, either in relation to their ascendants or collaterals.

COGNISANCE. See COGNIZANCE.

COGNITIONIBUS ADMITTENDIS. A writ requiring a justice or other qualified person, who has taken a fine and neglects to certify it in the court of common pleas, to do so.

COGNIZANCE (Lat. cognitio, recognition, knowledge; spelled, also, Conusance and Cognisance). Acknowledgment; recognition; jurisdiction; judicial power; hearing a matter judicially.

Of Pleas. Jurisdiction of causes. A privilege granted by the king to a city or town to hold pleas within the same. Termes de la Ley. It is in frequent use among the older writers on English law in this latter sense, but is seldom used, if at all, in America, except in its more general meaning. The universities of Cambridge and Oxford possess this franchise; Willes, 233; 1 Sid. 103; 11 East, 543; 1 W. Blackst. 454; 10 Mod. 126; 3 Bla. Com. 298.

Claim of Cognizance (or of Conusance) is an intervention by a third person, demanding judicature in the cause against the plaintiff, who has chosen to commence his action out of claimant's court; 2 Wils. 409; 2 Bla. Com. 350, n.

It is a question of jurisdiction between the two courts, Fortesc. 157; 5 Viner, Abr. 588, and not between the plaintiff and defendant, as in the case of plea to the jurisdiction, and must be demanded by the party entitled to conusance, or his representative, and not by the defendant or his attorney. 1 Chitty, Pl. 403.

There are three sorts of conusance. Tenere placita, which does not oust another court of its jurisdiction, but only creates a concurrent one. Cognitio placitorum, when the plea is commenced in one court, of which conusance belongs to another. A conusance of exclusive jurisdiction: as, that no other court shall hold plea, etc.; Hardr. 509; Bacon, Abr. Courts, D.

In Pleading. The answer of the defendant in an action of replevin who is not entitled to the distress or goods which are the subject of the action—acknowledging the taking, and justifying it as having been done by the command of one who is so entitled; Lawes, Pl. 35, 36; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3571. An acknowledgment made by the deforciant, in levying a fine, that the lands in question are the right of the complainant; 2 Bla. Com. 350.

COGNOMEN (Lat.). A family name.

The prænomen among the Romans distinguished the person, the nomen the gens, or all the kindred descended from a remote common stock through males, while the cognomen denoted the particular family. The agnomen was added on account of some particular event, as a further distinction. Thus, in the designation Publius Cornelius Scipio Africanus, Publius is the prænomen, Cornelius is the nomen, Scipio the cognomen, and Africanus the agnomen. Vicat. These several terms occur frequently in the Roman laws. See Cas. temp. Hardw. 286; 6 Co. 65; 1 Tayl. 148.

COGNOVIT ACTIONEM (Lat. he has confessed the action. Cognovit alone is in common use with the same significance).

In Pleading. A written confession of an action by a defendant, subscribed, but not sealed, and authorizing the plaintiff to sign judgment and issue execution, usually for a sum named.

It is given after the action is brought to save expense, and differs from a warrant of attorney, which is given before the commencement of any action and is under seal; 3 Bouvier, Inst. 3229.

COHABIT (Lat. con and habere). To live together in the same house, claiming to be married.

The word does not include in its signification, necessarily, the occupying the same bed; 1 Hagg. Cons. 144; 4 Paige, Ch. 425; though the word is popularly, and sometimes in statutes, used in this latter sense; 20 Mo. 210; Bishop, Marr. & Div. § 506, n.

To live together in the same house.

Used without reference to the relation of the parties to each other as husband and wife, or otherwise. Used of sisters or other members of the same family, or of persons not members of the same family, occupying the same house; 2 Vern. 323; Bishop, Marr. & Div. 506, n.

COIF. A head-dress.

In England there are certain serjeants at law who are called serjeants of the coif, from the lawn coif they wear on their heads under their thin caps when they are admitted to that order. It was anciently worn as a distinguishing badge. Spelman, Gloss.

COLIBERTUS. One who, holding in free socage, was obliged to do certain services for the lord. A middle class of tenants between servile and free, who held their freedom of tenure on condition of performing certain services. Said to be the same as the conditionales. Cowel.

COLLATERAL (Lat. con, with, latus, the side). That which is by the side, and not the direct, line. That which is additional to or beyond a thing.

COLLATERAL ASSURANCE. That which is made over and above the deed itself.

COLLATERAL CONSANGUINITY. That relationship which subsists between persons who have the same ancestors but not the same descendants,—who do not descend one from the other. 2 Bla. Com. 203.

The essential fact of consanguinity (common ancestral blood) is the same in lineal and collateral consanguinity; but the relationship is aside from the direct line. Thus, father, son, and grandson are lineally related; uncle and nephew, collaterally.

COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL. The collateral determination of a question by a court having general jurisdiction of the subject. See 26 Vt. 209.

COLLATERAL FACTS. Facts not directly connected with the issue or matter in dispute.

Such facts are inadmissible in evidence; but, as it is frequently difficult to ascertain, a priori, whether a particular fact offered in evidence will or will not clearly appear to be material in the progress of the cause, in such cases it is usual in practice for the court to give credit to the assertion of the counsel who tenders such evidence, that the facts will turn out to be material. But this is always within the sound discretion of the court. It is the duty of the counsel, however, to offer evidence, if possible, in such order that each part of it will appear to be pertinent and proper at the time it is offered; and it is expedient to do so, as this method tends to the success of a good cause.

When a witness is cross-examined as to collateral facts, the party cross-examining will be bound by the answer; and he cannot, in general, contradict him by another witness. Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 139.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX. A tax levied upon the collateral devolution of property by will or under the intestate law.

COLLATERAL ISSUE. An issue taken upon some matter aside from the general issue in the case.

Thus, for example, a plea by the criminal that he is not the person attainted when an interval exists between attainder and execution, a plea in abatement, and other such pleas, each raises a collateral issue. 4 Bla. Com. 396. And see 4 id. 338.

COLLATERAL KINSMEN. Those who descend from one and the same common ancestor, but not from one another.

Thus, brothers and sisters are collateral to each other; the uncle and the nephew are collateral kinsmen, and cousins are the same. All kinsmen are either lineal or collateral.

COLLATERAL LIMITATION. A limitation in the conveyance of an estate, giving an interest for a specified period, but making the right of enjoyment depend upon some collateral event; as an estate to A till B shall go to Rome; Park, Dow. 163; 4 Kent, 128; 1 Washb. R. P. 215.

COLLATERAL SECURITY. A separate obligation attached to another contract to guaranty its performance. The transfer of property or of other contracts to insure the performance of a principal engagement.

The property or securities thus conveyed are also called collateral securities; 1 Powell, Mortg. 393; 2 id. 666, n. 871; 3 id. 944, 1001. See PLEDGE, CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

COLLATERAL WARRANTY. Warranty as to an estate made by one who was ancestor to the heir thereof, either actually or by implication of law, in respect to other property, but who could not have been so in respect to the estate in question.

Warranty made where the heir's title to the land neither was nor could have been derived from the warranting ancestor. Termes de la Ley.

Thus, if a tenant in tail should discontinue the tail, have issue and die, and the uncle of the issue should release to the discontinuee and die without issue, this is a collateral warranty to the issue in tail. Littleton, § 709. The tenant in tail having discontinued as to his issue before his birth, the heir in tail was driven to his action to regain possession upon the death of his ancestor tenant in tail; and in this action the collateral warranty came in as an estoppel. 2 Washb. R. P. 670.

The heir was barred from ever claiming the land, and, in case he had assets from the warranting ancestor, was obliged to give the warrantee other lands in case of an eviction. 4 Cruise, Dig. 436.

By the statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. I. c. 3, tenant by the curtesy was restrained from making such warranty as should bind the heir. By a favorable construction of the statute De Donis, and by the statute 8 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, tenants in tail were deprived of the power of making collateral warranty. By statute 11 Hen. VII. c. 20, warranty by a tenant in dower, with or without the assent of her subsequent husband, was prevented; and finally the statute 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, declares all warranties by a tenant for life void against the heir, unless such ancestor has an estate of inheritance in possession. See Co. Litt. 373, Butler's note [328]; Stearns, R. Act. 135, 372.

It is doubtful if the doctrine has ever prevailed to a great extent in the United States. The statute of Anne has been re-enacted in New York; 4 Kent, 3d ed. 460; and in New Jersey; 3 Halst. 106. It has been adopted and is in force in Rhode Island; 1 Sumn. 235; and in Delaware; 1 Harr. 50. In Kentucky and Virginia, it seems that collateral warranty binds the heir to the extent of assets descended; 1 Dana, 59. In Pennsylvania, collateral warranty of the ancestor, with sufficient real assets descending to the heirs, bars them from recovering the lands warranted; 4 Dall. 168; 9 S. & R. 275. See 2 Bla. Com. 301; 2 Washb. R. P. 668–671.

COLLATERALES ET SOCII. The former title of masters in chancery.

COLLATIO BONORUM. A collation of goods.

COLLATION. In Civil Law. The supposed or real return to the mass of the succession, which an heir makes of the property he received in advance of his share or otherwise, in order that such property may be divided together with the other effects of the succession. La. Civ. Code, art. 1305.

As the object of collation is to equalize the heirs, it follows that those things are excluded from collation which the heir acquired by an onerous title from the ancestor; that is, where he gave a valuable consideration for them. And, upon the same principle, if a co-heir claims no share of the estate, he is not bound to collate. Qui non vult hereditatem, non cogitur ad collationem. La. Civ. Code, art. 1305–1367.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The act by which the bishop who has the bestowing of a benefice gives it to an incumbent.

Where the ordinary and patron were the same person, presentation and institution to a benefice became one and the same act; and this was called collation. Collation rendered the living full except as against the king: 1 Bla. Com. 391. An advowson under such circumstances is termed collative; 2 Bla. Com. 22.

In Practice. The comparison of a copy with its original, in order to ascertain its correctness and conformity. The report of the officer who made the comparison is also called a collation.

COLLECTOR. One appointed to receive taxes or other impositions: as, collector of taxes, collector of militia fines, etc. A person appointed by a private person to collect the credits due him.

COLLECTOR OF THE CUSTOMS. An officer of the United States, appointed for the term of four years. Act of May 15, 1820, sect. 1, 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1790.

The duties of a collector of the customs are described in general terms as follows: "He shall receive all reports, manifests, and documents to be made or exhibited on the entry of any ship or vessel, according to the regulations of this act; shall record, in books to be kept for the purpose, all manifests; shall receive the entries of all ships or vessels, and of the goods, wares, and merchandise imported in them; shall, together with the naval officer, where there is one, or alone, where there is none, estimate the amount of duties payable thereupon, indorsing the said amounts upon the respective entries; shall receive all moneys paid for duties, and shall take bonds for securing the payment thereof; shall grant all permits for the unlading and delivery of goods; shall, with the approbation of the principal officer of the treasury department, employ persons as weighers, gaugers, measurers, and inspectors, at the several ports within his district, and also, with the like approbation, provide, at the public expense, storehouses for the safe keeping of goods, and such scales, weights, and measures as may be necessary." Act of March 2, 1799, s. 21, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 590. See, for other duties of collectors, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 592, 612, 620, 632, 659, and vol. 3, 1650, 1697, 1750, 1761, 1791, 1811, 1848, 1854; 10 Wheat. 246; 97 U. S. 585.

COLLEGE. An organized collection or assemblage of persons. A civil corporation, society, or company, having, in general, some literary object.

The assemblage of the cardinals at Rome is called a college. The body of presidential electors is called the electoral college, although the whole body never come together.

COLLEGIUM (Lat. colligere, to collect). In Civil Law. A society or assemblage of those of the same rank or honor. An army. A company, in popular phrase. The whole order of bishops. Du Cange.

Collegium illicitum. One which abused its right, or assembled for any other purpose than that expressed in its charter.

Collegium licitum. An assemblage or society of men united for some useful purpose or business, with power to act like a single individual.

All collegia were illicita which were not ordained by a decree of the senate or of the emperor; 2 Kent, 269.

COLLISION. In Maritime Law. The act of ships or vessels striking together, or of one vessel running against or foul of another.

It may happen without fault, no blame being imputable to those in charge of either vessel. In such case, in the English, American, and French courts, each party must bear his own loss; Pardessus, Droit Comm. p. 4, t. 2, c. 2, § 4; 14 How. 352.

A collision by inevitable accident is when a collision is caused exclusively by natural causes, without any fault on the part of the owners or those in charge; 23 Wall. 169; 3 Cliff. 456; 12 Ct. of Cl. 480. It must appear that neither vessel was in fault; 3 Cliff. 636. Where the captain and crew, except the second mate, were taken sick, and a collision occurred, through the absence of a lookout, it was held to be inevitable accident; 8 Reporter, 389. See also 7 Biss. 249.

It may happen by mutual fault, that is, by the misconduct, fault, or negligence of those in charge of both vessels. In such case, neither party has relief at common law; 3 Kent, 231; 3 C. & P. 528; 9 id. 613; 11 East, 60; 21 Wend. 188, 615; 6 Hill, 592; 12 Metc. 415; 26 Me. 39; (though now otherwise in England by the Judicature Act, 1873;) but the maritime courts aggregate the damages to both vessels and their cargoes, and then divide the same equally between the two vessels; 3 Kent, 232; 1 Conkl. Adm. 374–376; 16 Bost. Law Rep. 686; 17 How. 170; Gilp. 579, 584; 23 Wall. 84; 9 Wall. 505; 3 Ben. 371; 2 Abb. U. S. 495. See 1 Swab. 60–101. But where the collision is by intentional wrong of both parties, the libel will be dismissed; 4 Blatch. 124.

It may happen by inscrutable fault, that is, by the fault of those in charge of one or both vessels and yet under such circumstances that it is impossible to determine who is in fault. In such case the American courts of admiralty and the European maritime courts adopt the rule of an equal division of the aggregate damage; 1 Abb. N. S. 451; Daveis, 365; Flanders, Mar. Law, 296. But the English courts have refused a remedy in admiralty; 2 Hagg. Adm. 145; 6 Thornt. 240; and see 2 Hugh. 128.

It may happen by the fault of those belonging to one of the colliding vessels, without any fault being imputable to the other vessel. In such case the owners of the vessel in fault must bear the damage which their own vessel has sustained, and are liable as well as their master to a claim for compensation from the owners of the other vessel for the damage done to her; 1 Swab. 28, 173, 200, 211; 3 W. Rob. 283; 1 Blatchf. 211; 2 Wall. Jr. 52; 1 How. 28; 13 id. 101; although wilfully committed by the master; Crabbe, 22; 1 Wash. C. C. 13; 3 id. 262. But see 1 W. Rob. 399–406; 2 id. 502; 1 Hill, 343; 19 Wend. 343; 1 East, 106; 6 Jur. 443.

See the four classes of cases noted in 2 Dods. 85, by Lord Stowell.

Full compensation is, in general, to be made in such cases for the loss and damage which the prosecuting party has sustained by the fault of the party proceeded against; 2 W. Rob. 279; including all damages which are fairly attributable exclusively to the act of the original wrong-doer, or which may be said to be the direct consequence of his wrongful act; 3 W. Rob. 7, 282; 11 M. & W. 228; 1 Swab. 200; 6 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 12; 1 Blatchf. 211; 2 Wall. Jr. 52; 1 How. 28; 13 id. 113; 17 id. 170.

The personal liability of the owners is, however, limited in some cases to the value of the vessel and freight (but not by common law, or the earlier civil law, or the earlier general maritime law); Code de Comm. art. 216; Stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104 (Merchants' Shipping Act), pt. 9, § 503 et seq.; 9 U. S. Stat. at Large, 635; 10 id. 68, 72, 73; 3 W. Rob. 16, 41, 101; 1 E. L. & Eq. 637; 3 Hagg. Adm. 431; 15 M. & W. 391; 3 Stor. 465; Daveis, 172; 16 Bost. L. Rep. 686; 2 Am. L. Reg. 157; 9 Cent. L. J. 285; s. c. 25 Int. Rev. Rec. 361; 13 Wall. 104. See 5 Mich. 368. The owner is not liable in respect of the insurance moneys; 8 Ben. 312; 9 Cent. L. J. 285; s. c. 25 Ind. Rev. Rec. 361. In maritime law the vessel itself is hypothecated as security for the injury done in such cases; 1 Swab. 1, 3; 22 E. L. & Eq. 62, 72; 15 Bost. Law Rep. 560; 14 How. 351; 16 id. 469. In England, the owner's liability is the value of the offending ship in her undamaged state; by the American and continental rule, it is the value of the ship immediately after the collision; 9 Cent. L. J. 285; s. c. 25 Int. Rev. Rec. 361. When an owner has neglected to surrender any part of his vessel, he cannot avail himself of this limited liability; 24 Int. Rev. Rec. 198; nor can he where he has parted with his interest in, or title to, the ship before offering to surrender her; id. 123.

For the prevention of collisions, certain rules have been adopted (see NAVIGATION RULES) which are binding upon vessels approaching each other from the time the necessity for precaution begins, and continue to be applicable, as the vessels advance, so long as the means and opportunity to avoid the danger remain; 21 How. 372. But, whatever may be the rules of navigation in force at the place of collision, it is apparent that they must sometimes yield to extraordinary circumstances and cannot be regarded as binding in all cases. Thus, if a vessel necessarily goes so near a rock, or the land, that by following the ordinary rules she would inevitably go upon the rock, or get on shore or aground, no rule should prevail over the preservation of property and life; 1 W. Rob. 478, 485; 4 J. B. Moore, 314. No vessel should unnecessarily incur the probability of a collision by a pertinacious adherence to the rule of navigation; 1 W. Rob. 471, 478; 2 Wend. 452; and if it was clearly in the power of one of the vessels which came into collision to have avoided all danger by giving way, she will be held bound to do so, notwithstanding the rule of navigation; 6 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 190; 6 Thornt. Adm. 600, 607; 7 id. 127; 15 Bost. Law Rep. 390; 3 Cliff. 117. But a vessel is not required to depart from the rule when she cannot do so without danger; 6 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 190; 2 Curt. C. C. 363; 18 How. 581.

There must be a lookout properly stationed and kept; and the absence of such a lookout is prima facie evidence of negligence; 10 How. 557; 12 id. 443; 18 id. 384; 21 id. 548; 23 id. 448; Daveis, 359; 16 Bost. Law Rep. 433; 9 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 239. Lights also must be kept, in some cases; though the rule was and is otherwise by general maritime law in regard to vessels on the high seas; 2 W. Rob. 4; 3 id. 49; 2 Wall. Jr. 268. See NAVIGATION RULES; 12 How. 443; 17 id. 170; 18 id. 223, 581; 19 id. 56, 48, 201; 21 id. 1, 184, 372, 548; 22 id. 48, 461; 23 id. 287; Daveis, 359; 1 Blatchf. 236, 370; Stu. Adm. Low. Rob. 377; 3 id. 7, 49, 190; 1 Swab. 20, 233.

The injury to an insured vessel occasioned by a collision is a loss within the ordinary policy of insurance; 4 Ad. & E. 420; 6 N. & M. 713; 14 Pet. 99; 14 How. 352; 8 Cush. 477; but when the collision is occasioned by the fault of the insured vessel, or the fault of both vessels, the insurer is not ordinarily liable for the amount of the injury done to the other vessel which may be decreed against the vessel insured; 4 Ad. & E. 420; 7 E. & B. 172; 40 E. L. & Eq. 54; 11 N. Y. 9; 14 How. 352, and cases cited; but some policies now provide that the insurer shall be liable for such a loss; 40 E. L. & Eq. 54; 7 E. & B. 172.

When the collision was without fault on either side, and occurred in a foreign country, where, in accordance with the local law, the damages were equally divided between the colliding vessels, the amount of the decree against the insured vessel for its share of the damages suffered by the other vessel was held recoverable under the ordinary policy; 14 Pet. 99.

The fact that the libellants in a collision case had received satisfaction from the insurers for the vessel destroyed, furnishes no ground of defence for the respondent; 17 How. 152.

Improper speed on the part of a steamer in a dark night, during thick weather, or in the crowded thoroughfares of commerce, will render such vessel liable for the damages occasioned by a collision; and it is no excuse for such dangerous speed that the steamer carries the mail and is under contract to convey it at a greater average speed than that complained of; 16 Bost. L. Rep. 433; 5 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 293; 11 id. 297; 3 Hagg. Adm. 414; 2 W. Rob. 2, 205; 18 How. 89, 223; 19 id. 108; 21 id. 1; 12 Ct. of Cl. 480; 7 Biss. 35.

As between a steamer and a sailing vessel, the former must keep out of the way of the latter; 14 Blatch. 524; 91 U. S. 200; as between a vessel in motion and one at anchor, with proper lights, the former is ordinarily liable for a collision; 3 Cliff. 636; 2 Low. 220; 4 L. & Eq. Rep. 676; 2 Hugh. 17; 18 Alb. L. J. 151; s. c. 6 Reporter, 577.

Instances of negligence are to be found in 95 U. S. 600; 98 id. 440; 3 Cliff. 456, 636; 14 Blatch. 37, 254, 480, 524, 531, 545.

When a collison is occasioned solely by the error or unskilfulness of a pilot in charge of a vessel under the provisions of a law compelling the master to take such pilot and commit to him the management of his vessel, the pilot is solely responsible for the damage, and neither the master, his vessel, nor her owner is responsible. But the burden of proof is on the vessel to show that the collision is wholly attributable to the fault of the pilot; L. R. 2 Ad. & Ecc. 3. The rule in U. S. is otherwise; 7 Wall. 53; but in this case the pilotage law was not absolutely compulsory.

A cause of collision, or collision and damage, as it is technically called, is a suit in rem in the admiralty.

In the United States courts it is commenced by the filing of a libel and the arrest of the vessel to the mismanagement or fault of which the injury is imputed. In the English admiralty the suit is commenced by the arrest of the vessel and the filing of a petition. In England, the judge is usually assisted at the hearing of the cause by two of the Masters or Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, or other experienced shipmasters, whose opinions upon all questions of professional skill involved in the issue are usually adopted by the court; 1 W. Rob. 471; 2 id. 225; 2 Chitty, Genl. Pr. 514.

In the American courts of admiralty, the judge usually decides without the aid or advice of experienced shipmasters acting as assessors or advisers of the court; but the evidence of such shipmasters, as experts, is sometimes received in reference to questions of professional skill or nautical usage. Such evidence is not, however, admissible to establish a usage in direct violation of those general rules of navigation which have been sanctioned and established by repeated decisions; 2 Curt. C. C. 141, 363.

When a party sets up circumstances as the basis of exceptions to the general rules of navigation, he is held to strict proof; 1 W. Rob. 157, 182, 478; 6 Thcrnt. 607; 5 id. 170; 3 Hagg. Adm. 321; and courts of admiralty lean against such exceptions; 11 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 353, 355. The admissions of a master of one of the colliding vessels subsequently to the collision are admissible in evidence; 5 E. L. & Eq. 556; and the masters and crew are admissible as witnesses; 2 Dods. 83; 2 Hagg. Adm. 145; 3 id. 321, 325; 1 Conkling, 384.

As to the burden of proof in collision cases, see 9 Jur. 282, 670; 2 W. Rob. 30, 244, 504; 3 id. 7; 12 id. 131, 371; 2 Hagg. Adm. 356; 4 Thornt. Adm. 161, 356; 1 Conkling, 382, 383; 1 How. 28; 5 id. 441; 18 id. 570; Ole. 132; 6 Bost. Law Rep. 111; 8 id. 275.

The general rules in regard to costs in collision cases, in the admiralty courts, are that if only one party is to blame, he pays the costs of both; if neither is to blame, and the party prosecuting had apparent cause for proceeding, each party pays his own costs, but in the absence of apparent or probable cause the libel will be dismissed with costs; if both parties are to blame, the costs of both are equally divided, or, more generally, each party is left to pay his own costs. But costs in admiralty are always in the discretion of the court, and will be given or withheld in particular cases without regard to these general rules, if the equity of the case requires a departure from them; 2 W. Rob. 213, 244; 5 Jur. 1067; 2 Conkling, 438; 1 id. 374.

For a revised code of "Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea," approved by the leading maritime nations, see Abb. Year Book, 1880, p. 97. It went into effect September 1, 1880; but has not been adopted by act of congress.

COLLISTRIGIUM. The pillory.

COLLOCATION. In French Law. The act by which the creditors of an estate are arranged in the order in which they are to be paid according to law.

The order in which the creditors are placed is also called collocation; 2 Low. C. 9, 139.

COLLOQUIUM. In Pleading. A general averment in an action for slander connecting the whole publication with the previous statement; 1 Stark. Sland. 431; Heard, Lib. & Sl. 228; or stating that the whole publication applies to the plaintiff, and to the extrinsic matters alleged in his declaration; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 417.

An averment that the words were spoken "of or concerning" the plaintiff, where the words are actionable in themselves; 6 Term, 162; 16 Pick. 132; Cro. Jac. 674; Heard, Lib. & Sl. § 212; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 417; or where the injurious meaning which the plaintiff assigns to the words results from some extrinsic matter, or of and concerning, or with reference to, such matter; 2 Pick. 328; 13 id. 189; 16 id. 1; Heard, Lib. & Sl. §§ 212, 217; 11 M. & W. 287; 7 Bingh. 119.

An averment that the words in question are spoken of or concerning some usage, report, or fact which gives to words otherwise indifferent the peculiar defamatory meaning assigned to them; Shaw, C. J., 16 Pick. 6.

Whenever words have the slanderous meaning alleged, not by their own intrinsic force, but by reason of the existence of some extraneous fact, this fact must be averred in a traversable form, which averment is called the inducement. There must then be a colloquium averring that the slanderous words were spoken of or concerning this fact. Then the word "meaning," or innuendo, is used to connect the matters thus introduced by averments and colloquia with the particular words laid, showing their identity and drawing what is then the legal inference from the whole declaration, that such was, under the circumstances thus set out, the meaning of the words used. Per Shaw, C. J.; 16 Pick. 6. By the Com. L. Proc. Act (1852) in England the colloquium has been rendered unnecessary. See INNUENDO; Odger, Lib. & Sland.

COLLUSION. An agreement between two or more persons to defraud a person of his rights by the forms of law, or to obtain an object forbidden by law.

Collusion and fraud of every kind vitiate all acts which are infected with them, and render them void. See Shelford, Marr. & Div. 415, 450; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 130, 133; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 51; Bousquet, Dict. Abordage.

In Divorce Law. An agreement between a husband and wife that one of them will commit or appear to commit a breach of matrimonial duties in order that the other may obtain a remedy at law as for a real injury; 2 Wait, Act. & Def. 591; 2 Lev. & Tr. 302; L. R. 1 P. & M. 121. Such an agreement is a fraud upon the court where the remedy is sought; 39 Wis. 167; and will bar a divorce; L. R. 1 P. & M. 121.

COLONIAL LAWS. The laws of a colony.

In the United States the term is used to designate the body of law in force in the colonies of America at the time of the commencemant of our independence, which was, in general, the common law of England, with such modifications as the colonial experience had introduced. The colonial law is thus a transition-state through which our present law is derived from the English common law.

In England the term colonial law is used with reference to the present colonies of that realm.

COLORADO. One of the states of the American Union.

The territory of which it is composed was ceded by the treaties with France in 1803, and Mexico in 1848. The enabling act was approved March 3, 1875, and the state was finally admitted August 1, 1876. Its boundaries are as follows: Commencing on the thirty-seventh parallel of north latitude where the twenty-fifth meridian of longitude west from Washington crosses the same; thence north on said meridian to the forty-first parallel of north latitude; thence along said parallel west to the thirty-second meridian of longitude west from Washington; thence south on said meridian to the thirty-seventh parallel of north latitude; thence along said thirty-seventh parallel to the place of beginning. The Constitution was adopted in Convention March 14, 1876, and ratified July 1, 1876. For statutory provisions relative to Acknowledgment, Descent, Distribution, Wife, etc., see these articles.

COLONUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A freeman of inferior rank, corresponding with the Saxon ceorl and the German rural slaves.

It is thought by Spence not improbable that many of the ceorls were descended from the coloni brought over by the Romans. The names of the coloni and their families were all recorded in the archives of the colony or district. Hence they were called adscriptitii. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 51.

COLONY. A union of citizens or subjects who have left their country to people another, and remain subject to the mother-country. 3 Wash. C. C. 287.

The country occupied by the colonists.

A colony differs from a possession or a dependency. For a history of the American colonies, the reader is referred to Story, Const. b. 1; 1 Kent, 77–80; 1 Dane, Abr. Index. See DEPENDENCE.

COLOR. In Pleading. An apparent but legally insufficient ground of action admitted to subsist in the opposite party by the pleading of one of the parties to an action; 3 Bla. Com. 309; 4 B. & C. 547; 1 M. & P. 307. To give color is to give the plaintiff credit for having an apparent or primâ facie right of action, independent of the matter introduced to destroy it, in order to introduce new matter in avoidance of the declaration. It was necessary that all pleadings in confession and avoidance should give color. See 3 Bla. Com. 309, n.; 1 Chitty, Pl. 531.

Express color is a feigned matter pleaded by the defendant, from which the plaintiff seems to have a good cause, whereas he has in truth only an appearance or color of cause; Bacon, Abr. Trespass, I, 4; 1 Chitty, Pl. 530. It was not allowed in the plaintiff to traverse the colorable right thus given; and it thus became necessary to answer the plea on which the defendant intended to rely.

Implied color is that which arises from the nature of the defence; as where the defence consists of matter of law, the facts being admitted but their legal sufficiency denied by matters alleged in the plea; 1 Chitty, Pl. 528; Steph. Pl. 206.

By giving color the defendant could remove the decision of the case from before a jury and introduce matter in a special plea, which would otherwise oblige him to plead the general issue; 3 Bla. Com. 309.

The colorable right must be plausible or afford a supposititious right such as might induce an unlearned person to imagine it sufficient, and yet it must be in legal strictness inadequate to defeat the defendant's title as shown in the plea; Comyns, Dig. Pleading; Keilw. 1036; 1 Chitty, Pl. 531; 4 Dane, Abr. 552; Archbold, Pl. 211.

COLOR OF OFFICE. A pretence of official right to do an act made by one who has no such right. 9 East, 364. See 41 N. Y. 464.

COLOR OF TITLE. In Ejectment. An apparent title founded upon a written instrument, such as a deed, levy of execution, decree of court, or the like; 3 Wait, Act. & Def. 17; 35 Ill. 394; 38 id. 327. To give color, the conveyance, etc., must be good in form, and profess to convey the title and be duly executed; 8 Cow. 589; 4 Mart. (N. S.) 224. A conveyance void on its face is not sufficient; 11 How. 424; 21 Tex. 97. An entry is by color of title when it is made under a bonâ fide and not pretended claim of title existing in another; 3 Watts, 72. The deed, or color of title, under which a person takes possession of land, serves to define specifically the boundaries of his claims; 10 Pet. 412. When a disseisor enters upon and cultivates part of a tract, he does not thereby hold possession of the whole tract constructively, unless this entry was by color of title by specific boundaries to the whole tract; color of title is valuable only so far as it indicates the extent of the disseisor's claim; 82 Penn. 99.

COLORE OFFICII. Color of office.

COLT. An animal of the horse species, whether male or female, not more than four years old. Russ. & R. 416.

COMBAT. The form of a forcible encounter between two or more persons or bodies of men; an engagement or battle. A duel.

COMBINATION. A union of men for the purpose of violating the law.

A union of different elements. A patent may be taken out for a new combination of existing machines; 2 Mas. 112.

COMBUSTIO DOMORUM. Arson. 4 Bla. Com. 272.

COMES. In Pleading. A word used in a plea or answer which indicates the presence in court of the defendant.

In a plea, the defendant says, "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes, and defends," etc. The word comes, venit, expresses the appearance of the defendant in court. It is taken from the style of the entry of the proceedings on the record, and formed no part of the vive voce pleading. It is, accordingly, not considered as, in strictness, constituting a part of the plea; 1 Chitty, Pl. 411; Steph. Pl. 432.

COMES (Lat. comes, a companion). An earl. A companion, attendant, or follower.

By Spelman the word is said to have been first used to denote the companions or attendants of the Roman proconsuls when they went to their provinces. It came to have a very extended application, denoting a title of honor generally, always preserving this generic signification of companion of, or attendant on, one of superior rank.

Among the Germans the comites accompanied the kings on their journeys made for the purpose of hearing complaints and giving decisions. They acted in the character of assistant judges. Tac. de Mor. Germ. cap. 11, 12; Spence, Eq. Jur. 66; Spelman, Gloss. Among the Anglo-Saxons, the comites were the great vassals of the king, who attended, as well as those of inferior degree, at the great councils or courts of their kings. The term included also the vassals of those chiefs. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 42. Comitatus, county, is derived from comes, the earl or earlderman to whom the government of the district was intrusted. This authority he usually exercised through the vice-comes, or shire reeve (whence our sheriff). The comitates of Chester, Durham, and Lancaster maintained an almost royal state and authority; and these counties have obtained the title of palatine. See PALATINE; 1 Bla. Com. 116. The title of earl or comes has now become a mere shadow, as all the authority is exercised by the sheriff (vice-comes); 1 Bla. Com. 398.

COMITAS (Lat.). Courtesy; comity. An indulgence or favor granted another nation, as a mere matter of indulgence, without any claim of right made.

COMITATUS (Lat. from comes). A county. A shire. The portion of the country under the government of a comes or count. 1 Bla. Com. 116.

An earldom. Earls and counts were originally the same as the comitates. 1 Ld. Raym. 13.

The county court, of great dignity among the Saxons. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 42, 66.

The retinue which accompanied a Roman proconsul to his province. Du Cange. A body of followers; a prince's retinue. Spelman, Gloss.

COMITES. Persons who are attached to a public minister. As to their privileges, see 1 Dall. 117; Baldw. 240; AMBASSADOR.

COMITIA (Lat.). The public assemblies of the Roman people at which all the most important business of the state was transacted, including in some cases even the trial of persons charged with the commission of crime. Anthon, Rom. Antiq. 51. The votes of all citizens were equal in the comitiæ. 1 Kent, 518.

COMITIA CALATA. A session of the comitia curiata for the purpose of adrogation, the confirmation of wills, and the adoption by an heir of the sacred rites which followed the inheritance.

COMITIA CENTURIATA (called, also, comitia majora). An assemblage of the people voting by centuries. The people acting in this form elected their own officers, and exercised an extensive jurisdiction for the trial of crimes. Anthon, Rom. Antiq. 52.

COMITIA CURIATA. An assemblage of the populus (the original burgesses) by tribes. In these assemblies no one of the plebs could vote. They were held for the purpose of confirming matters acted on by the senate, for electing certain high officers, and for carrying out certain religious observances.

COMITIA TRIBUTA. Assemblies to create certain inferior magistrates, elect priests, make laws, and hold trials. Their power was increased very materially subsequently to their first creation, and the range of subjects acted on became much more extensive than at first. Anthon, Rom. Antiq. 62; 1 Kent, 518.

COMITY. Courtesy; a disposition to accommodate.

Courts of justice in one state will, out of comity, enforce the laws of another state, when by such enforcement they will not violate their own laws or inflict an injury on some one of their own citizens: as, for example, the discharge of a debtor under the insolvent laws of one state will be respected in another state, where there is a reciprocity in this respect.

COMMANDITE. In French Law. A partnership in which some furnish money, and others furnish their skill and labor in place of capital. A special or limited partnership.

Those who embark capital in such a partnership are bound only to the extent of the capital so invested. Guyot, Rep. Univ.

The business being carried on in the name of some of the partners only, it is said to be just that those who are unknown should lose only the capital which they have invested, from which alone they can receive an advantage. Under the name of limited partnerships, such arrangements are now allowed by many of the states; although no such partnerships are recognized at common law. Troubat, Lim. Partn. cc. 3, 4.

The term includes a partnership containing dormant rather than special partners. Story, Partn. § 109 et seq.

COMMENCEMENT OF A DECLARATION. That part of the declaration which follows the venue and precedes the circumstantial statement of the cause of action. It formerly contained a statement of the names of the parties, and the character in which they sue or are sued, if any other than their natural capacity; of the mode in which the defendant had been brought into court, and a brief statement of the form of action. In modern practice, however, in most cases, little else than the names and character of the parties is contained in the commencement.

COMMENDA. In French Law. The delivery of a benefice to one who cannot hold the legal title, to keep and manage it for a time limited and render an account of the proceeds. Guyot, Rép. Univ.

In Mercantile Law. An association in which the management of the property was intrusted to individuals. Troubat, Lim. Partn. c. 3, § 27.

COMMENDAM. In Ecclesiastical Law. The appointment of a suitable clerk to hold a void or vacant benefice or church living until a regular pastor be appointed. Hob. 144; Latch, 236.

In Louisiana. A species of limited partnership.

It is formed by a contract, by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished, and no more. La. Civ. Code, 2810. A similar partnership exists in France. Code de Comm. 26, 33; Sirey, 12, pt. 2, p. 25. He who makes this contract is called, in respect to those to whom he makes the advance of capital, a partner in commendam. La. Civ. Code, art. 2811.

COMMENDATORS. In Ecclesiastical Law. Secular persons upon whom ecclesiastical benefices are bestowed. So called because they are commended and intrusted to their oversight. They are merely trustees.

COMMENDATUS. In Feudal Law. One who by voluntary homage put himself under the protection of a superior lord. Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.

COMMERCE. The various agreements which have for their object facilitating the exchange of the products of the earth or the industry of man, with an intent to realize a profit. Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 1. Any reciprocal agreements between two persons, by which one delivers to the other a thing, which the latter accepts, and for which he pays a consideration: if the consideration be money, it is called a sale; if any other thing than money, it is called exchange or barter. Domat, Dr. Pub. liv. 1, tit. 7, s. 1, n. 2.

Congress has power by the constitution to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes; 1 Kent, 431; Story, Const. § 1052 et seq.

Commerce with foreign countries and among the states, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and the transportation of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities; the power conferred upon congress by the above clause is exclusive, so far as it relates to matters within its purview which are national in their character, and admit of a requisite uniformity of regulation affecting all the states. That clause was adopted in order to secure such uniformity against discriminating state legislation.

State legislation is not forbidden in matters either local in their operation, or intended to be mere aids to commerce, for which special regulations can more effectually provide, such as harbors, pilotage, beacons, buoys, and other improvements of harbors, bays, and rivers within a state, if their free navigation be not thereby impaired; congress by its inaction in such matters virtually declares that till it deems best to act they may be controlled by the states; 102 U. S. 691, per Field, J. See also 3 Cliff. 339, for a definition of commerce.

The powers conferred upon congress to regulate commerce among the several states, are not confined to the instrumentalities of commerce known or in use when the constitution was adopted, but keep pace with the progress of the country, and adapt themselves to the new developments of time and circumstances; 96 U. S. 1.

The fact that congress has not legislated in regard to such commerce does not make it lawful for the states to do so. Such inaction shows only that no restrictions are to be put upon commerce in that direction. The right to legislate is exclusively vested in congress; 92 U. S. 259; 91 id. 275. But in another case it was held, that, while action by congress prescribing regulations is exclusive of state authority, yet, until action taken by congress, a state may legislate touching the rights, duties, and liabilities of citizens (if not directed against commerce or any of its regulations), notwithstanding such legislation may indirectly and remotely affect foreign or interstate commerce, for instance, to give a right of action against the owners of a vessel engaged in inter-state traffic for the death of a passenger caused by the negligence of those in charge of the vessel; 93 U. S. 99.

"The line of distinction between that which constitutes an interference with commerce, and that which is a mere police regulation, is sometimes exceedingly dim and shadowy, and it is not to be wondered at that learned jurists differ when endeavoring to classify the cases which arise. It is not doubted that congress has the power to go beyond the general regulations of commerce which it is accustomed to establish, and to descend to the most minute directions, if it shall be deemed advisable; and that, to whatever extent ground shall be covered by those directions, the exercise of state power is excluded. Congress may establish police regulations, as well as the states; conning their operations to the subjects over which it is given control by the constitution. But as the general police power can better be exercised under the supervision of the local authorities, and mischiefs are not likely to spring therefrom so long as the power to arrest collision resides in the national courts, the regulations which are made by congress do not often exclude the establishment of others by the state covering very many particulars. Moreover, the regulations of commerce are usually, and in some cases must be, general and uniform for the whole country; while in some localities, state and local policy will demand peculiar regulations with reference to special and peculiar circumstances." Cooley, Const. Lim. 731.

The above provision of the constitution includes authority to regulate navigation in aid of commerce and to make improvements in navigable waters, such as building a lighthouse in the bed of a stream or requiring navigators of a stream to follow a prescribed course, or directing the water of a navigable stream from one channel to another; 93 U. S. 4. See also 1 Dill. 469. It renders invalid a state statute regulating the arrival of passengers from a foreign port with a view practically to exclude Chinese emigration to the United States, and not merely to exclude pauper or convict emigrants from the state; 92 U. S. 275. See also 3 Sawy. 144. It invalidates a state statute which requires the payment of a license tax by commercial travellers selling goods manufactured in other states, but not by those selling goods manufactured in the state itself; 103 U. S. 344; 91 U. S. 275; (but not when the same tax is levied upon peddlers selling goods made in or out of the state; 100 U. S. 676; and see 102 id. 123.) So of an act requiring importers of foreign goods to take out a license, in the exercise of a power of taxation; 12 Wheat. 419. Also a city ordinance of Baltimore laying wharf fees upon vessels laden with the products of other states, which are not exacted from vessels laden with Maryland products; 100 U. S. 434. Also a state statute imposing a burdensome condition upon a shipmaster as a prerequisite for landing his passengers, with the alternative of the payment of a small sum for each of them; 92 U. S. 259. Also a state tonnage tax on foreign vessels, 20 Wall. 577, levied to defray quarantine expenses, 19 Wall. 581; but this does not extend to a tax for city purposes levied upon a vessel owned by a resident of the city, which is not imposed for the privilege of trading; 6 Biss. 505; 99 U. S. 273. It invalidates a state law granting a telegraph company exclusive right to maintain telegraph lines in such state, as contrary to the act of July 24, 1866, which practically forbids a state to exclude from its borders a telegraph company building its lines in pursuance of this act of congress; 96 U. S. 1; also one providing for inspection of sea-going vessels arriving at a port, and of damaged goods found thereon, by a state officer, with a view to furnishing official evidence to the parties immediately concerned, and when goods are damaged, to provide for their sale; 94 U. S. 246; also a state law which requires those engaged in the transportation of passengers among the states upon vessels within the state to give all persons travelling among the states equal rights and privileges in all parts of the vessels without distinction on account of race or color; 95 U. S. 485; also a state law laying a tax on foreign corporations engaged in carrying passengers or merchandise upon their gross receipts outside of the state; 15 Wall. 284; 7 Biss. 227; also a law of Missouri prohibiting the driving of cattle from Texas and other states into Missouri, during certain months; 95 U. S. 465.

A state law, requiring the master of every vessel in the foreign trade to pay a certain sum to a state officer for every passenger brought from a foreign country into the state, is void as infringing this provision of the constitution; 7 How. 283. No state can grant an exclusive monopoly for the navigation of any portion of the waters within its limits upon which commerce is carried on under coasting licenses granted under the authority of congress; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1; the rights here in controversy were the exclusive right to navigate the Hudson river with steam vessels. See also, on this point, 3 Wall, 713; 10 id. 557; 65 Penn. 399; s. c. 3 Am. Rep. 636. But a state law granting to an individual an exclusive right to navigate the upper waters of a stream which is wholly within the limits of a state, separated from tide waters by falls impassable for purposes of navigation, and not forming a part of a continuous track of navigation between two or more states, or with a foreign country, is not invalid under the above clause of the constitution; 14 How. 568; and see 8 Bush, 447.

The state may authorize the building of bridges over navigable waters, notwithstanding the fact that they may, to some extent, interfere with the navigation of the stream. If the stream is one over which the regulation of congress extends, the question arises whether the bridge will interfere with navigation or not; it is not necessarily unlawful if properly built, and if the general traffic of the country will be benefited rather than injured by its construction. There are many cases in which a bridge may be vastly more important than the navigation of the stream which it crosses. It may be said that a state may authorize such constructions, provided they do not constitute a material obstruction to navigation; and each case depends upon its own particular facts. The decision of the state legislature is not conclusive; the final decision rests with the federal courts, who may cause the structure to be abated if it be found to obstruct unnecessarily the traffic on the stream. Those who build the bridge must show the state authority that the construction of the bridge is proper, and that it benefits more than it impedes the general commerce; Cooley, Const.

Lim. 738, 739, 740; the Wheeling Bridge Case, 13 How. 518; see also 6 McLean, 72, 209, 237; 5 Ind. 13.

The states may establish ferries; 1 Black, 603; 41 Miss. 27; 11 Mich. 43; and dams; 2 Pet. 245; 42 Penn. 219; 28 Ind. 257; 1 Biss. 546.

The state has also the power to regulate the speed and general conduct of vessels navigating its waters, provided such regulations do not conflict with regulations prescribed by congress for foreign commerce, or commerce among the states; Cooley, Const. Lim. 740; 1 Hill, 467, 470.

This constitutional provision does not apply to regulations as to life preservers, boiler inspections, etc., on steamboats which confine their business to ports wholly within a state; 6 Ben. 42; nor to any commerce entirely within a state; 10 Wall. 557; nor to a condition in a railroad charter granted by a state that the company shall pay a part of its earnings to the state, from time to time, as a bonus; 21 Wall. 456; nor to a state law prescribing regulations for warehouses, carrying on business within the state exclusively, notwithstanding they are used as instruments of inter-state traffic; 94 U. S. 113; nor to a law of Virginia by which only such persons as are not citizens of that state are prohibited from planting oysters in the soil covered by her tide-waters. Subject to the paramount right of navigation, each state owns the beds of all tide-waters within its jurisdiction, and may appropriate them to be used by its own citizens; 94 U. S. 291. It does not forbid a state from enacting, as a police regulation, a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors; 97 U. S. 25; nor a state act prescribing maximum rates of transportation within the state; 94 U. S. 155; and see id. 164. Nor is a city ordinance, exacting a license fee, for the maintenance of its office in the city, from an express company doing business beyond the limits of a state, invalid; 16 Wall. 479.

COMMERCIA BELLI. Compacts entered into by belligerent nations to secure a temporary and limited peace. 1 Kent, 159.

Contracts made between citizens of hostile nations in time of war. 1 Kent, 104.

COMMERCIAL LAW. A phrase employed to denote those branches of the law which relate to the rights of property and relations of persons engaged in commerce.

This term denotes more than the phrase "maritime law," which is sometimes used as synonymous, but which more strictly relates to shipping and its incidents.

As the subjects with which commercial law, even as administered in any one country, has to deal are dispersed throughout the globe, it results that commercial law is less local and more cosmopolitan in its character than any other great branch of municipal law; and the peculiar genius of the common law, in adapting recognized principles of right to new and ever-varying combinations of facts, has here found a field where its excellence has been most clearly shown. The various systems of commercial law have been well contrasted by Leone Levi in his collection entitled "Commercial Law, its Principles and Administration, or the Mercantile Law of Great Britain compared with the Codes and Laws of Commerce of all the Important Mercantile Countries of the Modern World, and with the Institutes of Justinian;" London, 1850–52; a work of great interest both as a contribution to the project of a mercantile code and as a manual of present use.

As to the existence of a distinct commercial law in the federal courts, see 12 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 473.

COMMISSARIA LEX. A principle of the Roman law relative to the forfeiture of contracts. It was not unusual to restrict a sale upon credit, by a clause in the agreement that if the buyer should fail to make due payment the seller might rescind the sale. In the mean time, however, the property was the buyer's and at his risk. A debtor and his pledgee might also agree that if the debtor did not pay at the day fixed, the pledge should become the absolute property of the creditor. 2 Kent, 583. This was abolished by a law of Constantine. Cod. 8. 35. 3.

COMMISSARY. An officer whose principal duties are to supply an army, or some portion thereof, with provisions.

The act of April 14, 1818, s. 6, requires that the president, by and with the consent of the senate, shall appoint a commissary-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonel of ordnance, and as many assistants, to be taken from the subalterns of the line, as the service may require. The commissary-general and his assistants shall perform such duties, in the purchasing and issuing of rations to the armies of the United States, as the president may direct. The duties of these officers are further detailed in the subsequent sections of this act, and in the act of March 2, 1821.

By act of Aug. 3, 1861, four commissaries of subsistence, each with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a major of cavalry, and eight each with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a captain of cavalry, are added to the subsistence department. 12 U. S. Stat. at Large, 287.

By act of Feb. 9, 1863, it is provided that there be added to the subsistence department of the army one brigadier-general, to be selected from the subsistence department, who shall be commissary-general of subsistence, and by regular promotion, one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, and two majors; the colonels and lieutenant-colonels to be assistant commissaries-general of subsistence, and that vacancies in said grades shall be filled by regular promotions in said department. 12 U. S. Stat. at Large, 648.

COMMISSARY COURT. In Scotch Law. A court of general ecclesiastical jurisdiction. It was held before four commissioners, appointed by the crown from among the faculty of advocates.

It had a double jurisdiction: first, that exercised within a certain district; second, another, universal, by which it reviewed the sentences of inferior commissioners, and confirmed the testaments of those dying abroad or dying in the country without having an established domicil. Bell, Dict.

It has been abrogated, its jurisdiction in matters of confirmation being given to the sheriff, and the jurisdiction as to marriage and divorce to the court of session. Paterson, Comp. See 4 Geo. IV. c. 47; 1 Will. IV. c. 69; 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 41; 13 and 14 Vict. c. 36.

COMMISSION (Lat. commissio; from committere, to intrust to).

An undertaking without reward to do something for another, with respect to a thing bailed; Rutherforth, Inst. 105.

A body of persons authorized to act in a certain matter; 5 B. & C. 850.

The act of perpetrating an offence. An instrument issued by a court of justice, or other competent tribunal, to authorize a person to take depositions, or do any other act by authority of such court or tribunal, is called a commission. For a form of a commission to take depositions, see Gresley, Eq. Ev. 72.

Letters-patent granted by the government, under the public seal, to a person appointed to an office, giving him authority to perform the duties of his office. The commission is not the appointment, but only evidence of it, and, as soon as it is signed and sealed, vests the office in the appointee; 1 Cra. 137; 2 N. & M'C. 357; 1 M'Cord, 233, 238. See 1 Pet. C. C. 194; 2 Sumn. 299; 8 Conn. 109; 1 Penn. 297; 2 Const. 696; 2 Tyl. 235.

In Common Law. A sum allowed, usually a certain per cent. upon the value of the property involved, as compensation to a servant or agent for services performed. See COMMISSIONS.

COMMISSION OF ASSIZE. In English Practice. A commission which formerly issued from the king, appointing certain persons as commissioners or judges of assize to hold the assizes in association with discreet knights during those years in which the justices in eyre did not come.

Other commissions were added to this, which has finally fallen into complete disuse. See COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS.

COMMISSION OF LUNACY. A writ issued out of chancery, or such court as may have jurisdiction of the case, directed to a proper officer, to inquire whether a person named therein is a lunatic or not. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 382 et seq.

COMMISSION OF REBELLION. In English Law. A writ formerly issued out of chancery to compel an attendance. It was abolished by the order of Aug. 8, 1841.

COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS. The title given by law to the head of the patent office bureau. Prior to 1836 the business of that office was under the immediate charge of a clerk in the state department, who was generally known as the superintendent of the patent office. He performed substantially the same duties which afterwards devolved upon the commissioner, except that he was not required to decide upon the patentability of any contrivance for which a patent was sought, inasmuch as the system of examinations had not then been introduced and the applicant was permitted to take out his patent at his own risk. See PATENT OFFICE, EXAMINERS IN.

For a fuller understanding of the duties of the commissioner of patents, see PATENTS; PATENT OFFICE.

COMMISSIONERS OF BAIL. Officers appointed by some courts to take recognizances of bail in civil cases.

COMMISSIONERS OF HIGHWAYS. Officers having certain powers and duties concerning the highways within the limits of their jurisdiction. They are usually three in number. In some of the states they are county officers, and their jurisdiction is coextensive with the county. In others, as in New York, Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin, they are town or township officers. They have power to establish, alter, and vacate highways; and it is their duty to cause them to be kept in repair.

COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS. In English Law. A court of record of special jurisdiction in England.

It is a temporary tribunal, erected by virtue of a commission under the great seal, which formerly was granted pro re natâ at the pleasure of the crown, but now at the discretion and nomination of the lord chancellor, lord treasurer, and chief justices, pursuant to the statute of sewers, 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5.

Its jurisdiction is to overlook the repairs of the banks and walls of the sea-coast and navigable rivers and the streams communicating therewith, and is confined to such county or particular district as the commission shall expressly name. The commissioners may take order for the removal of any annoyances or the safeguard and conservation of the sewers within their commission, either according to the laws and customs of Romney Marsh, or otherwise, at their own discretion. They are also to assess and collect taxes for such repairs and for the expenses of the commission. They may proceed with the aid of a jury or upon their own view; Consult 7 Anne, c. 10; 4 & 5 Vict. c. 45; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 50; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120; 3 & 4 Will. IV. cc. 10, 19–22; 3 Bla. Com. 73, 74; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 469.

In American Law. Commissioners have been appointed for the purpose of regulating the flow of water in streams. Their duties are discharged in the different states by county courts, county commissioners, etc.

COMMISSIONS. In Practice. Compensation allowed to agents, factors, executors, trustees, receivers, and other persons who manage the affairs of others, in recompense for their services.

The right to such allowance may either be the subject of a special contract, may rest upon an implied contract to pay quantum meruit, or may depend upon statutory provisions; 7 C. & P. 584; 9 id. 559; 3 Smith, 440; Sugden, V. & P. Index, tit. Auctioneer.

See the statutes of the various states. The right does not generally accrue till the completion of the services; 1 C. & P. 384; 4 id. 289; 7 Bingh. 99; and see 10 B. & C. 438; does not then exist unless proper care, skill, and perfect fidelity have been employed; 3 Campb. 451; 1 Stark. 113; 3 Taunt. 32; 9 Bingh. 287; 12 Pick. 328; and the services must not have been illegal nor against public policy; 1 Campb. 547; 4 Esp. 179; 5 Taunt. 521; 3 B. & C. 639; 11 Wheat. 258.

The amount of such commissions is generally a percentage on the sums paid out or received. When there is a usage of trade at the particular place or in the particular business in which the agent is engaged, the amount of commissions allowed to auctioneers, brokers, and factors is regulated by such usage, in the absence of special agreement; 10 B. & C. 438; 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 221; 1 Parsons, Contr. 84, 85; Story, Ag. § 326; where there is no agreement and no custom, the jury may fix the commission as a quantum meruit; 9 C. & P. 620; 43 Miss. 288. The amount which executors, etc., are to receive is frequently fixed by statute, subject to modification in special cases by the proper tribunal; 12 Barb. 671; Edwards, Receiv. 176, 302, 643. And see the statutes of the various states. In England, no commissions are allowed to executors or trustees; 1 Vern. Ch. 316; 4 Ves. Ch. 72, n.; 9 Cl. & F. 111; even where he carries on the testator's business by his direction; 6 Beav. 371. See the cases in all the states in 2 Perry, Trusts, § 918, note.

In case the factor guaranties the payment of the debt, he is entitled to a larger compensation (called a del credere commission) than is ordinarily given for the transaction of similar business where no such guaranty is made; Paley, Ag. 88 et seq.

COMMITMENT. In Practice. The warrant or order by which a court or magistrate directs a ministerial officer to take a person to prison.

The act of sending a person to prison by means of such a warrant or order. 9 N. H. 204.

A commitment should be in writing under the hand and seal of the magistrate, and should show his authority and the time and place of making it; 2 R. I. 436; 3 Harr. & M'H. 113; T. U. P. Charlt. 280; 3 Cra. 448. See Harp. 313; Wright, Ohio, 690. It must be made in the name of the United States or of the commonwealth or people, as required by the constitution of the United States or of the several states.

It should be directed to the keeper of the prison, and not generally to carry the party to prison; 2 Stra. 934; 1 Ld. Raym. 424. It should describe the prisoner by his name and surname, or the name he gives as his.

It ought to state that the party has been charged on oath; 14 Johns. 371; 3 Cra. 448; but see 2 Va. Cas. 504; 2 Bail. 290; and should mention with convenient certainty the particular crime charged against the prisoner; 3 Cra. 448; 11 St. Tr. 304, 318; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 16, s. 16; 1 Chitty, C. Law, 110; 4 Md. 262; 1 Rob. 744; 5 Ark. 104; 26 Vt. 205. See 17 Wend. 181; 23 id. 638. It should point out the place of imprisonment, and not merely direct that the party be taken to prison; 2 Stra. 934; 1 Ld. Raym. 424.

It may be for further examination, or final. If final, the command to the keeper of the prison should be to keep the prisoner "until he shall be discharged by due course of law," when the offence is not bailable, see 3 Conn. 502; 29 E. L. & E. 134; when it is bailable, the gaoler should be directed to keep the prisoner in his "said custody for want of sureties, or until he shall be discharged by due course of law." When the commitment is not final, it is usual to commit the prisoner "for further hearing."

See, generally, 4 Cra. 129; 2 Yerg. 58; 6 Humphr. 391; 9 N. H. 185; 5 Rich. So. C. 255.

COMMITTEE. In Legislation. One or more members of a legislative body, to whom is specially referred some matter before that body, in order that they may investigate and examine into it and report to those who delegated this authority to them.

In Practice. A guardian appointed to take charge of the person or estate of one who has been found to be non compos.

For committee of the person, the next of kin is usually selected; and, in case of the lunacy of a husband or wife, the one who is of sound mind is entitled, unless under very special circumstances, to be the committee of the other; Shelford, Lun. 137, 140. It is the duty of such a person to take care of the lunatic.

For committee of the estate, the heir at law is favored. Relations are preferred to strangers; but the latter may be appointed; Shelf. Lun. 144. It is the duty of such committee to administer the estate faithfully and to account for his administration. He cannot, in general, make contracts in relation to the estate of the lunatic, or bind it, without a special order of the court or authority that appointed him. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 389–391.

COMMITTITUR PIECE. In English Law. An instrument in writing, on paper or parchment, which charges a person already in prison, in execution at the suit of the person who arrested him.

COMMIXTION. In Civil Law. A term used to signify the act by which goods are mixed together.

The matters which are mixed are dry or liquid. In the commixtion of the former, the matter retains its substance and individuality; in the latter, the substance no longer remains distinct. The commixtion of liquids is called confusion (q. v.), and that of solids a mixture. Leg. Elém. du Dr. Rom. §§ 370, 371; Story, Bailm. § 40; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 506.

COMMODATE. In Scotch Law. A loan for use. Erskine, Inst. b. 3, t. 1, § 20; 1 Bell, Com. 225.

Judge Story regrets that this term has not been adopted and naturalized, as mandate has been from mandatum. Story, Bailm. § 221. Ayliffe, in his Pandects, has gone further and terms the bailor the commodant, and the bailee the commodatory, thus avoiding those circumlocutions which, in the common phraseology of our law, have become almost indispensable. Ayliffe, Pand. b. 4, t. 16, p. 517. Browne, in his Civil Law, vol. 1, 352, calls the property loaned "commodated property."

COMMODATO. In Spanish Law. A contract by which one person lends gratuitously to another some object not consumable, to be restored to him in kind at a given period.

COMMODATUM. A contract by which one of the parties binds himself to return to the other certain personal chattels which the latter delivers to him to be used by him without reward; loan for use.

COMMON. An incorporeal hereditament, which consists in a profit which one man has in connection with one or more others in the land of another; 12 S. & R. 32; 10 Wend. 647; 11 Johns. 498; 16 id. 14, 30; 10 Pick. 364; 3 Kent, 403.

Common of estovers is the liberty of taking necessary wood, for the use of furniture of a house or farm, from another man's estate. This right is inseparably attached to the house or farm, and is not apportionable. If, therefore, a farm entitled to estovers be divided by the act of the party among several tenants, neither of them can take estovers, and the right is extinguished; 2 Bla. Com. 34; Plowd. 381; 10 Wend. 639; 1 Barb. 592. It is to be distinguished from the right to estovers which a tenant for life has in the estate which he occupies. See ESTOVERS.

Common of pasture is the right of feeding one's beast on another's land. It is either appendant, appurtenant because of vicinage, or in gross.

Common of piscary is the liberty of fishing in another man's water. 2 Bla. Com. 34. See FISHERY.

Common of shack. The right of persons occupying lands lying together in the same common field, to turn out their cattle after harvest to feed promiscuously in that field. Whart. Dict.; 2 Steph. Com. 6; 1 B. & Ald. 710.

Common of turbary is the liberty of digging turf in another man's ground. Common of turbary can only be appendant or appurtenant to a house, not to lands, because turves are to be spent in the house; 4 Co. 37; 3 Atk. 189; Nov. 145; 7 East, 127.

The taking seaweed from a beach is a commonable right in Rhode Island; 2 Curt. C. C. 571; 1 R. I. 106; 2 id. 218. The constitution of Illinois provides for the continuance of certain commons in that state. Ill. Const. art. 8, § 8. In Virginia it is declared by statute that all unappropriated lands on the Chesapeake Bay, on the shore of the sea, or of any river or creek, and the bed of any river or creek in the eastern part of the commonwealth, ungranted and used as common, shall, etc. Va. Code, c. 62, § 1.

In most of the cities and towns in the United States, there are considerable tracts of land appropriated to public use. These commons were generally laid out with the cities or towns where they are found, either by the original proprietors or by the early inhabitants.

Where land thus appropriated has been accepted by the public, or where individuals have purchased lots adjoining land so appropriated, under the expectation excited by its proprietors that it should so remain, the proprietors cannot resume their exclusive ownership; 3 Vt. 521; 10 Pick. 310; 4 Day, 328; 1 Ired. 144; 7 Watts, 394. And see 14 Mass. 440; 2 Pick. 475; 12 S. & R. 32; 6 Vt. 355.

COMMON APPENDANT. Common of pasture appendant is a right annexed to the possession of land, by which the owner thereof is entitled to feed his beasts on the wastes of the manor. It can only be claimed by prescription: so that it cannot be pleaded by way of custom; 1 Rolle, Abr. 396; 6 Coke, 59. It is regularly annexed to arable land only, and can only be claimed for such cattle as are necessary to tillage: as, horses and oxen to plough the land, and cows and sheep to manure it; 2 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 4. 5; 10 Wend. 647. Common appendant may by usage be limited to any certain number of cattle; but where there is no such usage, it is restrained to cattle levant and couchant upon the land to which it is appendant; 8 Term, 396; 5 id. 46; 2 M. & R. 205; 2 Dane, Abr. 611, § 12. It may be assigned; and by assigning the land to which it is appended, the right passes as a necessary incident to it. It may be apportioned by granting over a parcel of the land to another, either for the whole or a part of the owner's estate; Willes, 227; 4 Co. 36; 8 id. 78. It may be extinguished by a release of it to the owner of the land, by a severance of the right of common, by unity of possession of the land, or by the owner of the land, to which the right of common is annexed, becoming the owner of any part of the land subject to the right; 25 Penn. 161; 16 Johns. 14; Cro. Eliz. 592. Common of estovers or of piscary, which may also be appendant, cannot be apportioned; 8 Co. 78. But see 2 R. I. 218.

COMMON APPURTENANT. Common appurtenant differs from common appendant in the following particulars, viz.: it may be claimed by grant or prescription, whereas common appendant can only arise from prescription; it does not arise from any connection of tenure, nor is it confined to arable land, but may be claimed as annexed to any kind of land; it may be not only for beasts usually commonable, such as horses, oxen, and sheep, but likewise for goats, swine, etc.; it may be severed from the land to which it is appurtenant; it may be commenced by grant; and an uninterrupted usage for twenty years is evidence of a grant. In most other respects commons appendant and appurtenant agree; 2 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 5; Bouvier, Inst. n. 1650; 30 E. L. & Eq. 176; 15 East, 108.

COMMON BECAUSE OF VICINAGE. The right which the inhabitants of two or more contiguous townships or vills have of intercommoning with each other. It ought to be claimed by prescription, and can only be used by cattle levant and couchant upon the lands to which the right is annexed; and cannot exist except between adjoining townships, where there is no intermediate land; Co. Litt. 122 a; 4 Co. 38 a; 7 id. 5; 10 Q. B. 581, 589, 604; 19 id. 620; 18 Barb. 523.

COMMON IN GROSS. A right of common which must be claimed by deed or prescription. It has no relation to land, but is annexed to a man's person, and may be for a certain or indefinite number of cattle. It cannot be aliened so as to give the entire right to several persons to be enjoyed by each in severalty. And where it comes to several persons by operation of law, as by descent, it is incapable of division among them, and must be enjoyed jointly. Common appurtenant for a limited number of cattle may be granted over, and by such grant becomes common in gross; Co. Litt. 122 a, 164 a; 5 Taunt. 244; 16 Johns. 30; 2 Bla. Com. 34.

See, generally, Viner, Abr. Common; Bacon, Abr. Common; Comyns, Dig. Common; 2 Bla. Com. 34 et seq.; 2 Washb. R. P.; Williams, Rights of Common (1880).

COMMON ASSURANCES. Deeds which make safe or assure to a man the title to his estate, whether they are deeds of conveyance or to charge or discharge.

COMMON BAIL. Fictitious sureties entered in the proper office of the court. See BAIL; ARREST.

COMMON BAR. In Pleading. A plea to compel the plaintiff to assign the particular place where the trespass has been committed. Steph. Pl. 256. It is sometimes called a blank bar.

COMMON BARRATRY. See BARRATRY.

COMMON BENCH. The ancient name for the court of common pleas. See BENCH; BANCUS COMMUNIS.

COMMON CARRIERS. A common carrier is one whose business, occupation, or regular calling it is to carry chattels for all persons who may choose to employ and remunerate him; 1 Pick. 50; 2 Kelly, 353; Schouler, Bailm. 297.

The definition includes carriers by land and water. They are, on the one hand, stage-coach proprietors, railway-companies, truckmen, wagoners, and teamsters, carmen and porters; and express companies, whether such persons undertake to carry goods from one portion of the same town to another, or through the whole extent of the country, or even from one state or kingdom to another. And, on the other hand, this term includes the owners and masters of every kind of vessel or watercraft who set themselves before the public as the carriers of freight of any kind for all who choose to employ them, whether the extent of their navigation be from one continent to another or only in the coasting trade or in river or lake transportation, or whether employed in lading or unlading goods or in ferrying, with whatever mode of motive power they may adopt; Story, Bailm. §§ 494–496; 2 Kent, 598, 599; Redf. Railw. § 124; 1 Salk. 249; 2 Ga. 348; 14 Ala. N. S. 261. It has been doubted whether carmen; 8 C. & P. 207; and coasters; 6 Cow. 266; were common carriers; but these cases stand alone, and are contradicted by many authorities; 19 Barb. 577; 24 id. 533; 9 Rich. 193.

But the liability of the owner of a tug-boat to his tow, is not that of a common carrier; 77 Penn. 238; 13 Wend. 387; 24 La. An. 165; 1 Black, 62; 6 Cal. 462.

And although the carrier receives the goods as a forwarder only, yet if his contract is to transport and to deliver them at a specified address, he is liable as a common carrier; 5 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 16; 48 N. H. 339.

Common carriers are responsible for all loss or damage during transportation, from whatever cause, except the act of God or the public enemy; Angell, Carr. 70, § 67; 1 Term, 27; 2 Ld. Raym. 909, 918; 1 Wils. 281; 1 Salk. 18, and cases cited; 4 Bingh. N. C. 314; 25 E. L. & Eq. 595; 1 Term, 27; 2 Kent, 597, 598; 7 Yerg. 340; 3 Munf. 239; 1 Dev. & B. 273; 2 Bail. 157; 6 Johns. 160; 21 Wend. 190; 23 id. 306; 5 Strobh. 119; Rice, 108; 4 Zabr. 697; 2 id. 273; 1 Conn. 487; 12 id. 410; 4 N. H. 259; 11 Ill. 579. The act of God is held to extend only to such inevitable accidents as occur without the intervention of man's agency; 1 Term, 27; 21 Wend. 192; 3 Esp. 127; 4 Dougl. 287; which could not be avoided by the exercise of due skill and care; 2 Watts, 114; 10 Wall. 176. See ACT OF GOD.

The carrier is not responsible for losses occurring from natural causes, such as frost, fermentation, evaporation, or natural decay of perishable articles, or the natural and necessary wear in the course of transportation, or the shipper's carelessness, provided the carrier exercises all reasonable care to have the loss or deterioration as little as practicable; Bull. N. P. 69; 2 Kent, 299, 300; Story, Bailm. § 492 a; 6 Watts, 424; Redf. Railw. § 141.

Carriers, both by land and water, when they undertake the general business of carrying every kind of goods, are bound to carry all which offer; and if they refuse, without just excuse, they are liable to an action; 2 Show. 332; 5 Term, 143; 4 B. & Ald. 32; 8 M. & W. 372; 1 Pick. 50; 5 Mo. 36; 15 Conn. 539; 2 Sumn. 221; 6 Railw. Cas. 61; 6 Wend. 335; 2 Stor. 16; 12 Mod. 484; 4 C. B. 555; 6 id. 775; 2 Ball & B. 54; 9 Price, 408. But the business of a common carrier may be restricted within such limits as he may deem expedient, if an individual, or which may be prescribed in its grant of powers, if a corporation, and he is not bound to accept goods out of the line of his usual business. But should the carrier accept goods not within the line of his business, he assumes the liability of a common carrier as to the specific goods accepted; 23 Vt. 186; 14 Penn. 48; 10 N. H. 481; 30 Miss. 231; 4 Exch. 369; 12 Mod. 484; 17 Wall. 357; 6 Wend. 335; 26 Vt. 248; 11 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 126; Schouler, Bailm. 359; Redf. Railw. Ca. 116. The carrier may require freight to be paid in advance; but in an action for not carrying, it is only necessary to allege a readiness to pay freight; 2 Show. 81; 8 M. & W. 372; 18 Ill. 488; 14 Ala. N. S. 249. It is not required to prove or allege a tender, if the carrier refuse to accept the goods for transportation. The carrier is entitled to a lien upon the goods for freight; 2 Ld. Raym. 752; and for advances made to other carriers; 6 Humphr. 70; 16 Ill. 408; 18 id. 488; 16 Johns. 356; 13 B. Monr. 243. The consignor is primâ facie liable for freight; but the consignee may be liable when the consignor is his agent, or when the title is in him and he accepts the goods; 13 East, 399; 3 Bingh. 383; 4 Denio, 110; 3 E. D. Sm. 187; Schouler, Bailm. 541, 542.

Common carriers may qualify their common-law responsibility by special contract; 4 Coke, 83; Angell, Carr. § 220; 1 Ventr. 238; Story, Bailm. § 549, and note 5; 17 Wall. 357; 16 Wall. 318; 21 Wall. 264; 63 Penn. 14. Such a contract may be shown by proving a notice, brought home to and assented to by the owner of the goods or his authorized agent, wherein the carrier stipulates for a qualified liability; 5 East, 507; 5 Bingh. 207; 8 M. & W. 243; 6 How. 344; 3 Me. 228; 11 id. 422; 11 N. Y. 491; 9 Watts, 87; 6 W. & S. 495; 8 Penn. 479; 31 id. 209; 2 Rich. 286; 12 B. Monr. 63; 23 Vt. 186; 4 H. & J. 317. Or it may be reduced to writing, in the form of a bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

But the carrier cannot contract against his own negligence or the negligence of his employés and agents; 15 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 140; 50 Penn. 313; 1 Fed. Rep. 382; 41 Conn. 333; 17 Wall. 357; 54 Penn. 53.

Railway-companies, steamboats, and other carriers who allow express companies to carry parcels and packages on their cars, or boats, or other vehicles, are liable as common carriers to the owners of goods for all loss or damage which occurs, without regard to the contract between them and such express carriers; 6 How. 344; 23 Vt. 186.

Railways, steamboats, packets, and other common carriers of passengers, although not liable for injuries to their passengers without their fault, are nevertheless responsible for the baggage of such passengers intrusted to their care as common carriers of goods; and such responsibility continues for a reasonable time after the goods have been placed in the warehouse or depot of the carrier, at the place of destination, for delivery to the passenger or his order; 1 C. B. 839; 2 B. & P. 416; 4 Bingh. 218; 6 Hill, 586; 26 Wend. 591; 10 N. H. 481; 7 Rich. 158. Where one company checks baggage through a succession of lines owned by different companies, each company becomes responsible for the whole route; 8 N. Y. 37; 2 E. D. Sm. 184. The baggage-check given at the time of receiving such baggage is regarded as primâ facie evidence of the liability of the company. It stands in the place of a bill of lading; 7 Rich. 158; Redf. Railw. § 128. Baggage will not include merchandise; 9 Eng. L. & Eq. 477; 25 Wend. N. Y. 459; 6 Hill, N. Y. 586; 12 Ga. 217; 10 Cush. 506. Jewelry and a watch in a trunk, being female attire, are regarded as proper baggage; 4 Bingh. 218; 3 Penn. 451. But money, except a reasonable amount for expenses, is not properly baggage; 9 Wend. 85; 19 id. 554; 5 Cush. 69; 9 Humphr. 621; 20 Mo. 513; 15 Ala. 242. See BAGGAGE.

The responsibility of common carriers begins upon the delivery of the goods for immediate transportation. A delivery at the usual place of receiving freight, or to the employés of the company in the usual course of business, is sufficient; 20 Conn. 534; 2 C. & K. 680; 2 M. & S. 172; 16 Barb. 383; Angell, Carr. §§ 129–147. But where carriers have a warehouse at which they receive goods for transportation, and goods are delivered there not to be forwarded until some event occur, the carriers are, in the mean time, only responsible as depositaries; 24 N. H. 71; and where goods are received as wharfingers, or warehousers, or forwarders, and not as carriers, liability will be incurred only for ordinary negligence; 7 Cow. 497.

The responsibility of the carrier terminates after the arrival of the goods at their destination and a reasonable time has elapsed for the owner to receive them in business hours. After that, the carrier may put them in warehouse, and is only responsible for ordinary care; 10 Metc. 472; 27 N. H. 86; 4 Term, 581; 2 M. & S. 172; 2 Kent, 591, 592; Story, Bailm. § 444. In carriage by water, the carrier is, as a general rule, bound to give notice to the consignee of the arrival of the goods; Redf. Railw. § 130.

Where goods are so marked as to pass over successive lines of railways, or other transportation, having no partnership connection in the business of carrying, the successive carriers are only liable for damage or loss occurring during the time the goods are in their possession for transportation; 48 N. H. 339; 22 Wall. 129; 52 Vt. 335; 23 Vt. 186; 6 Hill, 158; 22 Conn. 502; 1 Gray, 502; 4 Am. Law Reg. 234. The English courts hold the first carrier, who accepts goods marked for a place beyond his route, responsible for the entire route, unless he stipulates expressly for the extent of his own route only; 8 M. & W. 421; 3 E. L. & Eq. 497; 18 id. 553, 557.

Where one of the carriers has contracted clearly and unequivocally to deliver goods at their destination, i. e., to carry them over the whole route, his liability will continue until final delivery; 33 Conn. 178; 68 Penn. 272; 3 Fed. Rep. 768; 51 N. H. 9; 48 N. H. 339; 49 Vt. 255; but the carrier upon whose line the damage or loss has occurred will also be liable; 1 Am. Law Reg. o. s. 119; 28 Wis. 209; 32 Vt. 665.

A contract to transport goods from or to points not on the carrying line, and without the state by which it is incorporated, is held to be good; 2 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 184; 47 Me. 573; 27 Vt. 110; 19 Wend. 534; Redf. Railw. Cases, 110; 48 N. H. 339; contra, 24 Conn. 468.

The agents of corporations who are common carriers, such as railway and steamboat companies, will bind their principals to the full extent of the business intrusted to their control, whether they follow their instructions or not; 14 How. 468, 483. Nor will it excuse the company because the servant or agent acted wilfully in disregard of his instructions; 5 Du. N. Y. 193; Redf. Railw. § 137, and cases cited in notes.

The contracts of common carriers, like all other contracts, are liable to be controlled and qualified by the known usages and customs and course of the business in which they are engaged; and all who do business with them are bound to take notice of such usages and customs as are uniform, of long standing, and generally known and understood by those familiar with such transactions; 25 Wend. 660; 6 Hill, 157; 28 Vt. 186, 211, 212; 21 Ga. 526.

By the common law, live stock was not included among the articles which a transporter accepted with the liability of a common carrier. Such freight is now generally carried on special terms; but the liability of a carrier who accepts live stock for transportation, without a special contract, is that of a common carrier; 26 Vt. 248; 52 N. H. 355. But for accidents necessarily incident to live stock in transportation, the carrier is not so liable; 13 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 145 (with note by Mr. Hunter); S. C. 9 Barb. 645.

The carrier has an insurable interest in the goods, both in regard to fire and marine disasters, measured by the extent of his liability for loss or damage; 12 Barb. 595.

The carrier is not bound, unless he so stipulate, to deliver goods by a particular time, or to do more than to deliver in a reasonable time under all the circumstances attending the transportation; Story, Bailm. § 545 a; 5 M. & G. 551; 6 McLean, 296; 19 Barb. 36; 12 N. Y. 245. What is a reasonable time is to be decided by the jury, from a consideration of all the circumstances; 7 Rich. 190, 409.

But if the carrier contract specially to deliver in a prescribed time, he must perform his contract, or suffer the damages sustained by his failure; 1 Du. N. Y. 209; 12 N. Y. 99.

He is liable, upon general principles, where the goods are not delivered through his default, to the extent of their market value at the place of their destination; 4 Whart. 204; 11 La. An. 324; Sedgwick, Dam. 356; 2 B. & Ad. 932. See, also, 12 S. & R. 183; 1 Cal. 108.

If the goods are only damaged, or not delivered in time, the owner is bound to receive them. He will be entitled to damages, but cannot repudiate the goods and recover from the carrier as for a total loss; 5 Rich. 462; 12 N. Y. 509; 35 N. H. 390.

COMMON CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS. Common carriers of passengers are such as undertake for hire to carry all persons indifferently who may apply for passage, so long as there is room, and there is no legal excuse for refusing. Thompson, Carriers of Passengers, 26, n. § 1; 11 Allen, 304; 19 Wend. 239; 10 N. H. 486; 15 Ill. 472; 2 Sumn. 221; 3 B. & B. 54; 9 Price, 408.

They may excuse themselves when there is an unexpected press of travel and all their means are exhausted. But see Redfield, Railw. 344, § 155, and notes, and cases cited; Story, Bailm. § 591; 10 N. H. 486; and they may for good cause exclude a passenger: thus, they are not required to carry drunken and disorderly people, or one affected with a contagious disease, or those who come on board to assault passengers, commit a crime, flee from justice, gamble, or interfere with the proper regulations of the carrier, and disturb the comfort of the passengers; 4 Dill. 321; 4 Wall. 605; 15 Gray, 20; 11 Allen, 304; 57 Ind. 576; 76 Penn. 510; or one whose purpose is to injure the carrier's business; 2 Sumn. 221; 11 Blatch. 233; but if a carrier receives a passenger, knowing that a good cause exists for his exclusion, he cannot afterwards eject him for such cause; 4 Wall. 605; 34 Cal. 616.

A company owning palace and sleeping cars, who enter into no contract of carriage with the passenger, but only give him superior accommodations during the journey, is not a common carrier; 73 Ill. 360.

Passenger-carriers are not held responsible as insurers of the safety of their passengers, as common carriers of goods are. But they are bound to the very highest degree of care and watchfulness in regard to all their appliances for the conduct of their business; so that, as far as human foresight can secure the safety of passengers, there is an unquestionable right to demand it of all who enter upon the business of passenger-carriers; 2 Esp. 533; 17 Ill. 496.

The carrier is not excused because the passenger does not pay fare; 14 How. 483; common carriers must exercise the same degree of care in carrying passengers free, on pass or otherwise, as in carrying them for hire, and cannot in such case exempt themselves from liability for negligence; 37 Mich. 111; 1 Cal. 348; 40 Barb. 546; 21 Ind. 48; 30 Allen, 9; 30 Ill. 9; 24 N. Y. 196. Aliter in England as to negligence; 13 Ir. L. T. 100; 9 Ir. L. T. 69; L. R. 10 Q. B. 437. When live stock is shipped upon a railroad it is customary to issue to the persons in charge "drover's" passes, which entitle the holder to accompany the stock and return. By the terms of such a pass the carrier may restrict his liability for injury done to the holder, but cannot, by any limitation therein contained, relieve himself from accountability for injury caused by his own or his servants' negligence; 17 Wall. 357; 19 Ohio, 1, 221, 260; 51 Penn. 315; 47 Ind. 471; 41 Ala. 486; 39 Iowa, 246; 20 Minn. 125. Aliter as to negligence in England; L. R. 8 Q. B. 57; L. R. 10 Q. B. 212; and in New York; 24 N. Y. 181, 196; 25 N. Y. 442; 32 N. Y. 333; 49 N. Y. 263. But see 13 Ala. 234, in regard to slaves carried without hire. One who carries slaves as a common carrier is only responsible as a carrier of passengers; 2 Pet. 150; 4 M'Cord, 223; Ang. Carr. §§ 122, 522. The passenger must be ready and willing to pay such fare as is required by the established regulations of the carriers in conformity with law. But an actual tender of fare or passage-money does not seem requisite in order to maintain an action for an absolute refusal to carry, and much less is it necessary in an action for any injury sustained; 6 C. B. 775; Story, Bailm. § 591; 1 East, 203; 2 Kent, 598, 599, and note. The rule of law is the same in regard to paying fare in advance that it is as to freight, except that, the usage in the former case being to take pay in advance, a passenger is expected to have procured his ticket before he had taken passage; and the law will presume payment according to such usages; 3 Penn. 451.

Passenger-carriers are responsible as common carriers for the baggage of their passengers; 13 Wend. 626; but may limit their common law liability by express contract, and by specific and reasonable regulations made known to the public, but they cannot relieve themselves from liability from loss occasioned by their own or their servants' negligence; 19 Wend. 234, 251; 2 Ohio, 132; 8 Penn. 479; 47 Ind. 471; 41 Ala. 488. Aliter in England as to negligence; L. R. 10 Q. B. 437. The term baggage includes such articles as the traveller's comfort, convenience, and amusement require. See BAGGAGE. The carrier may make such reasonable regulations as seem to him proper for the checking, custody, and carriage of baggage; 7 Allen, 329. But a steamship company is not responsible as a carrier for the baggage retained by a passenger; 1 Stra. 690; 2 N. Y. 355; 7 Cush. 155; 32 Wis. 85; 2 Abb. C. C. 49; 7 Hill, 47; 3 B. & C. 137; L. R. 6 C. P. 44; 89 Penn 446.

Where the servants of common carriers of passengers—as the drivers of stage-coaches, etc., the captains of steamboats, and the conductors of railway trains—are allowed to carry parcels, the carriers are responsible for their safe delivery, although such servants are not required to account for what they receive by way of compensation: 2 Wend. 327; 6 id. 351; 23 Vt. 186, 203; 2 Stor. 16; 2 Kent, 609.

In regard to the particulars of the duty of carriers of passengers as to their entire equipment both of machinery and servants, the decisions are very numerous; but they all concur in the result that if there was any thing more which could have been done by the carrier to insure the safety of his passengers, and injury occurs in consequence of the omission, he is liable. The consequence of such a rule naturally is, that, after any injury occurs, it is more commonly discovered that it was in some degree owing to some possible omission or neglect on the part of the carrier or his servants, and that he is, therefore, held responsible for the damage sustained; but where the defect was one which no degree of watchfulness in the carrier will enable him to discover, he is clearly not liable; Redf. Railw. § 149, notes; Ang. Carr. § 534; Story, Bailm. §§ 592–596; 2 B. & Ad. 169; 3 Bingh. 319; 11 Gratt. 697; 9 Metc. 1; 1 McLean, 540; 2 id. 157; 4 Gill, 406; 13 N. Y. 9; 16 How. 469; 97 Mass. 361. They must also furnish safe and convenient stations and approaches; 26 Iowa, 124; 29 Ohio St. 374.

The degree of speed allowable upon a railway depends upon the condition of the road; 5 Q. B. 747.

But passenger-carriers are not responsible where the injury resulted directly from the negligence of the passenger; 11 East, 60; 22 Vt. 213; 95 U. S. 439; 23 Penn. 147; Ang. Carr. 556 et seq.; Redf. Railw. 330, § 150, and cases cited in notes.

Where there is intentional wrong on the part of the defendant, the plaintiff may recover, notwithstanding negligence on his part; 5 Hill, 282. So, also, where the plaintiff's negligence contributed but remotely to the injury, and the defendant's culpable want of care was its immediate cause, a recovery may still be had; 43 Mo. 480; 10 M. & W. 564; 5 C. & P. 190. So, also, if the defendant is guilty of such a degree of negligence that the plaintiff could not have escaped its consequences, he may recover, notwithstanding there was want of prudence on his part; 3 M. & W. 244; 18 Ga. 679, 686; 1 Dutch. 556; Redf. Railw. § 150, and cases cited in notes.

Passengers leaping from cars or other vehicles, either by land or water, from any just sense of peril, may still recover; 9 La. An. 441; 15 Ill. 468; 17 id. 406; 23 Penn. 147, 150; 13 Pet. 181; Redf. Railw. § 151.

Carriers of passengers are bound to carry for the whole route for which they stipulate, and according to their public advertisements and the general usage and custom of their business; 1 Campb. 167; Story, Bailm. § 600; 19 Wend. 534; 8 E. L. & Eq. 362. The carrier's liability extends over the entire route for which he has contracted to carry, though the destination is reached over connecting lines; 29 N. H. 49; 4 Cush. 400; 11 Minn. 277; 21 Wis. 582. But the carrier is also liable on whose line the loss or injury is suffered; 22 Conn. 502; 29 Vt. 421; 19 Barb. 222

Passenger-carriers are liable for reasonable damages for a failure to deliver passengers in reasonable time, according to their public announcements; 8 E. L. & Eq. 362; 34 id. 154; 1 Cal. 353; 18 N. Y. 534; 63 Barb. 260; 1 Hurl. & N. 408; L. R. 1 C. P. D. 286.

Passenger-carriers may establish reasonable regulations in regard to the conduct of passengers, and discriminate between those who conform to their rules in regard to obtaining tickets, and those who do not,—requiring more fare of the latter; 18 Ill. 460; 34 N. H. 230; 29 Vt. 160; 7 Metc. 596; 12 id. 482; 4 Zabr. 435; 29 E. L. & Eq. 143; Redf. Railw. § 28, and notes; 24 Conn. 249. Passengers may be required to go through in the same train or forfeit the remainder of their tickets; 11 Metc. 121; 1 Am. Railw. Cas. 601; 7 Penn. 423; 72 id. 231; 46 N. H. 213; 4 Zabr. 438; 11 Ohio St. 462. The words "good this trip only" upon a ticket will not limit the undertaking of the company to any particular day or any specific train,—they relate to a journey and not to a time; 24 Barb. 514. See article in 5 So. L. R. N. S. 765.

Railway passengers, when required by the regulations of the company to surrender their tickets in exchange for the conductor's checks, are liable to be expelled from the cars for a refusal to comply with such regulation, or to pay fare again; 22 Barb. 130. A passenger is liable to be expelled from the cars for refusal to exhibit his ticket at the request of the conductor in compliance with the standing regulations of the company; 15 N. Y. 455.

Railway companies may exclude merchandise from their passenger trains. The company are not bound to carry a passenger daily whose trunk or trunks contain merchandise, money, or other things known as "express matter;" 5 Am. Law Reg. 364. See, also, upon the subject of by-laws to passengers on railways, Redf. Railw. § 28, and notes.

Where a stage-coach is overturned when laden with passengers, it is regarded as primâ facie evidence of negligence in the proprietor or his servants; 13 Pet. 181. And where any injury occurs to a passenger upon a railway, it has been considered primâ facie evidence of the culpable neglect of the company; 5 Q. B. 747; 8 Penn. 483; 15 Ill. 471; 16 Barb. 113, 356; 20 id. 282.

The general rules above laid down, so far as they are applicable, mutatis mutandis, control the rights and duties of passenger-carriers both by land and water. There are many special regulations, both in regard to the conduct of sailing and steam vessels, which it is the duty of masters to observe in order to secure the safety of passengers, and which it will be culpable negligence to disregard; but they are too minute to be here enumerated; see Ang. Carr. § 633 et seq. And a pilot being on board and having the entire control of the vessel will not exonerate the owner from responsibility any more than if the master had charge of the vessel,—the pilot being considered the agent of the owner; 8 Pick. 22; 5 B. & P. 182. But in 1 How. 28, it was considered that the owner is not responsible, while a pilot licensed under the acts of parliament is directing the movements of his ship in the harbor of Liverpool, for an injury to another ship by collision, such being the English law and the collision occurring in British waters; but it was held that the vessel was liable for the negligence of a pilot which it was obliged to take under a state law, or pay full pilotage; 7 Wall. 53.

As to damages for injuries, see 5 So. L. R. 540.

By act of congress (R. S. § 4252), it is provided as follows: "No master of any vessel, owned in whole or in part by a citizen of the United States, or by a citizen of any foreign country, shall take on board such vessel, at any foreign port or place other than foreign contiguous territory of the United States, passengers contrary to the provisions of this section, with intent to bring such passengers to the United States, and leave such port or place and bring such passengers, or any number thereof, within the jurisdiction of the United States. The number of such passengers shall not be greater than in the proportion of one to every two tons of such vessel, not including children under the age of one year in the computation, and computing two children over one and under eight years of age as one passenger. The spaces appropriated for the use of such passengers, and which shall not be occupied by stores or other goods not the personal baggage of such passengers, shall be in the following proportions: On the main and poop decks or platforms, and in the deck-houses, if there be any, one passenger for each sixteen clear superficial feet of deck, if the height or distance between the decks or platforms shall not be less than six feet; and on the lower deck, not being an orlop deck, if any, one passenger for eighteen such clear superficial feet, if the height or distance between the decks or platforms shall not be less than six feet, but so as that no passenger shall be carried on any other deck or platform, nor upon any deck where the height or distance between decks is less than six feet. But on board two deck ships, where the height between the decks is seven and one-half feet or more, fourteen clear superficial feet of deck shall be the proportion required for each passenger. The term 'contiguous territory,' as used in this section, shall not be held to extend to any port or place connecting with any interoceanic route through Mexico."

In New York, statutory regulations have been made in relation to their canal navigation. See 6 Cow. 698. As to the conduct of carrier vessels on the ocean, see Story, Bailm. § 607 et seq.; Edwards, Bailm.; Marshall, Ins. b. 1, c. 12, s. 2; Abb. Shipping; Parsons, Ship. & Adm.

And see, generally, 1 Viner, Abr. 219; Bacon, Abr.; 1 Comyns, Dig. 423; Petersdorf, Abr.; Dane, Abr. Index; 2 Kent, 464; 16 East, 247, note; Thompson, Pass. Carriers; 2 So. L. Rev. 593; 5 id. N. S. 451; 1 id. 445.

COMMON COUNCIL. The more numerous house of the municipal legislative assembly, in some American cities.

The English parliament is the common council of the whole realm.

COMMON COUNTS. Certain general counts, not founded on any special contract, which are introduced in a declaration, for the purpose of preventing a defeat of a just right by the accidental variance of the evidence.

These are, in an action of assumpsit, counts founded on implied promises to pay money in consideration of a precedent debt, and are of four descriptions: the indebitatus assumpsit, the quantum meruit, the quantum valebant, and the account stated.

COMMON FISHERY. A fishery to which all persons have a right. A common fishery is different from a common of fishery, which is the right to fish in another's pond, pool, or river. See FISHERY.

COMMON HIGHWAY. By this term is meant a road to be used by the community at large for any purpose of transit or traffic. Hammond, N. P. 289. See HIGHWAY.

COMMON INFORMER. One who, without being specially required by law or by virtue of his office, gives information of crimes, offences, or misdemeanors which have been committed, in order to prosecute the offender; a prosecutor.

COMMON INTENT. The natural sense given to words.

It is the rule that when words are used which will bear a natural sense and an artificial one, or one to be made out by argument and inference, the natural sense shall prevail. It is simply a rule of construction, and not of addition. Common intent cannot add to a sentence words which have been omitted; 2 H. Blackst. 530. In pleading, certainty is required; but certainty to a common intent is sufficient—that is, what upon a reasonable construction may be called certain, without recurring to possible facts; Co. Litt. 203 a; Dougl. 163. See CERTAINTY.

COMMON LAW. That system of law or form of the science of jurisprudence which has prevailed in England and in the United States of America, in contradistinction to other great systems, such as the Roman or Civil Law.

Those principles, usages, and rules of action applicable to the government and security of persons and of property, which do not rest for their authority upon any express and positive declaration of the will of the legislature. 1 Kent, 492.

The body of rules and remedies administered by courts of law, technically so called, in contradistinction to those of equity and to the canon law.

The law of any country, to denote that which is common to the whole country, in contradistinction to laws and customs of local application.

The most prominent characteristic which marks this contrast, and perhaps the source of the distinction, lies in the fact that in the common law neither the stiff rule of a long antiquity, on the one hand, nor, on the other, the sudden changes of a present arbitrary power, are allowed ascendency, but, under the sanction of a constitutional government, each of these is set off against the other; so that the will of the people, as it is gathered both from long-established custom and from the expression of the legislative power, gradually forms a system—just, because it is the deliberate will of a free people—stable, because it is the growth of centuries—progressive, because it is amenable to the constant revision of the people. A full idea of the genius of the common law cannot be gathered without a survey of the philosophy of English and American history. Some of the elements will, however, appear in considering the various narrower senses in which the phrase "common law" is used.

Perhaps the most important of these narrower senses is that which it has when used in contradistinction to statute law, to designate unwritten as distinguished from written law. It is that law which derives its force and authority from the universal consent and immemorial practice of the people. It has never received the sanction of the legislature by an express act, which is the criterion by which it is distinguished from the statute law. When it is spoken of as the lex non scripta, it is meant that it is law not written by authority of law. The statutes are the expression of law in a written form, which form is essential to the statute. The decision of a court which establishes or declares a rule of law may be reduced to writing and published in the reports; but this report is not the law: it is but evidence of the law; it is but a written account of one application of a legal principle, which principle, in the theory of the common law, is still unwritten. However artificial this distinction may appear, it is nevertheless of the utmost importance, and bears continually the most wholesome results. It is only by the legislative power that law can be bound by phraseology and by forms of expression. The common law eludes such bondage: its principles are not limited nor hampered by the mere forms in which they may have been expressed, and the reported adjudications declaring such principles are but the instances in which they have been applied. The principles themselves are still unwritten, and ready, with all the adaptability of truth, to meet every new and unexpected case. Hence it is said that the rules of the common law are flexible; 1 Gray, 263; 1 Swan, 42; 5 Cow. 587, 628, 632.

It naturally results from the inflexible form of the statute or written law, which has no self-contained power of adaptation to cases not foreseen by legislators, that every statute of importance becomes, in course of time, supplemented, explained, enlarged, or limited by a series of adjudications upon it, so that at last it may appear to be merely the foundation of a larger superstructure of unwritten law. It naturally follows, too, from the less definite and precise forms in which the doctrine of the unwritten law stands, and from the proper hesitation of courts to modify recognized doctrines in new exigencies, that the legislative power frequently intervenes to declare, to qualify, or to abrogate the doctrines of the common law. Thus, the written and the unwritten law, the statutes of the present and the traditions of the past, interlace and react upon each other. Historical evidence supports the view which these facts suggest, that many of the doctrines of the common law are but the common-law form of antique statutes, long since overgrown and imbedded in judicial decisions. While this process is doubtless continually going on in some degree, the contrary process is also continually going on; and to a very considerable extent, particularly in the United States, the doctrines of the common law are being reduced to the statutory form, with such modifications, of course, as the legislature will choose to make. This subject is more fully considered under the title Code, which see.

In a still narrower sense, the expression "common law" is used to distinguish the body of rules and of remedies administered by courts of law, technically so called, in contradistinction to those of equity administered by courts of chancery, and to the canon law, administered by the ecclesiastical courts.

In England the phrase is more commonly used at the present day in the second of the three senses above mentioned.

In this country the common law of England has been adopted as the basis of our jurisprudence in all the states except Louisiana. Many of the most valued principles of the common law have been embodied in the constitution of the United States and the constitutions of the several states; and in many of the states the common law and the statutes of England in force in the colony at the time of our independence are by the state constitution declared to be the law of the state until repealed. See 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 15, note 4, § 45, where the rules adopted by the several states in this respect are stated. Hence, where a question in the courts of one state turns upon the laws of a sister state, if no proof of such laws is offered, it is, in general, presumed that the common law as it existed at the time of the separation of this country from England prevails in such state; 4 Denio, 305; 29 Ind. 458; 11 Mich. 181; contra, in Pennsylvania, in cases where that state has changed from the common law; the presumption being that the law of the sister state has made the same change, if there is no proof to the contrary. The term common law as thus used may be deemed to include the doctrine of equity; 8 N. Y. 535; but the term is also used in the amendments to the constitution of the United States (art. 7) in contradistinction to equity, in the provision that "In suits at common law where the value in controversy shall not exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved." The "common law" here mentioned is the common law of England, and not of any particular state; 1 Gall. 20; 1 Baldw. 554, 558; 3 Wheat. 223; 3 Pet. 446. The term is used in contradistinction to equity, admiralty, and maritime law; 3 Pet. 446; 1 Baldw. 554.

The common law of England is not in all respects to be taken as that of the United States or of the several states: its general principles are adopted only so far as they are applicable to our situation; 2 Pet. 144; 8 id. 659; 9 Cra. 333; 9 S. & R. 330; 1 Kirb. 117; 5 H. & J. 356; 2 Aik. 187; T. U. P. Charlt. 172; 1 Ohio, 243. See 5 Cow. 628; 5 Pet. 241; 8 id. 658; 7 Cra. 32; 1 Wheat. 415; 3 id. 223; 1 Dall. 67; 2 id. 297, 384; 1 Mass. 61; 9 Pick. 532; 3 Mc. 162; 6 id. 55; 3 G. & J. 62; Sampson's Discourse before the N. Y. Hist. Soc.; 1 Gall. 489; 3 Conn. 114; 33 id. 260; 28 Ind. 220; 5 W. Va. 1; 24 Miss. 343; 1 Nev. 40; 37 Barb. 15; 15 Cal. 226; 28 Ala. 704. In general, too, the statutes of England are not understood to be included, except so far as they have been recognized by colonial legislation, but the course pursued has been rather to re-enact such English statutes as were deemed applicable to our case. Especially not those passed since the settlement of the colony; if these were suitable to the condition of the colony they were usually accepted; Quincy, 72; 5 Pet. 280; 2 Gratt. 579. By reason of the modifications arising out of our different condition, and those established by American statutes and by the course of American adjudication, the common law of America differs widely in many details from the common law of England; but the fact that this difference has not been introduced by violent changes, but has grown up from the native vigor of the system, identifies the whole as one jurisprudence.

See works of Franklin, by Sparks, vol. 4, p. 271, as to the adoption of the common law in America; see also Cooley, Const. Lim. 28 et seq.

COMMON NUISANCE. One which affects the public in general, and not merely some particular person; 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 197. See NUISANCE.

COMMON PLEAS. The name of a court having jurisdiction generally of civil actions.

Such pleas or actions as are brought by private persons against private persons, or by the government, when the cause of action is of a civil nature. In England, whence we derived this phrase, common pleas are so called to distinguish them from pleas of the crown.

The Court of Common Pleas in England consists of one chief and four puisné (associate) justices. It is thought by some to have been established by king John for the purpose of diminishing the power of the aula regis, but is referred by Lord Coke to a much earlier period. 8 Coke, 289; Termes de la Ley; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 39. It exercises an exclusive original jurisdiction in many classes of civil cases. See 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 38, n. The right of practising in this court was for a long time confined to two classes of practitioners, limited in number, but is now thrown open to the bar generally. See 3 C. B. 537.

A court or courts of the same name exist in many states of the United States. See the articles on the states under their respective names.

COMMON RECOVERY. A judgment recovered in a fictitious suit, brought against the tenant of the freehold, in consequence of a default made by the person who is last vouched to warranty in the suit, which recovery, being a supposed adjudication of the right, binds all persons, and vests a free and absolute fee-simple in the recoverer.

A common recovery is a kind of conveyance, and is resorted to when the object is to create an absolute bar of estates tail, and of the remainders and reversions expectant on the determination of such estates; 2 Bla. Com. 357. Though it has been used in some of the states, this form of conveyance is nearly obsolete, easier and less expensive modes of making conveyances, which have the same effect, having been substituted: 2 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 2092, 2096; 7 N. H. 9; 9 S. & R.

390; 2 Rawle, 168; 4 Yeates, 413; 1 Wharf. 151; 6 Mass. 328.

COMMON SCHOOLS. Schools for general elementary instruction, free to all the public. 2 Kent, 195–202.

COMMON SCOLD. One who, by the practice of frequent scolding, disturbs the neighborhood. Bishop, Crim. Law, § 147.

The offence of being a common scold is cognizable at common law. It is a particular form of nuisance, and was punishable by the ducking-stool at common law, in place of which punishment fine and imprisonment are substituted in the United States; 12 S. & R. 220; 3 Cra. C. C. 620. See 1 Term, 748; 6 Mod. 11; 4 Rog. 90; 1 Russell, Cr. 302; Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 665.

COMMON SEAL. The seal of a corporation. See SEAL.

COMMON SERJEANT. A judicial officer of the city of London, who aids the recorder in disposing of the criminal business of the Old Bailey Sessions. Holthouse.

COMMON TRAVERSE. See TRAVERSE.

COMMON VOUCHEE. In common recoveries, the person who is vouched to warranty. In this fictitious proceeding the crier of the court usually performs the office of a common vouchee. 2 Bla. Com. 358; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2093.

COMMONALTY. The common people of England, as distinguished from the king and nobles.

The body of a society or corporation, as distinguished from the officers. 1 Perr. & D. 243. Charters of incorporation of the various tradesmen's societies, etc., in England are usually granted to the master, wardens, and commonalty of such corporation.

COMMONER. One possessing a right of common.

COMMONS. Those subjects of the English nation who are not noblemen. They are represented in parliament by the house of commons.

COMMONWEALTH. A word which properly signifies the common weal or public policy; sometimes it is used to designate a republican form of government.

The English nation during the time of Cromwell was called a commonwealth. It is the legal title of the states of Kentucky, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Virginia.

COMMORANT. One residing in a particular town, city, or district. Barnes, 162.

COMMORIENTES. Those who perish at the same time in consequence of the same calamity.

Where several persons die by the same accident, in the lack of evidence there is no presumption as to who survived; Cro. Eliz. 503; 1 Mer. 308; 5 B. & Ad. 91; 2 Phill. Eccl. 261; Bacon, Abr. Execution. See SURVIVOR; DEATH.

COMMUNI DIVIDUNDO. In Civil Law. An action which lies for those who have property in common, to procure a division. It lies where parties hold land in common but not in partnership. Calvinus, Lex.

COMMUNINGS. In Scotch Law. The negotiations preliminary to a contract.

COMMUNIO BONORUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A community of goods.

When a person has the management of common property, owned by himself and others, not as partners, he is bound to account for the profits, and is entitled to be reimbursed for the expenses which he has sustained by virtue of the quasi-contract which is created by his act, called communio bonorum. Vicat; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 907, note.

COMMUNITY (Lat. communis, common).

In Civil Law. A corporation or body politic. Dig. 3. 4.

In French Law. A species of partnership which a man and woman contract when they are lawfully married to each other.

Conventional community is that which is formed by express agreement in the contract of marriage.

By this contract the legal community which would otherwise subsist may be modified as to the proportions which each shall take, and as to the things which shall compose it. La. Civ. Code, 2393.

Legal community is that which takes place by virtue of the contract of marriage itself.

The community embraces the profits of all the effects of which the husband has the administration and enjoyment, either of right or in fact; of the produce of the reciprocal industry and labor of both husband and wife, and of the estates which they may acquire during the marriage, either by donations made jointly to them, or by purchase, or in any other similar way, even although the purchase be made in the name of one of the two, and not of both; because in that case the period of time when the purchase is made is alone attended to, and not the person who made the purchase. 10 La. 146, 172, 181; 1 Mart. La. N. S. 325; 4 id. 212. The debts contracted during the marriage enter into the community, and must be acquitted out of the common fund; but not the debts contracted before the marriage.

The effects which compose the community of gains are divided into two equal portions between the heirs at the dissolution of the marriage; La. Civ. Code, 2375. See Pothier, Contr.; Toullier.

COMMUTATION. The change of a punishment to which a person has been condemned into a less severe one. This can be granted only by the authority in which the pardoning power resides.

COMMUTATIVE CONTRACT. In Civil Law. One in which each of the contracting parties gives and receives an equivalent.

The contract of sale is of this kind. The seller gives the thing sold, and receives the price, which is the equivalent. The buyer gives the price, and receives the thing sold, which is the equivalent. Such contracts are usually distributed into four classes, namely: Do ut des (I give that you may give); Facio ut facias (I do that you may do); Facio ut des (I do that you may give); Do ut facias (I give that you may do). Pothier, Obl. n. 13. See La. Civ. Code, art. 1761.

COMPACT. An agreement. A contract between parties, which creates obligations and rights capable of being enforced, and contemplated as such between the parties, in their distinct and independent characters. Story, Const. b. 3, c. 3; Rutherf. Inst. b. 2, c. 6, § 1.

The parties may be nations, states, or individuals; but the constitution of the United States declares that "no state shall, without the consent of congress, enter into agreement or compact with another state, or with a foreign power." See 11 Pet. 1, 185; 8 Wheat. 1; Baldw. 60.

COMPANIONS. In French Law. A general term, comprehending all persons who compose the crew of a ship or vessel. Pothier, Mar. Contr. n. 163.

COMPANY. An association of a number of individuals for the purpose of carrying on some legitimate business.

This term is not synonymous with partnership, though every such unincorporated company is a partnership. Usage has reserved the term to associations whose members are in greater number, their capital more considerable, and their enterprises greater, either on account of their risk or importance.

When these companies are authorized by the government, they are known by the name of corporations.

Sometimes the word is used to represent those members of a partnership whose names do not appear in the name of the firm. See 12 Toullier, 97.

COMPARISON OF HANDWRITING. A mode of deducing evidence of the authenticity of a written instrument, by showing the likeness of the handwriting to that of another instrument proved to be that of the party whom it is sought to establish as the author of the instrument in question; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 578.

At common law, as a general rule, this manner of obtaining evidence was not allowed; see cases below. It was otherwise in the ecclesiastical courts; 5 A. & E. 708; 1 Phill. 78. Exceptions existed, however: first, where the writings were of such antiquity that living witnesses could not be procured, but were not old enough to prove themselves; 7 East, 282; 14 id. 328; Ry. & M. 143; 8 Gill, 86; 8 Wend. 426; second, where other writings admitted to be genuine were already in the case; 1 M. & R. 133; 5 Ad. & E. 514; 7 C. & P. 548, 595; 2 Me. 33; 48 N. Y. 458; 64 Ill. 358; 63 Barb. 154; 91 U. S. 270. But see 3 Jones, L. No. C. 407.

The rule on the subject of admitting documents irrelevant to the matter in issue for the purpose of instituting a comparison of handwriting is not settled uniformly. In England, and in the federal courts, such documents are not admissible; 5 Ad. & E. 514, 703; 11 id. 322; 7 C. & P. 548, 595; 8 M. & W. 123; 10 Cl. & F. 193; 2 M. & R. 536; 91 U. S. 270; but see 12 Blatch. 390. This rule is adopted in New York, Maryland, Illinois, Michigan, North Carolina, Rhode Island, and Virginia; 9 Cow. 94, 112 (now altered by statute); 1 Hawks, 6; 1 Ired. 16; 2 R. I. 319; 1 Leigh, 216; 8 Gill, 86; 64 Ill. 358; 14 Mich. 287; 8 Am. L. T. Rep. 412. In other states it is the rule to admit any writings, whether relevant or not, if it appear that they are beyond doubt the handwriting of the person whose signature is in question; 53 N. H. 452; 39 Vt. 225; 108 Mass. 344; 105 id. 62; 43 Penn. 9; 19 Ohio St. 407; 30 Ala. 32; 23 La. An. 429; 45 Mo. 307. In Pennsylvania, this comparison is to be made by the jury, not by experts; 43 Penn. 9. In South Carolina, this sort of testimony is not considered as of much value; 5 S. C. 478.

COMPATIBILITY. Such harmony between the duties of two offices that they may be discharged by one person.

COMPENSACION. In Spanish Law. The extinction of a debt by another debt of equal dignity between persons who have mutual claims on each other.

COMPENSATIO CRIMINIS. The compensation or set-off of one crime against another: for example, in questions of divorce, where one party claims the divorce on the ground of adultery of his or her companion, the latter may show that the complainant has been guilty of the same offence, and, having himself violated the contract, cannot complain of its violation on the other side. This principle is incorporated in the codes of most civilized nations. See 1 Hagg. Cons. 144; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 714; 2 Paige, Ch. 108; 2 D. & B. 64; Bishop, Marr. & D. §§ 393, 394.

COMPENSATION (Lat. compendere, to balance). In Chancery Practice. Something to be done for or paid to a person of equal value with something of which he has been deprived by the acts or negligence of the party so doing or paying.

When a simple mistake, not a fraud, affects a contract, but does not change its essence, a court of equity will enforce it, upon making compensation for the error. "The principle upon which courts of equity act," says Lord Chancellor Eldon, "is by all the authorities brought to the true standard, that though the party had not a title at law, because he had not strictly complied with the terms so as to entitle him to an action (as to time, for instance), yet if the time, though introduced (as some time must be fixed, where something is to be done on one side, as a consideration for something to be done on the other), is not the essence of the contract, a material object, to which they looked in the first conception of it, even though the lapse of time has not arisen from accident, a court of equity will compel the execution of the contract upon this ground, that one party is ready to perform, and that the other may have a performance in substance if he will permit it;" 13 Ves. Ch. 287. See 10 id. 505; 13 id. 73, 81, 426; 6 id. 575; 1 Cox, Ch. 59.

In Civil Law. A reciprocal liberation between two persons who are both creditors and debtors of each other. Est debiti et crediti inter se contributio. Dig. 16. 2. 1.

It resembles in many respects the common-law set-off. The principal difference is that a set-off must be pleaded to be effectual; whereas compensation is effectual without any such plea. See 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1407.

It may be legal, by way of exception, or by reconvention. 8 La. 158; Dig. 16. 2; Code, 4. 31; Inst. 4. 6. 30; Burge, Suret. b. 2, c. 6, p. 181.

It takes place by mere operation of law, and extinguishes reciprocally the two debts as soon as they exist simultaneously, to the amount of their respective sums. It takes place only between two debts having equally for their object a sum of money, or a certain quantity of consumable things of one and the same kind, and which are equally liquidated and demandable. It takes place whatever be the cause of the debts, except in case, first, of a demand of restitution of a thing of which the owner has been unjustly deprived; second, of a demand of restitution of a deposit and a loan for use; third, of a debt which has for its cause aliments declared not liable to seizure. La. Civ. Code, 2203–2208.

In Criminal Law. Recrimination, which see.

COMPERUIT AD DIEM (Lat. he appeared at the day).

In Pleading. A plea in bar to an action of debt on a bail bond. The usual replication to this plea is, nul tiel record: that there is not any such record of appearance of the said ——. For forms of this plea, see 5 Wentworth, 470; Lilly, Entr. 114; 2 Chitty, Pl. 527.

When the issue is joined on this plea, the trial is by the record. See 1 Taunt. 23; Tidd, Pr. 239. And see, generally, Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 W. 31); 7 B. & C. 478.

COMPETENCY. The legal fitness or ability of a witness to be heard on the trial of a cause. That quality of written or other evidence which renders it proper to be given on the trial of a cause.

There is a difference between competency and credibility. A witness may be competent, and, on examination, his story may be so contradictory and improbable that he may not be believed; on the contrary, he may be incompetent, and yet be perfectly credible if he were examined.

The court are the sole judges of the competency of a witness, and may, for the purpose of deciding whether the witness is or is not competent, ascertain all the facts necessary to form a judgment; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 426 et seq.

Primâ facie every person offered is a competent witness, and must be received, unless his incompetency appears; 9 State Tr. 652.

In French Law. The right in a court to exercise jurisdiction in a particular case: as, where the law gives jurisdiction to the court when a thousand francs shall be in dispute, the court is competent if the sum demanded is a thousand francs or upwards, although the plaintiff may ultimately recover less.

COMPETENT WITNESS. One who is legally qualified to be heard to testify in a cause. In Kentucky, Michigan, and Missouri, a will must be attested, for the purpose of passing lands, by competent witnesses; but, in Kentucky, if wholly written by the testator, it need not be so attested. See WITNESS.

COMPILATION. A literary production, composed of the works of others and arranged in a methodical manner.

When a compilation requires, in its execution, taste, learning, discrimination, and intellectual labor, it is an object of copyright: as for example, Bacon's Abridgment. Curtis, Copyr. 186.

COMPLAINANT. One who makes a complaint. A plaintiff in a suit in chancery is so called.

COMPLAINT. In Criminal Law. The allegation made to a proper officer that some person, whether known or unknown, has been guilty of a designated offence, with an offer to prove the fact, and a request that the offender may be punished. It is a technical term, descriptive of proceedings before a magistrate; 11 Pick. 436.

To have a legal effect, the complaint must be supported by such evidence as shows that an offence has been committed and renders it certain or probable that it was committed by the person named or described in the complaint.

COMPOS MENTIS. See NON COMPOS MENTIS.

COMPOSITION. An agreement, made upon a sufficient consideration, between a debtor and creditor, by which the creditor accepts part of the debt due to him in satisfaction of the whole. See COMPOUNDING A FELONY.

COMPOSITION OF MATTER. A mixture or chemical combination of materials. The term is used in the act of congress, July 4, 1836, § 6, in describing the subjects of patents. It may include both the substance and the process, when the compound is new.

COMPOUND INTEREST. Interest upon interest: for example, when a sum of money due for interest is added to the principal, and then bears interest. This is not, in general, allowed. See INTEREST.

COMPOUNDER. In Louisiana. He who makes a composition.

An amicable compounder is one who has undertaken by the agreement of the parties to compound or settle differences between them. La. Code of Pract. art. 444.

COMPOUNDING A FELONY. The act of a party immediately aggrieved, who agrees with a thief or other felon that he will not prosecute him, on condition that he return to him the goods stolen, or who takes a reward not to prosecute.

This is an offence punishable by fine and imprisonment, and at common law rendered the person committing it an accessary; Hawk. Pl. Cr. 125. A failure to prosecute for an assault with an intent to kill is not compounding a felony; 29 Ala. N. s. 628. The accepting of a promissory note signed by a party guilty of larceny, as a consideration for not prosecuting, is sufficient to constitute the offence; 16 Mass. 91. The mere retaking by the owner of stolen goods is no offence, unless the offender is not to be prosecuted; Hale, Pl. Cr. 546; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law, 4.

The compounding of misdemeanors, as it is also a perversion or defeating of public justice, is in like manner an indictable offence at common law; 18 Pick. 440. But the law will permit a compromise of any offence, though made the subject of a criminal prosecution, for which the injured party might recover damages in an action. But, if the offence is of a public nature, no agreement can be valid that is founded on the consideration of stifling a prosecution for it; 6 Q. B. 308; 9 id. 371; 2 Benn. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 258, 262.

In the United States, compounding a felony is an indictable offence, and no action can be supported on any contract of which such offence is the consideration in whole or in part; 16 Mass. 91; 18 Pick. 440; 5 Vt. 42; 9 id. 23; 5 N. H. 553; 2 South. N. J. 578; 13 Wend. N. Y. 592; 6 Dana, 338. A receipt in full of all demands given in consideration of stifling a criminal prosecution is void; 11 Vt. 252.

COMPRA Y VENTA (Span.). Buying and selling. The laws of contracts arising from purchase and sale are given very fully in Las Partidas, part 3, tit. xviii. ll. 56 et seq.

COMPRINT. The surreptitious printing of the copy of another to the intent to make a gain thereby. Strictly, it signifies to print together. There are several statutes in prevention of this act. Jacob; Cowel.

COMPRIVIGNI (Lat.). Step-brothers or step-sisters. Children who have one parent, and only one, in common. Calvinus, Lex.

COMPROMISARIUS. In Civil Law. An arbitrator.

COMPROMISE. An agreement made between two or more parties as a settlement of matters in dispute between them.

Such settlements are sustained at law; 2 Strobh. Eq. 258; 2 Mich. 145; 1 Watts, 216; 2 Penn. 531; and are highly favored; 6 Munf. 406; 1 Bibb, 168; 2 id. 448; 4 Hawks, 178; 6 Watts, 321; 14 Conn. 12; 4 Metc. Mass. 270. See, also, 21 E. L. & Eq. 199; 6 T. B. Monr. 91; 2 Rand. Va. 442; 5 Watts, 259. The amount in question must, it seems, be uncertain; 2 B. & Ad. 889; 1 Ad. & E. 106. And see 5 Pet. 114; 21 Penn. 237; 20 Mo. 102; 13 Pick. 284; 6 Bingh. N. C. 62; 3 M. & W. 648; 1 Bouvier, Inst. 798. There can be no compromise of a criminal charge. 1 Chitty, Pr. 17.

In Civil Law. An agreement between two or more persons, who, wishing to settle their disputes, refer the matter in controversy to arbitrators, who are so called because those who choose them give them full powers to arbitrate and decide what shall appear just and reasonable, to put an end to the differences of which they are made the judges. 1 Domat, Lois, Civ. liv. 1, t. 14.

COMPTROLLER. An officer of a state, or of the United States, who has certain duties to perform in the regulation and management of the fiscal matters of the government under which he holds office.

In the treasury department of the United States there are two comptrollers. It is the duty of the first to examine all accounts settled by the first auditor, except those relating to receipts from customs, and all accounts settled by the fifth auditor and by the commissioner of the general land-office, and certify the balances arising thereon to the register; to countersign all warrants drawn by the secretary of the treasury, which shall be warranted by law; to superintend the preservation and adjustment of the public accounts subject to his revision; to superintend the recovery of all debts certified by him to be due to the United States, to direct suits and legal proceedings, and to take such measures as may be authorized by law and are adapted to enforce prompt payment thereof; to lay before congress annually a list of such officers as shall have failed in that year to make the settlement required by law; he shall, in every case where, in his opinion, further delays would be injurious to the United States, direct the first and fifth auditors of the treasury forthwith to audit and settle any particular account which such officers may be authorized to audit and settle, and to report such audit and settlement for final revision to him.

Besides these, this officer is required to perform minor duties, which the plan of this work forbids to be enumerated here. His salary is five thousand dollars per annum. Rev. Stat. §§ 268-272.

The duties of the second comptroller are to examine all accounts settled by the second, third, and fourth auditors, and certify the balances arising thereon to the secretary of the department in which the expenditure had been incurred; to countersign all warrants drawn by the secretaries of the war and navy departments, which shall be warranted by law; to report to the said secretaries the official forms to be issued in the different offices for disbursing public money in those departments, and the manner and form of keeping and stating the accounts of the persons employed therein; and to superintend the preservation of public accounts subject to his revision. He may prescribe rules for the payment of arrears due to seamen, etc., on United States vessels, in case of the death of such seamen, etc.

His salary is five thousand dollars per annum. Rev. Stat. § 273.

COMPULSION. Forcible inducement to the commission of an act.

Acts done under compulsion are not, in general, binding upon a party; but when a man is compelled by lawful authority to do that which he ought to do, that compulsion does not affect the validity of the act: as, for example, when a court of competent jurisdiction compels a party to execute a deed, under the pain of attachment for contempt, the grantor cannot object to it on the ground of compulsion. But if the court compelled a party to do an act forbidden by law, or had not jurisdiction over the parties or the subject-matter, the act done by such compulsion would be void. See COERCION; DURESS.

COMPULSORY PILOTAGE. See PILOTAGE.

COMPURGATOR. One of several neighbors of a person accused of a crime or charged as a defendant in a civil action, who appeared and swore that they believed him on his oath. 3 Bla. Com. 341.

Formerly, when a person was accused of a crime, or sued in some kinds of civil actions, he might purge himself upon oath of the accusation made against him, whenever the proof was not the most clear and positive; and if upon his oath he declared himself innocent, he was absolved.

This usage, so eminently calculated to encourage perjury by impunity, was soon found to be dangerous to the public safety. To remove this evil, the laws were changed, by requiring that the oath should be administered with the greatest solemnity; but the form was soon disregarded, for the mind became easily familiarized to those ceremonies which at first imposed on the imagination, and those who cared not to violate the truth did not hesitate to treat the form with contempt. In order to give a greater weight to the oath of the accused, the law was again altered so as to require that the accused should appear before the judge with a certain number of his neighbors, relations, or friends, who should swear that they believed the accused had sworn truly. This new species of witnesses were called compurgators.

The number of compurgators varied according to the nature of the charge and other circumstances. See Du Cange, Juramentum; Spelman, Gloss. Assarth; Termes de la Ley; 3 Bla. Com. 341–348.

COMPUTUS (Lat. computare, to account). A writ to compel a guardian, bailiff, receiver, or accountant, to yield up his accounts. It is founded on the stat. Westm. 2, cap. 12; Reg. Orig. 135.

CONCEALED WEAPONS. As to validity of statutes against carrying concealed deadly weapons, see 8 Am. Rep. 22; 14 id. 380; ARMS.

CONCEALERS. Such as find out concealed lands: that is, lands privily kept from the king by common persons having nothing to show for them. They are called "a troublesome, disturbant sort of men; turbulent persons." Cowel.

CONCEALMENT. The improper suppression of any fact or circumstance by one of the parties to a contract from the other, which in justice ought to be known.

The omission by an applicant for insurance preliminarily to state facts known to him, or which he is bound to know, material to the risk proposed to be insured against, or omission to state truly the facts expressly inquired about by the underwriters to whom application for insurance is made, whether the same are or are not material to the risk.

Concealment when fraudulent avoids the contract, or renders the party using it liable for the damage arising in consequence thereof; 7 Metc. 252; 16 Me. 30; 2 Ill. 344; 3 B. & C. 605; 10 Cl. & F. 934. But it must have been of such facts as the party is bound to communicate; 3 E. L. & Eq. 17; 3 Conn. 413; 5 Ala. N. s. 596; 1 Yeates, 307; 5 Penn. 467; 8 N. H. 463; 1 Dev. 351; 18 Johns. 403; 6 Humphr. 36. See REPRESENTATION; MISREPRESENTATION. A concealment of extrinsic facts is not, in general, fraudulent, although peculiarly within the knowledge of the party possessing them; 2 Wheat. 195; 1 Baldw. 331; 14 Barb. 72; 2 Ala. N. s. 181. But see 1 Miss. 72; 1 Swan, 54; 4 M'Cord, 169. And the rule against the concealment of latent defects is stricter in the case of personal than of real property; 6 Woodb. & M. 358; 3 Campb. 508; 3 Term, 759.

Where there is confidence reposed, concealment becomes more fraudulent; 9 B. & C. 577; 4 Metc. Mass. 581. See, generally, 2 Kent, 482; MISREPRESENTATION; REPRESENTATION.

CONCESSI (Lat. I have granted). A term formerly used in deeds.

It is a word of general extent, and is said to amount to a grant, feoffment, lease, release, and the like; 2 Saund. 96; Co. Litt. 301, 302; Dane, Abr. Index; 5 Whart. 278.

It has been held in a feoffment or fine to imply no warranty; Co. Litt. 384; 4 Co. 80; Vaughan's Argument in Hayes v. Bickersteth, Vaugh. 126; Butler's Note, Co. Litt. 384. But see 1 Freem. 339, 414.

CONCESSIMUS (Lat. we have granted). A term used in conveyances. It created a joint covenant on the part of the grantors. 5 Co. 16; 3 Kebl. 617; Bacon, Abr. Covenant.

CONCESSION. A grant. The word is frequently used in this sense when applied to grants made by the French and Spanish governments in Louisiana.

CONCESSOR. A grantor.

CONCILIUM. A council.

CONCILIUM REGIS. A tribunal which existed in England during the times of Edward I. and Edward II., composed of the judges and sages of the law. To them were referred cases of great difficulty. Co. Litt. 304.

CONCLUSION (Lat. con claudere, to shut together). The close; the end.

In Pleading. IN DECLARATIONS. That part which follows the statement of the cause of action. In personal or mixed actions, where the object is to recover damages, the conclusion is, properly, to the damage of the plaintiff, etc. Comyns, Dig. Pleader, c. 84; 10 Co. 1156. And see 1 M. & S. 236; DAMAGES.

The form was anciently, in the King's Bench, "To the damage of the said A B, and thereupon he brings suit;" in the Exchequer, "To the damage," etc., "whereby he is the less able to satisfy our said lord the king the debts which he owes his said majesty at his exchequer, and therefore he brings his suit;" 1 Chitty, Pl. 356–358. It is said to be mere matter of form, and not demurrable; 7 Ark. 282.

In Pleas. The conclusion is either to the country—which must be the case when an issue is tendered, that is, whenever the plaintiff's material statements are contradicted—or by verification, which must be the case when new matter is introduced. See VERIFICATION. Every plea in bar, it is said, must have its proper conclusion. All the formal parts of pleadings have been much modified by statute in the various states and in England within the last few years.

In Practice. Making the last argument or address to the court or jury. The party on whom the onus probandi is cast, in general, has the conclusion.

In Remedies. An estoppel; a bar; the act of a man by which he has confessed a matter or thing which he can no longer deny.

For example, the sheriff is concluded by his return to a writ; and, therefore, if upon a capias he return cepi corpus, he cannot afterwards show that he did not arrest the defendant, but is concluded by his return. See Plowd. 276 b; 3 Thomas, Co. Litt. 600.

CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY. In Pleading. The tender of an issue for trial by a jury.

When the issue is tendered by the defendant, it is as follows: "And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country." When tendered by the plaintiff, the formula is, "And this the said A B prays may be inquired of by the country." It is held, however, that there is no material difference between these two modes of expression, and that if the one be substituted for the other the mistake is unimportant. 10 Mod. 166.

When there is an affirmative on one side and a negative on the other, or vice versâ, the conclusion should be to the country; T. Raym. 98; Carth. 87; 2 Saund. 189; 2 Burr. 1022; 16 Johns. 267. So it is though the affirmative and negative be not in express words, but only tantamount thereto; Co. Litt. 126 a; Yelv. 137; 1 Saund. 103; 1 Chitty, Pl. 592; Comyns, Dig. Pleader, E, 32.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE. That which cannot be controlled or contradicted by any other evidence.

CONCLUSIVE PRESUMPTION. A rule of law determining the quantity of evidence requisite for the support of a particular averment which is not permitted to be overcome by any proof that the fact is otherwise. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 15. Thus, for example, the possession of land under claim of title for a certain period of time raises a conclusive presumption of a grant.

In the civil law, such presumptions are said to be juris et de jure.

CONCORD. An agreement or supposed agreement between the parties in levying a fine of lands, in which the deforciant (or he who keeps the other out of possession) acknowledges that the lands in question are the right of complainant; and from the acknowledgment or admission of right thus made, the party who levies the fine is called the cognizor, and the person to whom it is levied, the cognizee; 2 Bla. Com. 350; Cruise, Dig. tit. 35, c. 2, § 33; Comyns, Dig. Fine (E, 9).

CONCORDAT. A convention; a pact; an agreement. The term is generally confined to the agreements made between independent governments, and most usually applied to those between the pope and some prince.

CONCUBINAGE. A species of marriage which took place among the ancients, and which is yet in use in some countries. See CONCUBINATUS.

The act or practice of cohabiting, in sexual commerce, without the authority of law or a legal marriage. See 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 80; Merlin, Rép.; Dig. 32. 49. 4; 7. 1. 1; Code, 5. 27. 12.

CONCUBINATUS. A natural marriage, as contradistinguished from the justæ nuptiæ, or justum matrimonium, the civil marriage.

The concubinatus was the only marriage which those who did not enjoy the jus connubii could contract. Although this natural marriage was authorized and regulated by law, yet it produced none of those important rights which flowed from the civil marriage,—such as the paternal power, etc.; nor was the wife entitled to the honorable appellation of mater-familias, but was designated by the name of concubina. After the exclusive and aristocratic rules relative to the connubium had been relaxed, the concubinatus fell into disrepute; and the law permitting it was repealed by a constitution of the Emperor Leo the Philosopher, in the year 886 of the Christian era. See PATER-FAMILIAS.

CONCUBINE. A woman who cohabits with a man as his wife, without being married.

CONCUR. In Louisiana. To claim a part of the estate of an insolvent along with other claimants, 6 Mart. La. N. s. 460: as, "the wife concurs with her husband's creditors, and claims a privilege over them."

CONCURRENCE. In French Law. The equality of rights or privileges which several persons have over the same thing: as, for example, the right which two judgment-creditors, whose judgments were rendered at the same time, have to be paid out of the proceeds of real estate bound by them. Dict. de Jur.

CONCURRENT. Running together; having the same authority: thus, we say, a concurrent consideration occurs in the case of mutual promises; such and such courts have concurrent jurisdiction,—that is, each has the same jurisdiction.

Concurrent writs. Duplicate originals, or several writs running at the same time for the same purpose, for service on or arrest of a person, when it is not known where he is to be found; or for service on several persons, as when there are several defendants to an action; Mozley & W. Dict.

CONCUSSION. In Civil Law. The unlawful forcing of another by threats of violence to give something of value. It differs from robbery in this, that in robbery the thing is taken by force, while in concussion it is obtained by threatened violence. Heineccius, Leç. El. § 1071.

CONDEDIT. In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a plea entered by a party to a libel filed in the ecclesiastical court, in which it is pleaded that the deceased made the will which is the subject of the suit, and that he was of sound mind. 2 Eccl. 438; 6 id. 431.

CONDEMN. To sentence; to adjudge. 3 Bla. Com. 291.

To declare a vessel a prize. To declare a vessel unfit for service; 1 Kent, 102; 5 Esp. 65.

CONDEMNATION. The sentence of a competent tribunal which declares a ship unfit for service. This sentence may be re-examined and litigated by the parties interested in disputing it; 5 Esp. 65; Abb. Shipp. 15; 30 L. J. Ad. 145.

The judgment, sentence, or decree by which property seized and subject to forfeiture for an infraction of revenue, navigation, or other laws is condemned or forfeited to the government. See CAPTOR.

The sentence or judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction that a ship or vessel taken as a prize on the high seas was liable to capture, and was properly and legally captured and held as prize.

Some of the grounds of capture and condemnation are: Violation of neutrality in time of war; 2 Gall, 261; carrying contraband goods; 5 Wall. 1, 28; 3 id. 514. Breach of Blockade; id. 28, 170; 3 id. 603.

By the general practice of the law of nations, a sentence of condemnation is at present generally deemed necessary in order to divest the title of a vessel taken as a prize. Until this has been done, the original owner may regain his property, although the ship may have been in possession of the enemy twenty-four hours, or carried infra præsidia; 1 Rob. 139; 3 id. 97, n.; Carth. 423; 1 Kent, 101–104; Chitty, Law of Nat. 99, 100; 10 Mod. 79; Abb. Shipp. 17 Weskett, Ins.; Marsh. Ins. 402. A sentence of condemnation is generally binding everywhere; Marsh. Ins. 402; 3 Kent, 103; 3 Wheat. 246; 4 Cra. 434. But see 1 Binn. 299, n.; 7 Bingh. 495. Title vests completely in the captors, and relates back to the time of capture; 2 Russ. & M. 35; 15 Ves. 139.

The condemnation of prize property while lying in a neutral port or the port of an ally is valid; 13 How. 498. Contra, in England; 5 Rob. 285.

See BLOCKADE.

In Civil Law. A sentence or judgment which condemns some one to do, to give, or to pay something, or which declares that his claim or pretensions are unfounded.

The word is used in this sense by common-law lawyers also; though it is more usual to say conviction, both in civil and criminal cases; 3 Bla. Com. 291. It is a maxim that no man ought to be condemned unheard and without the opportunity of being heard.

CONDICTIO (Lat. from condicere).

In Civil Law. An assignment; a summons.

A personal action. An action arising from an obligation to do or give some certain, precise, and defined thing; Inst. 3. 15. pr.

Condictio is a general name given to personal actions, or actions arising from obligations, and is distinguished from vindicatio (real action), an action to regain possession of a thing belonging to the actor, and from mixed actions (actiones mixtæ). Condictio is also distinguished from an action ex stipulatu, which is a personal action which lies where the thing to be done or given is uncertain in amount or in entity. See Calvinus, Lex.; Halifax, Anal. 117.

CONDICTIO EX LEGE. An action arising where the law gave a remedy but provided no appropriate form of action. Calvinus, Lex.

CONDICTIO INDEBITATI. An action which lies to recover that which the plaintiff has paid to the defendant, by mistake, and which he was not bound to pay, either in fact or in law.

This action does not lie if the money was due ex æquitate, or by a natural obligation, or if he who made the payment knew that nothing was due; for qui consulto dat, quod non debetat, præsumitur donare. Bell, Dict.; Calvinus, Lex.; 1 Kames, Eq. 307.

CONDICTIO REI FURTIVÆ. An action against the thief or his heir to recover the thing stolen.

CONDICTIO SINE CAUSA. An action by which any thing which has been parted with without consideration may be recovered. It also lay in case of failure of consideration, under certain circumstances. Calvinus, Lex.

CONDITION. In Civil Law. The situation of every person in some one of the different orders of persons which compose the general order of society and allot to each person therein a distinct, separate rank. Domat, tom. ii. l. 1, tit. 9, sec. i. art. viii.

A paction or agreement which regulates that which the contractors have a mind should be done if a case which they foresee should come to pass. Domat, tom. i. l. 1, tit. 1, sec. 4.

Casual conditions are such as depend upon accident, and are in no wise in the power of the person in whose favor the obligation is entered into.

Mixed conditions are such as depend upon the joint wills of the person in whose favor the obligation is contracted and of a third person: as, "If you marry my cousin, I will give," etc. Pothier.

Potestative conditions are those which are in the power of the person in whose favor the obligation was contracted: as, if I contract to give my neighbor a sum of money in case he cuts down a tree.

Resolutory conditions are those which are added not to suspend the obligation till their accomplishment, but to make it cease when they are accomplished.

Suspensive obligations are those which suspend the obligation until the performance of the condition. They are casual, mixed, or potestative.

Domat says conditions are of three sorts. The first tend to accomplish the covenants to which they are annexed. The second dissolve covenants. The third neither accomplish nor avoid, but create some change. When a condition of the first sort comes to pass, the covenant is thereby made effectual. In case of conditions of the second sort, all things remain in the condition they were in by the covenant, and the effect of the condition is in suspense until the condition comes to pass and the covenant is void. Domat, lib. i. tit. 1, § 4, art. 6 et seq. See Pothier, Obl. pt. i. c. 2, art. 1, § 1; pt. ii. c. 3, art. 2.

In Common Law. The status or relative situation of a person in the state arising from the regulations of society. Thus, a person under twenty-one is an infant, with certain privileges and disabilities. Every person is bound to know the condition of the person with whom he deals.

A qualification, restriction, or limitation modifying or destroying the original act with which it is connected.

A clause in a contract or agreement which has for its object to suspend, rescind, or modify the principal obligation, or, in a case of a will, to suspend, revoke, or modify the devise or bequest. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 730.

A modus or quality annexed by him that hath an estate, or interest or right to the same, whereby an estate, etc., may either be defeated, enlarged, or created upon an uncertain event. Co. Litt. 201 a.

A qualification or restriction annexed to a conveyance of lands, whereby it is provided that in case a particular event does or does not happen, or in case the grantor or grantee does or omits to do a particular act, an estate shall commence, be enlarged, or be defeated. Greenl. Cruise, Dig. tit. xiii. c. i. § 1.

A future uncertain event on the happening or the non-happening of which the accomplishment, modification, or rescission of a testamentary disposition is made to depend.

A condition annexed to a bond is usually termed a defeasance, which see. A condition defeating a conveyance of land in a certain event is generally a mortgage. See MORTGAGE. Conditions annexed to the realty are to be distinguished from limitations; a stranger may take advantage of a limitation, but only the grantor or his heirs of a condition; 2 Dutch. 1; 3 id. 376; 2 Paine, 545; a limitation always determines an estate without entry or claim, and so doth not a condition; Sheppard, Touchst. 121; 2 Bla. Com. 155; 4 Kent, 122, 127; 3 Gray, 142; 19 N. Y. 100: from conditional limitations; in case of a condition, the entire interest in the estate does not pass from the grantor, but a possibility of reverter remains to him and to his heirs and devisees; in case of a conditional limitation, the possibility of reverter is given over to a third person; 3 Gray, 142: from remainders; a condition operates to defeat an estate before its natural termination, a remainder takes effect on the completion of a preceding estate; Co. Litt. Butler's note 94: from covenants; a covenant may be said to be a contract, a condition, something affixed nomine pœnæ for the non-fulfilment of a contract; the question often depends upon the apparent intention of the parties, rather than upon fixed rules of construction; if the clause in question goes to the whole of the consideration, it is rather to be held a condition; 2 Parsons, Contr. 31; Platt, Cov. 71; 10 East, 295; see 2 Stockt. 489; 6 Barb. 386; 4 Harr. Del. 117; a covenant may be made by a grantee, a condition by the grantor only; 2 Co. 70: from charges; if a testator create a charge upon the devisee personally in respect of the estate devised, the devisee takes the estate on condition, but where a devise is made of an estate and also a bequest of so much to another person, payable "thereout" or "therefrom" or "from the estate," it is rather to be held a charge; 4 Kent, 604; 12 Wheat. 498; 4 Metc. 523; 1 N. Y. 483; 14 M. & W. 698. Where a forfeiture is not distinctly expressed or implied, it is held a charge; 10 Gill & J. 480; 10 Leigh, 172. See, also, 38 Me. 18; 1 Powell, Dev. 664.

Affirmative conditions are positive conditions.

Affirmative conditions implying a negative are spoken of by the older writers; but no such class is now recognized. Shep. Touchst. 117.

Collateral conditions are those which require the doing of a collateral act. Shep. Touchst. 117.

Compulsory conditions are such as expressly require a thing to be done.

Consistent conditions are those which agree with the other parts of the transaction.

Copulative conditions are those which are composed of distinct parts or separate conditions, all of which must be performed. They are generally conditions precedent, but may be subsequent. Powell, Dev. c. 15.

Covert conditions are implied conditions.

Conditions in deed are express conditions.

Disjunctive conditions are those which require the doing of one of several things. If a condition become impossible in the copulative, it may be taken in the disjunctive. Viner, Abr. Condition (S b) (Y b 2).

Express conditions are those which are created by express words. Co. Litt. 328.

Implied conditions are those which the law supposes the parties to have had in mind at the time the transaction was entered into, though no condition was expressed. Shep. Touchst. 117.

Impossible conditions are those which cannot be performed in the course of nature.

Inherent conditions are such as are annexed to the rent reserved out of the land whereof the estate is made. Shep. Touchst. 118.

Insensible conditions are repugnant conditions.

Conditions in law are implied conditions. The term is also used by the old writers without careful discrimination to denote limitations, and is little used by modern writers. Littleton, § 380; 2 Bla. Com. 155.

Lawful conditions are those which the law allows to be made.

Positive conditions are those which require that the event contemplated should happen.

Possible conditions are those which may be performed.

Precedent conditions are those which are to be performed before the estate or the obligation commences, or the bequest takes effect. Powell, Dev. c. 15. A bond to convey land on the payment of the purchase-money furnishes a common example of a condition precedent. 9 Cush. 95. They are distinguished from conditions subsequent.

Repugnant conditions are those which are inconsistent with, and contrary to, the original act.

Restrictive conditions are such as contain a restraint: as, that a lessee shall not alien. Shep. Touchst. 118.

Single conditions are those which require the doing of a single thing only.

Subsequent conditions are those whose effect is not produced until after the vesting of the estate or bequest or the commencement of the obligation.

A mortgage with a condition defeating the conveyance in a certain event is a common example of a condition subsequent. All conditions must be either precedent or subsequent. The character of a condition in this respect does not depend upon the precise form of words used; 7 Gill & J. 227, 240; 2 Dall. 317; 2 Johns. 148; 20 Barb. 425; 6 Ms. 106; 10 id. 318; 1 Va. Cas. 138; 4 Rand. 352; 6 J. J. Marsh. 161; 6 Litt. 151; 1 Spenc. 435; 1 La. An. 424; 1 Wisc. 527; nor upon the position of the words in the instrument; 1 Term, 645; 6 id. 668; Cas. temp. Talb. 166; the question is whether the conditional event is to happen before or after the principal; 4 Rand. 358. The word "if" implies a condition precedent, however, unless controlled by other words; Crabb, R. P. § 2152.

Unlawful conditions are those which are forbidden by law.

They are those which, first, require the performance of some act which is forbidden by law, or which is malum in se; or, second, require the omission of some act commanded by law; or, third, those which encourage such acts or omissions; 1 P. Wms. 189.

Void conditions are those which are of no validity or effect.

Creation of. Conditions must be made at the same time as the original conveyance or contract, but may be by a separate instrument, which is then considered as constituting one transaction with the original; 5 S. & R. 375; 7 W. & S. 335; 3 Hill, 95; 3 Wend. 208; 10 Ohio, 433; 10 N. H. 64; 2 Me. 132; 7 Pick. 157; 6 Blackf. 113. Conditions are sometimes annexed to and depending upon estates, and sometimes annexed to and depending upon recognizances, statutes, obligations, and other things, and are also sometimes contained in acts of parliament and records; Shep. Touchst. 117.

Unlawful conditions are void. Conditions in restraint of marriage generally are held void; 13 Mo. 211; see 10 Penn. 350; otherwise of conditions restraining from marriage to a particular person, or restraining a widow from a second marriage; 10 E. L. & Eq. 139; 2 Sim. 255; 6 Watts, 213; 10 id. 348. A condition in general restraint of alienation is void; 1 Denio, 449; 14 Miss. 730; 24 id. 203; 6 East, 173; and see 21 Pick. 42; but a condition restraining alienation for a limited time may be good; Co. Litt. 223; 2 S. & R. 573; 1 Watts, 389; 10 id. 325.

Where land is devised, there need be no limitation over to make the condition good; 1 Mod. 300; 1 Atk. 361; but where the subject of the devise is personalty without a limitation over, the condition, if subsequent, is held to be in terrorem merely, and void; 3 Whart. 575. But if there be a limitation over, a non-compliance with the condition divests the bequest; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 112. A limitation over must be to persons who could not take advantage of a breach; 2 Caines, 346; 1 Wend. 388; 2 Conn. 196. A gift of personalty may not be on condition subsequent at common law, except as here stated; 1 Rolle, Abr. 412. See 21 Mo. 277.

Any words suitable to indicate the intention of the parties may be used in the creation of a condition: "On condition" is a common form of commencement.

Formerly, much importance was attached to the use of particular and formal words in the creation of a condition. Three phrases are given by the old writers by the use of which a condition was created without words giving a right of re-entry. These were Sub conditione (On condition), Proviso ita quod (Provided always), Ita quod (So that). Littleton, 331; Shep. Touchst. 125.

Amongst the words used to create a condition where a clause of re-entry was added were, Quod si contingat (If it shall happen), Pro (For), Si (If), Causa (On account of); sometimes, and in case of the king's grants, but not of any other person, ad faciendum or faciendo, ea intentione, ad effectum or ad propositum. For avoiding a lease for years, such precise words of condition are not required. Co. Litt. 204 b. In a gift, it is said, may be present a modus, a condition, and a consideration: the words of creation are ut for the modus, si for the condition, and quid for the consideration.

Technical words in a will will not create a condition where it is unreasonable to suppose that the testator intended to create a technical condition; 7 N. H. 142. The words of condition need be in no particular place in the instrument; 1 Term, 645; 6 id. 668.

Construction of. Conditions which go to defeat an estate or destroy an act are strictly construed; while those which go to vest an estate are liberally construed; Crabb, R. P. § 2130; 17 N. Y. 34; 4 Gray, 140; 35 N. H. 445; 18 Ill. 431; 15 How. 323. The condition of an obligation is said to be the language of the obligee, and for that reason to be construed liberally in favor of the obligor; Co. Litt. 42 a, 183 a; 2 Parsons, Contr. 22; Shep. Touchst. 375, 376; Dy. 14 b, 17 a; 1 Johns. 267. But wherever an obligation is imposed by a condition, the construction is to be favorable to the obligee; 1 Sumn. 440.

Performance should be complete and effectual; 1 Rolle, Abr. 425. An inconsiderable casual failure to perform is not non-performance; 6 Dana, 44; 17 N. Y. 34. Any one who has an interest in the estate may perform the condition; but a stranger gets no benefit from performing it; 10 S. & R. 186. Conditions precedent, if annexed to land, are to be strictly performed, even when affecting marriage; 1 Mod. 300; 1 Atk. 361. Conditions precedent can generally be exactly performed; and, at any rate, equity will not generally interfere to avoid the consequences of non-performance; 3 Ves. Ch. 89; 1 Atk. 361; 3 id. 330; West, 350; 2 Brown, Ch. 431. But in cases of conditions subsequent, equity will interfere where there was even a partial performance, or where there is only a delay of performance; Crabb, R. P. § 2160; 4 Ind. 628; 26 Me. 525. This is the ground of equitable jurisdiction over mortgages.

Generally, where there is a gift over in case of non-performance, the parties will be held more strictly to a performance than where the estate or gift is to revert to the grantor or his heirs.

Where conditions are liberally construed, a strict performance is also required; and it may be said, in the same way, that a non-exact performance is allowed where there is a strict construction of the condition.

Generally, where no time of performance is limited, he who has the benefit of the contract may perform the condition when he pleases, at any time during his life; Plowd. 16; Co. Litt. 208 b; and need not do it when requested; Co. Litt. 209 a. But if a prompt performance be necessary to carry out the will of a testator, the beneficiary shall not have a lifetime in which to perform the condition; 5 S. & R. 384. In this case, no previous demand is necessary; 5 S. & R. 385. But even then a reasonable time is allowed; 1 Rolle, Abr. 449.

If the place be agreed upon, neither party alone can change it, but either may with consent of the other. See CONTRACT; PERFORMANCE; 1 Rolle, 444; 11 Vt. 612; 3 Leon. 260.

Non-performance of a condition which was possible at the time of its making, but which has since become impossible, is excused if the impossibility is caused by act of God; 10 Pick. 507; or by act of law, if it was lawful at its creation; 4 Monr. 158; 1 Penn. 495; or by the act of the party; as, when the one imposing the obligation accepts another thing in satisfaction or renders the performance impossible by his own default; 21 Pick. 389; 1 Paine, 652; 6 Pet. 745; 1 Cow. 339. If performance of one part becomes impossible by act of God, the whole will, in general, be excused; 1 B. & P. 242; Cro. Eliz. 280; 5 Co. 21; 1 Ld. Raym. 279.

The effect of conditions may be to suspend the obligation; as, if I bind myself to convey an estate to you on condition that you first pay one thousand dollars, in which case no obligation exists until the condition is performed: or may be to rescind the obligation; as, if you agree to buy my house on condition that it is standing unimpaired on the tenth of May, or I convey to you my farm on condition that the conveyance shall be void if I pay you one thousand dollars, in such cases the obligation is rescinded by the non-performance of the condition: or it may modify the previous obligation; as, if I bind myself to convey my farm to you on the payment of four thousand dollars if you pay in bank stock, or of five thousand if you pay in money: or, in case of gift or bequest, may qualify the gift or bequest as to amount or persons.

The effect of a condition precedent is, when performed, to vest an estate, give rise to an obligation, or enlarge an estate already vested; 12 Barb. 440. Unless a condition precedent be performed, no estate will vest; and this even where the performance is prevented by the act of God or of the law; Co. Litt. 42; 2 Bla. Com. 157; 4 Kent, 125; 4 Jones, No. C. 249. Not so if prevented by the party imposing it; 13 B. Monr. 163; 2 Vt. 469.

If a condition subsequent was void at its creation, or becomes impossible, unlawful, or in any way void, the estate or obligation remains intact and absolute; 2 Bla. Com. 157; 15 Ga. 103.

In case of a condition broken, if the grantor is in possession, the estate revests at once; 5 Mass. 321; 5 S. & R. 375; 32 Me. 394. But see 2 N. H. 120. But if the grantor is out of possession, he must enter; 8 Blackf. 138; 12 Ired. 194; 18 Conn. 535; 8 N. H. 477; 34 Me. 322; 8 Exch. 67; and is then in, as of his previous estate; Co. Litt. Butler's note 94.

It is usually said in the older books that a condition is not assignable, and that no one but the grantor and his heirs can take advantage of a breach; Gilbert, Ten. 26. Statutory, have equal rights in this respect with common-law, heirs; 2 Conn. 196; 18 id. 535; 25 Me. 625; and in some of the United States the common-law rule has been broken in upon, and the devisee may enter; 13 S. & R. 172; 16 Penn. 150; 5 Pick. 528; 10 id. 306; contra, 2 Caines, 345; 20 Barb. 455; while in others even an assignment of the grantor's interest is held valid, if made after breach; 4 Harr. Del. 140; and of a particular estate; 19 N. Y. 100. In equity, a condition with a limitation over to a third person will be regarded as a trust, and, though the legal rights of the grantor and his heirs may not be destroyed, equity will follow him and compel a performance of the trust; Co. Litt. 236 a; 6 Pick. 306; 9 Watts, 60; 2 Conn. 201.

Consult Blackstone; Kent, Commentaries; Crabb; Washburn; Leake; Real Prop.; Parsons, Contracts.

CONDITIONAL FEE. A fee which, at the common law, was restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others.

It was called a conditional fee by reason of the condition, expressed or implied in the donation of it, that if the donee died without such particular heirs, the land should revert to the donor. For this was a condition annexed by law to all grants whatsoever, that, on failure of the heirs specified in the grant, the grant should be at an end and the land return to its ancient proprietor.

Such a gift, then, was held to be a gift upon condition that it should revert to the donor, if the donee had no heirs of his body, but, if he had, it should then remain to the donee. It was, therefore, called a fee simple, on condition that the donee had issue. As soon as the donee had issue born, his estate was supposed to become absolute, by the performance of the condition,—at least so far absolute as to enable him to charge or to alienate the land, or to forfeit it for treason. But on the passing of the statute of Westminster II., commonly called the statute De Donis Conditionalibus, the judges determined that the donee had no longer a conditional fee simple which became absolute and at his own disposal as soon as any issue was born; but they divided the estate into two parts, leaving the donee a new kind of particular estate, which they denominated a fee tail; and vesting in the donor the ultimate fee simple of the land, expectant on the failure of issue, which expectant estate was called a reversion. And hence it is said that tenant in fee tail is by virtue of the statute De Donis. 2 Bla. Com. 112.
